were appointed for the Lords of the Countrey: sometimes they were Princes of the A house of Castile, the kings children, and sometimes the Lords of Biscay, or of the house of Lara, or others, as they thought good: for the doing whereof, they were accustomed to assemble in the field of Arriaga, neere to Victoria, and there made their election: and those of this election were called brethren, and the assemblie a Brotherhood. Thither came the chiefe families of Alaua, with the Bishop of Calaozza, and the deputies for the Labourers: the towne of Victoria, and that of Treuigno were not of this assembly, but had bin alwaies vnited to the Crowne. This yeare the Brotherhood sent deputies vnto the king, being at Burgos, desiring him to incorporate them vnto the crowne, and that they might no more choise any Lord, or subalternall gouernour; for that in the factions and seditions past, they had bene distracted from the kings obedience, by the Gouer- B nours, whereby the countrey had suffered much. The King desirous to giue them contentment, assuring his estate the more thereby, and increasing his demeynes, came to Victoria, and from thence to the assembly of the Brotherhood, being in the field of Arriaga, whereas publicly, and in all their names, there was a petition presented vnto him by these Knights hereafter named: D. Lopes of Mendoza, D. Bertrand Iuanes of Gueuara, Lord of Oña, and Ladron of Gueuara his son, Juan Hurtado of Mendoza, Fernand Ruiz of Mendoza, Arch-deacon of Calaozza, Ruis Lopes of Mendoza, sons to D. Lopes Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Fernand Peres of Ayala, Fernand Sanchez of Velasco, Gonzalo Iu- Alaua vnited to the Crowne of Castile. nez of Mendoza, and Hurtado Diaz his brother, Lopes Garcia of Salazar, and Ruis Diaz of Torres. These being followed by many other gentlemen, and the deputies of the Clergie, and third Estate, presented many Articles vnto the King, beseeching him to C grant them, promising for their part, that this should bee their last assembly, and that the name and effect of their Brotherhood should remaine for euer extinct. The King hauing heard them, and giuen the Articles to his Councell to peruse, receiued them, and vnited the Province of Alaua for euer vnto the crowne of Castile; whereof letters were after- ward dispatcht at Victoria in the yeare 1332. And these were the Articles.

- 1 That the King nor his successors should not alienate any place of his demeynes.
- 2 That the gentlemen and their goods should bee free and exempt from all sub- dices, as they had bin heretofore.
- 3 That the Monasteriall Churches and Collations which belonged to Noblemen, should be preferred for them as before, and whereas the Incumbents were not resident, the gentlemen should receiue the reuenues.
- 4 That all Labourers dwelling vpon gentlemen's land, should be subiect vnto them, the Seignourie, and Iustice foweraigne referred to the King, and the Oxe of March, but all amercements should be the Lords.
- 5 That the Gentlemen and others of the countrey should gouerne themselves according to the customes and rights of Soportilla, and in all offences their causes should bee iudged according to the lawes of the Siete partidas.
- 6 That the Iudges royall, and Captaines of castels should be borne and resident in the country, who could not proceed against any one but vpon complaint, vnlesse they were condemned or banished, and that all prisoners should be deliuered vpon caution, vnlesse they were subiect to a corporall punishment.
- 7 That all Labourers dwelling vnder Monasteriall Churches, and Collations of Gentlemen, should bee free and exempted from all tribute and subiection, except the Oxe of March.
- 8 That Labourers dwelling in Pallaces and Castels of Gentlemen, should haue the same exemptions, so as there were but one at once, and those which nurse Gentlemen's lawfull children, should enioy the like priuiledges, during the time of their nouitice- ment.
- 9 The Gentlemen which dwell in villages vnder the Iurisdiction of Victoria, should enioy the same rights with them of the Province of Alaua: wherein should bee obserued the sentence giuen betwixt the towne of Victoria, and the villages thereunto belonging.
- 10 Whofoeuer should kill a Gentleman, should pay 500. solz for a fyne, and whofoe- uer should hurt or dishonor a gentleman, should pay the like summe vnto the party.
- 11 That

11 That

- A 11 That there should be no forges of Iron set vp in the territorie of Alaua, to the end the mountaines should not be consumed.
- 12 That no man might build a house without the barre.
- 13 That all sales, donations, answers, assignations and pleas, should be iudged where they had bene begun.
- 14 That a Subsidie being demanded of him, who should tearme himselfe a Gentle- man, enioyng the rights of Castile, he should be exempt.
- 15 That the king should make no new building, or towne in Alaua.
- 16 That the villages of Mendoza and Mendocul should be free from all tributes and Impositions, and enioy the ancient rights, yet their Seignourie should belong vnto the Crowne.
- B 17 That the Bourg of Guetara should be free from all tribute, as it had bene before ordayned by the assembly of Alaua, and likewise of the Oxe of March, the Soueraignie notwithstanding belonging to the king.
- These were the exemptions and chiefe priuiledges granted to the Gentlemen of Alaua, in the yeare 1331. In former times all sutes were decided and iudged without any Lawes or Statutes, but onely by naturall reason, and by Arbitrators, but then they were reduced into a frame according vnto certaine Lawes, and they had a certaine seate of Iustice appointed. During the kings aboad at Victoria, he did institute (as some affirme) the Order of the Knights of the Band, to maintaine souldiers in Spaine, the which went to decay: yet some hold it was some yeares before. But this yeare returning to Burgos, hee set downe the Orders, whereof the chiefe Articles are these:
- They carried a red band foure fingers broade, in manner of a scarf, which came from the left shoulder vnder the right arme, the which the king gaue onely to Gentlemen which had followed the Court tenne yeares, or bene in the warre against the Moors: and by their Orders it was not to be giuen but to younger brothers, who had no great shares in their fathers inheritances. These Knights being receiued, tooke an oath to obserue the rules of the Order which follow:
- 1 That the knight of the band should be bound to speake vnto the king for the com- mon good and defence of them of his countrey, being required by them.
- D 2 That he should speake the truth vnto the King, and should be bound to reueale vnto the King what he should knowe or heare spoken against him.
- 3 The Knight convicted of a lie, should not carrie a sword for one whole moneth.
- 4 He should conuerse with souldiers and other men of qualitie, and not with men of base conditions.
- 5 They should keepe their promise to all men, of what estate and condition soeuer.
- 6 They should be provided of armes and horses, vpon paine to loofe the title of Knight-hood.
- E 7 The Knight should not be seene mounted vpon a Moile, nor without band, nor sword.
- 8 He should be no Iester, but his discourse should be graue and honest.
- 9 He should not complaine of his wounds, nor vaunt of his valour.
- 10 He should not play at cardes nor dice, nor ingage his armes, nor apparell.
- 11 He should honour and serue Ladies and Gentlewomen.
- 12 If two Knights of the band had a quarrell, the rest should bee bound to seeke all meanes to reconcile them.
- 13 The Knight which did vsurpe the band, and had not receiued it from the kings hands, should be bound to defend it against two knights of the Order of the band, and if he did vanquish them, he might then carry it without contradiction, but if he were van- quished, he should be banished from the Court.
- 14 Any knight winning the prize at the Iusts of armes of the knights of the band, should be receiued into their Order.
- 15 That the knight of the band which should draw his sword against another knight of the same Order, should forbear the Court for two moneths: and for two moneths after

As. 1331.

Order of the Knights of the band.

Articles of the Order.

after should wear but halfe a band, and if he should wound his companion, hee should A be fixe moneths in prison, and banished the Court for fixe moneths more.

16 The king should bee sole Iudge of all matters concerning the knights of the Band.

17 All the knights of the Band should bee bound to accompany the king vnto the warre.

18 They might not go to the war with the Band, but against Infidels, and in all other they should lay aside the Band.

19 The knights of the Band should assemble thrice a yeare, to treat of the affaires of their Order, where the king should appoint it, being mounted and armed, and the sayd assemblies should be in April, September, and at Christmas.

20 They should exercise themselves in Iousts, loco de-canna, tossing the pike, and managing of horses, at a certaine time appointed.

21 No knight should liue in Court, without serving a Ladie or Gentlewoman to haue her in marriage, or otherwise with honour.

22 The knights of the Band should be bound to be at all tournies within ten leagues of the Court.

23 If any of them did marrie within twenty leagues of the Court, the other knights should be bound to beare him companie, and to honour him and his spouse, making some exercises of armes, and giuing him presents.

24 The first Sunday of every moneth they should come into the great hall of the Pallace, and there exercise all sort of armes before the king, without offending one another either maliciously, or in choller.

25 A knight being ready to dye, he should be visited, comforted, and exhorted by his companions, and after his death they should be bound to assist at his funerals, and should mourne a moneth, all Iousts and exercises of armes ceasing.

26 His Band that was dead should be restored to the king by the other knights, who should be sutors to haue some one of his children receiued into the Order, or to obtaine some present for the widow to honour her, and entertaine her estate of Nobility, or to marry some of her daughters.

The first knights of this Order, yet not all at once were chosen, without respect to the elder, to honour him, and not to draw it into consequence.

The king Alphonso.

The Infant D. Pedro.

D. Henry.

D. Fernand.

D. Tello.

D. John Nugnes.

D. Henriques.

D. Alphonso Fernand Cornel.

D. Lope Diaz d'Almaçan.

D. Fernand Perez Portocarrero.

D. Charles of Gueuara.

D. Fernand Henriques.

D. Aluar Garcia of Albornoz.

D. Pero Fernandez.

D. Gavey Ieffrey Tenorio.

D. Iuan Estuanes.

D. Diego Garcia of Toledo.

D. Martin Alphonso of Cardona.

D. Gonçal Ruiz de la Vega.

D. Iohn Alphonso of Benauides.

D. Garcilaço de la Vega.

D. Fernand Garcia Duque.

D. Garcia Fernandes Tello.

D. Pero Gonçal of Agüero.

D. Iohn Alphonso Caricello.

D. Inigo Lapes Horozco.

D. Garcia Guttiere of Caruajal.

D. Guttiere Fernandes of Toledo.

D. Diego Fernandes of Castiello.

D. Pero Ruiz of Villegas.

D. Alphonso Fernandes Iuge.

D. Roy Gonçales of Castagneda.

D. Roy Ramires de Guzman.

D. Sancho Martinez de Leyna.

D. Iohn Gonçales of Baçan.

D. Pero Triller.

D. Suero Perez of Quinones.

D. Gonçal Mexia.

D. Fernand Caricello.

D. Iohn de Rojas.

D. Pero Alvarez Ozerio.

D. Pero Priçes of Padilla.

D. Gil Quintagna.

D. Iohn Rodrigues of Villegas.

D. Diego

A. D. Diego Perez Sarmiento.

D. Menas Rodrigues of Vizeima.

D. Iohn Fernandes Cornel.

D. Iohn of Ceruejule.

D. Iohn Rodrigues of Cizuceros.

D. Orion of Liebana.

D. Iohn Fernandes Delgadillo.

D. Gamey Capilelo.

These were at this time the most renowned families of Spaine, wherof some are wholly extinct. Other houses are since growne great, as the Velasques, Manriques, Pimentel, B. Mendoça, Cordoua, Pacheco, Estunica, Fajardos, Atellanos, Tendillas, Cucuas, Andradas, Fonçecas, Luna, Villandrado, Sotomaiores.

This Order of Knight-hood did flourish for a time, but for that it was not religious as therest, it was neglected and came to nothing.

At the same time Henry of Solibert Gouvernor of Nauarre, by the perswasion, as it is likely, of D. Iohn Manuel, and of Don Iohn Nunges de Lara, entred into quarrell with the king of Castile: and for that he knew the forces of Nauarre were not sufficient to annoy the king of Castile, and that those of France, were both farre off, and in warre with the English, he insinuated himselfe with the king of Arragon, vnder hope of a marriage betwixt D. Ieanne eldest daughter to Philip king of Nauarre, and Don Pedro Infant of Arragon, and heire to the Crowne: for this effect D. Pero Gonçales of Morentin, was sent to

Tonotia in Carrelogne, where he was well receiued by the king, who hauing appointed D. Pedro de Luna, Arch-bishop of Saragossa, to treat with him of this marriage, they concluded it, as we shall shew, and agreed, that it should be accomplished within a certaine time, and that in the meane time D. Pedro should ayde the Gouvernors of Nauarre, both present and to come, in all the wars they should haue for the realme of Nauarre. The chiefe motiue of this marriage, was D. Iohn Alonzo de Haro, Seigneur de las Cameres, who was very inward with D. Iohn Manuel, and fought al occasions to annoy king D. Alphonso.

D. Ieanne Queene of Nauarre being in France, was that yeare deliuered of the Infant D.
Charles, heire of the Realme of Nauarre, and the County of Eureux.

Another marriage was treated of in Portugal, to the preiudice of king D. Alphonso of Castile: for D. Fernand Rodrigues of Bilbao, Prior of S. Iohn, Chancelor to Queene Mary, wifo to king D. Alphonso, a great friend to D. Iohn Manuel, and to whom the reuenges which the king did vsually take of his Nobility were not pleasing: being also incited at the familiarity which the king had with D. Leonora of Guzman, and at the authority shee had within the Realme, being also much deuoted to the king of Portugall, he pretailed for with him by his practises, as he caused a diuorce betwixt the Infant D. Pedro of Portugall, and his wife D. Blanche of Castile, who was very sickly, and made him to marrie D. Constance daughter to D. Iohn Manuel, who thought to haue bin Queene of Castile. The king of Castile, who dreamed not of these things, thought himselfe assured of the Christians, and was wholly attentiu to the actions of the Moores of Granado, with whom he sought meanes to breake the truce, by stopping of their victuals: but being better aduised, hee sent to demand the tribute for that yere of king Mahomet, the which was paid, so as he suffered the Moores to haue passage for their victuals out of Andalusia, and other places therabouts: yet king Mahomet vnderstanding what small assurance there was in this truce, and watching all occasions, either how to free himselfe from the subiection of the Christians, or to annoy them: he past soone after into Affricke, to sollicite king Alboahsen Mir-alumin of Maroc, to make some great enterprise with him in Spaine.

13 And for that the Moores of Spaine haue alwaies had great affinity and intelligence with these Miralumin of Affricke, it shall be fit to relate the continuance, since Iasph
Aien Iacob, the second king of the race of Mertins, whom we left vpon the banks of Affric trying to passe into Spaine in the yeare 1291, when as the king of Castile tooke Tariffe from him: but being stoppt by Benedict Zachary Admirall of Castile, he conuerted his designs against Alboacid king of Tremessen, and his successor Boham.

This Miralumin being at the scege of Tremessen, a familiar friend of his called Alfiterian,

League and marriage betwixt Nauarre and Arragon.

Castile.

Moores.

Bucalc 3. King of the race of the Merins in Africke.

Botebid 4. King of Maroc.

Abortake 5.
King.

Aben Joseph 6.
King of Maroc

Alboali 7. King of the race of Merins.

Alboacen 8.
King of the Merins.

Alfetterian, slue him in his bed: whereupon his son Bucalc tooke vpon him the scepter of A the Arabian Mores, and was the 3. king of the race of Merins. Being yet in the campe before Tremessen, Albohays his vnkle being inuested by the Maroquins to take the Realme from Bucalc, he refused it for himselfe, but he advanced another King of the same family of Merins, called Botebid, son to a brother of this Bucalc, who succeeded him to by finding himselfe too weak to make head against him. Bucalc thinking to saue himselfe in Africke was slaine by them that pursued him, neere vnto Mont Atlas. Thus Botebid reigned the 4. of the familie of Merins, who at the end of the yeare, ended both raigne and life in whole place. Abortake his Brother was the first king of Maroc, by the helpe of certaine Christian souldiers, who were then in Africke, led by a knight called Gonsalo Saueher of Troncones, who notwithstanding had like to haue beene slaine by this misdeedfull barbarian, being forced to saue his life by flight, and so retired into Spaine. Abortake reigned onely 2. yeares, and died in the city of Ribate, leauing the Realme of Maroc to his great Vnkle Aben Joseph, sonne to king Jacob Aben Joseph, the first of the familie of the Merins which had reigned in Maroc, and brother to Aben Jacob. This Aben Joseph had one son called Alboali, whome he sought to make king of Fez in his life time, but as he had indirectly, and too ambitiously cherished this son, he was forced to repent him, for such was the sons hatred, as he deprived his father of the Realme of Maroc, and appointed him (by the intercession of the Almodes then reigning at Tunis, who had there erected a kingdome of the reliques of their families and forces chased from Maroc) Bolahu for his abode and entertainment: and Alboali reigned in the 7. places but he enioyed it not long for it was the will of God, that this wicked sonne fell grievously sicke in the towne of Fez, neere vnto Tremessen (not that Fez which is the chiefe of a kingdome) his father Aben Joseph came thither to beseege him, and prest him in such sort, as he was forced to leaue the realm of Maroc and Fez, and to content himselfe with that of Sojumenca. By this meanes Aben Joseph recovered his Crowne and royall authority in Maroc, who holding Alboali vncouthly to succeed him: he appointed Alboacen his younger sonne to be heire of the Crowne. Alboali the elder aduertised of this institution, watched a time when both the father and the sonne were absent out of Maroc, and comming thither on the sudden well accompanied, he seized thereon, thinking by that meanes to haue recovered his realme: but he was beseeged by king Aben Joseph and Alboacen, vpon whom making a fallie, he was defeated, and sore wounded, so as he was forced to yeeld to his fathers will, and to retire himselfe to Sojumenca, the which was granted him againe for his portion: after which Aben Joseph lived 18. yeares quietly king of Maroc, by whose decesse succeeded his son Alboacen, the eighth king of the familie of Merins, yet with great contention against his elder brother Alboali, who sought by all practises to cast him from his throne, and being not of strength sufficient himselfe, he begged ayde of other Barbarian Kings, so as with the forces he obtained from king Botechsin sonne to Boham then reigning at Tremessen, he came againe to beseege the capital town of Maroc, where Abderrahamena a braue knight commanded, who defended it so valiantly, as he forced Alboali to retire with shame, who in his retreat was incountred and defeated by the kings army, and soone after beseeged in his towne of Sojumenca, who seeing himselfe reduced to extremitie, hee took a new composition, promising neuer to pretend any interest to the realm of Maroc, but to content himselfe with that of Sojumenca: for assurance whereof he gaue his sonne called Bazien for hostage. Wee must needs confesse that the humanity both of the father and the sonne to Alboali was exceeding great, hauing so often rebelled, and aspired to the crowne, a crime which doth often cause all respect of bloud and allyance to bee forgotten, euen in Christian Princes. Alboacen rising from Sojumenca, ouer-ran the Pilla, and burnt all the countrie of Tremessen, in reuenge that King Botechsin had giuen ayde to his brother at the sege of Maroc: It is this Alboacen which had beene solicited by Mahomet king of Granada, to passe into Spaine against Don Alphonso the eleuenth king of Castile: and who afterwards hauing subdued the Realmes of Sojumenca and Tremessen, was the greatest Prince in all Africke.

Returning then into Spaine, wee say, that Ozmim Generall of the forces of Granada, dyed about the yeare 1332. Ioonce after the truce made betwixt Castile and Granada

A leauing two sonnes Abraham and Abuecher, after whose death King Mahomet put himselfe into fauour with King Alboacen, (for Ozmim notwithstanding that he was of the same familie of Merins, had alwaies beene an enemy vnto him) wherefore Mahomet going to Fez, he was courteously entertained by the Mitalmumin, to whome hauing made his complaints of the King of Castile, who did alwaies treacherously breake the truce: he perswaded, and intreated him, to ioyne with him against Spaine. For (sayd hee) God hauing made you the mightiest Prince of the Religion, published by the Prophet Mahomet, and whome so many Kings and Princes of Africke obey, thou canst not more religiously, and with greater honour, employ thy forces, then against the Christians of Spaine, our persecutors, and the implacable enemies of our law, not more profitably address thy noble enterprises, nor with hope of better successe, then against them, hauing the ports and townes of Spaine at thy command, from the Streight along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea: whereunto the troubled Estate of Castile doth alwaies inuite thee, whereas Don Alphonso, who rearmes himselfe King, through an insatiable desire of rule, hauing spoiled his subiects of their lawfull inheritances, and pursued them in their honours and liues by tyrannous cruelty, extending his outrageous disdain euen to women of his owne bloud, and others of noble Families, hee hath so estranged most of the Princes and Noblemen of Spaine, as they now seeke our friendship, and offer to ioyne with vs, and to make warre against him. It will be therefore an act worthy of thy wisdom, not to let slippe so great occasions, and bestitting the generosity of thy Noble and renowned Family, by this opportunitie to repayre the ruined honour of the Arabians, troden vnder foot in Spaine, for the sinnes of our Nation, by the will and pleasure of the great God, who shewes plainly, that hee hath now turned his wrath against the Spaniards, both Princes and people being plunged in all impietie, disloyalty, dissimulation, and couetousnesse.

To this effect spake Mahomet to the King of Maroc, who heard him with great attention, and answered by the aduice of his Councell: that hee desired nothing more, then to do what he had propounded, but at that time hee could not wholly attend it as it was fit, being let by the warre which he had against the king of Tremessen, the which being ended, hee would employ himselfe in person with all his forces. In the mean time he offered him good troupes of horse, and gaue him great summes of mony. Thus the king of Granada returned well satisfied into his country, where being arrived, hee sent presently to Don John Manuel, to conclude a firme League with him, and the other Noblemen his Confederates, and to resolue of the meanes how to beginne the warre against the King of Castile.

In this league ioynd Don John Nugnes de Lara, Don John Martinis de Leyna, and many others: and there was sent from them vnto Granada with the messengers Moore, Don Pedro Martinis Clunjo, to haue the king confirme their accord. Wherefore the same yeare 1332. Rodeuan Captaine of the Lymits of Granada towards Murcia, Abuecher sonne to Ozmim deceased, and Machilif Gouvernour of Antequera; entred the Realme of Murcia in armes, vnto the territorie of Valencia, spoyleing, killing, and burning all about Oriuela and Guardamar: from whence they returned laden with spoyle to Granada, wherely king Don Alphonso knew that hee mist of force go to armes: for before hee had a conceit that Mahomet practises would prooue vaine, and hoped to reclaime his Rebels, by promisses and other practises, but he was deceived. Wherefore to beginne a warre of so great waight and difficultie, hee went in pilgrimage to Saint James, and there was made Knight, being in compleat armour, ordaining that from thence forth whoe soeuer should desire to be made a knight, should present himselfe armed at all peeces. Returning to Burgos, he caused himselfe to be crowned king, to giue more authority to his royall Maiestie: he also caused Queene Mary his wife to be crowned with great pompe and charge to the Inhabitants. The next day the king did arme and make about an hundred Noblemen and Gentlemen Knights, in the Monastery of Huelgas, being all covered with white. The ceremonie being ended, hee gaue to the Citie of Burgos, the place of Nague, with the iurisdiction for euer, to recompence the expences they had beene at in his Coronation.

V v

During

Society of the king of Castile,
in which many knights of the court.

Moors.

Truce very refused in the Moors.

1334

Castile.

at the same time having discovered, that certaine Knights had had a secret Conspiracy A with king Mahmet deceased, to the prejudice of his Crown, he caused one of them called Diego Sanchez de Iaca to be executed at Cordoua, the rest fled into the Moores coun-trie, of which number were Don Gonçalo Lord of Aguilar and Montilla, and his brother Don Fernand Gonçales of Aguilar, who made themselves vassalls to the king of Granada, and by them and others of the same sort, (who were well entertained by king Ioseph) the warre was begun, making roades from their Castels of Aguilar, Montilla, Monturque, and other forts which were in their hands, agreeing with D. John Manuel, D. Nago de La ra, and other rebels, who for their parts committed no lesse excess in Castile, the which did much trouble the king Don. Alphonso, fearing about all, that the brethren of Aguila B did much deliuer the places which they held, vnto the Moores.

Alboacen king of Maroc was glad of these troubles, and desired to entertaine the revolts of Castile, for that he had an intent to go in person into Spaine, with a great power, as soone as the warre of Tremessen should giue him any leysure, the which notwithstanding did so trouble him, as he changed his resolution for a time, and was so prest, as hee called home some of his troups, which he had sent into Spaine with his son Abomelic: whereupon he sent him word, that he should seeke by all secret practises to make a truce for himself alone, aduersing him, that if the king of Castile ambassadors should demand if the meant to comprehend King Alboacen his father, hee should answer, that it might beee would accept thereof, if any messengers were sent vnto him. According to these institutions Abomelic sent Ambassadors to king D. Alphonso being at Seule, to treat of a truce, C to whom the question was made according to king Alboacen desire, and vpon their answer D. Gonçalo Garcia of Gallegos, Alcaide maior of Seule, was sent to Maroc to vnder-stand king Alboacen will concerning this truce, who answered, that hee would willingly proter, so as Ioseph the new king of Granada were comprehended: for being vnder his protection, he could not abandon him, desiring that he might be assured from all troubles, and moreover freed from the tribute which hee payed to the king of Castile during this truce. The Alcaide who had no such commission, aduersified the king his master, who being himselfe annoyed by his owne subjects, was content the king of Granada should be-comprehended, and that he should not pay any tribute during the truce, the which was concluded in the beginning of the year 1334: to continue foure yeares, causing king Al- D boacen to make his Letters patentes sealed with a seale of gold, and so in like manner did D. Alphonso king of Castile, Abomelic of Algezire and Ioseph of Granada. This Ioseph called Aben Amer was the first King of the Moores of Granada, that was exempt from paying tribute to the kings of Castile in time of peace, through the fauour of the king of Maroc, and the factions and seditions of Castile.

14 King Don Alphonso being thus afflicted betwixt warre and truce, in the Citie of Seule Donna Leonora of Guzman brought him two sonnes at one birth, Don Henry, who obtayned the Realme of Castile, as you shall heare, and Don Fredericke who was Master of the Order of Saint James.

About March this year 1334. the king went from Seule, having provided for the E places on the frontiers, as it was necessarie, and came to Vailledolit where hauing suddenly raised an armie, he marched against the Rebels, and hauing taken some places from them, he came to Lerma, whereas Don John Nuges de Lara was, for whom he layed manical ambushes, but without effect: wherefore he entred into Biscay; and being at Guernica, a place deputed for the assembly of the Estates of the countie, vnder a tree, affective manner of their ancestors, he receiued from them the oath of fealty, and they yielded vnto him most of the townes and places of the country: for some held yet for Donna Ma- ria of Haro their Lady. This being done, hee came to Bermeo, and assailed a castle, vision was obstatin in the defence thereof, called Saint John de la Pegna, two small Leagues from Bermeo: the Gar-tion was obstatin in the defence thereof, called Saint John de la Pegna, two small Leagues from Bermeo: the Gar-called away for matters of greater consequence, built certaine small forts about it, and manned them with souldiers to hinder their going in and coming out, and came to Logroño, and from thence to Algoncillo, where hee surprized Don John Alphonso de Haro, Lord of that place, one of the rebels, whome he caused presently to be slayne, and

A and did confiscate his goods, except los Cameros, which he gaue vnto his brother: then returning to Burgos, he besieged Herrera, a place belonging to Don John Nuges, who either wearie of the warre, or distrusting the euent thereof, hee made his peace with the king, and returned to his seruice.

During this seige Queene Mary was brought in bed of a sonne at Burgos, who was named Don Pedro heire of the kingdom. The Writers of Arragon say, that this Infant was supported by Queene Mary, being ialous that the king her husband did so loue D. Leonora of Guzman, and that she brought him so many children. The king hauing pacified the troubles towards Biscay, he marched with his army towards D. John Manuels country, and besieged Rojas, the which was defended by a Gentleman called Diego Gil, in the name of B D. Lope Diaz de Rojas, vassall to Don John Manuel. This Diego Gil, hauing made some resistance, in the end yielded, vpon condition to haue their liues saued: notwithstanding the king condemned him to death, with some others, for that he had resisted against the Standard royall. And then there was an Edit made: That all Gentlemen holding townes, castles, or houses of strength, belonging to any Nobleman, knight, or other of the kings vassalls, the king comming thither in person, they should be bound to receiue him, without any imputation: if not, they should loose their liues: which Decree was afterwards put in practise vpon the Gouverneur of Sicar, who lost his head, for that hee had presumed to resist the king.

About the end of the yeare, king Don Alphonso came to Atera, a place neere to Cala-rajub, where he found Donna Leonora his sister, Queene of Arragon, with whome hauing treated of certaine affaires, he returned to Vailledolit, where by the negotiation of certaine Mediators, an accord was made betwixt him and Don John Manuel, and a peace throughout all the Realme, which the Spanishe Authors attribute to his seueritie against the Rebels, when hee rooke them, condemning most of them after their deaths: about the same time Donna Leonora of Guzman was deliuered of a Sonne, whome the King named Don Fernand: for which cause there were generally great feasts and Ioy, and at Court there was a stately courtney: where on the one side the knights of the Band did runne, among the which was the king in a disguised habit.

15 The yeare following 1335. there were some alterations towards Nauarre, Nauarre D which Realme was gouerned by Henry of Solibert, aboue-named, being resident in the Castell of Olite, with three thousand Livres of entertainment, the places of strength being put by the Estates into the hands of faithfull Knights. The Castels of the riuier, whereof Arnaud of Lect was Merin or Gouverneur, were held by these Captaines following:

At the castell of Cortes, commanded John de Soici.
At Herrera, Pero Sanchez of Varelo.
At Penna Ronde, Pero Ximenes of Funez.
At Corell, Pero Sanchez of Montagu, sonne to For- E tan.
At Araciell, Inigo Arnan of Corello.
At Sancho Abarca, Mathew Saillant.
At Estaca, Garcia Perez of Dax.
At Valtierra, Geoffrey of Villaribo.
At Cadrieta, Gonçalo Perez of Gorrociain.
At Coparroffo, D. Alphonso of Spaine.
At Ablicas, John Martines of Necueffa.
At Arguedas, Pero Sanchez of Montagu, sonne to Pero.
Ataxone was held by the Inhabitants.
F The Castell of Rade, by Symon Martines of Barafayn, for the Heires of Oger of Mauleon, for want of homage.
In the Merindad or Iurisdiction of Sanguessa, whereas Oger of Gramont was Merin, there commanded.

At Saint Care, John Renaud le Chat.
 At the castell of Murillo, Diego Peres of Esperun.
 At S. Martin of Vnx, Garcia Ximenes of S. Martin.
 At Vxue, D. Alphonso of Spaine.
 At Gallipienço, Pedro Arnaud of Vtruua.
 At Calleda, Stephen of Cormelles.
 At Pegna, Peter of Cuyero.
 At the old castell of Sanguessa, Garcia Arnaldes of Espleta.
 At Petiella in Arragon, D. Martin Fernandes de Satoça.
 At Pintano, D. Simon de Sotes.
 At Ongacaria, Helias Martines of Inurozgui.
 At Leguin, John Martines of Eula.
 At Yrurtegui, Martin Garcia of Ollaogui.
 At Valcarlos, Martin Trignes of Vrga.
 At Rochfort, Lobet of Narbays.
 At Monteyran, Pedro Sanches of Olicaratea.
 At Rochbrun, William Arnaud Durdes.
 At Guerga, John de Saunin.
 At Thiebes, Garcia Michel of Eiscayren.
 At Castell-nouo, Roderigo of Ayuar.
 At Burgui, Pedro Aznar of Ezcura.
 At Ylaba, Martin Garcia of Leyun.
 In the Merindad or Iurisdiction of Pampelone, Fernand Diaz de villa alta, held the castell of Toloyna.
 John of Rouceray, that of Aza.
 John of Bulli, Labraca.
 John Fernandes of Baguedan, the castell of Oro.
 Bernard of S. Pelage, that of Falces.
 Pedro Garcia of Ciraguegui, Carfar.
 John Botayroa, and Martin Sanches of Villamera, the castle of Lana.
 Roger of Alamaina, Andofilla.
 Corbaran of Leer, Reça.
 Romieu Martines of Arornis, Afagra.
 Alphonso Diaz of Morentiu, Peralta.
 Diego Sanches of Eulate, Artazona.
 John Pelez of Medrano, the tower of Viana.
 Diego Lopes of Alfaua, the castell of Toro.
 Martin Sanches of Azedo, Maragon.
 John Moreuant, the castell of la Garde.
 Renauld of Bourray, the castell of Milagro.
 Alphonso Perez of Morantiu, the castell of Montjordan; Garcia Sanches of Espeleta, Lerin.
 Ordoniz of Blandiaco, Funes.
 D. Pedro Ximenes of Mirafuentes, Arcos.
 Lope Perez of Agnoa, the castell of Miranda.
 Philip of Coynon, the castell of Belmarques.
 Sancho Perez of Lodoza, the tower of Mendauia.
 Michel Ramires of Cusia, the castell of Celatambor.
 Sancho of Licaraga, the castell of Larraga.

Which Captaines of Forts were all entertained by the King, and enjoyed many privileges, according to the lawes and customes of Nauarre. The treatie of marriage continued still, bewixt the Infant of Nauarre, and D. Pedro heire of Arragon, by D. Pedro de Luna, Arch-bishop of Saragossa, D. Pedro Gonçales of Morentiu, and other Deputies, who hauing bene long together in the towne of Cortez, concluded it in the year 1334.

- A The conditions were; that King Philip of Nauarre, should giue in dowry with his daughter D. Jeanne, a 100000. Sanchots, which were worth to many Liners turnois, and for assurance of a future marriage, there were giuen in pawne for Nauarre, Lescar, Arguedas, Saint Care, Murillo, Gallipenço and Murgui; and for the King of Arragon, Fayos, Boria, Malona, Campdalijub, Sos and Sauueterre, & the Articles were signed by the parties with many knights at Daroca. The King of Castille hearing of this alliance, being iealous and foreseeing that they sought but an occasion of warre, he wrote vnto the Gouvernor, that hee could neuer vnderstand that his subjects had wronged the Nauarrois, and that if any thing had bene committed which required reparation, hee was readie to see it done: but the Gouvernor giuing a deafe eare to that which hee had written, persisted in his resolution and seized vpon the Monastery of Hitero by force, being then in the possession of Castille, and had before bene of Nauarre. The King of Castille seeing the warre to be ineuitable, sent to the King of Arragon, to intreat him to be a meane, that his sonne D. Pedro, might not ioyne with the Nauarrois, nor aide them to annoy Castille. The King of Arragon, being verie sicke answered that his indisposition would not suffer him to thinke of such affaires, and that if his sonne had a will to fauor the Nauarrois, he could not hinder him, being in that Estate. This answer being made knowne to the Arragonois, they grew more desirous to ioyne with the Nauarrois, wherevpon D. Lope de Luna, one of the greatest Noblemen of the Realme, D. Michel Perez Zapata and Lopes Garcia, accompanied with many other knights, whom the Infant D. Pedro gaue them, to the number of five hundred horse, came to the Gouvernor to Tudela, from whence enting into Castille with the forces of Nauarre, they made a great spoile, and brought away a great booty, finding not any one to make head against them: whereof the King of Castille being aduertised, hee was much greeued, giuing the speediest order hee could to man the frontiers: hee sent D. Alphonso Ortiz Prior of Saint John, to D. John Nugnes de Lara, to the end hee should take vpon him the charge to defend the country, with such troupes as hee should giue him: but D. John notwithstanding his reconciliation with the King, would not trust him, keeping himselfe still in Biscay, and yet the King promised to giue him Maralles and Villalon, with many other things: wherefore King D. Alphonso made Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero General of this warre, and sent with him vnto the frontier D. Diego Lopes de Haro, sonne to D. Lopes the little, D. Fernand Rodriguez of Villalobos, D. John Garcia Manriques, D. Rodrigo of Cisneros, D. Pero Nugnes de Guzman, and his brother, Ramir Flores, D. Lopes Diaz of Almaran, D. Gonçalo Luis Giron, D. Gonçalo Luis Dias, D. Aluar Rodriguez Daza, Alphonso Fernandes Cornet, Garsilaso de la Vega, and his brother Gonçalo Luis de la Vega, Pero Luis Cavilli, John Alphonso of Benauides, D. Rodriguez of Sandoual, Sancho Sanches de Roais, and many other knights of marke, which did not refuse to march vnder Martin Fernandes, although there were many amongst them of greater houses, in regard that hee did represent the person of the Infant D. Pedro of Castille, and had displayed the standard royall, and was appointed by the King to be his Lieutenant generally; and as the King sought to make his excuse, saying, that hee would gladly his sonne had bene of age to goe to horse, and that hee would willingly haue made him their leader and general, they answered, that they would not onely obey Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero, whom they knew to bee a worthy knight, seeing hee gaue him them for their Leader, but any one of lesse qualitie, yea a groom of his stable, if he commaunded it.
- The Gouvernor of Nauarre being aduertised of this army of Castillans, fortified the Monastery of Hitero, and sent thither D. Michel Perez Zapata, thinking they would come and assaile it. The Castillans being all assembled at Alfaro, leauing the Monastery, marched directly towards Tudela; being discouered, the Arragonois and Nauarrois filled forth to encounter them, not caring to attend the returne of Michel Perez, who had led part of their forces to Hitero.
- The Castillans were stronger in horse, and the place fit to vse them: wherefore being ioyned, although the Nauarrois made great resistance, yet they were put to rout, and repulst towards the towne, with great slaughter, and the losse of many that were taken prisoners. And you must vnderstand that neither the Gouvernor, nor D. Lope

Ten thousand pound.

VNarre bene twice Nauar and Castille.

Obedience of the Noblemen of Castille to their King, Lord, and Lord.

Defeat of the Arragonois and Nauarrois by the Castillans.

de

de Luna, were at this charge, but kept themselves in Tudela, so as the army of Arragonis and Nauarrois were without a head, and were chased euen to the towne gates. The victorious Castilians returning towards Alfaro, encountered Michel Perez Lapata, with his troups, coming from Hitero, who put his men in battaile, by the fauor of a Dich, the which he defended against his enemies, who were full of fury, after their late victory, and fought to force it, but many miscarried; yet the multitude of the Castilians prevailed, and Michel Perez was ouerthrowne, and taken prisoner with many others: if night had not approch without doubt (as the Histories say) the Nauarrois and Arragonis, in this last incounter, had bene all put to the sword.

Thus the Castilians after two victories, returned with many prisoners, and great spoiles to Alfaro, forbearing for a time to returne into Nauarre, hauing not gotten these victories without losse. Those that were in the Monastery of Saint Mary of Hitero, notwithstanding that they were well fortified, and furnished with victuals, durst not abide there, so as the Castilians seized thereon, from whence they went to beleage the Castille of Tudeguen, in the which there was a garrison of Gascons and Nauarrois, who yielded the place; being perswaded by the faire speeches of a Castilian monk, who was in the castle with them. The Castilians taking heart by this happy successe returned afterwards thrice into Nauarre, and spoiled the country, carrying away many prisoners, and great store of cattails.

Guipuscaens enemies to the Nauarrois.

On the other side the people of Guipuscoa, hearing of the warre, vpon the frontiers of Castille, Nauarre and Arragon, hauing no commaundement, entred in armes into Nauarre, vnder the conduct of Lopes Garcia of Lazcano, whom they made their capitaine, spoyling a great part of the country of the iurisdiction of Pampelone; and in the end they laid seige to the castle of Vnza, which they tooke. The King of Castille aduertised of these happy exploits, was desirous to stay the course of their victories, fearing lea they should kindle a warre betwixt France and Spaine, which should not bee easily quenched: wherefore he commaunded them to containe themselves, and onely to defend the frontiers of this Kingdome, yea hee called home most of the capitaines and knights, which were vnder the Infant D. Pedro's Banner, being led by Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero. Hee and some others did instantly obey, but Garcilaso de la Vega, and Gonsale Ruiz his brother, made an other roade, with certaine troups, into Nauarre, about Soliere, where they left lamentable markes, burning and spoyling all they found. The newes of these outrages came into France, which did moue many kinsmen, friends and subiects of King Philip to apprehend the spoiles which the Castilians had made in Nauarre, among the which Gaston Lord of Bearne, and Earle of Foix made hast to passe the mountaines, with many souldiers, Bearnois and Gascons, and hauing taken view of his troups at Viane, which is a league from Logroño, he entred into Castille, where hee made the like spoile as the Castilians had done in Nauarre, and then came and camped before Logroño, the Inhabitants whereof sallied forth vpon them, being led by a gentleman of the country called Ruis Diaz of Gaona, but they were repulst into the towne, and pursued so neere, as without the valour of Ruis Diaz of Gaona (who with three companions made head against the enemies, at the entry of the bridge, whilst the rest had recovered the towne, and assured the Ports) they had entred Pel-mel with them, and taken Logroño. This Esquier employed his life for the preservation of his country, imitating (but with lesse happinesse) the example of the Romaine Horatius Cocles, for hee was slaine vpon the bridge. The Earle of Foix sayling of his hope to take Logroño by this meanes, returned with his men to Viane.

Gaston Earle of Foix the first of that name.

Defeat of the garrison of Logroño by the Earle of Foix.

The King of Castille being in the meane time aduertised of his coming, had commaunded many companies of foote and horse to march towards the frontiers, meaning that when they had raised a great army, they should enter into Nauarre, if it were convenient, so as it was likely there would bee a dangerous warre betwixt these two mighty Kingdomes: for it is to bee presumed the French King would haue bene engaged in fauour of his cousin Philip King of Nauarre, and not to giue occasion to the Spaniards to presume to passe so easily ouer the limits wherewith nature had diuided those two nations. But it was the will of God, that in this heat of their courages of either side, John

Arch-

A Archbishop of Rheims came into Nauarre, going in pilgrimage to Saint James of Galicia, who seeing this warre begonne betwixt the Nauarrois and the Castilians, for light occasions; wrote a letter to the King of Castille, admonishing him to harken vnto a peace. The King who was no lesse desirous then the Archbishop, embraced this occasion; and shewing that the reuerence of so great a prelat, made him willing to obey his holy aduertisements, he sent vnto him Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero, D. Gil Carrillo of Albornoz, Archdeacon of Calatrava in the church of Toledo, who was afterwards Cardinal. By the aduice and resolution of which three, with whom was ioyned Fernand Sanchez of Vailledol, notarie Maior, or Secretary of Castille, who concluded a peace vpon these conditions.

Peace betwixt
Nauarre and
castile.

B That there should be peace betwixt Philip King of Nauarre and D. Alphonso King of Castile, their vassals and subiects, and a cessation of armes for a certaine time. That foure commissioners should bee named, two for Nauarre, and two for Castile, for the re-establishment and restitution of what had bene taken of either part, and for the reparation of any thing that should bee committed to the preiudice of this accord. That the Monastery of Santa Maria of Hitero, should be restored to the Monks, who should remaine Neuters, vntill it were decided to what iurisdiction it did belong: to the end the diuine seruice should not be interrupted, nor they any waies molested by the Nauarrois or Castilians. That the castles of Tudeguen and Vria should remaine in the possession of the King of Castile, vntill their differences were decided, and a definitive sentence giuen. That in regard of the propriety of the Monastery of Hitero, there should bee arbitrators chosen, a Nauarrois, a Castilian and a Cardinal of Rome, who should bee agreeable to both parties, to iudge thereof, and in the meane time all quarrels should cease betwixt the two realmes, Kings and subiects. These Articles being concluded, they were afterwards confirmed by the two Kings.

16 During these warres of the King of Castille against the Moores and his Rebels, and against Nauarre, the realme of Arragon was troubled with the quarrels and hatred of the Queene D. Leonor against the Infant D. Pedro her sonne in law, shewing herselfe in all these could, a right mother in law. Wherein shee was the more to bee feared, for that shee did gouerne the King D. Alphonso her husband at her pleasure, and did worke in him what impressions she would, so as many times the Infant was in great danger, which hee did afterwards reuenge. Besides these intestine iarrs, the King of Arragon was much troubled which the continual rebellions of the Sardinians, and their Lords, who were for the most part Geneuois, but hee wrought so by his wisdom, and diligence, as without using any force, but in extremity, he reduced most of them to his deuotion. Francis a Oris sonne to Leonard, as well in his owne name, as of Alison, Marian Fabian Dignamin, and Nicholas of Oris, came and did homage to the King, and obtained pardon, and confirmation of all the Lands which they did hold in Sardinia; vpon condition that they should not giue any aide nor fauour to the rebels and banished men of the towne of Sassari, where notwithstanding the King granted a repaale for such as had bene condemned for light crimes, but those of the families of the Cathons, Pali and d'Oris, who had bene condemned of high treason, by D. Berenger of Carosio, were banished the Island for euer. This nation of the Sardes was so prompt to reuolt, as notwithstanding any prouision the King of Arragon could make, and all accords and treaties, hee was constrained to be watchful, with care, and exceeding great charge. Ayton of Oris hauing rigged out nine gallies, and some other Genouay (ships of the Ghibeline faction, remaining at Saouenne, hovering about the Island of Sardinia, surprized neere vnto Cap de Terre, nine ships of Cattelogna, and sunke them, and so passing on he terrified all the Arragonis in the Island, and held the fort of Caillieri as it were beleegged for a time, which made all the Sardinians in a manner to rebel: wherevpon D. Alphonso King of Arragon sent D. Raymond of Cardona thither, a capitaine of great experience, and made him Lieutenant general of that Island.

Geneuois of the Ghibeline faction against the Arragonois in Sardinia.

These things past in the yeere of our Lord 1330. about the time that the Moores did invade the realme of Murcia, of the which wee haue treated, at which time the Infant D. Pedro Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias, the Kings brother married Jaenne sister to Gaston Earle

Earle of Foix, the first of that name, and daughter to Roger Bernard.

The Cattelans enemies irreconcilable to the Geneuois, and newly incensed by the losses which they had received by the army of Ayten d'Oris, who after that he had spoiled all that he found of the Arragonois faction vpon the bankes of Sardinia, retired into Corfica, to the Port of Boniface; they drew out of their Ports and Hauens of Catalogne about forty Gallies, and thirty Foists and Brigantins, and directing their course towards the riuer of Genoa, they burnt all the Geneuois houles of pleasure, without respect of friend or foe: for the common weale of Genoa being then diuided, by reason of the faction of Guelphes and Ghibelins; the Ghibelins open enemies to the King of Arragon did for the most reside at Sauonne, and from thence made their sallies and enterprises; sometimes drawing some priuate men of the Guelphes faction, to runne vpon the Cattelans, by reason whereof this Cattelans army intreated them all after one manner.

During these wrackes, Luke of Fiesco one of the chiefe of the Guelphes faction, had begonne to treat with King D. Alphonso, by the meanes of Francis of Saint Eulalia, that if he would harken to a good accord with the Geneuois, holding the city of Genoa for friend, and forget all wrongs done, they would furnish him with fiftene gallies, and follow his standard against the Geneuois Ghibelins remayning at Sauonne, who had caused all the reuolts and troubles in Sardinia, wherewith the King was very well pleased; but the spoiles which the Cattelans army had made during the treaty in the riuer of Genoa intercepted all; so as these two factions of Genoa, being equally afflicted by a forraigne enemy, were the more willing to giue credit to the persuasions of Robert King of Naples, who reconciled them, and then they ioynd against the King of Arragon, to dispossesse him of the Island of Sardinia. The heads of the two factions, were the families of Oria for the Guelphes, and Spinola for the Ghibelins. Being thus incensed they runne along the coast of Catalogne, with three score saile, where they tooke many ships and other spoiles, leauing lamentable spectacles in all places where they had landed. Thirteen of their gallies passing from thence into Sardinia, attempted the fort and Port of Caillerij in vaine, from whence they were repulst with losse. These warres at sea, betwixt the Cattelans and Geneuois might bee held equall, for they were the mightiest nations at sea in that age. All was full of difficultie, and ialousie in the Island, notwithstanding that King Don Alphonso, by his bountie, aduancements, alliances and marriages contracted in his fauour, and at his instance betwixt the Noblemen Cattelans, and Sardinians, or Geneuois (hauing charges or lands in the Island) had sought to draw them vnto him, and to make them friends, and affected to his party: yet he was in continuall warre, and was forced to keepe great garrisons in the Island, and many gallies at sea with so great charge, as all the reuenues of the Island of Sardinia did auaile him little: being often constrained to importune the Pope, to discharge him of the tribute, which hee ought vnto the church of Rome, by reason of this chargeable conquest.

Mary of Naples, Queen of Sicily.

Thus King Don Alphonso past his raigne in these home-bred and forraigne troubles, being but short. A little before he died Don James of Arragon, Lord of Xerica, who had married Queene Mary, which had bene left by D. Sancho King of Majorca, who liuing dissolutely & vnchastly, was by this king sent home to the king of Naples her father, being disloyalty & vnchastly, was by this king sent home to the king of Naples her father. The peace betwixt Arragon and Granada was sworn by him and confirmed at the castle of Valence, with Abenbacen, Abencomex and Pascal Carera, Ambassadors for King Joseph Abenmarret, vpon the like conditions, as with Castille. A little before his death, D. Alphonso seeing herselfe mother of two sonnes, D. Fernand and D. John, who was yet in his swathing clothes, to be much hated (and not without cause) of the Infant D. Pedro, who should succeed to the crowne, shee sought to put into the hands of the King of Castille, her brother (whose fauour shee affected) the castles of Verdegio and Someto frontier places; but Don Pedro hauing alwaies an eye to his mother in lawes actions, especially at that time, the King being very ill disposed, prevented her, and put garrisons therein. The Queene without attending the King her husbands death, did lodged from Barcelona, and seized vpon Fraga, from whence shee sent garrisons to places belonging to her children: In the meane time the King died in the city of Barcelona in the yeare of our Lord 1336, hauing reigned eight yeeres, and about three months: Being ready to die, he made the marriage of D. James his second sonne with Cecile daughter to the Earle of Comingines: his body lies in the town of Lerida.

Death of D. Alphonso the fourth King of Arragon.

D. Pedro, the fourth of that name, and the thirteenth of Arragon.

D. Pedro his sonne, whom he had by D. Theresa of Entenza Countesse of Vrgel, before that he assembled the Estates, or performed any ceremony, tooke vpon him the royal title, against all custome, affecting nothing more then to bee first reuenged of the Queene Donna Leonor his mother in law, whose places he seized on; and sent Ferry of Apilla, Governour to the Infant D. James after her, to bring her to Sarragossa: but hearing of the Kings death, he tooke the way to Castile, by great iourneys, and past Ebro at Tortose, then going by Turol and Albarrafin, he came into her brothers country, being accompanied by the Bishop of Burgos, & D. Pedro of Xerica, carrying great store of treasure and jewels with her, which bread a warre betwixt these two Realmes of Castille and Arragon. D. Alphonso King of Castille, in fauour of his sister, deliuered Michel Perex Zapata, and other Arragonois out of prison, whom the employed against the King D. Pedro, with other noblemen, whom he had wonne.

D. Pedro the fourth of that name; was furnished the ceremonious, for that in all his actions he was very slow, and spent the time in superfluous ceremonies. He was crowned at Sarragossa, not without emulation of the Cattelans; but custome hath giuen this right to the city of Sarragossa, that the Kings are crowned there, and no where else. Thence came not any Noblemen of Catalogne, except D. Ordon of Moncade, and D. Raymond of Peralte. The King hauing taken and received the oath after the accustomed manner, retired to Lerida, to the Estates of Catalogne: where hee disannulled all the donations made by the King his father, and the alienation of the reuenues, and depouled D. Pedro of Xerica (who had accompanied the Queene Donna Leonor into Castille) of all his goods.

Death of the King D. Frederic King of Sicily.

In the beginning of his raigne, died D. Frederic King of Sicile, being very old and consumed with the goutte, who had held the realme with great troubles and warre the space of one and forty yeeres, and six monethes, leauing his sonne D. Pedro to succeed him, who was the fourth King of the race of Arragon, which heid Sicile. The King his father leauing many children, sonnes and daughters, by Queene Leonor his wife, by his will excluded the daughters from the succession of Sicile, ordaining that if in his posterity the males should faile, the Realme should bee vnto that of Arragon. Wee haue sayd before that D. Pedro King of Arragon, had promised to marry D. Jeanne the eldest daughter of Nauarre, but this marriage tooke no effect: for hee did more affect Mary the second daughter of King Philip, procuring him and Queene Jeanne to yeeld thereto: wherefore he sent for his Ambassadors into France, John Sanchez of Maroial, Chamberlaine of the great church of Sarragossa, and Garcia Loris, a knight, who in his name concluded a marriage at Anet, with the Infant Mary, who was not yet twelue yeeres old: and it was accorded by the matrimonial contract, that for want of heires male of King Philip and Queene Jeanne his wife, Mary the second daughter should inherit the realme of Nauarre, and not the elder. The King and Queene of Nauarre, did binde themselves to giue her in dowry three score thousand Sanchots; and for assurance of this marriage, there were giuen in deposito by King Philip the castles of Arguedas, Saint Carz, Estacha, Murillo, Gallipenco, and Burgui; and for the King of Arragon, Sos, Jos, Fayos, Borja, Saluatierra, Malon and Campdalijub, which places were put into the hands of certaine gentlemen, to be deliuered to any of these Princes, whose preiudice the accord had bene broken. The King of Arragon assigned Tarracone, Lacea and Tenel, for his wiues ioynter: and it was agreed that the Princeesse should bee deliuered vnto vnto the Inhabitants of Tudela, within a certaine time, and there kept by them, to bee A deliuered vnto her spouse, being full twelue yeeres old: and moreover, as at the accepti- on of King Philip, it had bene capitulated that the first sonne borne of Queene Isabe- his wife, being come to the age of twenty yeeres, they should deliuer him the realme to gouerne, and that the Estates should bee bound to pay him a hundred thousand San- chotts; in like manner, if Donna Maria, the future Queene of Arragon, should come to the succession of the Realme of Nauarre, the Estates should bee bound to pay him the like sum of money: These were the principal Articles of this marriage, which was sone after accomplished.

Treaty of marriage betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon and D. Maria of Nauarre.

An. 1337. In the yeere of our Lord 1337, the King D. Pedro being come to Valence, he sent Ber- nard of Villaragut, Arnaud Morrea, and Asbert Caliana Ambassadors to the Pope, to doe him homage for the Islands of Corsica, and Sardinia: In this last the Estate was then somewhat quiet: for Alcan and John, Marquisses of Malespine, sonnes to Opim, Damian Barnabas, and Brancalon d'Oris, Earles of Donoratico, the townes left vnto the Pisans, demanteled, and without any munition, Peter Iuge of Arborea, with Maria and John his brethren, all holding lands, and being subiects in the Island, contained them- selues in the friendship of the new King of Arragon, and did willingly acknowledge him for their superior. The rest of the family of Oris, for a wrong newly receiued from Ray- mond of Cardona, had bene forcibly drawne vnto it: who notwithstanding by the re- cofferation of the Pope, and the Kings of France, and Sicile, had bene receiued into fa- uour, and restored to their goods. Such was the Estate of Arragon, at D. Pedros com- ing to the crowne.

Castille.

Cruelly makes Kings to bee feared, but without they lose their sub- iects.

A Tyrant of no- uer truly re- conciled.

18 D. Alphonso King of Castille hauing made a peace with the Nauarrois, found himselfe freed of a great care, being ready to fall into new broiles by the practices of his owne subiects. This Prince thinking to raigne more securely, had taken a course of ex- treame severity, shewing himselfe cruel and treacherous to his Nobility, whereby he was feared, but withall he lost the loue and respect of his subiects: so as he was no longer freed from one danger, but he fell into another, worse then the first: wherefore this distrust lying smothered in the heart of D. John Manuel, D. John Nuges de Lara, D. Pero Fernandes de Castro, D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque, and others, reconciled hereto- fore vnto the King by necessity, rather then of their owne free will, they held a Maxime, That a tyrant being offended, will at some time reuenge himselfe; and therefore they must not trust him, vpon any reconciliation, who to pacifie the troubles which had growne by his owne error, had made no difficulty to sacrifice (vpon the peoples spleene) his owne Mignons: degrading, and in the end murthering, and condemning them as traitors, after their death, yea the Princes of his owne blood, rapturing their goods and Estates, and depriving the lawfull heires: seeking to raigne over free men, and of gene- rous spirits, as over beasts, intreating them as base and effeminate slaues, who might not speake their opinions freely, in matters of state and gouernment; of the which they were held dead members, and without feeling: wherefore if they were men, hauing vnderstanding and reason, they should neuer forget the nature of D. Alphonso, who was proud, a contemner of all law, and treacherous: yea they proceeded so farre, as Don John Manuel withdrew himselfe from the subiection of King D. Alphonso, by protesta- tion and publicke act.

VVarre in Ca- stile made by the rebels.

The Noblemen being thus ill affected to their King, they made a league (during the warre of Nauarre) with D. Alphonso King of Portugall, and did incense him to take armes for their defence, but their attempts had no better successe then the precedent, for D. Alphonso King of Castille, meaning to preuent these disorders, gaue command- ment throughout all the Prouinces of his Realme, to suppress all those that should take armes without his priuaty and warrant, seeking by all meanes to keepe the Rebelles diuided one from another. Moreover hauing some feeling, that cruelty was to violent a remedie for men that were nobly borne, hee fought by all milde and courtous meanes to diuide them, and to draw some of them vnto his seruice; the which he effected with D. Pero Fernandes de Castro, and D. John Alphonso of Albuquer- que, who abandoned their companions.

And

A And not able to doe the like with the rest, he went in person to beseege D. John Nuges de Lara, being in Lerma, and gaue order that in other parts of the Realme they should leize vpon the houses and persons of other rebels, beseegeing and forcing them if they made resistance: and about al he sent against D. John Manuel, the orders of holy knights. The seege being before Lerma, there were many skirmishes and furious encounters: wherevpon the King of Portugall tooke occasion to declare himselfe, sending word vnto the King of Castile, that he should leaue D. John Nuges de Lara in peace, who (he sayd) was his vassall, whereof the King of Castile made no great esteeme, but continued his seege more violent then before: some authors say that the King of Castile, had a desire to repudiat his lawfull wife Donna Maria, who was daughter to D. Alphonso King of Portugall, and to marry D. Leonora de Guzman, his concubine, and that it was the true cause of their hatred. D. John Manuel going secretly out of the castle of Garsi Nuges, he came to Pegnasil to fauor them that were beseeged within Lerma. In the meane time the tower of Lobaton and Soro were taken by the Kings men, where some Knights being taken, they were condemned and put to death.

The King of Portugall thinking hee had iust cause to enter in hostil manner into Castile, hee beseeged Badajos: which seege continued, vntill that D. Pero Alphonso de Sosa a Portugall, was defeated, with his troups, by the garrisons and people of Andalusie and Extremadura, neere vnto Villanoua of Barca Rotta, where many Portugals of account being slaine, the King was forced to raise his seege. They of Lerma seeing themselves battred with great obstinaty, beganne to distrust their owne strength, and were out of hope of any succours, wherefore they sought meanes how to let D. John Nuges de Lara escape by night: least hee should fall into the King of Castiles hands, who was much incensed, but all passages were so stoppt as hee could not possi- bly get out, so as in the end hee was forced to compound, yielding himselfe, with the sorts of Biscay, vpon condition that hee should haue his life saued, the which was promised him and kept. The townes of Lerma, Busto and Villafraanca in the moun- taines of Oca, were demanteled, and the sorts of Biscay deliuered into the Kings hands, for an assurance of Don John Nuges faith, hauing promised and sworne neuer to leaue his seruice, who followed the court at Vailledolit, and was afterwards much honored by the King, who besides other dignities made him chiefe standard-bearer of the Realme, and in the end he recovered al that had bene taken from him.

D. John Manuel seeing this, retired himselfe into Arragon, where there were great broiles betwixt the King D. Pedro, and D. Leonora his mother in law, and her partisans: for D. Pedro of Xerica, whose lands the King had taken away, was in armes, with Diego Lopes of Haro, John Martin of Leua, Lope Diaz Rogio and other Commanders, being sent by the King of Castile, who assisted them with men, money and counsell: and to conserue of these quarrels, hee and his sister Donna Leonora met at Ayllon, whereas shee made great complaints of the King D. Pedro, who had chased her out of Arragon, and spoiled both her and her children.

E The King of Castile desiring to bee reuenged of the King of Portugall, hee march- ed towards Badajos, where vpon the way hee was aduertised that Donna Leonora de Guzman was deliuered of a sonne, the which hee caused to be named Don Tello, this was in the yeere of our Lord 1337. An. 1337. Donna Beatrice his aunty, Queene of Portu- gall, came vnto him at Badajos, intreating him for to pardon the Portugals, and not to enter in hostile manner into the countrey, promising to finde meanes to re- concile all quarrels betwixt her sonne and him, and that all reasonable satisfaction should bee made.

Her prayers were reiected, and hee marched with his army towards the towne of Yel- bes, where hee cut vp the Vignes and Oliue trees, and spoiled all thereabouts, then hee past by Ronches and Beros, and returned to Chelles and Oliuencia, desiring much to encounter the Portugall army, the which hee knew to bee in field, but it marched an o- ther way. Don Alphonso Ieoffres Tenorio, Admirall of Castille, defeated the Portugall army at sea, being commanded by Manuel Pescagno a Genetois, and carried away the Admirall prisoner, yet not without losse of some of his ships and men.

xx

This

VVarre made by Portugall against Castile.

King of Castile sends Portu- gals with an army.

This was the first attempt of Castile against Portugal, the which was staied by the A Kings sicknesse, whereupon he caused himself to be carried to Seuille, and put his army into garrisons: but being soone recovered, he gathered his forces againe together, and entred into the country of Algarbe (notwithstanding that the great master of Rhodes, by commission from Pope Benedict the eleuenth, had exhorted him to desist from this war: and in like manner the Archbishop of Rheims, who was then Ambassador in Castile for the French King) he past the river of Guadiana, and came to Ayamont, which finding abandoned, he repast at Castromarin, the which was well fortified, so as he would not stay, but marcht towards Tabira, where he burnt the trees, and razed the farme houses there abouts, and then he returned into Castile by Alcautín. Whilest he wasted the country of Algarbe in Portugal, the King of Portugal did the like in Galicia, and besieged Saluatierra. B ra, who although he tooke it not, yet hee spoiled a great country, and left it desolate, by reason of the cowardize of Don Pero Fernandes, who was Gouvernor in these parts, who would neuer shew himselfe to make head against the King of Portugall, for that hee had bene bread vp a Page in his court: wherefore the Portugall army having spoiled the countrie of Galicia at their pleasures, they returned without any counter.

The Moores were ioyfull spectators of these warres betwixt the father in law and son, so as they did strictly entertaine the truce which they had made with the King of Castile: as they for the better confirmation thereof, there came a great Ambassage into Castile, from Abobahsen the Miralumin of Maroc, the chiefe whereof were two Alfaquins or Doctors of Mahumets sect, of great reputation, who presented vnto King D. Alphonso C Barbary horses, rich swords, cloath of gold and of precious silke, Ostriges, Falcons and other beasts, who hauing receiued an honourable reward, and obtained confirmation of the truce, with reparation of some exccesse which had bene committed amongst the frontiers, they returned well satisfied, but soone after the Moore changed aduice and counsell, hearing (to their great griefe) that there had bene a truce concluded betwixt the two Kings of Castile and Portugal. This truce was treated and made by the diligence of the great Maister of Rhodes, and the Archbishop of Rheims Ambassador for France, it was concluded with the King of Castile in the towne of Merida, about the end of the yeere 1337. or in the beginning of the next.

Death of Ximenes de Luna
Archbishop of Toledo.

College of Clement at Salamanca.

During this war betwixt Castile and Portugal, D. Ximenes de Luna Archbishop of Toledo died, in whose place the Chapter did choosethrough the Kings fauour, who had written D. Gil Aluarez of Cuenca, otherwise called D. Gil Carrillo of Albornoz a counsellor of Estate to King D. Alphonso, and Archdeacon of Calatraua, in the same church, a man of great vertue amongst the Spaniards, who for his wisdom and judgement, did in time merit to be a Cardinal of Rome, with the title of Saint Clement, Bishop of Sabina, and Apostolike Legat in Italy, the Romaine Sea being then resident in Avignon. During which dignity he did many things for the good of the church: and amongst other monuments and testimonies which remaine of him at this day, there is the College of Saint Clement in the city of Bologna, the which they commonly call the College of Spaine, the which was built by the executors of this Prelat, who did so appoint it. It hath about three thousand ducats of rent, with the which there are thirty students entertained, whereof twenty be Lawiers, six Diuins and foure Philosophers, besides foure Chaplains, al Spaniards, except one who may be a Portugal. The Rector of this College hath ciuil and criminal iurisdiction, and is not subiect to the Legat, nor to any other Magistrat of the city, the College enioying as ample preuileiges as any knight or gentleman there. About the end of the yeere 1337. was founded the towne of Alagria of Dulanci, two Leagues from Victoria, in the Prouince of Alaua, of many villages there about, the which obtained from the King the preuileiges, and lawes of the Realme, whereby the Inhabitants should gouerne themselves, and market euery Monday, with liberty to chooseth their owne Iudges.

In the yeere of our Lord 1338. D. Pedro King of Arragon, married D. Maria, second daughter to King Philip, and to Queene Isabel of Nauar, in the towne of Alagon, the Bishop of Chalons doing the ceremony, hauing accompanied the Queen-mother to the Arragon.

An. 1338.

Bride,

A Bride, who came alone to this marriage, without her husband Philip, being ingaged in those cruel and bloody warres betwixt the French and English, contending for the crowne of France. Pope Benedict the eleuenth, then reigning, dispensed with the married couple, for the bond of consanguinity, which was betwixt them, at the request of Philip of Valois, the French King: from Alagon the new Queene was conducted to Sarragossa, whereas the feast and pompe was ended, for the which they had prepared long before in that citie, being chosen for the celebration of this marriage: but the indisposition of D. Isabelle Queene of Nauarre, was the cause that they were married at Alagon.

Marriage betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon and D. Maria the younger of Nauar.

19. The newes of a truce betwixt the Kings of Castile and Portugal, being vnder-

Moore.

B stood at Granado, and from thence sent to Maroc; at such time as King Abobahsen had surmounted all warres and difficulties in Affrike, these Moorish Kings had a desire to fill Spaine with fire and murder, being thrust on by two contrary passions, the one of feare, to be first set vpon by the King of Castile, who was now freed from his intestine wars: the other of hope, that their armes should be as successful against the Christians of Europe, as they had bene against the barbarous Affricans: for King Abobahsen hauing not long before called troups out of Spaine, which had followed Abomelic his sonne, lying then idle on this side the seas, whereas all was quiet: and being assisted by the forces of Granado, sent into Affrike by King Ioseph, hee had lately deputed Boteselín, who reigned in Tremessen, both of Kingdome and life, and had vnto his crowne

C the Realme of Sojumenca: so as being growne as haughty in courage, as powerful in Signeuries and subiects, he had no lesse conceptions, then to restore the ancient glorie of the Miraluminis his Predecessors in Spaine, and wholly to expell the Christians. Besides the respect of religion did much encourage him, holding it not only honourable, but also conscientious, to aduance Mahumets sect by armes, according to his Doctrine: wherefore hauing by the aduice of his Alfaquins and Aluises concluded this warre, hee began to giue order that his troups should march towards the Straights, and passe by little and little to Algezire, and other places of Granado, making a Magazin for victuals, armes, engines and other munition for the warre, at Tanger; whereof the Christians Princes were presently aduertised by their Gouvernors of forts vpon that frontier, and of King Abomelic passage and returne into Spaine, and of the preparations

Expedition of Abobahsen into Spaine.

D which both he and Ioseph King of Granado made: insalible arguments that they would soone make open warres, as it happened in the beginning of the yeere 1338. D. Alphonso King of Castile seeing this burthen ready to fall vpon him, fore-cast all means how to beare it: hee made Orders and taxes vpon victuals, and cut off the Spaniards superfluities in apparels and other pomes: hee sent his sea-army into the Straights, to stop the Moores passage: hee obtained from Pope Benedict pardons and Indulgences for all those that should contribute to this warre: hee assigned places for the souldiers Rendez vous: hee leauied footmen, artificers and pioneers: and in general hee provided for all things which hee thought necessarie for the warres: but above all hee pacified the troubles growne betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon, and Donna Leonora his Mother in law. In all which businesses, the Archbishop of Rheims, Ambassador for France in Castile, laboured with great affection, and to the end there should be no thing defectiue for the wel gouerning of the common weale, the Prelats and Masters of the Orders made diligent search among them that were their suffragans and dependants: so as D. Rais Pero Maister of the Order of Alcantara was depouled by D. John Nugnes master of Calatraua, who had iurisdiction ouer him, and power to doe it. Yet amidst all these Cares, the King did not forget the loue of D. Leonora of Guzman, whose brother called Don Alphonso Melendez of Guzman, was by him made maister of the Order of the holy knights of Saint Lames. The yeere 1339. being come, hee went towards Seulle, where

An. 1339.

F was the Rendez vous, for all his troups, both horse and foote, so as hauing in few daies gathered together a great and well ordered army, hee entred the territories of Antequera & Archidona, the which he spoiled, running vp to Ronda, so whence he was forced to retire to Seulle for want of victuals, where he spent the rest of the spring to distribute the forts & places vpon the frontiers vnto capitaines, making D. Gonzales Nugnes, or as others say.

say, Martinez Maister of Alcantara (newly elect) Gouernor and his Lieutenant general there, and hee himselfe came to Madrid. The Moores incensed at this entry which the Christian army had made into their country, went to field by two seuerall waies; the Infant Abomelic (who had great numbers of light horse) by Medina Sidonia, whose territory he spoiled, and Isoph King of Granado entred by Silos, which place belonging vnto the knights of Saint Iames and well manned, hee besieged, and barred furiously, but it was not onely brauely defended by the garrison but their campe was assaulted by the Castilian army, and they forced to dislodge by D. Alphonso Melendez de Guzman who was the Leader, not without great dishonor and losse to the King of the Moores: who at the same time was stript of the victuals of his army, which he caused to bee conducted to Priegos, by the Gouernor D. Gonzalo Martinez, who carried the prey to Alcaudete. The Gallies of Castille being ioyned to them of Arragon, held King Abomelic as it were besieged in Algezire, lying in the straight; taking from him all hope of succours, either of men or victuals from Affrike: whereupon the Moores being aduertised that in Lebrixa was one of the store-houses for the Christian army, thought they might well surprise it: whereupon they sent about one thousand five hundred horse among the Olive trees of Xeres (where they tooke a great booty) but they found that D. Fernand Perez Carrero, gouernor of Tariffe, was entred a little before with a good number of souldiars; wherefore their designe being disappointed, they turned towards Arcos, where they spoiled, and carried away great store of cattraile, whereof the Inhabitants within Seule being aduertised, they went with their city standard to field, and being ioyned to the King of Alcantara, to D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, to D. Pera Ponce of Leon (who Maister of Alcantara, and others, they came and incourted these foragers vnlooked for, whom they charged so furiously, as they put them to rout, and recouered all the prey, King Abomelic continuing the spoile about Xeres, marcht with three thousand and five hundred horse which he had recouered, and a great number of foot towards Alcala de los Gazules, and besieged it, being ignorant of the defeat of his men. The victorious Christians, hauing ioyned with Fernand Gonzales & Aguilar, who had some horse, and being also fortressed by them of Eccia, marcht that way, and charged this army of Moores with such fury, as they put them to flight, and chasing and killing them they pursued them far, his campe remayning in great confusion and disorder. King Abomelic being hastily pursued, had no meanes to get to horse, but fell amongst the footmen, who fled and were hardly followed: so as in the end, not to be knowne, hee cast himselfe amongst those which lay vpon the ground slaine or wounded, where a Christian souldiary passing by and not knowing him thrust him through with his sword, whereof hee died soone after. The Christians (as some write were not above 2000. horse, and two thousand five hundred foote; who without any great losse, slue ten thousand Moores in this surprize and pursute: they spoiled their campe, and tooke their baggage which was great, and so returned ioyfully to Xeres. The Kings body was afterwards found, neere vnto a brooke whether he had crept (as it was likely) to quench the burning thirst, which doth commonly afflicke such as are wounded, hauing lost much blood. King Albohacen his father being aduertised of this pittifull accident, was inflamed with wrath, and desire of reueng, making all possible speed to passe into Spaine.

Whilest that hee prepares himselfe, there fell out a great disorder in Andalusia, by the meanes of D. Leonora of Guzman. This woman who gouerned the King, made the ports & accused D. Gonzal Nunez Maister of Alcantara, of certaine matters, the which did much incense the King: wherefore being come to Madrid, hee sent to the Maister to come presently vnto him. D. Gonzal who was fully aduertised why hee was sent for, and knowing how dangerous the King was to them hee did not like, obeyed not: but thrust himselfe with the Moores, and beganne to make practises in Granado. The King being aduertised of his reuolt, returned sodainely, and had meanes (before hee could dislodge) to besiege him in a towne called Valence, belonging to the Order of Alcantara, whereas D. Gonzale defended himselfe vnto the end, and would neuer harken to any words or promises whatsoever.

In

In the end, not able to hold it any longer, hee offered to yeeld vnto the Kings mercy, but it was too late: for the place was forced, and he taken and put to death and his body condemned and burnt as a Traitor by the Kings sentence. Such as had followed his party, and held other places yielded. A man in truth worthy of a more honorable death, who besides many generous acts, and worthy seruices done vnto the crowne of Castille, had bene in the two aboue mentioned victories and adorned the Temples of the towne where he was forced, with the standards and ensignes hee had taken from the Moores. D. Nuno Chamico was chosen in his place.

Jeffrey Girallbert Admiral of Arragon, who kept the Straight with the gallies of Arragon, being landed vpon the shoare nere to Algezire, had an encounter with the Moores, by whom he was vanquished, and slaine with an arrow, whereupon the army returned into Arragon, that of Castille remayning at the passage, the which consisted onely of three and thirtie gallies, and some few ships, to weake a force to stoppe the Moores passage out of Affrike: so as about three thousand Genets past presently into Algezire, without any let, and beganne to ouerrunne the country about Arcos, Xeres and Medina Sidonia, gathering together a great prey: but thinking to put it into Algezire, they were forced to leaue it by the way, being charged by the horsemen which went out of Xeres, who slue many vpon the place, amongst which was Bowlai, a famous captaine of the Moores.

King Albohacen had caused a great number of vessels of all sorts to be made ready, both in the ports of Spaine and Affrike, meaning to carry into Spaine one of the greatest armies that euer went out of Affrike, to stop whole passage. King Alphonso was ill provided: and as he was distrustfull, and of a strange humour, and many times vniust vnto his best seruants, hee complained of Don Alphonso Jeffrey Tenorio his Admirall, saying that hee slept, and suffered the Moores to passe and repasse at their pleasure, the which was not true: for the Admirall did his duty with those few Gallies hee had, and did often take spoils and other vessels which did houer about the shore coastes, and ships laden with victuals which came out of Affrike into Spaine: namely from Centa to Algezire, the which notwithstanding did not satisfie the King, who would exact some great effect of necessity: wherefore hee thrust the Admirall into despair, the which was verie preiudiciall to that warre.

King Albohacen being come to Ceuta in the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1340. and hauing there gathered together to the number of three score and ten Gallies, and other vessels to passe his horsemen, victuals, armes, engines and other equipage of warre, neere to a hundred and foure score sailles, as wel of his owne, as of the Kings of Granado, hee went with this mighty army towards Spaine, where it was easie to land, finding no resistance, whereat King D. Alphonso, who was at Seuille was much incensed, blaming his Admirall incessantly of cowardise and treachery, the which hee tooke for greuously, as hee resolved rashly to goe and charge the Moores at what price soeuer, and hauing drawne those few Gallies and Ships hee had out of Saint Luez, into the open sea, hee presented himselfe before Algezire, prouoking the enemy to battaile, who going out of Algezire and Gibraltar, farre more in number then the Christian Gallies, there was a fierce and cruel battaile, the end whereof was the whole losse of the Castilian army, whereof there were but five gallies saved, the which recouered the neere port of Tariffe, and some few ships, which escaped by fauour of the winde and current, flying towards Carthagea. The Admirall was slaine in this conflict, flying; that the King should know he was neither Coward nor Traitor: but it was a rash attempt in him, to hazard so small a flecte against so great an armie, who should haue considered, that by the losse of a battaile hee gaue the whole commande of the sea vnto the enemy.

Thus this Admirall thinking to preferre his honor, which hee might well haue warranted by the reasons of warre, which disallow all great hazards, but in extremity, hee did more blenshit. This losse which happened to Don Alphonso King of Castille, partly by his owne bitternesse, and vniust rigour to his faithfull seruant, did much afflicke him; so as hee was forced to seeke speedie meanes to repaire so great a ruine: for the Moores army insolent of this victory, and knowing that there were no forces at sea able to

X x 3

Moores:

Loyalty ill rewarded makes a good servant disloyal.

Defeat of the Castilian army and death of the admirall.

make head against them, vaunted that they would beseege Seuille: wherefore the King of Castille was forced to conuert the truce which hee had made with the King of Portugal to a peace, and to consent that D. Constance Manuel should marry with Don Pedro Infant of Portugal, whose wife D. Blanche beeing fallne into a Palley, was put away by him. By meanes of this peace, and at the instance of the Queene Donna Maria, daughter to the King of Portugal, hee promised to lend all his shippes of warre to the King of Castille, the which stayed not long before they arrived at Seuille, when as the King gaue order to rigge out fifteene gallees of his owne, and twelue ships, of the which hee gaue the charge vnto Don Alphonso Ortiz Calderon, Prior of Saint John.

Great preparation of war made by King Alboacen against Spaine.

In the meane time King *Alboacen*s army past, the Moores Gallies and Ships neuer ceasing for a long time, to transport horse and foote, victualles and munition for the warre, which they had prepared, the which was as great and fearefull as any had beene seene, for they write in their Histories that this Arabian King had gathered together all the forces hee could from the shoare of the Westerne Atlanticke sea, vnto Egypt, hauing by the conquest of the Realmes of Tremessen and Sojumenca, so extended the bounds of his Empire as there was not any King or Potentat in all the length of Affrike, which was not his subiect, or strictly allied vnto him: so as the Spanish authors say, that hee brought into Spaine aboue seuentie thousand horse; and Spanish authors say, the Arabians and Affricans comming from all parts vnder hundred thousand foote, by the preachings and perswasions of the Almuquins, Doctors and Priests of their law, who were sent through out all the regions of Affrike, by King Alboacen, to the end that such, as spoile and gaine (the common end of warre) could not mooue, might bee perswaded to take armes for religious cause. This great multitude of Infidels, were neere fise monethes in passing, hauing at this passage, besides the Gallies of Maroc and Granado, shofe of the Kings of Tunes and Bugie, whereof hee of Tunes was father in law to Alboacen, and their common landings were Algezire and Gibraltar.

It behoued King D. Alphonso studie how hee should resist so great a power, the which did wonderfully trouble him: yet beeing a Prince of a great courage, hee provided for many things speedely; which were of great importance for the warre. And doubting that the Moores first attempt would bee against Tariffe, hee manned it with a good garrison of old souldiars, and gaue the charge thereof to John Alphonso of Benauides, furnishing the place with all things necessarie to maintaine a seerge: where in hee was not deceived, for it was presently inuested by the enemy, King Alboacen beeing in person in the armie. Experience hath often taught, that multitudes giue no victory; for besides that God will therein shew a testimony, that it is hee alone, without the force of mans arme, which rayseth and pulles downe Kingdomes and states; there are so many naturall and humane reasons, which doe concur with this point of religion, as there is no cause to call it in question. The confusion, disorder, disobedience, mutinies, hunger, diseases, the infinit carriages and lets of baggage, jealousies betwixt commanders, and diuersity of nations, the negligence and rash confidence which Kings ground vpon their great numbers of men, are inseparable mischeetes to great armies, the which haue most commonly ruined them, but haue alwaies made them vnprofitable and which haue most commonly ruined them. So it happened to King Alboacen in this voiage: for as soone as hee had landed this infinite multitude of Arabians and other Nations, presuming that there was not any Christian in Spaine, that would dare to present himselfe before so great a power, and that hee should presently see himselfe Master of all the townes of Andalusia: besides hee thought hee had no cause to feare any impeachment at sea, the two armies of Castille and Arragon hauing beene defeated: so as all small vessels of burthen might passe safely from Spaine to Affrike, and furnish his campe with victuals, if hee should haue any neede, wherevpon hee presently disarmed all his Gallies, and drew them into the Ports, hauing no other thought but to make warre by land, but it fell out otherwise: for there was not any petty place vpon the frontiers of Andalusia but held good: so as being forced to attend his provisions for so great an army from Affrike, for that the countie of Granado could

Armies vnprofitable by their too great multitudes.

A could not supply it, he found himselfe (being at the seerge of Tariffe) in great want of victuals, being easie for the gallies of Castille and Portugal, to spoile all passengers which brought munition from the ports of Affrike into Spaine: wherefore he repented himself much of this enterprife, and would gladly haue found some meanes to haue retired honorably.

At that time Don John Martines de Leyua arrived at Seuille, returning from Pope Benedict who kept at Auignon: from whom he brought pardons and full indulgences, so such as should crosse themselves for this warre against the Infidels, or otherwise employ them selves or their goods for the advancement thereof, with an especial charge and commission to Don Gil Carillo of Albornoz, Arch-bishop of Toledo, to publish this Croisado, making him to that end Legate of the Apostolike sea. The army before Tariffe being oppressed with famine, King Alboacen gaue Don John Alphonso of Benauides, the Gouvernor, to vnderstand, that he had some matters to treat of with him for the good of the king his master, and therefore he should send some vnto him, to conferre with him. The Gouverneur hauing receiued hostages, sent two Gentlemen vnto him: but beeing aduertised at the same instant that the gallies of Castille and Portugal had beene all callt away by tempest vpon the coast, so as the sea beeing free, victuals began to come abundantly from Affrike vnto the campe: when as these Knights came vnto king Alboacen, hee sayd nothing of consequence vnto them, but was desirous againe to continue the warre, sending backe these messengers, and retiring his hostages. Then did they make a furious batterie, with all kinds of engines vsuall in those times, against the which the beseeged rampared themselves, and made a gallant defence. King D. Alphonso hauing called to Seuille, the Noblemen of his Councell, and the chiefe men among his subiects, sitting in his royall throne with great maiestie, holding in his right hand the sword, wherewith hee had beene girt in Saint James Church of Galicia, when he was made Knight, and in his left hand the Crowne, wherewith he had beene crowned in the citie of Bourgois: he spake grauely vnto them of the present estate of his affaires, and the danger wherein the Christian realms of Spaine then were, by the importune malice, and impiety of the Arabians, their ancient enemies, coniuired together at that time from the East vnto the West, to glut their implacable thirst with the blood of Spaniards: against whose forces, without all doubt, in time, Spaine should not be able to resist, many of their best men hauing beene consumed by the factions and diuisions which had raigned among them, whereby Spaine had wasted her selfe by her owne armes, and withall the ill successe of his armies at sea, brought twise to nothing: so as for so dangerous a mischiefe, there was need of an extraordinarie remedie, the honour of the name of Christians, the Crowne of Castille, and their liberties, liues, and goods, beeing then in question: wherein he had need of good and faithfull Councell, and for that cause had called them together, praying God to put into their hearts and vnderstandings, what was fit for the honor and increase of his Crowne, and the Common-weale. Wherevpon many different opinions hauing beene propounded, all in the end concluded, that they must rayse the seerge from before Tariffe: for the effecting whereof they must find meanes to ioine the forces of Portugal, Arragon and Castille together, for the which they began presently to giue order. The Queene of Castille got a promise from Don Alphonso King of Portugal her father, to ayde the king her husband with all his forces, wherevpon there was an enterview of the two kings, at Trumegna, a towne in Portugal.

D. Alphonso presented to his Councell.

The king of Castille sent to encourage them of Tariffe, giuing them hope of speedie succours: forbidding them exprelly not to fall forth vpon the enemy, for that the losse of one man did more import them, then an hundred to King Alboacen: he obtained a new army at sea from the king of Arragon, (the which was commanded by the Prior of Saint John, who had escaped in the tempest) to ioine with those few gallies which he had yet left: and presently after the king of Portugal came in person to Seuille, beeing accompanied with all the flower of his Nobility, and the best souldiars of his country. They leaued men in all parts of Spaine both foot and horse, which enrolled themselves for this religious warre, but especially out of Biscay, Alaua, and Guipuscoa, which bee the best foot-men of Spaine, the which were commanded by Don Pero Nunez de Guzman, their Lord

Don

Don John Nagues de Lara, being employed in the conduct of the horse. To conclude, A their indeavors were such, as within few dayes there were mustred about Seuille 25000. foote, and 14000. horse, with which forces the two kings of Castile and Portugal, resolved to offer battell vnto the enemy which was before Tariffe, being farre more mighty then they, having besides the great number of horse and foote which he brought out of Affricke, ioyned vnto him the forces of Granado, the which consisted of 7000. horse, and a great multitude of foot. Aftoon as the Christian army began to march, Alboacen king of Maroc, and Ioseph king of Granado, sent Albohmar Infant of Maroc with 2000. horse to keepe the passage of the riuier of Salado, which runnes betwixt Pegna du Cerf, and Tariffe, the which were defeated by a thousand horse and 4000. foot, which the King of Castile had sent to put themselves into Tariffe, the which they effected happily, after this exploit, through fauour of the night, the Moorish kings hauing already raised their siege, burnt their engines of batterie, and retired their army into a place of aduantage, called Al-faneque. These troupes were the bands of D. Henry and D. Tello, children aduowed of Castile, the which were led by wife and expert Captaines.

The day after this defeat the two armies presented themselves vpon the banks of the riuier of Salado, which the Christians meant to passe, and so they did, but with great resistance and difficultie: yet Gonsalo Ruiz de la Vega, and his brother Garcilaso, who marched in the head of the army, assured the passage for the rest, repulsing the Moors, who defended it valiantly, when as the Christians were all past without breaking, they found the great squadrons of the Moors in Order, ready to fight, so as in an instant they ioyned, and were so mingled, as the kings themselves on either side, sparing not their owne persons, and performing the duties as well of souldiers, as of Generals of armies, were many times found in danger: and their obltinacie was so great in the fight, as the Arch-bishop of Toledo wasaine (partly by intreaties, and partly by force) to draw the king of Castile out of the presse, where he had the fore-part of his saddle shot through with an arrow: a dangerous blow, if it had lighted a little higher, the which might haue made the kingdoms of Spaine a prey vnto the Moors, by the losse of a battell, which doth commonly follow the death of the Generall. But God disposed otherwise, according to his mercy to the Christians: for the Moors being rather hindered then helped by their multitudes, gaue way and fled, where as the slaughter was so great, as the number of the dead (as Authors write) is not erredible, but howsoener, the Christians had an absolute victorie, who might haue laine more, and it may be haue extinguished the name of Moors in Spaine, if they had pursued the disordered enemies, who fled one ouer another, and not busied themselves at the spoyle, especially the footmen. The camp remayning free to the Christians, as they gathered the spoyles together, there were found among the dead, one of the king of Marocs wiues, called Fatima, daughter to the king of Tunes, of the race of the Almohades, and three other Ladies. Among the prisoners Albohmar sonne to king Alboacen, and his nephewes Alboham and Albohali, it may be children to Albohali, who had beene king of Sojumenca, two of the kings daughters, and other Moors of noate. The Kings of Maroc and Granado escaped by flight, and retired to diuers places. Alboacen apprehending, that by this defeat his reputation and honour would bee much blemished, and thereby the fidelitie of his subiects shaken, fearing least a sonne of his called Alderramen, whom he had left at Maroc, should seaze vpon the kingdom, he past the same night to Ceuta.

This battell wonne by the Christians the eight and twentieth of October, in the year 1340. is rightly paralleled to that of Muradal or Tholoufa, by the which the Moors lost the command of Spaine, some 128. years before: for thereby the great designs of the king of Maroc were disappointed, hauing promised vnto himselfe the conquest of all Spaine, so as after that time the warre grew more easie and light. This victorie was honoured and renowned by many religious and ciuill acts among the Spaniards: for besides that during the conflict, the name of Saint James, (who was held Patron and Protector of Spaine) did sound (as they say) in the ayre, and that Don Alphonso Guzier Pereyra, Prior of S. John, of Grato in Portugal, had carried with him a peece or fragment of the true Crosse, and many other such persuasions and inducements put them that the poole at the river of Salado

Defeat memorable of the Moors at Salado.

superstitious acknowledgments of so great a victory

A put in practise (according to the doctrine of those times) in the campe, and in all other places whether that newes came, thanks were giuen vnto God for so great a grace, and great demonstrations of ioy made throughout all the townes. D. Alphonso King of Castile, the day after the battell entred into Tariffe, and caused the breaches to bee repayed, commending and rewarding the Captaines and souldiers which had carried themselves valiantly in the siege. Hauing afterwards viewed the enemies spoiles, the king of Castile did distribute it, according to euery mans merits.

The king of Portugall would not haue any thing, but certaine summitures and caparasons for horses, and fwords richly wrought after the Moreco fashion: but the King of Castile his sonne-in-law gaue him a prisoner, a Moore of the bloud royall, one of the sonnes of Albohali, who had beene king of Sojumenca. Thus the two kings, father-in-law, and sonne-in-law, parted, very well satisfied one of another. To acknowledge the grace which God had done vnto the Christians, by so great a victorie, the king of Castile took this course, he sent John Martines de Leyua, to Pope Benedict, then residing at Auignon, with his royall Standard, which had beene carried in the battell, accompanied with foure and twenty of the chiefe Ensignes which he had taken from the Moors, the which were borne by so many Moors. Moreouer, he sent him an hundred horse richly appointed, euery one hauing a sword and a target hanging at his saddle pommel, and were led by so many Moors. With these horses he sent his owne, on the which hee was mounted the day of the battell, couered with the royall armes of Castile and Leon: and moreouer, many rich Jewels, and other singularities, which things were presented vnto the Pope with great ceremony and pompe, and receiued with no lesse honour and solemnity by the Pope and Cardinals. And the more to honour this act, the Pope the same day did sing a pontifical Masse, and did preach, much commending the king of Castile, and to reward him, he powred forth his spirituall treasures, granting him store of Indulgences, with the which John Martines de Leyua returned, being well recompensed.

Some Authors write, that the victuallers, carters, pioners, merchants, Lackies, and others of base quality in the Christians campe, falling vpon the baggage, whilst the souldiers were in fight, had taken great spoiles of gold, siluer, and other riches, and that the king being aduertised thereof, was perswaded not to suffer men, which had not beene in the battell, nor aduentured their liues, to enioy the booties which were due vnto souldiers: wherefore meaning to follow this aduice, he forced many to bring backe that which they had taken: but the greater number escaped, who fearing to be dispossest of that which they had gotten, being all their fortunes, left Castile, and went into Nauarre, Arragon, France and other countries, with such store of double duckets, as the price of gold was fallen a fixt part, and all merchandize much risen.

20 In this warre were furnished twenty gallies of Cattelogne, by Don Pedro king of Arragon, and eight by him of Majorca. The King Don Pedro was not there in person, neither did he send any forces by land, by reason of his owne affaires and domestick designs, which he did plot to the preiudice of his subiect. A violent Prince, proud, didainfull, and full of reuenge. Don James King of Majorca his cousin and brother-in-law, was forced in the city of Barcelona, the yeare before the defeat of the Moors at Salado, to do him homage for the Ilands and other Segneuries which he held vpon the Mayne, as to his Soueraigne, causing him to kneele before him, whereuppon this Prince retired him selfe in a great rage to Perpignan: from whence soone after he was forced to returne to Court, and to accompany the king Don Pedro vnto Auignon, whither he went to visit the Pope, where it happened that these Kings walking through the towne together, a seruant of the King of Majorcas, doing some seruice vnto his master indirectly, hee did so moue the King Don Pedro, as he was ready to draw his sword, and to strike the king of Majorca himselfe, which was the beginning of their quarrels, the which continued long and violent.

The arruall and entrie of the king Don Pedro into Auignon, was very honorable, for at the passage of the riuier of Durance, he was met and receiued by two and twenty Cardinals, and entred with the king of Majorca into the towne, betwixt Cardinall Neapolon of Vrsins, and he of Cominges: but the next day (after he had shewed his spleene against his

Arragon.

Qualities of the King Pedro.

his brother in law, it may be moued with some sower answer which the Pope had given him; he retired to Villa-noua discontented. The chiefe man which then serued him in his most important affaires, was Nicholas of Ionuille; a French man, who was Earle of Terra-noua in the Kingdome of Naples, and had married Marguerite daughter to the Admirall Roger of Loria. This man was advanced in the place of D. Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, the Kings vnkle, who was giuen more to a contemplatiue life, then to worldly affaires: for the which, notwithstanding he had had long and bitter iarrs with D. Pedro de Luna, Archbishop of Saragozza, who was desirous to gouerne, and to mannage the affaires of the Realme: but their contention had bene ended by the aduancement of this third, and they were reconciled at the marriage of D. Lope de Luna, the sonne of Artail, and nephew to the Archbishop, and D. Violant the Kings aunt, and sister to the Earle of Ribagorça, who was widow to Philip Despoie of Romania, and sonne to Philip Prince of Tarrenrum, the which were celebrated at Lerida, and from whence they went to Auiignon. The King D. Pedro being returned from this voyage, hee commenced a criminall Proceffe against the King of Maiorca, for that he caused money to be coyned in the Towne of Perpignan, and he caused him to bee cited to appeare before the Estates then assembled at Barcelona, not much troubling himselfe that the French king (carrying himselfe as Soueraigne of Montpellier, and other lands belonging to the King of Maiorca, on this side the Pyrenees, had seized vpon the forts and castles of all these places. The King of Maiorca not appearing, his totall ruine was resolued by the King, the which followed as we shall hereafter shew.

State of Sardinia.

At that time such was the Estate of Sardinia: Caillery, Aquafredda, Ioiosaguarda, Quirio, Castelorguilleux, Gallicelli, Castel Pedresio, Faba Oslia, Salleri, and la Balide of Sorria, were held by Arragon garissons: Marian Iudge of Arborea, had bene newly made Earle of Gothian by the king, John Marquis of Malepine, and the Earles of Donaratico were friends to the kings of Arragon: but in Italy the Pisans, the Genouois, and with them Luquin Vicount, (who then ruled at Milan) had made a league, and conspired to chase the Arragonois out of Sardinia, where they also had their partisans and intelligences: for besides other factions, the family of Doria was then diuided into foure factions. These things did trouble the king D. Pedro amidst his enterprises, at such time as hee sought the ruine of D. Iames King of Maiorca, and when hee was follied by Hugh Corring, Petra Allersia, and Loupe Cincora, chiefe men of the Iland of Corsica, to undertake the conquest thereof, whereof the Bishop of Aleria was the minister and ambassadour: and euen then when it was most needfull to haue sent his gallies to the Streight, in fauor of the k. of Castile, and for the common interest of all the Christian Princes of Spaine.

Portugal.

Before the yeare 1340. past, the Infant D. Pedro of Portugall had a sonne by his new spouse D. Constance Manuel, whome he had married at Ebroa, with a dowrie of 300000. d. iublons, and many rich iewels, and this Infant was named D. Fernando or Ferdinand, who was king of Portugall after the Grandfather and father.

Castile.

21 In the yeare 1341. D. Alphonso king of Castile hauing called a Parliament of all his Realmes at Herrena in Extremadura, there were great summes of money giuen him, his subiects seeing that he employed it profitably, for the defence and increafe of the crowne: from thence he came to Madrid, where he gaue Order for all that was necessarie for the warre, and appointed the Rendez-vous for his troups at Cordoua, from whence he sent them of Seuille and Cordoua to make incursions, attending the rest of his forces: he made a shew to go to Malaga, the which put the Moores into great feare: but hee marched to Alcala de Bencayde, vpon the arrivall of those troups which he expected, the which he found vnfortuned, for the king of Granada did confidently beleuee, that he would haue led his armie to Malaga: This place after some weake resistance yeelded, vpon condition that the Inhabitants should haue their liues saued: Moclin was taken by the diligence of D. Alphonso Fernandez and Cornel. There was some ouerture of a truce made in the behalle of the king of Granada, but without any conclusion, for that the king of Castile would not haue king Abacer comprehended: Priegos was also taken by composition: the like happened to Sarabney, being prest by Martin Fernandes Puerto Carroero. D. Alphonso Melendez de Guzman, master of S. Iames, did also win the castel of Benamexin: other places, as Rute, and

A and the tower of Matrera were also forced: then winter approaching, the king left good garissons in his townes, and the gard of the sea to Giles Bocanegra, a Genouois with fortie gallies, and other ships, and then he came to Vaileddolir, where he assigned the Estates at Burgos, at the which the sege of Algezire being propounded, there was granted vnto him an Imposition, called Alcauala, which was the twentieth part of all merchandize, that should be sold within the Realme. Thus as the king designed the sege of Algezire, his Admiral Giles Bocanegra hauing surprized twelue gallies of Granada in the port of Buillon, he burnt foure, sunke two, and carried away the other fixe. The king of Portugall sent ten of his gallies to ioyne with them of Castile, which were in the port of Xatares, being commanded by Charles Pagan or Pecagno. In the meane time many of the Moores

Victories at sea of the Christians against the Moores.

B gallies assembled at Ceuta, the which they layd, exceeded the number of 80. which threatened to passe into Spaine with great forces to reuenge their former losses. The king of Castile aduertised herof, came to Seuille, where by the way he vnderstood that the Moores army was come out of Affricke into Spaine, and that they were entered into the mouth of the riuer of Guadamecil with great numbers of fouldiers, viduals, and other provisions, the which they had landed, but it was suddenly beleegged by the gallies of Castile and Portugall, to whose succor came 13. gallies of Algezire, the which were fought with all by part of the Christian army, who sunke foure of them, two were taken, and the rest ran on ground. Being returned to their companions, who had shut vp the Moores army in the mouth of the riuer, there was a furious battell giuen, where as the Christians had the better, and the Moores lost 25. of their gallies. This done, the Portugall Admirall returned

C being sent for by the king his master: he came to kisse the king of Castiles hands at Xeres, who did him great honour, and gaue him letters in testimony of his vertue to the King of Portugall his master, intreating him to send him backe againe with his gallies. But the army at sea was nothing weakened hereby, for at the same time that the gallies of Portugall departed there arriued 20. from Arragon, of the which D. Pedro of Moncada was General, who in their way had encountered and vanquished 13. gallies of the Moores, whereof they carried away foure, two were broken against the shore, and the rest saued themselves at Velez in Affricke. The king came to Xatares, and being himselfe desirous to discouer the country of Algezire, and the situation of the towne, he went aboard a gally, and howered

D along the coast, and by the gulph, finding the country very pleasant: wherefore hee grew more desirous to beleegge that fort: and being returned to Seuille, and giuen order for all things necessarie for such an enterprise, he came and inuested it both by sea and land, in the month of August 1342. hauing not yett all his forces together, but onely 4000. foot: and 1600. horse, with his sea army of Castile and Arragon. In Algezire they made account, that there were at the least 800. horse, and 12000. foote Moores, all archers, and Croffe-bow men, who did much annoy the Christians, by their continuall sallies and skirmishes, but alsoone as the king of Castile had taken a fort, called Carthagens, lying betwixt Algezire and Gibraltar, they presented themselves more warily. A Moore taken in this castell, being brought vnto the king to discouer the state of the towne, was so transported with a desperate furie, as had not his Guard bene, and others that were nere vnto the Kings person, he had slaine him. Matters standing on these tearmes, the king of Arragon renoued his army, for that he had need thereof againe: the king of Maiorca, the which did somewhat incommode the sege: and at the same time the king had another cause of griefe, for the death of D. Alphonso Melendez de Guzman, master of S. Iames: in whose place D. Frederic the kings base sonne was chosen in the campe. There arriued daily at the campe great numbers of men from diuers forraign countries, to serue against the Infidels: by reason whereof, and fore-seeing that this sege would bee difficult and long, King D. Alphonso intreated the Christian Princes of France and Portugall, and the Pope

An. 1342.

E himselfe to lend him money. The French king assisted him with 50000. Crownes, which were made ouer to Genoa. Whilst they lye before Algezire, Ioseph King of Granada hauing gathered together 6000. horse, which he had in his country, with 2000. Afficans, being in garisson at Ronda, hee ouer-ran the country as far as Ecchia, where hauing spoiled all, he came to Palma, which he entred without any great difficulty, putting all the Christians hee found in it to the sword, then packing vpp his baggage, hee returned with speed speed to Granado, fearing to be charged by the Garrisons and Commons there about, A who began to make a head. There was a More with one eye taken in the camp, who came from Castellar, and was sent to kill the king of Castile, as hee himselfe confessed, for the which he was executed. This year about Nouember, there arrived ten galleys, sent by the king of Arragon, and commanded by Mathew Mercier of Valence: the like number came from Portugal, and ioyned with the army, but within three weekes they returned, and no man knew the reason, yet the sege was not stayed, nor the batterie discontinued before Algezire: Luigo Lopes of Ozorco, who had charge of the Engines, vsing great diligence.

An. 1343. This was one of the longest sieges we read of in Spaine, without any intermission of Winter or other season. The year 1343. beeing come, the king of Granado entered a. B the gaine into Andalusia, hee recovered and razed the Castle of Benamexir, and spoiled the Towne of Estepa, but hee could not stay there: for that the Castle held good, and yet during all these incursions, this Moorish king did sollicite King Don Alphonso to come to some truce, offering the like conditions, whereunto he and his Predecessors had bene formerly bound, but for that he would not leaue the league and friendship of the King of Maroc, the King of Castile would not hearken to any treatie: although hee vnderstood, that king Alboacen was at Ceuta, and that he made great preparation to come and raise the sege of Algezire, wherein he was stayed by the searousie hee had of his sonne Aderramen, least hee should make himselfe King of Maroc in his absence, whose head hee was in the end forced to cut off, hauing to that end sent Hascar his Alguazil, or Provoost to Maroc, who by promises and good words, lulled this sonne asleepe, beeing impatient C in his ambition, and so executed his charge. The Moores of Ronda and Malaga, beeing two thousand horse, and as many foot, came running towards Ecija, not knowing that the king had sent a great troupe of horse into those marches, to hinder their courses: yet they forraged the countie, and tooke their way home-wards, but Fernand Gonsales of Aguilar cut off their passage in the night, at a riuer called delas Yeguas, and charged them so furiously at the breake of day, as notwithstanding any resistance, they abandoned their prey, and were put to route, leauing about sixe hundred of their men slaine and taken, and three hundred horse, which the Christians caried away. There were a good number of horse past already out of Affricke, so as the king of Granado ioyning them to the forces of his countie, hee might put an army to field, able to present battell to them that were at the sege before Algezire, their forces being then some what diuided, for that king Don Alphonso had (as we haue sayd) sent a good part of his horse-men towards Ecija, Carmona, Marchena, Vtrera, Aguilar, and other places: but beeing either fearful, by reason of former losses, or he expected greater succours from Affricke, hee deferred it very happily for the king of Castile, and beganne to practise a truce, whereunto King Don Alphonso made shew to incline, protracting the time, vntill the coming of his horse, whome hee had sent for with all speed vnto the campe, the which beeing come, there were so many difficulties propounded by him, as nothing was concluded.

The King of Maroc beeing vpon the Affricke shoare with a great army, hee solicited E him of Granado to giue battaile, offering to lend him part of his troupes, if he were not of sufficient strength. The King of Granado excused himselfe, for that both their forces vnited together, were not able to resist the fury of the Christians before Tariffe: wherefore he aduised & intreated him to passe in person, and to bring with him all the forces he had, but there was no meanes to perswade the king of Maroc to passe the streight: so as the sege continued, where there daily arrived Princes and Knights from France, England & other places: there is speciall mention made of a Duke of Lancaster, and an Earle of Salisbury English men, of Gaston Earle of Foix, and his brother Roger Regnaud, whom some call Bernard Vicount of Castellbon, and especially of Philip King of Nauarre, whose history we haue need to returne vnto.

Nauarre 22 This Prince hauing his residence for the most part in France, employing himself F vertuously for the defence of that realm against the English, who contended for it against Philip of Valois then reigning: his country of Nauar being gouerned in the meane time by Lieutenants, or Viceroys French-men, whereof wee haue named some. And in these times

A times mention is made of one Regnaud Pons, and of one William Brabe, Gouernors, in whose times the lawes of Duel were much practised in Nauarre, as well among the Nobility, as others, who decided their controversies and quarrels by combat. The wars betwixt the French and English beeing somewhat appeased about the year 1343, more for want of meanes to make warre, and for need of rest then otherwise: Philip king of Nauarre obtaigned leave to come and visit his countie, and if it were conuenient to see the sege of Algezire, whereof there was so great bruite throughout all Christendome. This desire increased in him, beeing in Nauarre, and the rather for that hee vnderstood there should be a battaile, as it was likely, and that the king of Castile did resolutely attend it. Wherefore king Philip inuited many of his friends, and leauied men as well in Nauarre, as in France, giuing order for the shipping of munition and victuals in the ports of Guipulcoz, and so marched on, hauing giuen aduice of all vnto king D. Alphonso, leading with him only an hundred horse, and three hundred foot, which were ready about him, giuing order for the rest to follow. There was great honor done him in all the townes of Castile, where hee past, the king hauing so commanded, and hee arrived at Seuille about the Spring, whither the king of Castile sent Ambassadors to welcome him, and conduct him to Xeres vpon the frontier, whether many Noblemen, and souldiers should come to accompanie him, as well to do him honour, as for the facerie of his person, for that the Moores Armie lay incamped vpon the Riuer of Guadiana.

C Thus the king of Nauarre was conducted vnto Xeres, and from thence to the campe, with all the shewes of friendship and amity that could bee desired: The king went forth to meete him, beeing attended on by many great and worthy personages Castilians and strangers, French, English, Germanes, and other Nations. The King of Castile did such honour to the King of Nauarre, as hee would not determine of any matter of consequence, without calling him to counsell, neither heare nor answer any Ambassadors but in his presence. The King of Nauarre likewise for his part shewed himselfe very desirous to please him.

There were many skirmishes at that time, in the which the Nauarrois and Gascons carried themselves very valiantly: notwithstanding mention is made by the Historiours of Spayne, of a great opportunitie lost of giuing the Moores a notable route, by the default D of Gaston Earle of Foix, who that day had the leading of the Nauarrois and Gascons, but they speake of it doubtfully, as a thing vncertaine, and it may be without any iust ground, adding withall, that the Earle for shame demanded his conge, pretending certaine reasons that hee could not stay, as well for that his souldiers were vnpayed, as for the neede they might haue of him in France, neither could the king of Nauarre, or hee of Castile (who offered him all contentment) stay him by any intreaties or perswasions. Finally, (according to the Spanish Authors) hee departed with a good troupe of Knights and souldiers, leading his brother with him: but being at Seuille, hee died, which shewes that sicknesse was the cause of his retreat, or rather the wounds which hee had received in a furious skirmish, which he maintained against the Moores which sallied out of Algezire, E in the which our French Historiours affirme that he was slaine. He was father to Philip Phelips, of whom mention shall be made hereafter. Philip king of Nauarre fell also sicke, with other Noblemen, which grew by the intemperature of the ayre of Andalusia, beeing too violent for the French, who changed nothing of their accustomed manner of luying, being in a different climate. The king of Nauarres sicknesse was such, as hee was aduised to cause himselfe to be transported into France, so as he was forced to take leaue of the king of Castile, who neglected no good office to comfort him: but beeing come to Xeres, his sicknesse so increased, as he was forced to stay, and dyed there in September 1343. He had reigned about 15. years and five months in Nauarre. His body was carried to Pamplona, and there interred in the Cathedrall church: wherefore his body past through the F Realme of Castile, there were great ceremonies done, and shewes of mourning, by commandement from king D. Alphonso. The Spanish Authors (who flatter not the French) write, that this infirmity increased by griefe, for some errors which the French (which followed him) had committed in an ambush which had bin layd for the Moore, where by their too great hast they lost a goodly opportunity to defeat a great number.

Y y

The

Death of Don Philip king of
Nauarre.

The English Noble-men being also called home by their king left the campe: and so as Authors report, king D. Alphonso remained alone with his owne subiects, and such of Portugal and Arragon, as hee had entreated: the which may well seeme to bee written by Spaniards, that they alone might haue the honour of the taking and winning of Algezire.

Castile.

23 After the retreat of these strangers, the king was much troubled for many respects: for besides that he was left weake, his treasures were spent, by reason of his exceeding charge, and the rewards hee was forced to giue to such as came to serue him from forraigne countries: for besides his land army which he must furnish with all things necessarie, he was forced to entertaine the galleies of Genoa, Portugal and Arragon, that he might be master of the sea: the which they could hardly do, for that the enemy was strong who loone after past out of Affricke, with sixty galleies Moores, and many other vessels, landing many horse and foot, with great store of victuals at Estepona, whom they might easily haue put into Algezire, where they began to want, if they had bene men of resolution: for besides that the king of Castile's army was not equall in strength, it was then dispersed in diuers parts. With this new supply the Moores might muster 12000. horse, an infinit number of foote. King D. Alphonso got succours and money from the French king, the Pope, and other Princes his friends, and from the Prelates, townes, and priuate men of his realme, who lent him willingly what they could spare: so he stayd the Genoiois, who would haue bene gone, and contented both them and others, with great wisdom and good husbandry.

Portugal.

The king of Castile, notwithstanding his affaires of war, did not forget any thing that might serue to better the Estate of his Prouinces, building and peopling new townes, as Monreal vpon Deua a riuer in Cuipuscoa, and Playfance, vpon the same riuer, the which he peopled with men out of the valley of Marquina, granting them the rights and priuiledges of Logroño, and assigning their bounds and limits.

Castile.

These things past in the yeare 1343. in the which there hapned at Lisbon, the chiefe city of Portugall, great earth-quakes which ruined many goodly buildings, to the great terror of the inhabitants: and in this accident dyed the Admirall of Portugall.

The aduersie armies in Andalusia, were continually in skirmish and light encounters, but Ioseph King of Granada would by no means yeeld to a battell, notwithstanding the great supplies he had from Ceuta, and that he had with him a son of king Alboacen, called Isidoro, with many other great personages Moores, but desired rather to trie if he could get king Alphonso to yeeld vnto a truce: wherefore he sent two Ambassadors vnto him, who had bene formerly employed, to whom the king of Castile seemed to giue a willing care by whome there was added vnto the conditions of the former accords, that king Alboacen should pay him for the charge of this feece, 300000. doubloons of gold. These conditions being imparted vnto king Ioseph, with a suspension of armes, he presently past ouer to Ceuta, to conferre with Alboacen. But in his return, he was ser vpon (notwithstanding the assurance giuen him by king Alphonso) by a gally of Genoa, thinking to take the 300000. doubloons with the king, but the kings gally being well armed, defended it selfe, and so escaped, whereof king Ioseph made great complaints vnto the king of Castile, who without doubt would haue sunk the Genoiois gallye with the Captaine, if he could haue taken it, but he had gotten to sea, fearing to be punished, and so retired to Genoa. The treaties of truce being troubled by reason of this infidelity of the Genoiois, the Moores army which was at Gibraltar, aduanced vnto the riuer of Palmos, halfe a league from the Christians campe: where their fore-runners encountering the two armies which followed, had like to haue come to a generall battell, but the Moores retired first, hauing lost some men. Their whole desire was to victuall Algezire, where they vnderstood, that all things wanted, and that many small vessels, laden with victuals, had bene taken at sea, seeking by day or night to enter into it, through fauour of the wind or current: for the Christians galleies were exceeding watchfull. But they presented themselves so often by land, making shew that they would fight, and watched their opportunitie so by sea, as fue vessels of Ceuta had meanes to enter, and to refresh the beleegged with some victuals, and other necessarie prouisions, whereof the Captaine was a Moore, called Musa, who being discharged, returned

A returned to Ceuta without losse, reporting vnto King Alboacen the great necessitie of the beleegged. King Alphonso, was much troubled hereat, but the estate of the beleegged being hereby a little eased, was not much bettered: for these victuals lasted not long, considering their multitude of people, and their great extremity, and the Princes of the Moores seeing, that in the end they must either hazard a battaille, which they did much feare, hauing so often (to their cost) tryed the Christians valour; or loose the place, which had bene long and obstinately beleegged.

The king of Granada, with the aduice of Alboacen, did reuiue the treatie of truce, and the conditions of former accords, which were, that he should be vassal to the king of Castile, and should pay him tribute: and moreover, that obtaining a truce for fifteene years, (wherein king Alboacen should be comprehended) the towne of Algezire should be yeilded vnto him, and that the Moores which were within it, should haue liberty to depart with their goods whither they pleased: the which after long deliberation, was concluded. But they cut off five yeares of the time of the truce, the which was made but for ten yeares. King Alphonso had a desire to see a young Prince a Moore, that was within it, he was sonne to Abomelic, but his Gouverneur would not suffer him, saying, as hee caried him away, that the King of Castile had no reason to see an Infant, whome he deputed of his Inheritance.

Thus ended this feece, hauing continued nineteene moneths, during the which there were many sharpe and furious encounters, whereof some might be accompted battailles: they within the towne made fifteene great sallies the twelve first moneths, where as many valiant men of either side were slaine. About the end of this feece, there had bene sent out of Arragon James Estrinain, and Mathew Mercer Captaines, with twenty galleies, who wonne great honour there. The king entred into Algezire in great pompe, where hauing planted many of his Ensignes vpon the towers, the great Melgide was purified and halowed with great ceremonies, the which was named Saint Marci of the Palme. The wals and rampiers being repayred, and the houses and land distributed to new dwellers, the king came to Seville, from whence hee sent two daughters of King Alboacen, which had bene taken at the battaille of Tariffe, causing them to be honourably conducted into Affricke, and richly attired: wherewith the Moorish king was so pleased, as he could not sufficiently commend his bounty and courtesie, who hauing royally rewarded the Ambassadors, which did accompany these Princesses, hee sent vnto the King of Castile a rich present of precious stones, silkes, armes, horses, lyons, and other beasts, infinite pertumes, and whatsoever hee thought rare, the which did much confirme the league of friendship betwixt them: but it happened that Alboacen within few dayes after, being ser vpon and incountred by one of his sonnes called Alboacen, who had rebelled against him, and abandoning the duty of a sonne, deputed him of the kingdom of Fez, whereby the king of Castile entred into a new ialousie of warre, this vsurping sonne not respecting the truce made with his father.

Alboacen king of Morocco deposed by his sonne.

This Alboacen did not onely take from his father the Realme of Fez, but also all that hee held in Spaine, as Ronde, Zachara, Gibraltar, Ximena, Marbella, Estepona, Castilliar and others. But whilst the Moores molested one another, the King of Castile and his subiects had some rest, whereof they had great need, by reason of their continuall toyle, and great expences at the feece of Algezire.

In the meane time the king of Castile seeing that the quarrels betwixt Don Pedro king of Arragon, and his brethren D. Fernand and D. Iohn, borne of D. Leonora of Castile his sister, continued still, he sought to reconcile them, sending Diego Garcia of Toledo to that end, who laboured much, but in vaine. Being there, there was a marriage treated of, betwixt D. Fernand Manuel, sonne to D. Iohn Manuel, and D. Ieanne of Arragon, daughter to Don Raymond Berenger, Earle of Prages, vnto the King Don Pedro. The allyance and amitie of Arragon had bene very auyable to Don Iohn Manuel, the which hee could not forget, although the King of Castile were not much pleased therewith.

24 During the feece of Algezire, the king Don Pedro sought to ruine D. James king of Majorca, his cousin and brother-in-lawe, by force and all other vnworthie meanes, Y y 2 seeking seeking to make him odious by false accusations, where as force could not preuaile. Having drawne him to Barcelona, vpon hope of a reconciliation, hee charged him in open assembly, that he had fraudulently sought to carrie him, with his brother Don James Earle of Vrgel, and their Vncle Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, into Majorca, and there to detayne them prisoners, untill that he were releafed from the oath of fidelitie, and acknowledgement of Soueraignty, which hee and his Predecessors had made vnto the Kings of Arragon: and in this discontent and feare, he sent him away, retayning notwithstanding his wife Donna Constance, who was his sister: and without any long delay, the King Don Pedro sent Arnauld Erillo, and William Bellera to ouer-runne the Countie of Rossillon, and other lands belonging to the King of Majorca, lying neere vnto Catalogne, and to seaze vpon the places of strength, the Princes and Princesses of his blood, and his allies employing themselves in vaine to pacifie them. But such was his hatred and insatiable desire of greatnesse, as hee proclaimed open warre against this poore king of Majorca, weake in meanes, and it may be, in courage, to make head against so mighty aking, and so obstinate an enemy.

Minorca conquered by the king of Aragon.

And at that time Don Pedro of Moncado was recalled with his Gallies from the Streights, as wee haue sayd, who hauing increased his army with many other vessels rigged out vpon the coasts of Catalogne and Valence, hee came to Palomera, a haven in the Iland of Majorca, with an hundred and sixe sayles, where hee landed many horse and foote, the king being there in person, who before his departure, had coloured this enterprise with a pretext of Fellonie and Rebellion, pronouncing a sentence against the King Don James, in an assembly of Noblemen and Princes at Barcelona, and confiscating his goods. In this army was Don Pedro of Arragon, Earle of Ampurias and Ribagorça, the kings Vncle, holding the place of Seneschall and chiefe of Armes: Don Pedro of Arragon Lord of Xerica newly reconciled, Don Blasco of Alagon, who carried the Standard royall: Don John Ximenez of Virec, Don Philip of Castro, Don Alphonso Roger of Loria, brother to Don Pedro of Xerica, Galuan and Raymond Anglesale, Acari Muri, Arnauld Erillo, Gonzal Diaz of Arenos, John Fernandes of Luna, Artal of Fofles, Michel Perez Zapate, Iourdain Vries, Sancho Peres Pomar, with other Noblemen and Captaines. Against these forces the king of Majorca had leauied three hundred horse and fiftene thousand foote, but he was betrayed and abandoned, and forced to flee, and quit the Iland: so as the king Don Pedro seazed thereon without fighting, and was received into the city of Majorca, whereof Don Arnold Erillo was made Gouvernour, and Gillebert Centilla Captaine of the fouldiers that were there left in garrison. The Iland of Minorca made no greater resistance, and that of Yuica less. Minorca was giuen in government to Gillebert Cernera, and Yuica to Martin Arbes. These Ilands subdued, the king returned to Barcelona, from whence he presently marched into the Countie of Rossillon, with his whole army, whither the Cardinall of Rhodex, the Popes Legat, came vnto him, to aduise him to desist from armes: who could get no other answer, but that the king of Majorca should come and yeld himselfe to his will. During this warre, there was borne at Ceruera, in the territorie of Lerida in Catalogne, a monstrous child, hauing two heads and foure legges, whose father and mother seeking to conceale it, buried it aliue, but being discovered in this attempt, they were punished, as murderers of their child.

Monster borne in Catalogne, whose father and mother they punished.

There were great tumults and seditions at that time in Arragon, betwixt many Noblemen, contending by armes for their possessions, so as the king commanded that D. Athon of Fofles should be apprehended and punished, to terrifie others, he also caused his reuenues and lands to be seazed on, from the which hee did appeale vnto the Magistrate of the Iustice of Arragon, which was then in the hands of Garci Fernandes of Castro, whereupon there grew great contention: for the kings learned Council pretended that the authority of the Iustice of Arragon did not extend out of the assembly of the Estates, and that this Magistrate was there only a Iudge of countroueries, which did rile against the king, being not lawfull for him out of the Estates, to make himselfe Iudge of any controuersie against his royall Maiesty, but in sutes of state, and condition of persons, or in causes whereas the king is called for a warrant, or in complaints which the people may make against the kings Officers.

The

A The king therefore commanded, (for that Garci Fernandes of Castro, Iustice of Arragon, was allyed to Athon of Fofles) that Michel Perez Zapate, Lieutenant general of Arragon in the kings absence, should put Athon in prison, but finding himselfe too weake, for that Athon was supported by many seditious persons, and had the countenance of diuers great men his kinsmen and friends, he had recourse vnto the Iurates of Saragoissa, according to the custome of his ancestors, enioyning them to fore-see, that the Estate receiued no preiudice, and that Iustice should not be forced.

Submission of the king of Aragon himselfe.

The warre of Rossillon continued, neither would the king D. Pedro yeld for any intercession the Pope could make, persisting still, that the king Don James (who was dispossessed of Majorca) should come and submit himselfe vnto him, without any condition. The town of Elne yielded vnto him. In the end Arnold Bishop of Aux, the Popes Nuncio, did mediate, that the King of Majorca should come and yeld himselfe into the hands of the king D. Pedro, and deliuer him his forts, vpon assurance that they should not attempt any thing against his person, nor put him in prison: the which being granted, D. James king of Majorca, vpon the assurance of D. Pedro of Xerica, came to Elne, and casting himselfe at the kings feet, he submitted himselfe to his clemencie, beseeching him to haue regard vnto his ranke and dignity, to suffer him to iustifie himselfe, and that he would be pleased to sue ciuilly against him: and howeouer, at the least, prelerue vnto his Nephewes, children to his brother D. Fernand, their right vnto the realme of Majorca, and other lands, and cause the towne of Perpignan to be deliuered vnto him. The king D. Pedro blinded with hatred and choller, reiected all these requests after a strange and insolent manner, and being entred into Perpignan, he caused a Decree to be published, by the which hee did confiscate the Iland of Majorca, and all the lands of the king Don James, vnting them inseparably to the Crowne of Arragon: which decree hee caused to be set vp at every corner. This poore Prince being thus intreated, he left the countie of Rossillon, and retired himselfe to Berge, a place assigned him for his aboad, vntill that his adversary should giue order for his entertainment. The king D. Pedro (after these seuer and vniust proceedings) returned to Barcelona, where hee entred armed, as triumphing for a victory gotten of some great enemy. Being there in counsell, he assigned 10000. liuers of pension for the king D. James dispossessed, vntill hee had giuen him lands and reuenues out of Spaine: remitting vnto him his rights of Montpellier, and other places on this side the Pyrenees, already in his possession.

Intercession of the king D. James.

A thousand pound sterling.

These things being signified vnto him by Don Pedro of Moncado, Philip Baillo, and Garcia of Loris, hee reiected them all, saying: That hee had rather liue banished in a strange Country, and suffer all the miseries in the world, then to yeld to so great an iniustice, or allow of so unworthie conditions, imposed vpon him by a King which was his kinsman. Whereupon the King Don Pedro renewed the warre, that hee might either take him, or chase him out of the Kingdome.

This miserable Prince destitute and quite stript of all meanes, and abandoned of his friends, had the courage to desie Don Pedro of Xerica, accusing him of disloyaltie, for that hee had promised him many things (perswading him to come to Elne) which had not bene kept: but Don Pedro was abolished by the king, who declared that hee had not sayled in any thing hee had promised: so as Don James sometimes King of Majorca, frustrated of all hope, was forced to retire into the Countie of Cerdagne, hoping to hold those Lands by the fauour and support of Geoffrey Eslandart a French-man, Gouvernour of Puicerdan, and other Segneuries on this side the mountains: but being deceived and forsaken of all, hee was forced to flee, and to passe the mountains in November, the Winter being exceeding sharpe: so as vpon mount Pimoret, which diuides the Countie of Cerdagne from Galconie, hee was like to haue dyed with the extremitie of cold, where hee fell into such a passion of griefe, as he was ready to haue flaine himselfe. This was the king of Majorca receiue of his brother-in-law, Don Pedro king of Arragon, who was at that time againe sollicit to attempt the conquest of Corsica, whereunto hee yielded, and sent some gallies to the port of Boniface, this yeare 1344. hauing intelligence, and a secret league with William Roscaual, Rowland Ornan, Henry Cortingo, and others of the chiefe of the Iland.

Y y 3

In

Cathle.

1345.

An. 1346.

1347.

Arragon.

In the yeare 1345. D. Alphons King of Castile, gaue order for the building of the new towne of S. Ander, called Heybar, and a league from thence of the towne of Marquie, called also Helgoybar, which he peopled with the inhabitants of the villages of that countrie, giuing them lawes and priuiledges according to the iurisdiction of Logrogne.

25 The yeare following 1346. a donation was made by Pope Clement the 6. resident in Auignon, to D. Lewis de la Cerda, sonne to the Infant D. Alphons, of the fortunate I-lands or Canaries, vpon condition that he should conquer them, and cause the Gospell to be preached there: to this end he came into Arragon, and there began to prepare an army at sea, wherein he was much assisted and fauoured by the king D. Pedro: but we find not that he past into the Ilands, and to speake truly, it would haue beene distastfull vnto the king of Castile, in whose Streight these Ilands are situated: yet this D. Lewis held the title of Prince of the fortunate Ilands. D. John Manuel (who had neuer loued the king of Castile from his heart) was glad of these petty discontentments, by fauour whereof hee spread abroad false reports and aduersities, to draw the two kings of Castile and Arragon into warre, but what he could not do by his practises, occasion wrought, at the treaty of marriage which the king of Castile would make betwixt D. Fernand of Arragon with his nephew, sonne to his sister D. Leonora, and D. Eluira Infanta of Portugal, who is by some called also Leonora, by reason whereof king D. Alphons, and D. Leonora his sister had an interview at Tordelaguna: which put the king D. Pedro into such a ialousie, being then a widower, (which was in the yeare 1347.) as hauing done what hee could to diuert this marriage, he refused to demand the Infanta of Portugal for himselfe, for the which he sent his ambassadors. The king of Castile being much moued, that hee of Arragon did thus seeke to crosse him, sent Don John Alphons of Albuquerque into Portugal, to hinder the conclusion of this marriage, but hee arrived too late, for the ambassadour of Arragon had so negotiated, as all was concluded: whereat the king Don Alphons was much offended.

26 This D. Pedro king of Arragon had in his time many wiues, the first was D. Maria Infanta of Nauarre, daughter to king Philip of Eureux, by whom he had D. Constance Queene of Sicily, wife to D. Frederic the second. D. Jeanne married afterwards to D. John Earle of Ampurias, and one sonne, who died as soone as he was borne, and the mother D. John five dayes after, in the yere 1347. To his 2. wife he had this Infant of Portugal: his third hee tooke D. Leonora, some call her D. Constance, daughter to Frederick the 2. King of Sicily, by whom he had D. John his successor in the Realme: D. Martin Earle of Xerica and Luna, and Duke of Mombanc, and first Constable of Arragon, (who by the death of his elder brother, was also King of Arragon) and D. Leonora, which was wife to D. John Infante of Castile, afterwards king, the first of that name of Castile and Leon. Besides these great Princesses, the King Don Pedro, being old and a widower, fell in loue with a subiect of his owne of a meane family called Sobite, a widow, borne at Forcia in the territorie of Ampurias, and married her, of whom hee had D. Isabella, who was Countesse of Vrgel, and wife to Don James. These were the marriages of the king Don Pedro, who raigning cruelly and couetously, incensed the Estates and Nobilitie of his Realmes of Arragon and Valence against him, whereas the subiects made Leagues against their Prince, which did in a manner ruine and confound that Estate: King Don Alphons not forgetting to make vse of that occasion, to be reuenged of the wrong and iniurie which hee pretended had beene done him, in disappointing the marriage of his Nephew Don Fernand with the Infanta of Portugal.

The King Don Pedro hauing no sonnes at the consummation of this second marriage, fought to haue an oath taken to D. Constance, his eldest daughter, heire to the Realme of Arragon, and other lands depending and annexed after his decease, the which was cause of great seditions: for Don John, Earle of Vrgel, the kings brother, gouerning the Realme then as Gouernour, or Lieutenant generally, opposed himselfe violently: by reason whereof the King (who was violent and rough in all his actions) chased him away, and tooke from him his publike charge: then hauing emancipated Donna Constance to his daughter, hee made and instituted her Gouvernesse, or Regent of the Realme, to make her way to the succession, there being present at this act, and his principall Count.

A counsellors, D. Hugues Bishop of Vic, D. Pedro Thous maister of Montefa, D. Pedro of Xerica viceroy of Valence, Pedro Feneuillet, Audemar Mouflet, Gonsaluo Diaz of Arenos, & Gascen and Belpuccio. D. Pedro the Kings vncler, Earle of Ampurias, tooke that oth to his Princelike in the name of the Estates, vpon condition, that if it were found the hereditarie right did belong vnto D. James, the oth should be voided. D. James seeing himselfe disappointed, stirred vp troubles in the country of Valence: hee had recourse to the vnion of Arragon, to retaine his dignity of Gouernor of the Realme: hee made a league with his brethren D. Fernand and D. John sonnes to D. Leonora of Castile, and with the King of Castile himselfe, and disquieted al Arragon.

The dispositt King of Majorca hearing of these tumults, would bee an actor, and came neere vnto Majorca, with certaine gallies of France and Genoa, whereof Charles Grimaldi was General, but as misfortune did still accompany him hee effected nothing of worth in those Ilands nor vpon the coast of Cattelogne, whether hee afterwards came, and was repulst by the King himselfe. By the aduice of Bernard of Cabrera, who was then held a man of great widome and iudgement, he made his vncler D. Pedro, Earle of Ampurias, chiefe of his counsel, and seeking by all meanes to catch his rebels, or to diuide their league, hee wrought so as the Earle of Vrgel his brother came vnto him, whom hee restored to his dignity of Gouernor of the realme, but it continued not many daies, for he died presently, not without suspition to haue beene poysoned. Being at an assemblie of the Estates at Saragossa, he granted them all they demanded, and reneged the contract made by King Alphons the third, with the vnion of Arragon, by the which sixtene castles were put into the power of the vnion, with liberty to deliuer them to whom they would, if the King should infringe the accord.

This yeere of our Lord 1347. during these troubles the Kings marriage was consummated with the Infanta of Portugal, the which were very mournfull, for that in a short space the Kings men recieued two notable routs by the rebels, the one neere vnto Xatua, where there died on the Kings part Andrew William the Secretarie, Lieutenant to the Viceroy of Valence, and his sonne: the other neere vnto Valence, in the which Gonsal Diaz of Arenos, and Pedro Mugnon captaines of the Kings men lost their liues. So as the King, who in the meane time kept at Moruedro, in a manner beleegged, was much perplexed, and not knowing what to resolute, he suffred himselfe to bee perswaded to enter into the city of Valence, where hee found himselfe entangled in the mutinies of the citizens, who respected and honoured him so little, as notwithstanding his presence, they spoiled and murdered one an other, after a pittifull manner. The Noble men and captaines holding his party, were then fortified in Daroca, whereof the chiefe were D. Pedro of Xerica, D. Lope of Luna, D. Blasco of Alagon, D. Pedro Fernandes of Ixar, D. Thomas Cornet, D. John Ximenes of Vrrca, and D. John Martines of Luna.

The Rebels were fauored and assisted vnder-hand, by D. Alphons King of Castile, who sufficed them to make great leauies of fouldiers in his countries, for the loue hee bare vnto the sonnes of his sister D. Leonora, Donages of Arragon: and D. Fernand the eldest had already lead many bands of Castilians to Valence, and D. John his brother prepared to passe into Arragon with other troupes, to be the generall of that warre, the which the Arragonois demanded: yet by reason of the complaints made by the King D. Pedro, who said that the league betwixt Castile and Arragon, was broken by King D. Alphons, soliciting all his friends and priuat counsellors, especially Queene Mary his wife, and D. Leonora of Guzman, his best beloued, to dissuade the King from this enterprife, laying before him the consequence of this rebellion, there were sent by the King of Castile, and by his sister the Queene D. Leonora, into Arragon D. Fernando Perez, Puerto Carrero, and to Valence Lope Perez of Fonséca, to treat of the meanes to pacifie these troubles.

F The King D. Pedro promised great matters to his brethren, and desired nothing more then to haue the Castilian troupes called home by their King: but notwithstanding any likelihood of an accord, they drew what succors they would from Castile: wherefore King D. Alphons being importuned by the King D. Pedro, and discontented with these seditions, being also moued with a desire he had to see the Queene D. Leonora his

An. 1347.
Marriage of the King D.
Pedro with the Infanta of Portugal.

Defeat of the Kings men

Valencians
seditions.

King of Castile fauours the rebels against the King of
Arragon.

The generall History of Spaine.

Lib. 14.

*Schisme betwixt the Knights of Ca-
latrias.*

27 Comming to the affaires which past at that time in Castile, after the pacification of the troubles of Arragon, we finde that King D. Alphonso spent his time in peopling of his townes and country: amongst others he peopled the towne of Sumaya in Guipuscoa otherwise called Villa Grana of Sumaya, and gave it the preiudges of Saint Sebastian, whether there appellations goe, and from thence to the court. And his realm of Castile being in reasonable good quiet, seeing such as professed armes (whereof Castile and his other countries did abound) seekte all occasions to imploy their armes, medling more then hee desired, with the factions and mutinies of his Neighbors: being also duly aduertised of that which had past in Affrike, and of the little loue which the new King of Fez bare him, who held many places of importance in Spaine, he held it necessary to make an expedition against the Infidels: for it is a difficult thing to keepe B great Kingdomes full of people in peace, especially after long pacifice of warre, but they will disquiet both spirituall and temporall at home, if they bee not imployed abroad: so as armes hath this unhappinesse, that after they are once taken, they cannot be laid downe without great and difficult labour, and that many times succceed ill.

About this time, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1348. Don Garcia Lopez Master of the Calatrava, being accused of many disorders, retired into Arragon. Being cited to appeere personally before the King of Castile, and absent, hee was condemned and degraded for his contumacy, and so died; in whose place the Knights of Calatrava in Arragon, proceeded in Arragon, contrary to the lawes and rules of their Order. The Castilians of Calatrava, did also choofe one; so as this Schisme was like to have bread some great disorder, if by the mediation of the Pope, and the Kings of Castile and Arragon, the parties had not referred it to Don Pedro King of Arragon who decreed; That the Master chosen at Calatrava should stand, and that any one which held that dignity dying, the election of his successor should not bee made any where else, but in the couent of Calatrava.

This Master confirmed, was called Don John Nugnes of Prado, who they sayd was Bastard vnto D. Blanche, the King of Portugals aunte, and Abbess of Huegasnere Burgos. To Don John Fernandes his competitor, was left the Commanderie of Alcaniz, with the title of great Commander, yet subiect to the Master of Calatrava. The approbation of these Masters, being chosen, belongs to the Abbots of the Order of Cisteraux. Amidst these tumults King Don Alphonso resolved for to raise an armie D to beseege Gibraltar, thinking that during the seditions betwixt the Arabian Kings, father and sonne in Affrike, it could not bee releued: and therefore hauing so fit an occasion offered him, hee made no difficulty to bee the first in armes, pretending that hee did not breake the truce, seeing that this place and others in Spaine, were held by Alboacen, with whom hee had not any treaty: For the manning and conduct of this warre, which was of no small consequence, hee assembled the generall Estates of all his realmes in the towne of Alcalá de Henares, where (besides the Noblemen and Deputies accustomed to come in former assemblies) many Townes and Commonalties were newly called, and receiued to giue their voices, and to haue a place in such assemblies. For vntil that time, the people and townes, which are called by the Toledans, beyond the mountaines, as Castile the old, Galicia, Asturia and the neighbour countries, were those which did commonly assist, and did contribute and beare the charges, as being most retired from the commodities of the warre: but now at this time, they of Toledo, Andalusia and such like, were also called by the King, for his intent was, to demand the subsidie called Alcauala throughout his whole Realme. This assembly and many others which were made in after times, did for the most part consist of good townes, who sent their Deputies: but since they found that multitude bred confusion, and therefore there were eightene principall places chosen, (which should haue voices, and places in assemblies, that is, sixteen cities and two townes. Spaine, as we haue said in the discription thereof, is in a manner diuided in the midst by the mountaine called in old time Idubeda the which at this present hath diuerse names. By reason whereof they distinguish the people at this day to those of this side and the other side the mountaine: On this side, wee will call the Toledans, and the neighbour Prouinces: on the other

*Places in the
realme of Ca-
stile having voice in the Estates.*

The generall History of Spaine.

Lib. 14.

A other side, shall bee those of Burgos. Therefore on this side the mountaines, they call at this day, to the Estates of Spaine, for the Prouince of Toledo, the city of Toledo, Cuenca, Guadalupe, and Madrid: and for the other Prouinces, Seuille, Granada, Murcia, Cordoua, and Laen. Beyond the mountaines for the Straight of Castile, Burgos, Soria, Segobia, Auila and Valledolit: and for that of Leon, the city of Leon, Salamanca, Zamora, and Toro. These are the eightene places which send their Deputies to the Estates, among the which Burgos, Leon, Granada, Seuille, Cordoua, Murcia, Laen and Toledo (townes which haue beene seates of Kingdomes) haue their places assigned, and hold ranker the rest take their places, as it happens, and their Deputies speake as they fit: as for the city of Toledo in this assembly at Alcalá de Henares, it contended for precedence with that of Burgos, alleading many reasons, not altogether frivolous. First the greatnesse of the city, and great numbers of people and Nobility inhabiting there, next the seat of the Archbishop and Primate, the stateliness of the Church, the Prelate whereof was high Chancellor of all the Realmes subiect to Castile: and moreover offering to their consideration, the antiquity of the foundation of that city, which had beene the head during the Gothes raigne, not onely of all that is contained within the two seas, and the Pyrenes, but also of Gotike Gaule, which at this day wee call Languedoc, so many counsels celebrated there, and that since the Arabians had become Masters of Spaine, it had beene a royal seat, hauing had many Kings, which did exceed all the Potentates Moores of Spaine, in power and riches except him of Cordoua. God hauing since of this grace suffred Christian Princes to conquer it, by alone amongst all the cities of Spaine, had beene honoured with an Imperial title, by reason whereof, and many other preiudges there produced, they maintained the precedence to belong vnto her. Burgos on the other side maintained that she was the capitall city, & the ancient seat of the Princes of Castile, which was the title their Kings carried: that from Castile & Leon did grow the conquests of the rest of the Realmes of Spaine, and that shee was called the royal city, but their chiefe ground was, that time out of minde, shee had had the first place and voice in such assemblies. Vpon these differences, the Noblemen fell into factions, as their passions did transport them, or as they had their Siegneuries and houses lying in the territory and iurisdiction of the one or the other citie. King D. Alphonso D viding therein wife aduise, hauing taken the knowledge of this cause vnto himselfe, he pronounced thus: I speake (sayd he) for them of Toledo, and say, the city of Toledo will doe as it shall please the King. Let Burgos speake now. This manner of decreeing contented both parties, for it seemed to them of Toledo, that the King hauing made himselfe, as it were, their Attorney, had spoken first in the behalfe of their city. And they of Burgos holding that the Kings words did nothing preiudice their pretensions, seeing they spake before the other Deputies, they surceased for the voice. Concerning their rank and precedence, the King desiring to preserve the seate to Burgos, and Toledo refusing to sit vnder her, the King ordained, that from thenceforth the Deputie of Toledo should not sit vpon the same banke with the other Deputies, but opposite vnto them, yet not in the same ranke: which order is obserued at this day in the generall assemblies of the Estates of Castile. The first voice kept for the city of Burgos, was the cause the King obtained the subsidie of Alcauala, which hee required of all his subiects: for Burgos paid it already, and therefore did not contradict it: whereas if Toledo (which had not borne this imposition) had spoken first, shee had opposed herselfe, as shee did, and encouraged other townes to doe the like by her example. All in the end yielded vnto it, hauing heard the reasons which moued the King to demand it, and the neede hee had for the good of the Realme, and the maintenance of the warre against the Moores.

The assembly at Alcalá de Henares being dissolved, and the King hauing gathered together great store of treasure, by the speedie obedience of his subiects, hee beganne to discharge some of his debts, and to retire many precious iewels which had beene pawned, hee ordered iustice, and in the end applied his minde wholly to this sege, which he ment to lay to Gibraltar, and to provide for all things necessary both by sea and land, seeing that the time and the opportunity of the Moores seditions in Affrike, did inuite him.

Debate betwixt Toledo and Burgos for precedence.

Order betwixt Toledo and Burgos for precedence.

Alcauala an imposition.

him. The towne of Gibraltar had bene greatly fortified by the Moores, since the time A they had taken it from the Christians: so as the enterprise was no lesse difficulte then that of Algezire. But there was this advantage, they did not so much feare any succors from Affrike, as if the affaires of the Arabian Moores had bene quiet: notwithstanding to provide for all euents, he sent Pelajo Martinez Alaide or Prouost of the court, to the King of Arragon in Ambassage, and with him Alphonso Gonzales of Gallego: to confirme the alliance and friendship betwixt them, and to reuise the treaty of marriage betwixt his sonne D. Henry, and one of the Infants of Arragon: but his chiefe deaigne was, to demaund ten gallies to keepe the straight. The King D. Pedro answered the Ambassadors, that he would send an Ambassador expressly vnto the King of Castile their maister, the which he did.

Arragon.

King D. Alphonso was already before Gibraltar, when as the Ambassador cameto him from Arragon. There was an end made of the differences of the Queene D. Leonor, and the Infants D. Fernand and D. John whom the King Don Pedro should suffer peaceably to enioy that which had bene assigned him by the deceased King, as well in dowry, as in portion: and if it should happen that after that time they should moue any troubles in Arragon, that King D. Alphonso should not giue them, nor suffer to bee giuen them any aide or succors. Nothing was concluded in regard of the marriage, for that the King Don Pedro required, that Don Henry should bee inuested in many Townes and Prouinces, which was not conuenient for the King of Castile to giue. For C the succors, the King D. Pedro sent foure of his gallies, to ioyne with them that were in the Straight, whereof Raymond of Villanoua was capitaine, being manned with foure hundred crosbow men.

Castile.

The towne of Gibraltar was furiously battred, with all sorts of Engins, and defended very valiantly, the garrison being very strong, and consisting of the best souldiers that were amongst the Moores, who made many sallies vpon the Christians, in the which were slaine their best men of either side; and moreover King D. Alphonso's campe was much annoyed by the courses of the Neighbour garrisons, and by the King of Granados horse men, who had the gard of those places which the Moores held in Spaine. This seage hauing continued some monthes, the plague fell into the Christians campe, yet D the King being obstinate in his resolution, would not dislodge: for hee knew that the Moores, being destitute of succors could not long resist, but must bee either forced, or yeeld. Being in this resolution, it pleased God that hee himselfe was stricken with the plague whereof hee died in the campe, in the yeere of our Lord 1350. the nine and thirtieth yeere of his age, and the eight and thirtieth of his raigne. Some haue written that hee died not of the plague, but of poyson, the which was giuen him by the Moores practises. This accident was the cause of remoouing the seage of Gibraltar.

Death of King
D. Alphonso.

Nauarre.

Death of Iuan Queene of
Nauarre.

A little before D. Jeane Queene of Nauarre, widow to King Philip of Eureux, died at Conflans in France, who had gouerned her Realme, whereof shee was proprietary, after the decease of her husband, with good discretion, and yet shee had some subiects E not very tractable, who sought nothing but quarrels. There were still riots committed by them vpon the frontiers of Nauarre, namely by the Inhabitants of Sanguette and the Arragonois, notwithstanding all which, yet could shee wisely entertaine the alliance and peace with D. Pedro King of Arragon her sonne in law, yea after the death of Queene Donna Maria, her daughter: so as during her life, the King D. Pedro endured all the Insolencies of the Nauarrois, who some times made roades farre into his countrey, not seeming to take knowledge thereof, for the honour and respect hee bare vnto his mother in law, neither did hee make any complaints, nor was moued, as hee ought to haue bene, for that the Estates of Arragon, and others being rebelled against him for the causes aboue mentioned, many made their retreat into Nauarre, from whence they drew assistance of armes, victuals and other things, to make warre against him.

It is credible that the King of Arragon shewed himselfe patient in these things, that he might not disappoint other deaignes of greater importance: for knowing that Jeane Queene of Nauarre was much honoured in France, hee entertained her friendship, 10

A to the end that by her meanes he might haue King Philip of Valois more fauorable vnto him, who was incensed against him for D. Juanes of Majorca. This Lady laboured so, as shee entertained peace betwixt them, and confirmed againe the alliance, past, by a treatie of marriage, which shee propounded, betwixt Charles, Grand-child to King Philip, and one of the daughters of the King Don Pedro; and of her daughter Donna Maria.

This Princess being come into France with Charles and Philip her sonnes, to dispose of her lands and estates which shee had there, hauing left Iohn of Conflans, Lord of Dampierre, Marshal of Champagne, for Governour in Nauarre, shee died at the end of the yeere 1349. five yeeres after the decease of her husband, hauing held the Realme of Nauarre about two and twenty yeeres, counting since the death of King Charles the Fairer: to whom succeeded her sonne Philip, who was surnamed the Bad.

The end of the foureteenth Booke.

Zz

THE

THE FIFTEENTH BOOKE of the Historie of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 D On Pedro first of that name, the fourteenth King of Castile and five and thirty of Leon, and his severe beginning to reign.
- 2 House of Lara Lords of Biscay, and the Siegneuries held by them.
- 3 Unfortunate marriage of D. Pedro King of Castile, with Blanche of Bourbon. Unlawfull loues of this King with Donna Maria of Padilla, persecutions and murders of the Noblemen of Castile, his second unlawfull marriage, and other excesses done by him.
- 4 Refuge into France of D. Henry Earle of Trastamare, bastard brother to the King of Castile.
- 5 D. Charles called the bad, the thirtieth King of Navarre, and second of that name, his sower disposition and rough proceedings, in the pursuit of his pretended right to Brie and Champagne.
- 6 Abolition of Castles Acra in Arragon: Girone made a Principality for the elder of Arragon: warre of Sardinia.
- 7 Cruel warre betwixt Castile and Arragon. Cruelties of D. Pedro King of Castile against his subjects, and against his own bloud.
- 8 D. Pedro the eight King of Portugal, sole of that name.
- 9 Unfortunate loues of D. Pedro King of Portugal, with D. Agnes Castro.
- 10 Disposition of D. Pedro King of Portugal, his equity and diligence.
- 11 Imprisonment of the King of Navarre, his escape, and their proceeding against him in France.
- 12 Proceedings of the warre of Castile and Arragon: cruelties, murders and spoiles of D. Pedro King of Castile.
- 13 Turbulent Estate of Granada: treacheries and cruelties of D. Pedro of Castile, against the Princes Moores.
- 14 Practices betwixt the Kings of Castile and Navarre, and continuation of the warre betwixt Castile and Arragon.
- 15 Disloyalty of D. Pedro King of Arragon, to D. Henry Earle of Trastamare.
- 16 New accords betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon and D. Henry Earle of Trastamare: continuation of the warre against Castile.
- 17 Accords betwixt Navarre and Arragon, against Castile. Unworthy death of D. Bernard of Cabrera.
- 18 Returne of the Popes Sea, from Avignon to Rome.
- 19 Expedition made by D. Henry Earle of Trastamare into Castile against the King D. Pedro, his brother, and the Earles victory.

20 Returne

- A 20 Returne of the King D. Pedro: defeat of D. Henry: cruelties against the vanquished, policies of the King of Navarre during these quarrels.
- 21 Ingratitude of the King D. Pedro to the English, who had restored him: his impieties, tyrannies and cruelties.
- 22 Second expedition of Count Henry into Castile, conquest of that Realme with the helpe of the French, death of the King D. Pedro the cruel.
- 23 D. Fernand sole of that name, and ninth King of Portugal.

Kings of Spaine mentioned in this fifteenth Booke.

CASTILE and LEON.

NAVARRE

PORTUGAL.

14. D. Pedro. 1. ——— 35.

30. D. Charles. 2.

8. D. Pedro. 1.

9. D. Fernand. 1.

- D D. Pedro the first and sole of that name, surnamed the cruel, the fourteenth King of Castile, and five and thirtieth of Leon.

THe beginning of the raigne of D. Pedro, sonne to D. Alphonso of Castile, was in the yeere 1350. in the which Pope Clement the sixth ordained that the lublie which they had bene accustomed to celebrate (yet without any ground) every hundred yeere amongst Christians, should from that time be kept from fifty, to fifty yeeres, after the manner of the Jewes. D. Pedro was at Seville with the Queene his mother, when the King his father died, where his obsequies being made, they consulted for the ordering the Estate of the new Kings house, and the affaires of the Kingdome. D. Leonora of Guzman, her children, kinsfolkes and friends being in great perplexity, at the death of King D. Alphonso, retired themselves into diverse parts of the realme.

This young King being but fiftene yeeres old began his raigne with cruelty in which vice he continued his whole life, but to his cost. D. Leonora being solicited by some Knights to come to Seville, she came, upon their faith, but she was presently apprehended and put in prison, to satisfy the rage of ielousie of Queene Mary the Kings mother, whereupon D. Henry Earle of Trastamare, and some of his brethren, children to this Lady, thought to fortifie themselves in Algezire, but they were set upon, and forced to flee, some into Portugal, some else where: against whom the King was more incensed then before, for the marriage which followed betwixt D. Henry Earle of Trastamare, and D. Jeanne Manuel, daughter to D. John Manuel one of the mightiest Princes in Spaine, next unto the King, to which marriage the King D. Pedro himselfe aspired.

Z z 2

This

Impiounment
and execution of Don John Nu-gues of Prado, maister of Calatraua.

all rebellion, and that he had no cause to feare to put himselfe into the kings mercy: but it succeeded ill for him. The king being come the maister came vnto him, and cast himselfe at his feet, entreating him to receiue him in his iustificacions: but this cruell Prince refusing to heare him him, deprived him instantly of the Maister-ship of Calatraua, the which he gave to Diego Garcia of Padilla, and commanded that he should bee carried prisoner to the castell of Maqueda, whereas Stephen Domingo of Auila commanded: and there within few dayes after he was murdered by Diego Lopes of Portas, seruant to Diego Garcia of Padilla, whereof the king would haue excused himselfe, saying, That it was done without his commandement: but it appeared sufficiently that he was not discontented there-with.
Going from Almagro the king came before the towne of Medellin, belonging to Lord of Albuquerque, whereas Diego Gomes of Silua, a Knight of Galicia, commanded, the towne yeelded, fearing the kings furie, and soone after the castle, the which the king in disdain of the Lord of Albuquerque, caused to be instantly razed: after which he led his army before Albuquerque, the which was held in the name of their Lord, by Martin Carpiñero, a Gentleman of Portugall, and vnder him commanded Peter Esquivel.
Alfonso Botello, a Gentleman of Portugall, The King hauing summoned them to yeeld the place, vpon refusall, he proclaimed them Rebels, whereof the Portugall, (who was not his subiect) made no accompt. The Commander excused himselfe, saying, That the place was not in his power. Wherefore he past on towards Cobdefera, another place belonging to Don John Alfonso, the which he could not take, so as after some skirmishes he left Don Henry Earle of Transimare, and Don Frederic Maister of S. Lames, his brethren, who followed him against their wils, and he came to Caceres. Afterwards he refused to send ambassadors into Portugall, whither the Lord of Albuquerque was returned, to demand him of the king of Portugall as his subiect and a rebell: but the king of Portugall excused himselfe, and sought to bring D. John Alfonso of Albuquerque again into fauour: but it tooke no effect: for D. John Alfonso entred into league with the Earle of Transimare, who was one of these Ambassadors, and with Don Frederic Maister of Saint Lames, and they proceeded to farre, as being thrust on with hatred and disdain of their king, they sought to perswade D. Pedro, Infant of Portugall, to ioyne with them, promising to make him king of Castile, shewing him that hee had a title, being Nephew or Grand-child to King Sancho the Braue, sonne to his daughter Donna Beatrice. But the king Don Alfonso his father crost this proiect, and would not suffer his sonne to ingage himselfe in this enterprise.

1354.

Second marriage of King D.
Pedro his first wife yet living

The more to haue modestie in contempt, and to ouerthrow all diuine and humane lawes, the king Don Pedro, in the year 1354. without any dispensation from the Pope, but onely assisted by two bishops his owne creatures, Sancho of Auila, and John of Salamanca, caused himselfe by their sentence to bee separated from the Queen Donna Blanche, and in the towne of Cuellar, hee married a Ladie, widow to Don Diego of Haro, called Donna Isabelle of Castro, daughter to Don Pedro of Castro, of whose exquisite beauty hee was much enamoured: hauing married her, hee had newes of this league made by his breethren with Don John Alfonso of Albuquerque, wherefore hee went from Cuellar, and gaue this Lady her last adieu, who retired to Duegnas, where shee past her dayes, hauing brought the King a sonne, who was named John, and causing herselfe to be styled Queene of Castile and Leon. To oppose himselfe against this new conspiracie, the king being come to Castro Xeris, he made the marriage of the Infant Don John of Arragon his cousin, with Donna Isabelle, the second daughter of the deceased Don John Nugues of Lara. And for that hee vnderstood that Don Tello his brother followed the partie of Don Henry and Don Frederic his other breethren, he would haue Don John of Arragon take vpon him the title of Lord of Biscay. From thence he past to Toro, leauing Donna Maria of Padilla at Castro Xeris, being readie to be deliuered of a daughter which was named Donna Constance, future wife to the Duke of Lancaster an Englishman. The Confederates were fortified by Don Fernand of Castro, brother to Donna Isabelle, married, and suddenly abandoned by the King, in hatred of the contempt of his sister.

This king seeing that so many great personages rebelled against him, imputing all the cause

A cause of this mischief vnto his wife the Queene Donna Blanche, hee caused her to bee taken out of the castell of Arcualo, and conducted to Toledo, Don John Fernandes of Hine-lroca, Vncle to Donna Maria of Padilla, hauing taken the charge thereof. This pore Princessesse seeing her selfe in her enemies hands, and attending nothing but death from her cruell husband, as soone as she was entred into the citie of Toledo, shee intreated them to lead her directly vnto the great Church, vnder color of deuotion, the which was granted her: but being once entred, she would not go forth, but challenged the priuiledge of the place, so as presently all the citie of Toledo shewed themselves for her, euery one pitying her vnworthie vltage: wherefore Don John Fernandes of Hinefroca, durst not attempt to force her, but returned vnto the king, being at Segure de la Sierre, whither he was come to make warre against Don Frederic Maister of Saint Lames. At this newes the king came in a furie to Ocagne, and there in the place of Don Frederic, Maister of S.
Lames, hee created D. John Garcia of Padilla, Lord of Villagera, brother to his mistis D.
Maria of Padilla, the first of all the Masters of S. Lames that was married. In the mean time the Inhabitants of Toledo in general, resolved to keepe the Queene within their towne, from all violence, and not to receiue the king, vntill he were reconciled, and did promise to lead an honest life with her. As the incensed King thought to be reuenged of all these things, he found himselfe abandoned by many Noblemen of his trayne, among the which were the Infants of Arragon his cousins, and Don Lopes Sanches of Abendaño; great commander of Castile, who being discontented with his excesse, as well in the course of his life, as in the gouernement of his Realme, and at his ill vtage of the Nobility, they ioyned with his breethren, and with the city of Toledo, and all those of Andalusia, and other Noblemen and Communalities, who altogether made petition vnto the King, beseeching him, that for his owne honour, and the publike good, he would leaue the company of Donna Maria of Padilla, and liue with the Queene Donna Blanche his wife, as God had commanded him, and common honestie required: and that he should gouerne his realm by the good and faithfull counsell of good men.

Maister of S.
Lames married

Donna Leonora his aunt, Queene Dowager of Arragon, presented this petition vnto him, the reuerence of this Lady gaue the confederates hope to obtayne something, but he laboured in vaine: for the king was so much incensed against the confederates, and on the other side did so doate on D. Maria of Padilla, as he made no accompt of this admonition: so as the whole Realme was in combustion, and the Princes, with others of their faction, came to Medina del campo, whereon they seized. There Don John Alfonso of Albuquerque was poisoned by an Italian Phisition called Paul Romain, being hired thereunto by the king. He was Grand-child to Don Denis King of Portugal: within few dayes after there were aboute seuen thousand horse at Medina del campo, holding the Q.
D. Blanches party: and the confederates presented a new petition vnto the king, who had taken his way to Toro, and the chiefe of them spake vnto him about Tejadillo, nere vnto Toro, being fifty Knights in field of either side, but they preuayled nothing: for the king leaving all, went to Vruena, where Donna Maria of Padilla was, to bee merry with her.
E Queene Mary the kings mother receiued the Confederates into Toro, and wrought so, as she drew the king thither, where they began to make a kind of accord, and to dispose of the Offices of the kings house, and of Governments and places, displacing some, and advancing others, as they thought good: and namely, they disappointed all them of Padilla, and their adherents: the which the king ratified, but against his will, as it appeared soone after: for he made a dispatch from Tordeillas, to Don Pedro Infant of Arragon, Earle of Ampurias, who gouerned the country of Arragon, the King his Nephew being then in Cattellogne, by the which he complained of that his subiects had forced him vnto: intreating him by the bond of their allyance to be his friend: and thereupon he came to Segobia, in the beginning of the year 1355. and from thence to Burgos, where hee F called a generall assembly of the Estates, in the which hee complained greatly of the Queene his mother, and of the Princes and Noblemen confederates, saying, that they had detayned him prisoner in the city of Toro, and had forced him to do many things against his will and dignitie: demanding mony from his subiects, that hee might make war against them, and punish them according to their merits, the which he obtained. After
the

D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque poisoned.

1355.

Marchers commited by Don Pedro king of
Castile.

Cruell execution in the city of Toledo.

Play of a fun ill rewarded
by D. Pedro.

Queen mother
vncleffe.

the end of the Estates he came to Medina del campo, where he caused to bee slaine in his owne lodging one day in the holy weeke, Peter Ruiz of Villega, Gouverneur general of the frontier of Castile, and Sansolo Ruiz of Rojas: and caused many to be put in prison. Returning to Toro, he had an encounter with Don Henries men, who went to ioyne with Don Frederic his brother at Talauera, from whence they after marched to Toledo, and had meanes to enter, although their coming was not pleasing to all the Citizens, being the meanes to draw a warre upon them, as it happened, for that the king followed them soone after, and entred as it were by force, contraying them to depart. This was a meanes for him to haue the Queene his wife in his power, who was poorly defended by the diuided Toledains, so as shee was sent to the castle of Sigüenza. The king caused about foure and twenty Burgessees to be executed in the citie by Iustice, who had taken the Queenes part too openly: among the which a Goldsmith, about 80. yeares old, being condemned, and ready to be executed, his sonne, a young man of eighteen yeares of age, presented himselfe, who (moued with pietie and a filiall loue) besought the king to do him the grace, not to suffer his father to end the dayes of his old age after that manner, offering to suffer death for him. The king (who had no royall part in him) accepted the condition, and caused this young innocent man to be executed, who in regard of his pietie did merit to saue his fathers life, and to liue himselfe with honour: and reward due to his great vertue: the name of this young man through the negligence of Writers, is suppressed. After these dishonorable exploits, the king went to Cuenca, which held for Queene Blanche, but he could not take it: whereupon he marched against Toro, and brought all the warre into the territories of Leon and Biscay, where his men were twice defeated, by D. Tello, and John of Abendagno, with the death and imprisonment of many. The King being before Toro, he had newes of the death of Don John Garcia of Padilla, brother to Donna Maria, his mistris, being chosen master of S. Iames, against his brother Don Frederic, whereat he was much grieved.

During this heauines, there came vnto the campe, William Bishop of Bolonia, Cardinall of Saint Marie in Cosmedin, Legate to Pope Innocent the sixth, being sent to pacifie the troubles of Castile, and to reconcile the King and Queene: but he lost his labor, and obtayned nothing of him, but that hee procured the deliuerance of Peter Barrojo, a Doctor of the Lawes, and bishop of Sigüenza, who was prisoner, for that he had held the Queenes party. The king wrought so, partly by force, and partly by pargies and promises, as hee was suffered to enter into Toro, vpon condition that hee should not kill any man: the which he promised, and kept according to his faith: for he was no sooner entred but he caused to be slaine within the castell, in the presence of the Queene his mother, Peter Stephen Carpenter, Master of Calatraua, Ruis Gonzales of Castagneda, Martin Alphonso Tello, and Alphonso Teller, the which Queene Mary did so abhorre, as shee swounded, and was in danger of death: and soone after, not able to endure the sight of her sons cruelties, shee demanded leaue to retire into Portugall to her father king D. Alphonso, who caused her to be slayne soone after, for that shee liued vncleffe with Don Martin Teller. The King Don Pedro did also cause to be slaine in Toro, Gomes Manriques of Oriuela, Diego Perez of Godoy, Alphonso Games, great Commander of Calatraua, and many others.

The knights which defended the towne of Cuenca hearing of these bloudie executions left Castile, and retired into Arragon: others which held other places, distrustful their strength, abandoned them, and past into France: wherefore the king thinking himselfe now in a manner a conqueror, transported with a tyrannous hatred against the Nobility of his Realme, yea against his owne blood, he resolved to roote them out one after another, not trusting in any one of them. Having besieged Palenquela, he watched an opportunity to kill the two Infants of Arragon his cousins, Don Frederic his brother, who was partly reconciled, and Don John de la Cerde: but by reason of the absence of Don Tello, his brother (whom he would catch in the same net) he deferred it: and the better to surprize him, he made shew to pardon him, and Don John of Abendagno also, and to remit all that was past. This Don John of Abendagno was one of the chiefe Knights of Biscay, and without whose aduise Don Tello, Lord of Biscay, did not any thing. Notwithstanding as the fauours of great men are vncertaine and wauering, Don Tello enuying him, for that he was rich, and welbeloued in the countrie, caused him to be slaine awhile after in the towne of Bilboa. Palenquela being taken by composition, the king Don Pedro made a tourney at Tordeillas, where he had resolved to murder Don Frederic his brother, and others: notwithstanding hauing by the same treason, caused two other Knights to be slaine, the one of Toledo, the other of Valledolit, he thought it sufficient for this time, and deferred this execution vntill another opportunity.

Don Henry who was in the Asturia's, seeing that all were brought vnder, and reconciled vnto the king, he demanded leaue as farre off, and obtained it (for hee would not trust the king but vpon good termes) and went to serue the French king. Passing by the mountaines of Asturia, he escaped many ambushes which the king had layd for him, notwithstanding his assurance giuen, but he was ordained to better fortune: wherefore being come into Biscay, and hauing there conferred with Don Tello his brother, hee embarked and landed at Rochel, from whence he went to Paris to King John then reigning, who receiued him, and honoured him much. The king of Arragon was aduertised of all these troubles and alterations, being then resident at Perpignan, for the which he was not forie. At that time there reigned three bad kings in Spaine, this Don Pedro king of Castile, Don Pedro of Arragon, and Don Charles of Nauarre, violent Princes, who whilst they liued, did continually afflict both themselves and their subiects, by tyrannies: so as they purchased the surnames of Bad and Cruell.

Charles the second of that name, and the thirtieth king of Nauarre.

Leaving the Estate of Castile at this time somewhat quiet, we will returne to the affaires of Nauarre, the which we left at the death of Donna Jeanne, wife to King Philip of Euxoux: to whome of three sonnes, Charles, Philip, and Lewis: Charles the eldest succeeded to the Crowne of Nauarre, who was surnamed the bad, by reason of the troubles he caused, as well on this side, as beyond the Pyreneé mountaines, and of his strange disposition. Being called by the three Estates of the Realme, hee came in the yeare 1350. and was crowned in the citie of Pampelona, in an assembly made to that end after the manner of his Predecessors, swearing to obserue the lawes and liberties of the country. His coronation was accompanied with some bountie to the Cathedrall church of Pampelona, to the which among other things, he gaue a great crosse of siluer, enameled with Flower de Luces azure.

During his coronation, some of his people mutined, pretending a breach of their priuileges, whome the king did punish so severely, causing many to be hanged, and to be executed by other cruell punishments, as the cure farre exceeded the disease. With the like violence he afflicted the Nobility of Nauarre, so as they decayed greatly: and he shewed himselfe in all his actions inconstant, wauering, and light of beleefe: If hee had any good in him, it was a certaine respect he bare to Clergie men, and to schoolers. At his coming the king of Arragon sent a Secretarie of his vnto him, called Peter of Tarrega, to confirme the League which was betwixt these two Realmes: and soone after hee sent him another ambassage, by Don Lope Earle of Luna, and Don John Fernandes of Heredia, Castellan of Amposta, for a more ample confirmation of the league and alliance betwixt them two: propounding vnto the king of Nauarre an alliance by marriage, to the end he might hold the kingdomes of Nauarre and Arragon well vnited, for the king of Arragon feared much, least Don Pedro king of Castile, (who was a violent, dangerous, and faithlesse Prince) should breake the peace that was betwixt the two Realmes, embracing the quarrels of the Queene dowager of Arragon and of her children, and should ioyne with Nauarre, by some alliance which might be preiudiciall vnto him. Hereupon the Ambassadors propounded a marriage betwixt Don Charles king of Nauarre, and one of the daughters of the king of Sicily, who was of the house of Arragon. And for that it was

D. Tello Lord of Biscay causeth D. John of Abendagno to be murdered.

4.

*Manners of K.
Charles the 2.*

bruted,

bruted, that the king of Castile (who had not then concluded a marriage with Blanche of A Bourbon) pretended to marrie Blanche of Navarre, sister to this King Charles, and widow to Philip of Valois the French king, he was intreated to hinder it. King Charles who had a desire, and was counselled to take a wife in France, excused himselfe from marrying with Sicile, assuring the king of Arragon, that the Queen Dowager of France would not marrie any more: for it had bene a custome long observed in France, that the Queenes remayning widows, how young soever, did not marrie againe: finally, hee concluded with the Ambassadors of an interview betwixt the king of Arragon and him: but before it could be effected, Don Pedro king of Castile (who had bene advertised of all which had past betwixt the King Don Charles, and the ambassadors of Arragon) wrought so as he drew the King of Navarre to Bourgos, where there was great embracings, and rich presents given of either side, in the year 1351. as we have layd. At this interview was Philip brother to king Charles. Being returned into Navarre, and having many great desires in his head, hee made preparation to passe into France: Whereof the King of Arragon being advertised, he sent to summon him of his promise, that they should meete together, wherunto he yielded, assigning the place at Momblanc, where by the same meanes he should visit, passing by Huefca, his Nieces D. Constance and D. Jeanne, Infants of Arragon. Then the King Don Charles tooke his way towards France, leading with him his two brethren, Don Philip and Don Lewis. The interview of these Princes at Momblanc, made them no better friends, neither did they conclude that which D. Pedro King of Arragon did expect.

Interview of the Kings of Navarre and
Castile.

Interview betwixt the kings of Arragon
and Castile.

The king of Navarre being come into France, he beganne to make claime to many things, for besides the Earledomes of Champagne and Brie, which he pretended to be long vnto him, hee made a title to the Duchie of Bourgoigne, by reason of his mother Queene Jeanne, issued from that house of Bourgoigne by her mother, with many other claimes, wherin king John had no intent to do him right, finding it so by his Council.

He had for his chief aduersarie another Charles or John, according to the French Histori- cians, who was Constable of France, of the house of Castile, Earle of Angoulesme, sonne to Don Alphonso de la Cerde, of whom wee have often made mention, whereby there were great insolencies, murders, and rebellions committed throughout the Realme of France, as we will touch briefly in passing, for that these quarrels belong rather to the Historie of France then Spaine.

The king of Navarre being in these poursuites, by the course of Iustice, before the Estates of France, and the Courts of Parliament, King John thinking to pacifie him, and to make him more tractable, gaue him one of his daughters in marriage, and in recompence of his demands, gaue him Mante and Meulan: but this did not abate his pride, but wrought a contrarie effect. This Princesse called Jeanne, was the onely wife of King Charles of Navarre, who had a great and a noble issue by her. Charles was the first borne of this marriage, who was king after his father Philip, who dyed young, Peter who was Earle of Mortaign in Normandie. Moreover, they had these daughters following, Mary who was Countesse of Denia, married to Don Alphonso of Arragon, Blanche who died at the age of thirteene yeares, and Jeanne future Duchesse of Brittain, and after that Queene of England.

Genealogie of Navarre.

Of the Earle of Mortaign, some Histori- cians say, is issued one sonne named Peter of Peraltre, who was Constable of Navarre, the stemme of the Marquis of Fales, yet by the feminine line, who are also Earles of Saint Esteuan. Before the marriage of King Charles hee had a bastard sonne, called Don Leon of Navarre, or Lyonel, from whom are descended the Marquises of Cortes, Marshals of Navarre, begotten of a Gentlewoman of the house of Euge. Of him was borne Don Philip, the first of that line, Marshall of Navarre, of Don Philip was borne Don Pedro of him Don Philip and Don Pedro brethren: of Don Pedro another Don Pedro, all successively Marshals of Navarre. In this last Don Pedro sayled the Masculine line of D. Lyonel: for hee left onely one daughter, called Donna Hieronyma of Navarre, who was first wife to Don John of Benauides, a Castilian Knight, who was also Marshall of Navarre in regard of her: and to her second

A cond husband (hee had Don Martin of Corduba and Velasco, Earle of Alcaudete, who was in our time Marshall of Navarre. This is the posterity of the blood royall of Navarre, descended of this king Charles, who pursuing with all violence his rights against the French King, who held the Duchie of Bourgoigne and other lands, which had bene the patrimony of his Predecessors, he had for aduersary (as we have sayd) Charles of Spaine: and such was the hatred betwixt them, by reason of these pretensions, as in the end all France was set on fire with ciuill wars, and the English were drawne in by the king of Navarre, who was supported by them: who to be reuenged of his enemy D. Charles of Spaine, Constable and Earle of Angoulesme, both being then in Normandy, he caused him to be surprized in the night in the towne of Aigle, and murdered in his bed, by the hands of D. Rodrigo of Vreiz, D. John Ramir of Arrellan, D. Corbaran of Leer, the Barons of Garro and Antiede, and other Knights and souldiers of Navarre. Hee was so farre from dissembling this fact, as he confessed it, and did iustifie it to be done by his commandement, and that hee had iustly slaine him: wherat the king, and the whole court were much troubled, seeing the great impudencie of the king of Navarre, the which was entayned by many within the Realme which did adhere vnto him, besides the league hee had with the English, to the which hee sought to draw D. Pedro king of Arragon, who notwithstanding would not heare of it, for that he was allyed to the French king, whose friendship hee refused to entertaine. To prevent the mischiefes which might grow by such furies, King John was forced to dissemble, and by promise of impunity, gifts, and yielding of townes and places, according to the demands and pretensions of the King of Navarre, seekte to break the league which hee had treated with the English, yea giuing him the Duke of Aniou his son in hostage, to draw him to Court, where being come, the king made a shew that hee would arraign him, but it proued a least: for hauing caused him to come before him on his knees, and to craue pardon, hee pardoned him the Constables murder, and all that hee had committed against the Crowne of France and his authoritie, Queene Blanche, widow to K. Philip his sister, and Queene Jeanne his wife being intercessors for him: but this reconciliation was soone troubled: for the king of Navarre thinking that the French king had rather dissembled his displeasure, then forgotten it, did not quit the allyances which hee had made to the preiudice of France, but did still intertaine secret practises both within and without the Realme: and as he was turbulent, and euer full of ialousie and distrust, King John ha- uing called the Estates of his Realme, and shewed the necessities of war, demanding money for the leuie of 30000. men, the King of Navarre sought to hinder this subuention, and did contradict it with all his power: notwithstanding it was granted. King John being wonder- fully incensed at the King of Navarres impudency and pride, who in stead of assilting him, like a good son-in-law, who had bene newly absolved by him from so great a crime, shew- ed himselfe a violent aduersarie to his desires, he sought a fit occasion to punish him, the which fell out opportunely in the city of Rouan, at the reception of the Daulphin Charles in Normandy, who had bene newly aduanced to that Duchie: whither came the Noblemen of the countrie, namely, the king of Navarre, as Earle of Eureux, a member of the Dutchie, where as hee with many others were surprized: the king was sent prisoner to the castle of Alleux in Palluel, and some Noblemen were executed, as you may read at large in the French Historie.

Murder of the Constable of France by the king of Na-
uarre.

King John had advertised Don Pedro King of Arragon, of all those proceedings, that he might see hee had done nothing lightly, being a reasonable thing, that Kings, how so- ueraigne soever, should iustifie their actions, and to make them apparent, else they were to be reputed Tyrants, and to be hated of all the world, as violent and vniust. Gaston Dhe- burthen Earle of Foix, who had married Agnes, sister to the king of Navarre, was more discontented then any other at his imprisonment, who passing into Spaine, sought to incense Don Pedro King of Arragon his brother-in-law, and to procure him to declare himselfe enemy to King John, if hee did not release the King of Navarre, but the king D. Pedro would not yeeld vnto it: for hee held the friendship of France to be a firm support for his Es- tates: besides hee still feared a war betwixt him and D. Pedro, yet he promised to be an inter- cessor for him to K. John, and to intreat him to shew his clemency, & to intreat his prisoner without passion, but by the course of Iustice, & moreover not to exact all his right of him, flores in dowry vpon condition that she should renounce all her fathers rights, and so she did. The King of Arragon being then at Saragoſſa, he renewed and confirmed to the Nobility of that city, whom they call Ermunios , the preuiledge they haue now to goe to the warres, but when the King is in person ready to giue battaille, or to assaile some place, and declared that if any one of these preuiledged persons had followed him be- yond these limitations, that it should be no prejudice to their rights . There he gaue charge of the warre, for the preservation of the country, to the Archbishop of Saragoſſa, whilest that the confederate Noblemen of Castile, together with the Aragonais, did ruine and burne the country of Alauas : the King of Castile led a great power by land against Arragon, by the way of Almanza, where he tooke Negafsa and Torrijo. During this warre D. Henry Earle of Transmarra had a sonne by his wife in the towne of Epila (the which at this daie belongs to the Earle of Arande) who was called Iohn, and raigned in Castile . Cardinal William bey of Bologna , Bishop of Portuenſe , this yeare our Lord 1359. who preuailed as little as the other, but by his diligence and importune Princes, the Pope sent Cardinal Guy of Bolonia , Bishop of Portuenſe , this yeare our Lord 1359. who preuailed as little as the other, but by his diligence and importune Princes, the Pope sent Cardinal Guy of Bolonia , Bishop of Portuenſe , this yeare our Lord 1359. who preuailed as little as the other, but by his diligence and importune Princes, the Pope sent Cardinal Guy of Bolonia , Bishop of Portuenſe , this yeare our Lord 1359.

more
fu

The feason being fit for navigation, the King of Castile went out of Seulle, or Saint Lucar, with foure score ships, and one and forty gallyes, and failed towards the coost of Valence and Cartelogue; he ruined the towne of Guardamar, and the castles againe, and presented himselfe in view of Barcelona: but the army of Arragon, which was but of forty foits and gallies hindered him from staying at any place vpon the coast, and skyrttyngh oftten with him, they forced him to bend towards luiza, and to way anchorin half from thence, and to faile towards Alicant and Carthagea, and in the end to retire himselfe, hauing with this great preparation done nothing of import. The King of Arragon was in the meane time in the Island of Majorca, being aduised not to be in his army at sea. The gallies of Castille retired to Seulle, and the ships of Guipulco, Bilscay and Galicia, returned into their countries: as for the King of Castile, he went to Tordillas to visit Donna Maria of Padilla.

The coaſt of Cattelogue and Valence was this yere ſhipwred of ſhips of warre: ſo that the King of Arragon was forced to entertaine many gallies continually in the Iſland of Sardynia, being ſtill ſubiect to reuolts, and moreover he had ſent a good number into Sicile, to aide the King D. Frederic his ſon in law, againſt whom Leanne Queene of Naples made warre.

D. Pedro alone of that name, the eighth King of Portugal.

Portugal. D On Pedro surnamed the Lusticer raigned in Portugal, who had succeeded his father D. Alphons the fourth, deceased in the yeere of our Lord 1357. Hee was about seven and thir- yeeres old when hee beganne to raigne, and therefore being ripe in yeeres, and of a good Iudgement hee gouerned his realme with great equity, so as he purchased the name of Lusticer, and was much unlike in manners to the other two Kings of his

A his time, and of the fame name. This King (his father being yet liuing) was married to Ruiz, daughter to D. Pedro King of Castile, sonne to D. Sancho, who falling into a palsey, was left by him, and then he married D. Constance Manuel, daughter to D. John Maunby, by whom he had these children following. D. Lewis, who liued little, D. Fernand, who reigned, Donna Maria, married in the life of D. Alphonso her Grandfather, to D. Fernand Infanz of Arragon, sonne to the King D. Alphonso, by his second wife D. Leonora of Castile. D. Constance dying in the yeere of our Lord 1345. he married Donna Agnes of Castile, a gentlewoman which had followed her, and with whom they sayd he had familiar acquaintance during her life, for he was exceeding faire & amiable. The Infanz D. Pedro (although the were somewhat allied vnto him), and had christened his son D. Lewis, married her secretly, for feare of his father, in 1354. hauing enioyed her many yeeres, and the witnesses of this matrimoniall promise, were D. Gil Bishop of Guardia, and Stephen Lord Maister of his Wardrop, whom he commanded to keepe it secret. By her D. Pedro had three sonnes: D. Alphonso, who died in France, D. John and D. Denis, who were afterwards expelled by their brother D. Fernand then reigning, and died in Castile. Of this Lady Donna Agnes, was also borne one daughter, called Donna Beatrice, who was married to D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, bafe sonne to D. Alphonso the thirteenth King of Castile. This clandestine marriage being vnknowne to the King D. Alphonso, father to D. Pedro, and yet his loues knowne and blamed by all men, it was treated of to marry him with some Princesse, but hee would not heare of it: wherefore the King tooke a cruell resolution to kill D. Agnes de Castro, thinking he should not otherwise withdraw his sonnes loue. Being come to this effect to Coimbra where this faire Lady remained, whilest that the Infanz D. Pedro was a hunting, he caused her to be slaine by three of his gard, which were Diego Lopes Pacheco, Peter Cuello, and Almar Gonçales, who did this execution in the old pallace of Saint Clare. This death being in the yeere of our Lord 1355. made the Infanz rebel against his father, who with the aide of many of his friends, entered the country betwixt Duero and Minio, where he committed great spoile, and had done more, if many great personages had not labored happily to reconcile them. After that he loued an other Lady, called D. Theresa Gallega, by whom hee had one sonne, called John, in the yeere 1357. He was first Maister of the Knights of Auiz, and afterwards King after D. Fernand his brother, and the same yeere 1357. died King D. Alphonso the braue.

D. Pedro being come to the crowne, he shewed himselfe a iust Prince, obseruing about all things the lawes and ordinances made by his father, for the ordering of his house and training the Officers whereof were expressly forbidden not to molest his subiects, especially puruoiors, nor to take any prouision for his house, before they had paid the price which the seller demanded, vpon great penalties, yea death in some cases. Hearing that aduocates did multiply futes, and that of one they often made many, he discharged them all throughout his realme, and imposed great punishments vpon Iudges that should suffer themselves to be corrupted with money or otherwise, yea losse of life, and confiscation of their goods: he made in any lawes for the shortning of futes, appointing fit men for Iudges: causing his ordinances to be executed with all rigor. He appointed great punishments for light offences, and if any one told him that he was to severe, he answered, that it was the meanes to reforme vice, and that it was pleasing vnto Gods for if the wicked were not kept in awe with the feare of death, they would neuer bee restrained with lesse punishments; Finally to haue the good liue in peace, it was necessary to punish the bad severely. As soone as the pleaders had made their demands, and pertinent answers giuen, they were presently dispatched if it might be: If by any trickes and deuises matters were delayed, the offenders were punished, that is, the poore by the whip, and therich by great fines: by reason whereof his realme florished in peace and abundance of all things; and he was honoured and beloued of his subiects as much as any Prince liuing. Hee had often in his mouth the saying of the Emperour Titus. That he held that day lost, wherein hee had not done good to some one. Hee did not greeue to be himselfe in person at the deciding of causes, and did often assist at the examination and torturing of criminal persons; he did so hate malefactors, as hee did often times

Castilians defeated.

D. Pedro de Luna, D. John Martinez of Luna, and D. John Fernandes of Heredia, who being accompanied with eight hundred horse Aragonois, defeated one thousand and a hundred Castilians.

In this encounter died D. John Fernandes of Hinesfrosa, gouernor of that frontier for the King of Castile, vnle to Donna Maria of Padilla, D. Fernand Garces Duxie, D. Pedro Ruiz Oforio, Gomes Suarez of Figueroa, great Commander of Saint Iames: and there were taken prisoners, D. Inigo Lopez Oryco, D. Fernand Ruiz of Villaloba, D. John Gomes of Bahabou, D. Hurtado Diaz of Mendoza, and D. Diego Sancho Ferras, all renowned Knights of Castile, whereat the King was much moued, but his griefe was moderated by a new sonne, which Donna Maria of Padilla brought him, in the yeere of our Lord 1360. who was named D. Alphonso, by reason whereof he came presently to Tordesillas.
Being afterwards returned to Seulle, he caused D. Garci Aluarez of Toledo to be created maister of Saint Iames, a Knight which had done him great seruices, both in the warre against Arragon, and in the seditions of Castile, to whom, besides this dignity, hee gaue the office of Majordomo, or high Steward to his sonne D. Alphonso. This yeere continuing his cruelties, he caused two other of his brethren in the towne of Cal-guzman, D. John, and D. Pedro, hauing kept them long prisoners in the towne of Calmona; and they say, that hee dispatched them, for that hee doubted they would become more faithful nor obedient vnto him, then their other three brethren. D. John was scarce thirteen yeeres old, and D. Pedro but fouretee. The victorie which the Aragonois stille more tractable in the negotiation of a peace, wherein Cardinal Guy of Bologne the Popes Legat laboured, who in the end drew the Deputies of these two Kings to meet in the city of Tudelo, in the realme of Nauarre, wherewith King Charles was very well satisfied.

Thether came for the King of Castile, Gutierrez Fernandes of Toledo, and for the King of Arragon, D. Bernard of Cabrera, chiefe counsellor of State, and Admiral of Aragon; who together with the Legat, did conferre, and dispute long of the means to make a peace, but they could not conclude any thing. And there being also assembled by the Legats care, in the towne of Sanguesa, D. John Alphonso of Majorca, Chancellor of the priuy seale for the King of Castile, and the same Admiral of Arragon for the King of Castile, they effected as little as at Tudelo. Whereupon the King of Castile being aduertised that his brother D. Henry would enter into Castile, seeing they could not conclude a peace, he came to Leon, where hee would haue slaine D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, and some other Knights, which had lef him, but they escaped: yet hee tooke Pero Aluarez Oforio in Villanibla, as hee was at the table with Diego Garcia of Padilla, maister of Calatraua. Comming afterwards to Burgos, he caused Diego Arias Maldnado the Archdeacon to be slaine, for that hee had receiued letters from his brother D.
Henry of Translamara.

D. Henry with the army of Arragon, entred by Rioja, and tooke great spoiles from the Iewes inhabiting there, but especially at Nagera: he also tooke the towne of Haro, and came as farre as Pancoruo, where he vnderstood that the King of Castile came to encounter him, and was at Birbiefca, so as D. Henry retired to Nagera. The King of Castile passing by Grisalena, Pancoruo, Ameiugo, and Maranda of Ebro, he came to Saint Dominike de la Calzada, and then to Agofra. Here a religious man of the towne of Saint Dominike presented himselfe vnto him, and told him, that Saint Dominike had reuealed vnto him, and enioyned him by his hand. The King caused this religious man to be apprehended, and carefully examined, to finde out whether that which hee had said had beene suggested vnto him by some one, or that it were a reuelation. The Monk maintained that Saint Dominike had reuealed it vnto him, and persisted in this answer, being often examined: But the King did not regard it, and for a reward of his prediction hee found in the end to be true) he caused him to be burned. There were many skirmishes about Nagera, betwixt the Aragonois and Castilians, whereas the Casti-lans had the better, being still the more in number: but the King of Castile being not come

Murthers committed by
the King of Castile without respect of order quality.

predition of a Monk of the King of Castile, who caused him to be burned for his reward.

A came with sufficient prouision to beseege townes, leauing Nagera, and Cont Henry, hee returned to Saint Dominike, and from thence past by Logroño. But the Legat, who alwaies treated a peace, procured a cessation of armes in those quarters, so as D. Henry returned into Arragon by Nauarre: The King also tooke the way to Seulle, where being arrived he found that they had taken at sea the General of the galleies which the King of Arragon had sent into Barbary, to aide the King of Tremessen: his name was Mathew Mercur, whose head hee caused to be cut off: there were foure galleies also taken with him. He also put to death there Men Rodriguez Tenorio, Fortun Sanchez Calderon, Fernand Gudiel of Toledo: they were those Knights, which being retired into Portugal had beene delivered to the King of Castile, in exchange, by the king of Portugal, as hath bin mentioned. He also put to death D. Pero Nugnes of Guzman, who could not auoide his owne misfortune, and soone after in the towne of Alfaro, he cut off the head of D. Gutierrez Fernandes of Toledo, for that hee spake his minde too freely in matters which did concerne the good of State, and for the zeale he had to his honour and seruice: hee caused as much to be done to Gomes Carrillo of Alborno, being in a galley. Thus this ill ad-uised King tooke a delight to shed the blood of his Nobility, neither did hee fore-bear prelats, for if hee slue them not, he chased them out of his Realme with ignominy, and losse of their goods: but in the end his excessiue procured the iust indignation of his subiects against him, which made him loose both Realme and life. Hauiug as wee haue said, put to death D. Gutierrez Fernandes of Toledo, hee bent his fury against his brother D. Blasco Archbishop of Toledo, but hee durst not dip his hands in his blood, for that hee was of the Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction: wherefore hee sent Mathew Fernandes Chancellor of his priuy seale to Toledo, to command him in his name to depart his country, and to retire into Portugal: the which this prelat was forced to doe in such hast, as hee had no leisure to take any of his stuffe, but went as hee was appareled, without companie, or any commoditie for his voiage. And the same daie that hee departed, the King came to Toledo, the which did much affright all those that had the government of the towne.

The Archbishop came to Coimbra in Portugal, where soone after hee ended his daies in the Monastery of Saint Dominike, with an example of notable patience, from whence his body, by the Kings permission, was carried to Toledo, and there interred. Don Gomes Manrique was chosen Archbishop of Toledo in his place, and Primate of Spaine, being numbered for the three score and one Prelat, or according vnto some three score and two of that Church.

Samuel Lewis a Lew, high Treasorer, was committed to prison in Toledo, by the Kings commandement, with all his kindred, who were carried to Seulle, where hee caused them to be put to death, after they had beene cruelly tortured, to make them confesse where their goods were; of whose confiscation the King got about foure hundred and three score thousand doubloons of gold, and foure thousand markes of siluer, besides many rich iewels and filkes. Being in that city in the yeere of our Lord 1361.
the King had an intent for to make warre against the Moores, but hee deferred it for a time, being prest by that of Arragon: for about that time the treatie was effected, which had beene long before practised with Goncal Gonzales Lasso, Gouernor of Tarassone, which place hee deliuered to the King of Arragon, and had the florins about mentioned in recompence: And moreover hee married with Violant daughter to Don Ximenes of Vreza, and to Donna Eluira Corneli, with the Lands of Biote, Pace and Afinos in dowrie. Don Pedro Ximenes of Sampero was put in garrison into Tarassone. The warre betwixt these Potentates after some small exploit, was in the end concluded by a peace, which the Cardinal above named did mediate at Deca.
By the which the Castilians which were retired into Arragon, had their Conge, and restitution of places was promised of either part, for the performance whereof hostages were deliuered to the King of Nauarre, or to his brother Lewis then viceroy in Nauarre.

This peace lasted not long; for the King of Castile being incensed that the Cardinal, by the Apostolike authoritie, had disannulled the sentences which hee had giuen against

Knights of Ca-
stile executed.

A large spoile of a Lew condemned.

An. 1361.

Tarassone yielded by practise.

An. 1362.

Christians de-fected by the Moors.Raigne of the King D. Pedro.

them to rout, killing and taking many of them, the rest saved themselves in the rocks. A
The yeere following 1362. the Christians, encouraged which this victory, entred the Moors country, and presented themselves before Guadix, where there were six hundred horse Moors, and about foure thousand foot, which King Vermeil had lodged there, being aduertised of the Christians desaigne. These Moors kept themselves close, making no shew, nor offering to fall forth, so as the Christians, thinking the garrison to be weake, diuided their forces, leading a part of them towards the valley of Alhama: which the Moors discovering, they sallied forth vpon the remainder, and defeated them easily, where (among others) D. Diego Garcia of Padilla maister of Calatraua, was taken prisoner, who being led to Granado, was not onely wel entertained by King Mahumet Aben Alha- B mar, but also set at liberty without ransom, and presented with many rich gifts: the King desiring to make him his friend, and by his meanes to purchase some fauor with the King of Castile, and the Noblemen of his court; among the which D. Diego Garcia (as brother to Donna Maria of Padilla, and vncke to the children which the King D. Pedro had had) was in great credit and authority. Being returned into Castile, the King was glad of his liberty, but he did not much esteeme the bounty of the Moorish King: for D. Pedro was hecruell and implacable by nature, and reproched the maister, that by his indiscretion he had bene the cause of the route of his men, and of his owne imprisonment.
The King entred afterwards in person into the country of Granado, and tooke Inziar, C
Cisnair, Ambr, Benamexir and Zagra, and then returned vnto Seuille: but King Maha- met the Vermeil brought his army presently to Zagra, and assaulted it in such sort, as Fernand of Gadillo, capitaine of the garrison, was forced to leaue it: whereat the King D. Pedro was so moued, as (notwithstanding that he had defended it as much as he could and ought, according to the reasons of warre) he caused his head to be cut off: and to restrain the Moors, he returned instantly into their country, where he tooke Hardles, Turon, Cueuas and other castles: King Mahumet the old being also in field. As this warre was long, and hard for the Granadins to maintaine, against so great a power as that of Castile: so it began to be troublesome to most of the knights Moors: so as in Granado, and in the court, there was nothing to be heard but murmuring, & words of discontent, wherevpon King Vermeil grew very doubtful of his subiects, who objected continually, D to the Christians. King Vermeil being in this perplexity, and fearing least they should receale his competitor Mahumet the old, and that he should be ignominiously chased away, or slaine, was aduised by his chiefe and most confident friends (especially by Ezdriz Aben Balus who had greatly fauored him in getting the crowne) to quit Granado, and to retire himselfe to his enemy the king of Castile, thinking, that hauing shewed himselfe liberal & courtous vnto Diego Garcia of Padilla, he should also finde some fauor in the court, and (at all euents) that the King of Castile would be glad to be Iudge and arbitrator betwixt him and Mahumet the old; and that this assurance and confidence which he shewed, com- E ming to yeeld himselfe vnto him, would auail him something. This was a foolish and rash resolution of his, knowing what a monster in nature the King D. Pedro was, how greedy he was of reuenge, and how glad to shed blood. This ill-advised king came to present himselfe with foure hundred horse, and about twenty hundred foot, before Baena, where as D. Gutierre Gomes of Toledo Prior of Saint Iohn commanded, who wondering much at this vnexpected chance did accompany him vnto the court at Seuille, where as the king D. Pedro receiued him very graciously at his arrival, and heard the oration that was made vnto him in this kings behalfe quietly, tending that hee would be pleased to take knowledge of the affection which had moued him to come and yeeld himselfe vnto him, grounded vpon the remembrance that his ancestors had bene vassals to the king of Castile, the which he would neuer haue contradicted, had not the fauour which F he had scene done vnto his aduersary Mahumet Lagus, or the old, driuen him into distrust: notwithstanding hauing in the end considered that hee should finde equity and iustice in the king D. Pedro, not willing to persist (for his part) in any rebellion, he had resolved to come and yeeld himselfe vnto him, and to referre vnto his good iudgement, the controuersies which were betwixt him and his aduersary, to the end that hee might determine

A determine them according vnto reason: That as for himselfe, beeing of the blood of the first Kings of Granado, whose royall seat the race of Farrathen had vsurped, he thought he had done nothing against the duty of a man of honour, to haue fought to recouer his Grand-fathers Kingdome, beleeching him to haue regard therof: and if he should finde it good to depriue him of his crown (the which he could not beleue) hee belonght him to giue him, and his, meanes to passe into Affrike, into the Moors country. The King D. Pedro made shew to heare these reasons without any passion, and assured him that he would reconcile him with his competitor, causing his lodging to be made in the Iewes place of the city of Seuille; but being displeased with the praides B which he had made to his preiudice, with the Kings of Arragon and Maroc, hee burnt with a desire to be reuenged. Being afterwards aduertised that this King Vermeil had brought many iewels, and great store of gold from Granado, he was so farre transported with a desire to spoile him of this treasure, as without any further deliberation, he commanded Martin Lopes of Cordoua, his chamberlaine, to goe and take him prisoner, with all those that were with him, and to put them into the Atarazana, or Arsenal: then seeking an occasion to dispatch him, he caused his processe to be made, for that hee had bene an actor in the death of King Ismael, brother to King Mahumet the old, and condemned him to die, with seuen and thirty other Knights, which were taken with him; according to which sentence he caused him to be drawne out of the Atarazana, and the seuen and thirty knights with him, who were led to the field of Tablada, and there executed, in a great assembly and concourse of people from all parts. This miserable King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, being brought vpon an asse, clad in a robe of scarlett, was the last which suffred: but hee had this consolation, that D. Pedro himselfe, was his executioner, who reproching him with the alliance he had had with the King of Arragon, thrust him through with a launce, at which blow Mahumet cried out in his owne language, Ha
Pedro, thou hast done a peere exploit, and purchased a shamefull triumph this day: afterwards he made an end of him, and cut off his head: This was the second yeere of the raigne of this Moore, and the 745. of the Arabians. King Mahumet Lagus, or the old, being afflicted by this death, returned to Granado, ioyfull to be thus freed of his enemy, whose head D the King D. Pedro sent vnto him: The Granadins receiued him without contradiction, in the yeere 1362. And he to recompence the King of Castile for the goodly present hee had made him of his Competitors head, deliuered all the Knights and Castilians which had bene taken at the encounter of Guadix, without any ranfome. Ezdriz Aben Balus chiefe counsellor to King Mahumet Vermeil, remained prisoner with the King of Castile, with many others, whereof some were redeemed for money; others were exchanged for other prisoners in after times, and some died miserably in prison. The truce betwixt Castile and Granado was renewed, and new homage sworne by Mahumet the Old to the King D. Pedro, paying the tribute which had bin paid to the kings his predecessors.
These things thus ended, the king of Castile staid not long to begin war against Arrago.
E 14 For the effecting whereof, with greater aduantage, he sought to ingage the king of Nauar in this war, being neuer come out of France, into his owne realme, in 1361. much desired, and well receiued, as one that had bene long absent. He rewarded the Noblemen and knights, which had serued and succored him in his affaires of France, bountifully, among the which the most remarkable were, D. Roderigo of Vrri who had for his good seruices, the government of the iurisdiccions of Sanguette, Olite and Tudelo: The Baron of Garro was recompenced in another sort, being a wandering knight, and sought imployment in the warres, so as being loath to stay in Nauarre, hee returned into France.
As all things had bene reasonable quiet in Nauarre vntill that time, there was an occasion offered to trouble all, by the coming of Inigo Lopes of Orozco, and Arras Gon- zales of Valez, Ambassadors for D. Pedro king of Castile, who came in their maiesties name, to congratulate king Charles his coming, to seeke his friendship, and a new league, and to procure an interview of these two kings. King Charles was glad of this Ambassage, and as hee had alwaies an intent to haue warre with the French King, vntill that hee had restored him the lands which hee pretended to bee his, hee did much esteeme the friendship of Castile, to make vie thereof at such a neede. Hee

Bbb 3 therefore

Crueltye con-tinueth: a trifling of Pedro King of Castile.

Nauarre.

Charles King
of Nauarre practised by him of Castile.

therefore promised the Ambassadors to come to Soria in Castile, and having first concluded with the Ambassadors a kind of peace, he went thither in the yeere 1362. having in his company his brother Lewis, Capta of Buche (a great Nobleman of Guienne) the Abbot of Fescain, and others, as well Nauarrois as French. The King of Castile came to the place assigned, and receiued him with great demonstrations of loue, where for the first act they confirmed the Articles of peace, conteyning an offensive and defensive league against al men. After some daies spent in feasts, sports and exercises of armes, the King of Castile hauing inuited the King of Nauarre to a great banquet, he told him, that he had some thing to say vnto him: wherevpon being retired into a gallery, the King of Castile vsed these words, in the presence of D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, maister of Saint James, Inigo Lopes of Orofco, Martinianes of Seuille, high treasurer, Martin Lopes of Cordoua, great Chamberlaine, Mathew Fernandes Chancellor of the priuy seale, all of his priuy counsell, and of the chiefe Noblemen and Knights which had accompanied King Charles; Brother (sayd he) seeing we haue made an oath to aide one another against our enemies, I will let you vnderstand, that the peace I haue with the King of Arragon, was made against my will, and to the preiudice of mine honour: for Ahen Alhamar King of Granado, being confederate with him, spoiled my country of Andalusie, which made me yield vnto a peace that I might punish this Moore: and now that I haue had my revenge, I am not bound to obserue this peace, vnlesse the places which I yielded vp be restored me againe, and the charges of the warre, caused by the King of Arragon, paid: wherefore according to the promise which you haue made me, and sworne, I summon you to aide me with your forces, and person, in this warre. The King of Nauarre was much amazed at this speech, being thus surprized, and knew not what to answer: for he presumed the King of Castile had not had any enemies, when he sware this peace and league. In the end he seemed desirous to doe what the King of Castile would haue him, but he demanded time to conferre priuately with his counsellors which attended him, Al were of opinion he should obey the King D. Pedro, else it would be dangerous, that being in his power he would doe him some affront, being rash, cruel, and without respect: besides, the country of Nauarre being then vnurnished, and the forces of Castile round about them, it was to be feared, that if he seemed vnwilling to doe that which he required, with his detention, he would cause his men to ouerrunne his country, to the great preiudice both of himselfe, and the Nauarrois his subiects. He beleeued them, and made answer to the King of Castile, that both himselfe and his meanes were at his commandment; provided, that he yielded the like vnto him, if he receiued any discommodity by making himselfe an enemy to the King of Arragon, his brother in law. The allyance of Castile which he so much sought, to make vsd thereof against the French, brought him into this error, that he made no difficulty to put himselfe into the hands of the most disloyall Prince liuing.

Castile.

In the peace made betwixt Castile and Arragon, there had beene propounded, that D. Pedro King of Castile, should marry D. Ieanne second daughter to the King of Arragon: for D. Constance the eldest had beene married to D. Frederic of Sicilie; but the Ambassador of Castile by his maisters commandment, made a motion for the marriage betwixt D. Alphonso son to D. Maria of Padilla, and D. Leonora the youngest daughter of Arragon, the which was concluded vpon condition, that the king of Castile should cause his son D. Alphonso to be declared lawfull heire of the Realmes of Castile, Leon &c. and that he should giue him presently the Siegneury of Molina, with the townes of Almazan and Medina Celi, whereof D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, maister of St. James, and his high Steward, should be put in possession, and that the pretended marriage betwixt the king, and D. Maria of Padilla, should be proued by him to haue bin done after the decease of Queen Blanche; the King of Arragon promising for himselfe and his successors, that if after the decease of Don Pedro King of Castile, there should be any question made vnto D. Alphonso his sonne in law touching the succession, he should aide and assist him with all the forces of Arragon. Don Pedro King of Castile, to haue this declaration made, and his sonne Alphonso acknowledged for lawfull heire, had called the Estates to Seuille, and there the fact being propounded by him, it was receiued, & allowed, & future obedience sworn vnto

A vnto the Infant, by the Estates, as heire after his father: confenting that Donna Maria of Padilla deceased, should be called Queene, and her daughters D. Beatrix, D. Constance, and Donna Isabella, Infants of Castile: but neither of the marriage, nor of any thing thereon depending, was there any accompt made, after the interview of the kings of Nauarre and Castile at Soria: but without all respect of accords, promises or oathes, as soon as these two kings were parted, he of Castile came with a great power into Arragon, and rooke Arica, Ateca, Terer, Moros, Cerina and Alhama, and layed sege to Calatajub, the which he tooke, and put to rout many knights which came to succour it: by reason whereof, Aranda with other townes and castles yeelded. Then hauing left Don Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, Maister of the knights of Saint James, vpon the frontier, he returned to Seuille.

Peace broken by the Castilian with Arragon

On the other part, the King of Nauarre, because hee would not faile of his promise made at Soria, sent to denounce warre against the king of Arragon, his brother-in-law, for that during his affaires and imprisonment in France, he would not succor him: whereunto the king of Arragon offering to satisfie him with good reasons, he would not heare any. Hauing therefore assembled his forces, he came to beseege the towne of Sos, and tooke it; then Saluaterra, running by the vallies of the Pyrenes, vnto the towne of Iacca, where as the king of Arragon had placed Peter of Pomar for Gouverneur. The king Don Charles being returned into his countrie, he had soone after a supply of two thousand men at armes sent him out of Castile, which he disposed with his Nauarrois vpon the frontiers of Arragon, whereas they did spoyle, burne, and murder. In the meane time the Infant D. Alphonso of Castile, who should haue beene sonne-in-law to the king of Arragon, dyed. In the yeare 1363, the king of Castile doubting that the French would be reuenged for the death of Queene Blanche of Bourbon, whom he had caused to be paysoned, after that he had intreated her vnworthily many yeares, seeing also a peace made betwixt them and the English, he sent Ambassadors to Edward king of England, and to the Prince of Wales his sonne, to demand their allyance and friendship, the which they willingly granted.

Peter declared by the King of Nauarre against Arragon.

An. 1363.

The king of Arragon vnderstanding well that the warre which the king of Nauarre made against him, was forced, he fought by subtill meanes to diuide him from his allyance with Castile. And knowing that king Charles had alwaies beene in quarrell with the French king, for the Dutchie of Bourgoigne and otherlands, he sent Don John Fernandes of Heredia, in ambassage to King John, who being come into Auignon, and hauing had many conferences with the Lords of the French kings Councell, he preuailed to much as they were content to referre all controuerfies to the arbitrement of the king of Arragon his Maister, and to fixe Cardinals: for which cause the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, began from that time to haue secret intelligence one with another, to the preiudice of Castile. Notwithstanding the army of Castile returning into Arragon, the king of Nauarre sent his brother Lewis, with many Nauarrois and Galcons, among others Don Martin Henriques of Lacarra, Standard-bearer of the Realme, and Capta of Buch vnto them. Siege was layed to Tarracone, and the place taken, in the which was Alberr a Knight of S. John. Boria was also taken, and John Ximenes of S. Piren, with other Knights which were within in the castle of Vaguena was burnt, with the Captaine which defended it, called Michel Barnabas, whose sonne, carrying the same name, was for this cause made noble by the king of Arragon, with all his posteritie, by a decree made by the Body of the State. Carlinena was also taken, where as Don Pedro King of Castile vsed horrible cruelties vpon the inhabitants; for those that he left aliue, were afflicted with torments more grieuous then death: of some he cutt off the hands, of others the feete, and of some the noses and eares. Magallon and the Vicount of Isle which defended it; Teruel, castle Habib, Ademus, Villel, and the towne of Segorue were also made subiect to the king of Castile. When Pedro Mata was taken in the castle of Segorue, and Ximen Doriz at Xerica. After which the K. of Castile tooke Mormedro, Almenara, Bugnol, Macafia, Benaguzil, Alpuche, with many other places and forts, euen to the gates of Valence; where as Don Alphonso of Arragon, Earle of Denia commanded. There the king of Castile and Don Lewis camped, and had many skirmishes: but hearing that the king of Arragon, and Don Henry and Don

Tello

Tello brethren to the king of Castile, (being banished) came with three thousand horse, A to fight with them, they dislodged, and retired to Moruedro, refusing a battell, for that the army of Castile was much lessened, having left garrisons in as many places, as they had taken. Don Gil Fernandes of Caruallo, Master of Saint James of Portugal, was in that army.

Source and 15.

The perill of Don Pedro of Arragon as gainst the earle
of Transmara

After this retreat the Abbot of Fescan, Legate for the Pope, laboured to make a peace betwixt these Princes, and obtained of the king of Castile, that D. Lewis of Nauarre should be employed, who went to conferre with the king of Arragon at Burriana, and brought Don Alphonso of Arragon, Earle of Denia, to the king of Castile, being at Moruedro: he was afterwards made Countable of Castile, and Marquis of Vilena: with him came Don Bernard of Cabrera with others, but all their indeavours were vaine. For the king of Castile would not heare speake of a peace, vnlesse the king of Arragon would promise to kill Don Henry Earle of Transmara, and Don Tello his brethren, with Don Fernand of Arragon, the which he refused to do in the beginning, seeming to haue horrore of so wicked an act, as to betray them which had fledde to him for protection, and had senced him: yet afterwards hee made no conscience thereof, seeing himselfe pressed, and his countrie so spoiled by the King of Castile, but agreed with the king of Nauarre to kill Don Henry, the which God would not permit, for he had appointed him for the Realme of Castile and Leon, and to be an exemplar scourge for the tyrant Don Pedro, who promised to giue the towne of Logroño to Charles king of Nauarre, if he would assist him in this murder.

For the effecting hereof, the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon concluded an interview at Sos: King Charles pretending that he would quit the allyance of Castile. For assurance and guard of the towne, where these two kings should meete, there was chosen for Gouernour, Don John Ramirez of Arellan, a knight of Nauarre, Chamberlaine to king Charles, who tooke for his Lieutenant his brother Ramir of Arellan, with thirtie men at armes, thirtie Lances, twenty Crosse-bowes, and other souldiers. The kings entered into Sos, either of them with two men: whether Don Henry and Don Tello had bene sent for to come: Don Henry came accompanied with eight hundred horse; the which hauing left without the towne, he entred with two more as the kings had done. D Threentred also the Abbot of Fescan, but ignorant of what was intended against Don Henry. The kings hauing treated long of their affaires in shew, thinking it a fit time to dispatch Don Henry, they talked secretly with Don John Ramirez, perswading him with great promises to execute this murder: but this knight who was noble and vertuous, would neuer yield vnto it, saying, that he had rather die an hundred times, then to blemish his good name with so execrable a crime.

The kings seeing that their hopes were vaine to make him the minister of their treason, they knew not what to do, but to dissemble their enterprife, and retire into their countries, imposing silence to D. John Ramirez; who merited immortall commendation for this generous act: besides, that God did greatly honour him afterwards, hauing directed him into Castile, at such time as D. Henry reigned, of whom he was beloued and cheifly E and obtained from him the Segneurie of los Cameros. From him are descended the Earles of Aguilar of the family of Arellan. This businesse ill attempted, and not able to be executed, was for that time dissembled. There had past many former treaties and accords betwixt this D. Pedro king of Arragon, and his brother D. Fernand Marquis of Torosa, to the preiudice of D. Henry, for that they found him desirous to raigne in Castile, of which Realme D. Fernand was the lawfull heire, if D. Pedro the cruell died without children begotten in lawfull matrimony: but the king of Arragon had neuer any intent to o good vnto his brother D. Fernand, nor to procure him any honour and aduancement: but as he was a man full of diuidinal enuie, and without loue or respect of any that did him seruice: so he spared no man, and dissembled with all men for his present commoditie.

Don Henry who knew him well, could also dissemble for his part, and stand vpon his guard: he could handle him so cunningly, as by the meanes and forces of Arragon, hee made himselfe a way to attaine vnto his desires.

A 16 Soone after there was a new and strict League made with him, whereupon Don John Fernandes of Heredia, and Francis of Perillos, Captaines to the king of Arragon, were sent with money into France to leuie men.

During these treaties and practises, there was no cessation of armes, at what time it Castile fell out, that the king tooke foure galleies of Castile, their king being at Moruedro, from whence he parted to come into Castile, at which time there was a sonne borne him at Almagar, of a Lady called Donna Izabella, which sonne he named Don Sancho: soone after returning to the warre, more enraged then euer against the king of Arragon, he marched into the countrie of Valence, hauing alwaies in his company Mahomad the Moore, king of Granado; he tooke Alicant, Xixona, Gandie, Oliue, and other places, but hee was in danger to haue bene suddenly surprized, and defeated in his retreat by Don Henry Earle of Transmara, had he not bene aduertised by one of Castro of Ordiales. Having escaped this danger, this religious king went in pilgrimage in his shirt, with a halter about his necke to a place called our Ladie of Puch.

The king of Castile entred many times into Arragon and Valence: neither could the king of Arragon hinder him from forcing of many places, the which he left manned with good garrisons of Castilians; and at sea he had not alwaies the worst, although the Arragonois were the more expert mariners: from whome the Castilians tooke in the yeare 1364, fise galleies, which were carried to Carthagena, and the captaines, mariners, and souldiers (for the most part) put to death by the kings commandement.

C 17 The king of Arragon being desirous to be freed from this war, sought all meanes by the king of Nauarre, to draw the king of Castile to some good accord, but it was labour lost: wherefore the kings of Nauarre and Arragon resolved to make a league betwixt them; for confirmation whereof, they concluded a marriage betwixt the Infant Donna Jeanne sister to king Charles, and Don John Duke of Girona, the heire of Arragon, being then foueteene yeares old. And moreover, the king of Arragon bound himselfe to giue lands and reuenues to Don Lewis brother to king Charles, and to prouide him a wife, and to giue fifty thousand florens to vngage certaine townes, which king Charles had pawned to Gaston Phebus Earle of Foix his brother-in law, and to intertayne him a certaine number of men against any enemy whatsoever: namely, fixe hundred horse-men of the country of Nauarre, if it were against Castile; but if it were against France, then to entertaine him a thousand, and to ayde him at need with all his forces both by sea and land: and moreover he quit vnto him for euer, and to remaine to the Crowne of Nauarre, Saluatierra, and the place called the Terme of Real. For assurance of these things which were very honorable for the king of Nauarre, he of Arragon promised to lay in deposito the towne of Iacca, Vncastilla, Sos, Exea, and Thermael, which should be committed to the fidelitie of Rymond Allemand of Ceruillon, a knight of Arragon, who for this effect should be discharged of his oath of homage and vassallage, which he ought vnto the king of Arragon; and should sweare fealty to him of Nauarre, to deliuer him the places put into his hands, if the above-mentioned accord should be broken by the king of Arragon. The king of Nauarre promised for his part to quit the allyance of the king of Castile, and to make warre against him and his children: and for his part he layed in pawne the towne and castle of Sanguette, Gallipienço, Vxué, Aybar, Cafeda, Pitellas and Penna, and moreover the percion of Arnaud Lord of Luse, his Chamberlaine, who was much fauoured by him: which articles were sworne at Vncastillo, in the presence of the Earles of Transmara, Ribagorça, and others, whome the Kings commanded to keepe this league secret. It was not sufficient for these two Kings to fortifie themselves against the attempts of the king of Castile, for their safeties and defence, but they would also diuide the Beares skin before they had taken him, sharing the Realme of Castile in such sort, as the king of Nauarre should haue the cittie of Burgos, with all old Castile, all the country of the mountaines of Oca vnto the limits of Nauarre, and the Ocean sea: comprehending therein the Prouinces of Guipulcoa, Alap, and Biscay, and moreover the townes of Soria and Agreda: And for the king of Arragon were assigned the Realmes of Toledo and Murcia. They did also conspire the death of Don Pedro king of Castile: the king of Arragon offering to him of Nauarre 200000. florens, and the proprietie of the townes and castles of Sos, Vncastel, Exea and

Disfian of the Realme of Ca-
stile before they had conquered it.

and Tiermas, if he flue him, or deliuered him prisoner vnto him, and without it hee offered him presently the citie of Iacca, with the territorie and vallies. The better to dissemble these practises, they ordained that Don Lewis the king of Nauarres brother, should make a roade into Arragon, but he should suffer himselfe to be taken prisoner by Don Alphonso Earle of Ribagorça, the which was done: but Lewis of Nauarre was soone deliuered, and the king of Nauarre did so dissemble his intentions, as the king of Castile could not discouer any thing.

This last desseigne was thus plotted betwixt the two kings without the priuie of any man, in regard of Don Henry Earle of Transimara, with whom the king of Arragon had other practises. For Don Henry affecting openly the Realme of Castile, vpon hope of the fauours which he attended from France, promised vnto the king of Arragon, that if he assisted him, he would giue him to hold in Soueraignie, the sixth part of the lands hee should conquer by his ayde in Castile, wherunto the king of Arragon gaue care, being alwaies vniust vnto his brother Don Fernand, Marquis of Tortosa, to whom the Realme of Castile did belong by right, if Don Pedro the cruell died without lawfull heires. These bargaines were not so secret, but the Infant Don Fernand had some notice thereof, for the which he was so transported, and made such a stirre, as the king of Arragon, and the Earle of Transimara resolu'd to dispatch him, of which counsell was Don Bernard of Cabrera, the which was soone after executed: for the Infant Don Fernand seeing that himselfe was no more secured in Arragon then in Castile, and therefore desiring to retire himselfe into France, the King of Arragon his brother found meanes to stay him, and to kill him in the castile of Buriane, in the territorie of Valence.

Death of Don
Fernand of Ar
ragon.

An. 1363.

In the yere 1363. John the French king died, being returned into England, for to deliuer the hostages which he had giuen, not being able to endure the States of the kingdom to accomplish the capitulations with the English. Charles King of Nauarre hearing these newes, hee made preparation to passe into France; to which Realme Charles the fifth his brother in-law had succeeded, but this warre of Arragon had so intangled him, as hee could not: so as his affaires prospered not well on this side the Pyrenees mountains.

An. 1364.
King of Nauar
open enemy to the king of Cas
tile.

In the yere 1364. the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon, renewed their league, but with some alteration, the King of Nauarre hauing already discouered himselfe an enemy to the king of Castile: To this end they met at Sos, where they agreed to continue this warre against Castile, and that it should not be lawful for the one to make any peace or truce without the consent of the other. That the king of Nauarre should make no accord with the French king, but he of Arragon should be comprehended. They gaue hostages one vnto another for assurance of their conuentions. The king of Arragon gaue his sonne D. Martin, and he of Nauarre a son of D. Lewis his brother, and the children of Don John Ramires of Arellan, of Don Martin Henriquez, of the Lord of Grammont, of Don Bertrand of Guevara, Fernand Gil of Alcan, Martin Martinez of Oriz, and of Michel Sanchez of Vrlua. These articles were sworn by the chiefe knights and townes of either part: and for that the summes of money promised to the king of Nauarre, at the capitulation of Vncastello, were much augmented, it was sayd, that the K. of Arragon should deliuer him 50000. florens presently in Sos, and for the rest he should haue deliuered him in pawning the city of Iacca, Sos, Vncastello, Tiermas, and Exea. Another priuie accord was made betwixt the king Don Charles, and Don Henry of Transimara, in whose hands the hostages should remaine. The king of Nauarre promised to enter in person into Castile, and there to make warre, and to be assured of Don Henry, hee would haue in hostage for his part, his daughter Donna Leonora, who was afterwards Queene of Nauarre, and a base sonne of his called Don Alphonso Henriquez. The Earle promised, that if at any time he should get the realme of Castile, he would suffer the King of Nauarre to enioy the lands of the ancient patrimonie of Nauarre, vsurped by the Kings of Castile, with diuers others.

Arragon.

These treaties betwixt the king of Nauarre, and Don Henry Earle of Transimara, were secret and vnknowne to the king of Arragon, who gouerned himselfe for the most part, by the aduice of Don Bernard of Cabrera, a wise Knight, and of great experience, by whom he was often perswaded from that which the other would haue him yeld vnto: for the

A the which he was hated by the king of Nauarre, and Don Henry: besides, being a priuie Counsellor, and of greatest authoritie, he was enuied by the other Noblemen of Arragon, who were lesse fauoured: wherefore these Princes being againe assembled at Almudear, the king of Nauarre, and the Earles of Transimara and Ribagorça, conspired to deprive the King of Arragon of this Counsellor, and wrought so, as they brought him into disgrace with the king. Don Bernard, being aduertised that they meant to apprehend him, sought to retire himselfe, and flying came into Nauarre to Carcastillo, the inhabitants whereof, seeing that he was pursued by Garcil Lopes of Sese, shut their rowne gates: but being summoned by Garcil Lopes in the name of the two kings, to deliuer Don Bernard, they stayed him, attending the kings commandement, who willed them to deliuer him vnto Garcil Lopes, who conuayed him to Murillo, where he remayned some time in hope to be deliuered: by which he was so hated by the king of Nauarre, and Earle of Transimara, as they neuer ceased by importune accusations, vntill they had put him to death.

D. Bernard of Cabrera in dis grace with his
King.

This Bernard of Cabrera had before the yere 1346. being forced to come to Court, and to employ himselfe in great affaires of State, & herein he was very iudicious, when as (wearie of the world) he had resolu'd to become a Monke. The king had cherished and advanced him, and receiued many good counsels, and profitable seruices from him, as well in the ciuill wars within his owne Realme, as in that of Sardinia and Castile. But as
C Courtiers, the more they seeke the greatnesse and honour of their Prince, and are by them the more honoured and beloued, are the more subiect to enuie, so fared it with him; for hauing bene faithfull to the king his master, he purchased the hatred of all the Princes and Noble-men of the Realme: so as when he was taken by the practises of the king of Nauarre and Earle of Transimara, there was not any one that did fauour him: but as it were by a common conspiracie, his processe was made, and the Infant Don John Prince of Gironne, whom he had bred vp, made his Iudge, where sitting in Iustice, and hauing for assistant Dominicke of Cerdagne, chiefe Iustice of Arragon, (who by his charge and office should defend the oppressed) pronounced sentence of death against this poore decrepite old man.

D They write, that his sentence being read by Don Berenger Apilia, and James Monelia Vice-chancellor, he complained greatly, that he should be condemned without hearing, or in a manner any forme of processe: but Apilia answered him, that he ought not to hold it strange, seeing that by his owne Counsell, that custome had bene brought into Arragon: and that he should remember the processe which was too summarily made against John Ximenes of Vtreca, and Raymond Marquet, accused to haue slaine Raymond of S. Vincent, who, by the kings commandement, and in a manner without any forme of processe, had bene put to death. He was led vnto the market place of Saragozza, and there beheaded, and his head was carried vnto the king, being at Barcelona. Such rewards many times haue the most faithfull Counsellors, of their ill aduised Princes. Thus miserably dyed one of the greatest personages in nobility, iudgement, and vertue, which had bene of long time in Arragon, who without the king his master had executed great matters, and the king without him did neuer any thing of worth. All his goods were confiscate to the king, whereby he purchased great dishonor, and rightly, both for his death, and for that of his brother Don Fernand. Bernardin of Cabrera, son to Bernard, had married Marguerite of Foix, daughter to the Vicount of Castellon, by Constance of Luna, sister to D. Lopez, a Lady of the blood royall of Arragon: for she was daughter to Artal of Luna, and to D. Constance Perez, who was daughter to Don James Perez, base sonne to the king Don Pedro the third. At that time the Prince Don John did not much exceed fourteen years, yet he was employed in great affaires within the Realme, as well for warre as iustice, with a dispensation for his age, being assisted by Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, (who hauing renounced the world in his old age, had taken vpon him the habit of Saint Francis) and moreover, by Don Pedro of Virgel, sonne to the Infant D. James the Kings brother, and by the Vicount of Cardona for the warre: and for iustice and other affaires of the Realme, he had for his Counsellors Berenger Apilia, Bernard Sous, William Guymbrand, and Thomas Marzan of Cattelogne.

During

Revenues of Churches &c. without the Popes leave.

During this last warre betwixt Castile and Arragon, D. Pedro king of Arragon, prest by A necessity, took the revenues of many benefices, without demanding leave from the Pope, and the more inconsiderately, say they, for that Urban then reigning, had never refused him any thing: wherefore he was in great danger to be excommunicated, and dejected from the rights of his Realme, especially from that of Sardinia, which hee held in fee of the Church: the fouraignty whereof many of the Cardinals were of advice to give to the Iudge of Arborea. The king for this cause sent his vncl D. Pedro, sometimes Earle of Ribagorça, and then a Friar, and Gaspar Trevure, Doctor of the lawes, vnto the Pope, who declared in open Consistorie, That in like necessities and miseries, as the Realm of Arragon was then in, it had bin lawfull for kings, not only to use the temporall revenues, but also to lay hands upon the relicts, and holy vessels of the Churches: adding, that the Ecclesiasticall Estate was no lesse bound to the preservation of the common-weale, then other Estates: and that kings might freely use their meanes in such extremities, so as he promised to make them restitution in a convenient time. Whereupon the Pope considering of the cause, did not pronounce any sentence. The Iudge of Arborea, having either practised the fauour of the Consistorie, or else moued with a desire to raigne, attempted thereupon to make sharpe warre against the Arragonois in Sardinia, a turbulent Iland, which continually bred new matter of charge and losse to the kings of Arragon, who had a little before ended all quarrels with the Genonois, and by the meanes of John Marquis of Montferrat his allye: but to leave a marke of punishment for the Rebels of Sardinia, he had suppressed the name of Caluri, the which was wont to be one of the members thereof, with the title of a Iudge, ordaining that from thence forth that country should bee consuled, betwixt the Cap of Caillieri and of Lugudori.

Nauarre.

Princes in continuall distrust

To returne vnto the promises and capitulations made betwixt the two kings of Naur and Arragon, there was no due execution thereof, neither were the hostages, which had beene promised, deliuered: for it is no ordinarie thing in such treaties, to haue deedes follow words, these Princes being in continuall ieaousie and distrust one of another: wherefore the King of Naur, receiuing no money from the king of Arragon, he did not furnish him with men to oppose against the army of Castile, which was entered into the territories of Valence, beginning withall to thinke of many desseins, nothing fauourable for the king of Arragon. If the king of Naur, hauing deceived the king of Castile, fought to do the like vnto him of Arragon, the king of Arragon for his part did no lesse vnto the king of Naur: for he had sent his ambassadours into France, who treated a league at Tholoufa, with the Deputies of Charles the fifth the French king, and with Lewis D. of Anjou his brother, by the which the French promised to ayde the king of Arragon to conquer the realme of Naur, and to spoile K. Charles, and hauing conquered it, they bound themselves to furnish him alwaies with 500. lances, against any one that should seek to dispossesse him. The K. of Arragon promised also for his part to ayde the French to conquer Guenna, and to expell the English. These accords were made in the yeare 1364. Charles the fifth the French king, and Charles 2. king of Naur being enemies. But as they were Frenchmen, and brothers-in-law, they were reconciled afterwards, & concluded a peace: so as the king of Arragon lost his paines, and the allyance which he had sought in France, serued him to no vse, yet the war continued that yeare betwixt the French, and the partisans of the K. of Naur in France: but in the yeare 1365. Queen Jeanne wife to the king of Naur, made haile to come to the French Court, to treat a peace betwixt the two kings: whereof the one was her husband, and the other her brother: for the K. of Arragon did importune the French king to effect the league concluded the yeare before at Tholoufa, especially for the conquest of Naur; for which reason he had sent new ambassadours vnto him that yeare. The K. of Naur being aduertised of all these things, prest the Queene his wife to go this iourney, notwithstanding that she was with child. Her voyage for that time did produce nothing but a good truce, but afterward there was a peace made by the great care of the two Queens, Jeanne wife to the K. of Naur, and Blanche his sister, & by the dexterity, judgement, and wisdom of Capital of Buch, then prisoner to the French, for the factions of Naur. The Q. of Naur being at Eureux in the yeare 1366. she was deliuered of a son called Peter, he had the title of Earle of Mortaing: after her vp-rising (he returned into

An. 1365.

An. 1366.

A into Nauarre, carrying her eldest son Charles who was but foure yeares old with her, and that which was newly borne.

The kings of Naur and Arragon, being thus busied, and irresolute in their desseins, Arragon, durst not invade one another, and in the meane time he of Castile pursued the war, with all violence in the country of Valence, and took Orihuela, where there was slaine D. Alphonso Perez of Guzman Lord of S. Lucar, son to D. John Alphonso of Guzman, and grand-child to D. Alphonso Perez of Guzman the good. To him succeeded his brother D. John Alphonso of Guzman. The Arragonois also for their part tooke Moruiedro, for want of vicuals. D. Gomes of Porras Prior of S. John the Gouernor, yielded it, vpon condition, that he and his should be safely sent into Castile: yet the Earle D. Henry who was at this seige, prevailed so by his honest perswasions and promises, as the Prior was content to stay with him, who by that means retained about 600. men, laying before them the fury of D. Pedro K. of Castile, who excused nothing, and punished as well those which had behaved themselves valiantly in the yielding of such places, as those which had shewed themselves base and cowards. These were the last exploits of war betwixt Arragon and Castile.

At that time there was brought into Spain the body of the Cardinal of S. Clement formerly Archb. of Toledo, & Legat à latere in Italy, who died at Viterbo, hauing gouerned the affairs of the Romane sea, to the great content of Pope Urban the 5. who did wonderfully grieve for him, and made all the shewes of mourning which Popes are accustomed to do at the death of their faithfull friends. This Prelate during his legation, prepared the C Popes access into the city of Rome, and was the means to bring the papall seate thither againe: for hee suppressed many tyrants in Italy, and brought them to the obedience of the Roman sea, so as Gregory the 11. successor to Urban, came to Rome in the yeare 1366. This Cardinal had ordained by his testament, that his body should be buried in the city of Toledo, if it might be suffered by the K. D. Pedro then reigning, or his successor, the which was executed, and his bones which lay in the towne of Alfisi, in the monastery of S. Francis, were carried by land to Toledo, many offering to carry the Beere whereon this dead carcas lay, in hope to get pardon of their sins, for that the Pope had granted vnto them, that they should employ themselves in this seruice, the like indulgences as are given vnto them that do visit the churches of S. Peter and S. Paul, at Rome in the yeare of Iubilie.

The time approached when as the King Don Pedro should be punished for his excessive and serue as a witness to the world, that the feare of subiects, gotten by the cruelty of Princes, is a bad gear for their maiesty, and a weak assurance of their Crowns. The death of Q. Blanche of Bourbon, whom the king D. Pedro had poisoned, after that he had intreated her a long time most barbarously, ministered the occasion of his ruine: for being for this cause odious to all the French, D. Henry, Earle of Transamara, (who was vigilant to embrace all things that might serue him to reuenge the death of his mother and brethren, & of so many injuries which hee had receiued of this wretched king) found fauour and helpe in France. And it fell out very fitly, that the wars being ended in France, as well against the English, and King of Nauarre, as betwixt the Earles of Montfort and Blois, contending E for the succession of Britannie: this Realme was then wonderfully ouer-charged with idle souldiers, which kept the fields, and committed many spoyles and inouelencies, being gathered together in such great numbers, French, English, Brittons, Flemmings, and of other nations intermingled, as they were fearefull to Princes, yea and to the Pope himselfe residing in Auignon: so as they demanded but an occasion of some long voyage, to conquer and subdue Countries, or to be there defeated, being impossible without great danger and disorder, to be otherwise ridde of them.

Vpon these continuall complaints of the impieties and cruelties which Don Pedro King of Castile committed daily, being already pronounced by the Popes Legate, and confirmed by him, an vtter enemie to God and men: and at the instance and pursuit of the king of Arragon, and of Henry Earle of Transamara, Bastard of Castile, who (as some write) were come to this effect in person, to Auignon; the French King, Pope Urban, and other Princes, thought good to haue these people dealt withall, (whome they commonly called Malandrins) to go and make warre in Spaine against Don Pedro surnamed the Cruell: and Bertrand of Guefclin, a valiant and hardy Knight of Malandrins. Ccc Britannie, 18.

Returne of the Popes Court to Rome.

19.

Expulsion of
D. Henry of Castile against his brother D.
Pedro, and his victorie.

Brittany, (who was then a prisoner of war, for the factions of Monsfort and Blois) was chosen to lead them, who for this cause was put to ranfome, and deliuered, Bertrand wrought so, as these companions were willing to follow him: whereupon some of their Captaines (so, as these companions were willing to follow him: whereupon some of their Captaines came to Barcelona, did capitulate, receiued money, and promised to serue Don Henry, wherof Bernard Bassard of Bearne, sonne to Gaston Phelips Earle of Foix, was one of the chiefe: which D. Pedro King of Castile vnderstanding, he retired his troupes, and came to Burgos, where he called a generall assembly; whither came the Lord of Albret, a knight of Gasconie well accompanied, who assured him for a certaine number of ducats, to draw away a good part of those soldiers which D. Henry and the king of Arragon had entertayned, and wrought so, as they shold abandon them, and come to serue him: but it grieved the king to spend his treasure, which notwithstanding was very great: wherfore reiecting the Lord of Albrets good counsell, he sought other prouisions, which serued him to fmal purpose. These men past into Spaine, being esteemed to be 10000. horse, and an infinite number of foot, besides those soldiers which the Earle and the king of Arragon had: to whome were ioyned many great personages, both French and others, among the which the French Historie names Iohn Lord of Bourbon Earle of March, cousin to the deceased queen Margarete of Castile, Anthony Lord of Beauieu, Arnold of Andreghe Marshall of France, Regene of Villenes, Eustace of Aubercourt, Hugh Carrelee, Gualter Huec, Mathew of Gournay, and Pedrus of Albret, who with many other famous men, made this voyage: Bertrand of Guefclin being chiefe leader of them all, by reason of his valour and great experience. The King of Arragon with these succors did presently recover all that the king of Castile had taken from him, the Castilians hauing abandoned their garrisons. The bodie of the army which D. Henry should lead, was made at Sarragossa, from whence they marched directly to Calatraz, and entered without resistance, in the month of March, this yere 1366. D. Henry being receiued by D. Fernando bishop of that place, and by D. Fernand Sanchez of Tobar, vpon condition they should be intreated as friends: for the towne was strong, there he was solicited by D. Alphonso of Arragon Earle of Denia and Ribagorça, and by the Arragonois, to take vpon him the title of King of Castile and Leon, which at the first he did refuse: but being prest and importuned, in the end he yielded, so as from that time he had more need of a bridle to restrain him, then a spur. Being thus proclaimed king, and hauing advanced his royall Standard, the Knights which were there present, began to demand gifts & recompences in the countrie which they had not yet conquered, but were in good hope, to whome hee gaue contentment with many promises. Passing on, they tried Logroño, which place they found strong, and well manned: wherefore not to lose time, they marched on, and hauing seized vpon Navarret and Birbiefca, they came to Burgos, whereas the king D. Pedro was, who made all the hast hee could to dislodge. The inhabitants seeing him parting, befought him not to abandon them, offering him all the money that was in the towne, and their persons with great fidelity; but this king being terrified, there was no meanes to stay him: and in truth we seldome see valour and cruelie lodge together: wherfore the inhabitants of Burgos protested to provide for the safety & preferuation of the city the best they could: so as he was forced to quit them of the oath and homage they ought him, and presently tooke his way to Toledo, where hauing left a good garrison, he went to Seuille. The inhabitants of Burgos seeing themselves abandoned by their Prince, opened the gates to Don Henry, whom in the capitulation they made, they called Earle, promising to tite him king, when he should be entred into the city.

Don Henry parting from Birbiefca, some eight leagues distant from Burgos, hee made his entrie into the city, to the great contentment of many, who hated the violent disposition of the king D. Pedro: where he caused himselfe to be crowned king of Castile and Leon, in the royall Monasterie of Huelgas, this yere 1366: and within fise and twentie dayes after his coronation, almost all the towne of Castile and Leon put themselves vnder his obedience and protection: saying, that according to the example and ancient custome of the Gods, they might retire themselves from a tyrant king, and chuse another: without hauing any regard vnto the succession, nor his family whom they should leaue. Then began D. Henry to distribute townes, castles, offices and dignities, vnto the Noblemen

Ma'and'ius
passe into Spaine.

D. Henry
the title of K.
of Castile.

A blemen and Knights which had followed him. He gaue to D. Alphonso Earle of Denia and Ribagorça, the Marquisate of Villena, the patrimonie of D. Ieanne Manuel his wife: to Bertrand of Guefclin the Lordship of Molina; D. Tello brother to the new king, was maintained in the Segneurie of Biscay, the inheritance of his deceased wife D. Ieanne of Lara, and moreover he gaue him Aquilar del Campo, and to his other brother D. Sancho, all that which had belonged vnto D. Iohn Alphonso of Albuquerque, adding thereunto the townes of Haro, Briones, Villorado, Cerezo in Rioja, and the towne of Ledesma. To other knights hee gaue gifts, and confirmed and augmented the ancient priuiledges of townes which yielded willingly vnto him. Thinking himself now to be in sure possession, hee caused his wife D. Ieanne, his son D. Iohn, and D. Leonora his daughter, to come out of Arragon into Castile: and hauing disposed of the affaires of Burgos, of Castile the old, and of Leon, he went to Toledo, where he found some opposition, yet in the end he was receiued and saluted as king: and after the example of this statly cite, many other townes of that Realme yielded vnto him. The King D. Pedro seeing himselfe abandoned, put a great quantitie of money, and other treasure into a gally, and retired into Portugal: but fearing his cousin D. Fernand, Infant of that Realme, who loued him not, hee past in great doubt vnto S. Iames in Galicia, where hee caused D. Suero of Toledo Archb. of that place, and D. Pedro Alvarez of Toledo, Deane of the same church, to be slaine, and adding sacrilege to this murder, he spoiled their houses, and caried away their goods, which was the chiefe cause why hee slue them. Being doubtfull what to do, hee resolved in the end to go by sea to Bayonne in France: wherfore parting from the Groine with 22. ships and one gally, carrying with him his three daughters, Beatrice, Constance, and Isabel, hee came to S. Sebastian in Guipulcoa, where hee had some thousands of double ducats, and other riches, the which hee took with him, and set sayle towards Bayonne. A gally which followed him, in which was Martin Ianes his Treasurer, with much money, & other precious things was slayed by the Inhabitants of Seuille, which citie being greatly affected vnto D. Henry, put themselves vnder his obedience, soone after the kings departures and the citie of Cordous did the like. So hatefull was the king D. Pedro, and so pleasing was the mild disposition of Don Henry, as in a short time hee found himselfe King of a great and mighty Kingdome, almost without striking stroke, the people stuiuing who should bee first receiued.

Don Henry being at Seuille, he confirmed the peace with the Kings of Portugall and Granado: but he was deceived in this prosperitie, being too confident of his new subiects, so as although he knew well that his enemy was retired to the English, with great store of treasure, and that he might well coniecture, that he would draw succors from thence, to trouble him in the possession of this Realme newly conquered, yet hee dismist his strangers well satisfied which were all his force, and retayned onely Bertrand of Guefclin, and Bernard bastard of Foix with some 1500. horse French and English. The country of Galicia opposed it selfe most against D. Henry: that being pacified and subdued, hee assembled the Estates at Burgos, the which (besides that they did sweare fidelitie vnto his son D. Iohn as heire vnto the Crowne) did grant vnto him the tenth peny of all the merchandize they should sell within the Realme, and so much the more willingly, when as they vnderstood that the king D. Pedro prepared to returne into Spaine with a great power of English. D. Henry to gratifie the citie of Burgos, gaue vnto it in that assembly, the towne of Miranda of Ebro, the which did belong to the Church of Burgos, it did also serue to recompence the towne of Birbiefca, belonging to the citie, which hee had giuen to D. Pedro Fernandes of Velasco his great Chamberlaine. To the Church of Burgos in recompence of Miranda, he gaue a pension of sixtie thousand marauidis, vpon the tenths due from the sea, to bee employed in the ordinary distributions for the seruice which is done there day and night.

Don Dominicke was then Bishop of Burgos, the eight and twentieth Pastor in number, who obtained this Bishoppricke after a manner worthe to be related: for the Chapter being diuided and at controuersie about the election of a new Bishoppe, after the death of Don Fernand the third, who had newly left and abandoned that seate, and not able to agree and determine vpon two chiefe persons propounded in that assembly, they

Beauty of D.
Henry the new King.

Flight of the king D. Pedro
out of Spaine.

Bishop of Sar-gosa chosen by himselfe.

they concluded to reſerre the nomination to Dominick, then Chanoine of that Church, A being held a man of a good and holy life. This good Chanoine hauing accepted the nomination, bethought himſelfe of a meane to diſpleaſe neither party: ſaying merly vnto them, that if it were their pleaſures hee ſhould name a Biſhop, hee was of opinion, that himſelfe ſhould be the man, the which hee deliuered with ſo good a grace, as the Chapter could not take it ill: wherefore Dominick the Chanoine became preſently Biſhop, hauing neuer before once dreamed to aſpire to that dignitie: and his election was ſoon after confirmed by the Pope. This Biſhop was a good ſeruant to D. Henry. At that time D. Tello brother to Don Henry married a Gentle-woman which was called Donna Ieanne of Lara, as his firſt wife, who was Lady of Biſcay: by reaſon whereof many did beleue it was the ſame that was daughter to Don John Nunez of Lara, who (they ſay) had bene ſlain by the King Don Pedro: and this perſuaſion continued among the people of Biſcay ſome time, being nourished by Don Tello. Donna Ieanne Manuel, wife to Don Henry, was ſent him into Caſtile by Don Pedro king of Arragon, who would that Donna Leonora, Infanta of Arragon, future wife to Don John the eldeſt ſonne of D. Henry, ſhould accompanie her. But before hee diſmiſſed them, hee cauſed Donna Ieanne Manuel (who intided her ſelfe Queene of Caſtile and Leon) to ſweare, to do her beſt to cauſe Don Henry her husband, to giue him the cities of Soria and Cuenca, the townes of Molina, and Medina Celi, and the Realme of Murcia, as they had agreed, and hee had promiſed before this Conqueſt.
And moreover, hee demanded reſtoration of certaine ſummes of money which hee had lent him: whereunto Don Henry (who had newes of the armie which was preparing by the Engliſh, in fauour of Don Pedro his competitor) made an honeſt anſwer: for it was reaſonable, ſayd he, to attend the end of this great preparation, which was made againſt him.

Nauarre.

The King of Nauarre in this firſt warre had not ſhewed himſelfe a fauourer to either of theſe contending Princes: but knowing that the King Don Pedro was retired to Bayone, diſpoſſeſſed of his Realme, he came to ſee him, and was there preſent at the accord and promiſes which paſt betwixt Edward Prince of Wales and him. The Princes ſupping together, held this order: the King Don Pedro was on the right hand, and next to him the Prince of Wales, and on the other ſide was the king of Nauar alone: who being returned into Nauar, he was much ſollicited by Don Henry, to be of his partie, but he was already engaged by promiſe to Don Pedro king of Caſtile, and to the Prince of Wales, to giue them free paſſage through his countie. The k. of Arragon aduerted of all theſe things, preſt the French king by his ambaffadors, to make warre againſt the Engliſh, and alſo againſt the king of Nauarre, promiſing to ioine for his part, to diuert the ſtorme which was coming vpon Don Henry the new king of Caſtile, whom he ought to haue recei-ued into this league: and in the meane time there was continuall war vpon the frontiers of Arragon and Nauarre. Notwithſtanding theſe things aboue-mentioned, D. Henry did ſo labour the king of Nauar, as he made him forget the promiſes he had made at Bayone, to D. Pedro king of Caſtile, and to the Engliſh, coming to meet with D. Henry at Santa Cruz of Campeço, where hee promiſed and ſware to be of his ſide, and to do his beſt to ſtop the paſſage of the Engliſh army through Nauarre, which would haue auayled him much to breake the deſſeines of the diſpoſſeſſed king, for in the paſſage of the Pyrénées hilles, hee had nothing to fauour him, but the Townes of Saint Sebaſtian and Guetaia in Guipulcoa.

At theſe promiſes ſolemly made by the king of Nauarre, vnto Don Henry, there af-ſiſted Don Gomes Manrique Arch-biſhop of Toledo, D. Lopes Fernandes of Luna, Archbiſhop of Sarragoſſa, Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Earle of Denia, and Marquis of Villena, Bertrand of Gueſclin, and many other great perſonages of Caſtile, France, and Arragon.
And a league was concluded betwixt the kings of Arragon, Nauarre, and Don Henry, for their common defence againſt all men. And the king promiſed to be readie with the forces of his countie, and to be in perſon at the Battaille which they thought would be gi-uen, for aſſurance whereof there was deliuered into the Arch-biſhops hands of Sarragoſſa the caſtle of Garde, and that of S. Vincent to Bertrand of Gueſclin, and that of Bur-don was giuen in gard to D. John Ramirez of Arcellan.

In

A In recompence of the good offices which D. Henry expected from King Charles, he pro-miſed to giue him the towne of Logroño, to him and his ſor cuer. It was likely that *D.
Henries* affaires ſhould ſucceed better then thoſe of Don Pedro, and therefore K. Charles made choiſe to hold with the ſtronger, as he thought. The diſpoſſeſſed king of Caſtile, and the Prince of Wales vnderſtanding of this league, found it very ſtrange: and the Engliſh being more familiar with the king of Nauarre, he complained much vnto him, and ſought to reduce him to his firſt promiſes, the which hee did: making him againe, with the note of great inſtance, to quit the party of Don Henry, and of the king of Arragon, in regard that they had promiſed to giue him, beſides Logroño, the cite of Victoria, which did yet hold for the king Don Pedro: for the which he bound himſelfe by oath, to B giue them paſſage, and to be in perſon with his troups, in the battell, in their fauor: excuſing his lightneſſe, for that the Realme of Caſtile did by right belong vnto the King *D.
Pedro*: and withall he had a deſſeine to make vie of the frienſhip and forces of the Engliſh in the quarrels and pretenſions he had with the French King, who did much trouble his affaires.

The conditions which D. Pedro king of Caſtile made with the Prince of Wales, were theſe: He gaue him from that time the Segneurie of Biſcay, & Caſtro of Ordiales, & pro-miſed to pay the ſoldiers which he led into Spaine, leaſing his three daughters in hoſtage with the Engliſh: he promiſed the cite of Soria to John Chandos, Conſtable in Guienne for the Engliſh, and to many other Noblemen and knights other places and townes in Caſtile. Vpon theſe accords, being full of good hope, ſeeing they had the king of Nauar their friend, they marched with a great and mighty armie in the Spring-time 1367, to repoſſeſſe the king D. Pedro in his Realme. King Charles whether troubled in confidence for the oaths which he had ſo often broken, or for ſome other conſideration, would not bee in perſon at this incounter betwixt the king D. Pedro and D. Henry, as hee had promiſed, but vnder colour of going a hunting, he cauſed himſelfe to bee taken priſoner, by a plot and accord made with Oliuer of Manny or Maulny a Britton Knight, who held the caſtle of Borja for Bertrand of Gueſclin, who had it by gift from the king of Arragon, in the which he was ſhut vp: and for that he would not ſhew himſelfe altogether diſloyall, hee left Don Martin Henriques of Lacarra, the maſter of his horſe, and his Standard-bearer, D at Pampelona with three hundred Lances, commanding him to ioine with the Engliſh armie, and to fight in it.

The Engliſh armie arriued at Cuenca, or Combe of Pampelona, about the beginning of March this yeare 1367, from whence it paſt into Alaua: beſides, the Prince of Wales, and Don Pedro king of Caſtile, there were in it John Duke of LANCASTER, brother to the Prince D. James of MAIORCA, ſon to the king Don James, who had come for refuge to this Engliſh Prince being at Bordeaux. John Chandos Conſtable of Guien, Robert Felton great Senefhall, Richard of Angle, and Stephen of Conſentone Maſtalls of Guien: moreouer, the Earle of Armaignac and Albret, who offered and brought to this warre a thouſand complet lances of his ſubiects and friends: but they were reduced (to his great griefe) to two hundred by the Prince, being ſo aduiled by ſome other, or of his own proper motion, and for enuy: which vice ſome write did often blemiſh the great vertues that were in him. For euen ſome affirme, that this voyage which hee vnderooke into Spaine, was not for charity, nor any loue he bare to the diſpoſſeſſed king D. Pedro, but for that the honor and reputation which Bertrand of Gueſclin had gotten, to haue made D. Henry Kof Caſtile, would not let him ſleepe. Beſides, the aboue named, there did accompanie the Prince of Wales in this expedition, the Earls of Perigort and Cominges, the Vicont of Carmain, Bernard and Perducas of Albret, Capral of Buch, the Lord of Cliffon, the Se-neſhals of Xaintong, Rochel, Querci, Limoffin, Agnois, and Bigorre, with many other Noblemen, and renowned knights of England, Poitou, Brittaine, Gaſconie and other countries, and among them ſome which had a litle before ſerued D. Henry, vnder the command of Bertrand of Gueſclin: the which Gueſclin did not ſayle at need, but came to D. Henries army with a good number of Knights and ſouldiers, to ayd him to maintaine his conqueſt.
Vpon the newes of this mighty army, D. Henry had gathered together all his good ſubjects: ſo as according to the French Authors (it may be exceeding in their computations)

Ccc 3

he

he made accompt to haue 7000. men at arms, 20000. light horse, and 40000. foot, where of many were armed with slings, much feared in those dayes: with these forces hee came to encounter his enemy, and lodged betwixt S. Dominike of Calçada and Bagnares, the enemy being camped about Saluatierra, who approaching towards Logroño, he came to Calderan. The Captaines were of opinion, that D. Henry should not fight, but only coast the enemy, and keepe him in continuall feare, cutting off their victuals and other commodities, whereby they should be loone forced to breake of themselves: & so had the French king aduised him to do: but hee (who was a Prince of a great spirit, and more resolute in such actions, then was fit for the head of an Estate, and encouraged by some small advantage gotten of the fore-runners of the English, by D. Tello and D. Sancho his breedren, who had taken Thomas Felton, a knight, and some others) gouerned himselfe after his own humor, who rayling his army, came to Nagera, seeing the English approach to Nauaret. From hence the Prince of Wales did write vnto D. Henry, terming him Earle of Transimara, which letter was full of courtseie and good words, perswading him to quit the title of King, and to yeeld vnto his brother D. Pedro, the lawfull K. of Castile, assuring him he would be a meanes that he should haue a good composition: and about all that he hold aoid to come to a battell, the euent whereof must needs be his ruine, seeing they did much exceede them in number, their souldiers in valour, and their Captaines in leading. To the which D. Henry made answer, that he could not hearken to any accord with him, who had against the law of Nature taken delight to murder so many of the bloud royal, and other great personages of Castile: who had no respectiue regard of the lawes of the country, and much lesse of God, falsifying his oath and promises, hauing no other rule in his actions, but his tyrannous passions: and with his excuses, hee gaue many good words in regard of the Prince of Wales, protesting that he came with griefe to fight, and that he would willingly haue auoyded the effusion of Christian blood, which he prepared to see. These Princes being thus disposed, the armies presented themselves one before another betwixt Nagera and Nauaret, where they encountered with such fury about Aleçon, neere to the Bourg of Aofita, as after great effusion of blood, D. Henries men were put to flight, the disorder beginning on D. Tello's side, and many were taken prisoners by the English, French, and Nauarros: against some of which the K. D. Pedro being incensed, did execute his rage, causing them to be murdered in his presence: among others, the first master of the Knights of S. Bernard, & the last also, being taken in this defeat, had his head cut off by the kings commandement. It was a military order sprung vp in Biscay, to which knights should be assigned the lands called Beeries, which lay neere: but it was suddenly extinct by reason of these wars, and by this excesse of the King D. Pedro. Many were reconciled by the mediation of the Prince of Wales, of which number was D. Sancho, brother to the Erie D. Henry: others were straightly imprisoned, among which were Bertrand of Gueclin, Arnold of Andregren, and Begue of Villaines. D. Henry escaped from the battell, and posting towards Nagera, his horse being tyred and out of breath, hee met with a Squire of the Prouince of Alaua, called Ruy Fernandes of Goana; who knowing him, mounted him vpon a good Genet, with the which he came into the K. of Arragons country, to whom he would not go, remembering the miseries which follow afflicted Princes fallen from their fortunes, and the small faith that is in friends in such extremities, euerie one drawing backe, and seeking to excuse himselfe vnto the Victor, to please whom, many times the vnfortunat is deliuered vp to sacrifice. Wherefore hee past the mountaines, and retired into France, leauing the townes and Noblemen of Castile, which had followed his party in great perplexity, with him there retired that D. Pedro of Luna a Cardellan, who of a knight as he was then, carrying armes, became a Clergie man, was a Cardinall, and in the end Pope, during the great Schisme, which did so much trouble the Church of Rome.

After this great victorie which hapned the third day of Aprill 1367. the king D. Pedro entred in great pompe into Burgos, from whence D. Ieanne Manuel, called Queen of Castile, wife to D. Henry, her children, and daughter-in-law, were a litle before retired: and fled in all hast into Arragon, where they were receiued, but not so chearefully as before: for the king of Arragon studied how he might recover the fauour of Don Pedro King of Castile,

Prince of Wales, writ to D. Henry.

D. Henryes
Iuue.

D. Henry de fied in battell.

D. Pedro of Luna, a knight of arragons, future Pope.

A Castile, being therein assisted by the Prince of Wales, and aduised to abandon D. Henry, who was vanquished: D. Romero Bishop of Lerida, D. Pedro Earle of Virgel, the Vicont of Cardona, D. Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, and others, were of this opinion, who were sent Ambassadors to D. Pedro King of Castile, and Raymond Peguera, and James Elfaro went to the Prince of Wales.

Some say that the Prince of Wales beginning to descoutt the ingratitude of D. Pedro King of Castile, there was in this Negotiation a plot laid betwixt him and the king of Arragon to diuide the king of Castile betwixt them; and to giue some part of the booty to the kings of Nauarre and Portugal, and so wholly to reiect the tyrant D. Pedro.

The King of Nauarre hearing of the victory which the King of Castile had obtained, B thought it now time to creepe out of his denne, pressing Oliver of Maulny to set him at liberty: but the difficulty was, this knight would be paid for his good seruice, hauing taken the king prisoner. King Charles gaue him D. Pedro his second sonne in hostage, assuring him that if he would come to Tudelo, he would giue him all that hee had promised, and more. This good knight tooke the Infant D. Pedro, and put him into the castle of Borja, deliuered the king, and some after, although his great simplicity followed him to Tudelo: but he was no sooner arrived, but they layed hold of him, and put him in prison, until that he had yeilded the hostage. A brother of his should haue beene taken with him by the kings commandement, but seeking to flee away ouer a house, hee was slaine by them that pursued him. King Charles did write presently to the king of Arragon, complaining of the wrong which the Britons (holding the castle of Borja and Magallon) had done him, and that they detained and withheld his sonne, whom hee had beene forced for to giue them in Ostage, heaunting that they went to carry him into France, the which hee intreated him to prevent, setting good guards vpon the passages of his country. He sayd moreover, that he threatened to invade his country of Nauarre, relying vpon the support they had of Arragon: wherefore hee intreated him not to giue them forces, nor any aide in such enterprises, and so took it ill if hee led an army before Borja, to deliuer his sonne from prison. Garcie Sanchez Prior of Roncesual, was sent of this Ambassage into Arragon, who not onely executed his charge, but also entred into a treaty of marriage betwixt Charles the eldest sonne of Nauarre and D. Leonora daughter to the King of Arragon. The King of Arragon who had no need of any enemies, for that he feared the King of Castile, caused the trouble of Borja to cease, and commanded the Britons to deliuer the Infant D. Pedro, who being carried to Tudelo, Oliver of Maulny was also deliuered. As for the marriage, although the King of Arragon did much desire it, yet the King of Nauarre, hauing retired his sonne, did not much care for it, meaning first to see what should become of the broiles of Castile.

21 The King D. Pedro the cruell, victorious, but insolent and treacherous as of custome, could not containe himselfe within the bounds of modesty and reason, neither to his subiects, nor to strangers, English, French and others, who had seated him in his Kingdom: There were great controuersies amongst them for prisoners and ransomes, and the souldiers pay, yet after much disputing there was some kinde of agreement. D. Pedro King of Castile sent D. Pedro Fernandes Perez of Ayala, with the Deputies of the Prince of Wales, to put them in possession of the Lordship of Biscay, and Castro of Ordiales, according vnto their accords: but the Biscains being aduertised that what the King did, was onely to content the Prince of Wales, and to shew that hee had a will to performe his promise, but not that he had any meaning to maintaine it: besides that of their owne dispositions they did abhor the command of strangers, they would neuer receive these Deputies, nor consent that they should be put in possession of their country, which was the cause of great troubles. The King seeming to be much discontented at these difficulties, made a sollemne oath in the chiefe Church of Burgos, that hee would pursue the Prince of Wales in possession of the Siegneuries of Biscay. D. Pedro seeing himselfe restored to his Realme, he desired to know what the destinies had promised him; and therefore he demanded aduice of a Doctor, called Mena-Hata, a great and learned Astrologian and Phylosopher, who sent him a letter full of learning, saying, that hee must looke vnto his owne carriage, and how hee gouerned his subiects, for

Oliver of Maulny deli-uers the King
of Nauarre,
and remains prisoner himselfe.

Castile.

D. Pedro King of castile disconteneth English and other strangers.

E Prince of Wales in possession of the Siegneuries of Biscay. D. Pedro seeing himselfe restored to his Realme, he desired to know what the destinies had promised him; and therefore he demanded aduice of a Doctor, called Mena-Hata, a great and learned Astrologian and Phylosopher, who sent him a letter full of learning, saying, that hee must looke vnto his owne carriage, and how hee gouerned his subiects, for

Italy aduerti
ments of a Physiophy Mareto D.
Fidia.

for thereon depended the continuance of his raigne, either long or short, and the continuance of the scepter in his family: adding many precepts, the which if hee had duly obserued, without doubt he had reigned securely in peace: but hee fell into his frenzies and cruelties, the which did so estrange the hearts of those, which abhorred his forfeasted tyrannies, as his fall must needs bee miserable. Hee parted from Burgos, and went to seeke meanes to content the English, commanding that as soone as he should bee our of the city, they should put to death Ruy Ponce Palameque and some others, whom hee had caused to be put into the castle of Burgos. Being come nere vnto Toledo, he would haue hostages of the Inhabitants for his assurance, and there hee put to death fouteene of the chiefe of the city; then hee went to Cordoua, from which place he sent to Seuille, that they should put to death Gil Bocanegra, D. John Ponce of Leon Lord of Marchene, and Alphonso Aluarez of Quadros, with an other called Alphonso Fernandes: Hee caused many to be dispatched at Cordoua before hee came to Seuille, where beeing arrived, hee caused Donna Pryaca Osorio, mother to D. John Alphonso of Guzman, to bee slaine, and Martin Iamer his high treasurer, taking great delight in his murders, and reuenues vpon these miserable creatures, for that he had not found them ready to follow his fortune, or for some other discontentment; forgetting that for such inhumanities and tyrannies, he had beene once cast out of Spaine. He caused D. Martin Lopes of Cordoua, master of Calatrava, to be apprehended, and would haue put him to death, but the King of Granada demanded him in giust, and did so much, as hee saved his life. He had done more if time and meanes had permitted, but God preuented him, for D. Henry stayed not long to deprive him both of realme and life.

A Moore more
kinds then D.
Pedro a Christian King.

After the losse of the battaile, D. Henry came into the county of Foix, where beeing well entertained by the Earle, and furnished with all things besitting such a knight, hee went to Auignon, where as Pope Vrbain the fifth did raigne, and did loue, and esteeme him much, and therefore hee receiued him courteously, and deli with Lewis Duke of Aniou, brother to the French King, and Gouernor of Languedoc, to giue him meanes to raise a new army, to returne into Spaine, whether many friends recalled him, assuring him that the cruelties which the King D. Pedro continued, prepared him the way to recouer his good fortune, and that now there was not any difficulty to settle him firmly; neither need they feare that D. Pedro should finde fauour or succors with the English, whom he had defrauded of their pay and recompences promise, and sent home discontented. D. Iuanne wife to D. Henry, and his children, finding themselves not very safe in Arragon by reason of the friendship that was betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Prince of Wales, they had past into France, whereas they remained in the castle of Perapertuse, vnto the end of the warre, such was the diligence of D. Henry, and of his friends, as hee obtained from the King five thousand pounds sterling in ready money, and liberty to leaue souldiars within his Realme. Hee had also succors both of money and men from the Duke of Aniou, from Guy Cardinal of Bologne, and other Noblemen of France, being incensed against the King D. Pedro, the murtherer of Queene Blanche of Bourbon his wife: notwithstanding D. Henry found many great difficulties; an ordinary thing for those that are in aduersity: for the French King feared least the English should take it ill that hee gaue succors vnto their enemy: and to make such a preparation for warre, as was necessary, hee had neede of a great masse of money, which was the greates hindrance of his affaires. Some therevpon write that in one day hee caused all the money to be seized on, that was in Auignon, in marchants, and Banquers hands, the Pope giuing his consent, and hee promising vpon the faith of a Prince to restore it. In the end he had meanes to raise a good army, but before he began to march, he had certaine newes that the Prince of Wales was returned into Guienne much discontented with the King D. Pedro: and moreover that all the Prouince of Guipulcoo, excepte Saint Sebastian and Guetaria, the townes of Biscay, Segobia, Vailledolit, Palence, Auila, Guadabajara, Salamanca, Medina del Campo, Toro, Almedo, Arenalco, Coeca, Madrigal, Carrion, Sepulveda, Aillon, Atienza, Melicas with many other forts held his party.

D. Henry be-fard of Castile and against
by the French.

Whilest that D. Henry prepares to passe into Spaine, some of the English and French souldiars,

A souldiars, returning from the seruice of D. Pedro King of Castile, by the pace betwixt Nauarre and Arragon, spoiling the vallesies, they attempted to enter into Iacca. Against these men the Inhabitants of the country, both Nobles and Commonns armed, so as after diuerse skirmishes, whereas many were slaine of both sides, these strangers being aboute fifteene thousand men, past the Pyrenes, and returned into their countries. The King of Arragon, before the Prince of VVales his retreat had fought by his meanes to recouer Sauueterre, and Real of Rueste, which the Nauarrois held since the warre of Castile, but he could not.

As for the King of Nauarre, hee recovered the places which hee had left in deposito, when as he made a league with the King of Arragon, and D. Henry, wherein hee was assisted by D. Pedro King of Castile, and through fauour of the victory, which hee had obtained: but yet hee could neither get Logroño from him, nor the towne of victoria, which he had promised him; neither could hee retire out of the hands of D. John Ramirez of Arellan (a Knight of honour) the place of Buradon, whereof he had beene chosen Gardien, saying, That hee did not follow the fortune, and passions of princes, but the equity of the faith, which was promised and sworn. This good Knight had retired himselfe into Arragon after the battaile lost, when as D. Henry saved himselfe in France, to whose seruice he returned soone after.

Nauarre.

Integrity of
D. John Ramirez of arellan.

The Prince of VVales before he went out of Spaine, had practised a firme league betwixt the Kings raigning then in Spaine, and himself, but with diuerse designs, wherein he assured himselfe that the King of Nauarre would bee faithfull, and furnish him with a good number of souldiars. As for him of Arragon, he embraced the league as it seemed with great affection, thinking hee could not then doe better, then to ioyne with the victorious King of Castile, and the English. To conclude this league, a day was appointed for the Deputies of all these Princes at Tarbes: in the meane time the treacheries of D. Pedro King of Castile, were so hatefull vnto the Prince of VVales, as he returned to Bourdeaux discontented. The Deputies of the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and of the Prince of VVales, came to Tarbes, at the day appointed, where there also arrived some from Castile. The dispositions of these Princes were such, as the King of Arragon would willingly haue ioyned with D. Henry, if hee had durst, but hee followed fortune: he of Nauarre was more inclined to the Prince of VVales, but whatsoeuer it were, euery one sought to make his profit of these troubles; and to draw some thing from Castile: the King of Arragon would haue Murcia, and some other townes: hee of Nauarre demanded the prouinces of Guipulcoo, and Alaua, namely Victoria, Sauueterre, Treuigno and many townes in Rioja: the Prince of VVales pretended Biscay, Caltro of Ordiales, and many other places, all promising to bandy themselves against D. Henry, and to stop his passage into Spaine, if these things were performed by D. Pedro: if not they were as ready to enter into league with D. Henry, if hee made them the like promises. Thus the Realme of Castile was set to sale. On the other side King Edward, father to the Prince of VVales, and the King of Arragon, had their practises apart to diuide the realme of Castile and Leon betwixt them, and to giue some part vnto the King of Nauarre. Thus these Princes laboured to diuide that betwixt them, which God had appointed for an other, and their propositions and disputes at Tarbes, were such and of so many things, as not able to conclude any thing, they referred their assembly to Oleron, where they did leave.

22 During these Negotiations, D. Henry entred with his French army into Arragon, which made euery one to thinke of his affaires, with D. Henry was Bernard bastard to the Earle of Foix, who had beene taken in the battaile of Nagera, and redeemed from the English: and although that the King of Arragon fought to diuert this passage, yet D. Henry wient his course, and by Nauarre also, finding not any opposition. Hauing past the river of Ebro with his whole army, marching in the country of Castile, hee fell on his knees, and making a crosse vpon the sand, hee iware, that no roile nor misfortune should euer make him goe out of Castile. Hee entred into Calaterra without contradiction, the eight and twentieth of September, this yeere of our Lord 1367, whether many Knights, Squiers and other men, came vnto him, flying the furie of the King D. Pedro.

Nauarre.

Second Em-
erries D. Henry betrothed of Castile into Spaine.

Being

Being assured of Calaoorra, hee came to Logroño, where hee found great resistance, A wherefore hee past on by Rioja and Bureba, and came to Burgos, where the Inhabitants receiued him with great affection, and although the castle and the Iewes place made some resistance, yet he brought them to obedience and tooke within the castle D. James of Majorca, who defended it. Hee was sonne to the last King of Majorca, and had escaped from a hard prison, where hee had bene long detained in the new castle at Barcelona, since the yeere of our Lord 1362. then beeing come to Naples, hee had the happe to marrie Queene Ieanne of Naples, whom they called Duke of Calabria, and not King of Naples.

Many townes yielded vnto Don Henry in fewes daies, and about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1368. he got the city of Leon: wherefore hauing much blemished the name and authority of his aduersary in old Castile, hee marched with his army towards Toledo, which city hee besieged making a bridge of wood ouer the river of Tayo, to passe and repasse his army, as occasion should serue. The Inhabitants were desirous to receiue D. Henry, but for that Don Pedro held many of their men in hostage, fearing least hee should kill them, they durst not declare themselves. At this sege, the French Kings Ambassadors preuailed so with Don Henry, as hee sware to compromise the controuersies which hee had with the King of Arragon, hauing that charge from their maister, who desired to reconcile these two Princes: at this promise there were present Don Pedro of Arragon, the Kings vncl, the Archbishop of Toledo, Don Pedro Fernandes of Velsco, Fernand Peres of Ayala, Diego Gomes of Toledo, Gonzal Mesjic of Pont, and others. Don Pedro King of Castile hauing fortified and wanned the towne of Carmona, parted thence, to come to Eccia, hauing in his company Mahumet King of Granada, called the old, with all the forces of his Realme, consisting of seuen thousand horse, and foure score thousand foot, whereof twelue thousand were Crosse-bowes, or as some write thirtie thousand, to whom the King Don Pedro did ioyned fiftene hundred horse, and sixe thousand foote, of his subiects and partisans Spaniards; and with this army hee came and laied sege to Cordoua which had revolted: but not able to take it, after some sallies and encounters, the Moores returned to Granada, and the King Don Pedro to Seuille. Yet the King of Granada staid not long before hee returned to Ilen, the which hee tooke and burned, and came againe and camped before Cordoua, but hee dislodged soone, and went towards Vbeda, where hee did as hee had done at Ilen, and making his profit of these reuolts, hee tooke many other places, did great spoile in Andalusia, and carried away an infinite number of Christians prisoners. Whilest that Don Henry prest Toledo, the townes of Victoria, Salnatierra, Alaua, and Logroño, which held for the King Don Pedro, beeing tired with the continuall warre which the Guipulcoans, and others of their Neighbours (which held Don Henries partie) made against them, they yielded to Charles King of Nauarre.

In this reddition the King of Nauarre was much assisted by Don Tello, who held Biscay, and was then in bad termes with his brother Don Henry. They say that the Inhabitants of these townes hauing acquainted the King Don Pedro with their necessities, intreating him that hee would not take it ill, if they put themselves into the hands of the King of Nauarre, who was his friend and allie, hee willed them to hold out as long as they could, and when as they should bee no more able to defend themselves they should rather yeeld to Don Henry his brother, without diuiding themselves from the crowne of Castile, then vnto the King of Nauarre, who would dismember them from that body: moreover that hee had no reason to gratifie him, for hee had not receiued any assured succors from him. But it fell out otherwise, and the King of Nauarre was seized thereon, who to make money at that time, sold many preiudges to the townes of Nauarre, and among others to the towne of Viana hee sold the duty called Fousfadera, and sold them moreover the place called Agoncillo, and the Boroughs of Villicilla, and Lacagurria, with their appurtenances, for a certaine sum of money, by letters granted at Olite, the seventh of August, this yeere 1368.

In the meane time D. Henry continued his sege to Toledo, the losse whereof D. Pedro fearing

Army of the King D. Pedro.

Townes in Castile yeeld
to the King
of Nauarre.

A fearing, hee resolved to come and succour it and to raise the sege. Hauing therefore left D. Sancho and D. Diego, his base sonnes in Carmone, with great store of money and precious stones, and a good garrison, hee marched against the besiegers. Being vpon his march, hee receiued letters from Aben-Hatin the Moore, who foretold him of his approaching death: yet for all this hee staid not, leading in his army three thousand horse, whereof fiftene hundred were Moores, which the King of Granada had sent him. Being come to Montiel, and there making some stay, hee was abandoned by many of his men; whereof D. Henry being aduertised, hee thought it time to come to his last tryall, which of them two should raigne in Castile: wherefore hee left at the sege of Toledo D. Gomes Stanriques, Archbishop of that city, with most of his forces, and hee with three thousand horse went to encounter the King D. Pedro, being resolved to giue him battaile. He was ouertaken vpon the way in the towne of Orgaz, by Bertrand of Guefcilin, who being newly redeemed from the English, for tenne thousand pounds sterling, which the French King had paid, came to serue him in this conquest with sixe hundred launces. Being fortified with this troupe, D. Henry marched with all speed, and came to Montiel, whereof the King D. Pedro (who had no good spies) did not dreame, where as his men making a shew of fighting, beeing in tumult and confusion, (as men surprized) they were by the counsell of Bertrand of Guefcilin, sodainly charged with such fury, as they were all put to flight, abandoning their King, who seeing himselfe reduced to that extremity, shut himselfe into the castle of Montiel, which stands vpon the side of a hill, C about the towne.

Martin Lopes of Cordoua, captaine of the men which were within Carmone, was vpon the way to come and succor the King D. Pedro; but hearing of the defeat of those that were with him, and that he was shut vp into the castle of Montiel, he returned. The Earle D. Henry did presently cast a ditch about the towne and castle of Montiel, that his prey might not escape; but D. Pedro being besieged, and in want of all things fought to corrupt Bertrand of Guefcilin, by the meanes of Men Rodriguez of Sanabria, promising him the townes of Soria, Almacan, Atiença, Montagu, Bega and Seron, and moreover two hundred thousand doubloons of gold, if hee would undertake to set him in a place of safety: wherevnto Bertrand seeming to consent, he aduertised D. Henry, then hauing giuen an houre and place to Men Rodriguez (who was borne at Translamara) to bring forth the King, he came out of the castle in the night, hauing in his company D. Fernand of Castro, and D. Diego Gonzales of Ouiedo, and went all armed towards the lodging of Bertrand of Guefcilin, who came to meet him, and said vnto him, that it was time to spur; but as he was ready to goe to horse, hee was staid by some that followed Bertrand, and forced to come into his tent, where hee found D. Henry his brother, armed, who at the first sight did not know him; and beeing aduertised by them that were about him, that it was the King D. Pedro, his enemy, yet was hee in doubt, for hee had not scene him in many yeeres. The King D. Pedro seeing himselfe betrayed, transported with fury, began to cry out aloud, I am, I am in deed D. Pedro. Then D. Henry drawing out his dagger stabbed him in the face, the King grappled with him, and they both fell to the ground, but D. Henry vnderneath, who being help by Bertrand of Guefcilin, and others, freed himselfe, and got the King D. Pedro vnder him, whom hee slue with his dagger. Thus D. Pedro King of Castile ended his daies miserably, for his excesses and tyrannies; fulfilling the prediction of the Monke of St. Dominike of Calzada, whom hee caused to be burned, and of the Philosopher Aben-Hatin. His death was in the yeere 1368. the two and thirtieth of March, for the which many blame Bertrand of Guefcilin, as hauing falsified his faith and promise to set him in a place of safety: others discharge him, saying, that the King D. Pedro despaiying, came and put himselfe rashly into his enemies hands. His body was interred in the Monastery of Saint Dominike the Roial at Madrid. Hee had F reigned nineteene yeers, and died beginning the fise and thirtieth of his age.

The King D.
Pedro force
told his death.

Defeat of the King D. Pedro
men.

Bertrand of Guefcilin be trains the King D. Pedro.

D. Henry ba-rard of Castile kils the King
D. Pedro.

D. Fernand

D. Fernand alone of that name, ninth King of Portugal.

Portugal

23 During the warres of the two Princes of Castile, brethren, we doe not read that D. Pedro king of Portugal tooke part with either of them. He died in the yeere 1367, the seuen and forty of his age, hauing reigned almost eleuen yeere. To which Realme succeeded D. Fernand his sonne, being at his coronation fixe and twentie yeere old, and some monethes, in whom the direct and lawfull line of D. Henry of Beſançon, or of Lorraine, failed, as shal appeere. He was present in the towne of Estremos, when as his father died, and was there acknowledged, and proclaimed King, taking an oth from such of his subiects as were then present.

Arragon.

D. Pedro King of Arragon, hearing the successe of D. Henries victory, began to feare him, sending Francis of Perillos and James Elſaro Ambassadors into France, who procured an offensive and defensive league, the French King promising to aide him of Arragon, in his warres of Sardyina, yea and against D. Henry, if hee did not referre vnto him the question for the realme of Murcia, and other lands promised, as hee had informed him. And for that the warres betwixt the French and English were reuiued, Francis of Perillos being held the best captaine at sea in his time, was granted vnto the French king, who entertained him, notwithstanding that the King of Arragon his maister, had great need of him, for the warres of Sardyina, the which was continually entertained, by Marin Judge of Arborea, who this yeere had taken many places from the Arragonois, and defeated in a fallie which he made, being besieged in the castle of Oristagno, the army of Arragon, commanded by D. Pedro of Luna and his sonne, the which did so disquiet the King, as hee refused to goe thither in person: but new affaires hindered him, for he was intruded from the county of Rossillon by some Frenchmen, who notwithstanding were but vagabond troupes, running vp and downe the country without warrant: and he was also kept backe by the controuersies which he had with the new King of Castile: wherefore he sent D. Berenger of Carrozo, Earle of Quirra, thither with an army, yet giuing it still out that he should goe thither himselfe, keeping the Standard royal displayed on the top of the castle of Barcelona; after the accustomed manner, in signe that the King would goe to the warre: the which kept these seditious people somewhat in awe. Hee caused an Edict to bee published, by the which hee granted respight to all that were indebted, and repeale for banished men that were of Sardyina. Being come to Valence, he made his sonne D. Martin Seneschall of Cattelogne, who commanded ouer all armes, vnting vnto that dignity that of the Constable of the realme, as well on this side, as beyond the seas: and then it was decreed, that from that time the children of the Kings or Princes of Arragon should be called to that degree.

The end of the fifteenth Booke.

THE

THE SIXTEENTH BOOKE
of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 DOn Henry the second of that name the 15. King of Castile, and 36. of Leon. The continuation of his conquest of the Realme of Castile, and the contentions betwixt the Castellans, Portugals, Nanarrois and Moores.
- 2 Peace betwixt Castile and Portugal.
- 3 Parliament at Toro, and the Lawes made there.
- 4 Contentions betwixt the Kings of Castile and Nauarre, their agreement. Bad offices of Charles King of Nauarre, to the King of Castile, in fauour of the English against the French, and the constancy and fidelty of D. Henry the new King.
- 5 Inſulting and vnlawfull marriage of D. Fernand King of Portugal, with D. Leonora Telles of Meneses, and the tumults which ensued.
- 6 Warre renewed betwixt Castile and Portugal.
- 7 Order of Monkes of Saint Ierome in Spaine.
- 8 Preparatiues for warre made by Iohn duke of Lancaster, pretending the Realme of Castile against D. Henry.
- 9 Treaty of peace betwixt Castile and Arragon.
- 10 Affaires of Nauarre: death of D. Roderigo of Vrriz.
- 11 Cession of the riches of Rossillon and Cerdagne, to the house of Anjou.
- 12 Travels of the King of Nauarre: detention of the Prince his sonne in France. Rash enterprises of the King of Nauarre against him of Castile, warre betwixt these potentates.
- 13 Schisme in the Church of Rome.
- 14 Death of D. Henry King of Castile, and some testamentary lawes made by him.
- 15 Iohn first of that name, the 16. King of Castile and 37. of Leon.
- 16 Treaties of marriages ill managed, and donations betwixt the Kings of Castile and Portugal.
- 17 Practices of D. Leonora Telles of Meneses Queene of Portugal against the Nobility, and the troubles and calamities which followed.
- 18 The King of Castile acknowledgeth, in the Schisme of the Romaine Church, the Pope of Avignon.
- 19 Warre betwixt Castile and Portugal, procured by the Earle of Oren pacified, a marriage betwixt D. Iohn King of Castile, and D. Beatriz Infanta of Portugal.
- 20 Rebellion of the Earle of Gijon.
- 21 Regency of D. Leonora Telles of Meneses in Portugal, pursue of Don Iohn King.

Ddd

of

of Castile, of the Realme of Portugal, in the hereditary right of D. Beatrix his wife. D. John A Maister of Auiç, called to the Government, and the exploits of warre betwixt the Castilians, and Portugals.

- 22 Bad designes of Charles King of Nauarre, to free his sonne, being prisoner in France: his liberty by the bounty of the princes of France.
23 Continuance of the war of Portugal. Election of D. Iohn Maister of Auiç to the crowne of Portugal, battaile of Aljubarroze, and defeat of the Castilians.

In this sixteenth Booke mention is made of the Kings.

- 15 D. Henry of Castile, 16 D. Iohn his sonne, 36 of Leon, second of that name.
37 of Leon, first of that name.

D. Henry, called de la Merced the fifteenth King of Castile, and fixe and thirty of Leon.

I
Castile.

D. Henry first named Iu: Gratiouſe.

After the death of the King D. Pedro, the Realmes of Castile and Leon, remained to D. Henry, without any great difficulty. He got by his vertue and mildnesse, what his brother had lost by his pride and cruelty. Hee was a friend to the vertuous, nobly minded, bountifull, valiant, and strong of his person, although he were but of a small stature: He was turnamed the liberall, or gratiouſe, by reason of the bounty he shewed to them that had serued him. The greatnesse and good fortune of this King was suspected vnto the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon, who made a league this yeere, restoring one vnto an other certaine townes and castles, that is, Arragon deliuered to Nauarre, Herrera of Monçayo: and Nauarre to Arragon Saluatierra and Real, they pacified the controuersies which were betwixt them of Sanguessa and Real, by a definitive sentence of Merins and Gouernors of Tudelo and Saragoffa: Queene Jeanne gouerning the realme of Nauarre, and dealing in all these affaires, in the absence of King Charles her husband, who was gone into France, vpon the reuiuing of the warre betwixt the French and English, that same yeere, Nauarre and Arragon, began then to make many practises with the Kings of Portugal and England to dispossesse the King D. Henry of his new conquest, in the which Carmona in Andalusia, Zamore and Ciudad Roderigo in Castile, with a good part of Galicia, refused to obey him, al the rest acknowledging him for King. For Toledo, as soone as D. Pedros death was knowne yielded: Seuille opened her gates, the castle of Montiel was deliuered him, where and in other places, hee sold great store of treasure, jewels, silks, tapstries & other rich mouables of the deceased King. The townes of Logrogno, Victoria, Saluatierra of Alaua, and St. Cruz of Campeçeo, were yielded to the king of Nauar: & he of Arragon had seized on Molina, Cagnet & Requena, hauing corrupted Garcia of Vera, and Aluar Russ of Espejo, captains of these places. D. Henry sought to make some accord with the of Carmona, demanding fideship and

A and offering a truce to the King of Granada; the which the King of Castile had stier done, but he could not effect it. Mahomet the Old, King of Granada, answered, that hee would be a friend to the King D. Pedro dead, as hee had beene in his life time: wherefore the King leauing good order vpon that frontier, and appointing D. Gonçalo Mexia, maister of the Knights of Saint Iames, Gouernor thereof, with other Noblemen and Captaines, he parted from Seuille, to cometo Toledo. Then he caused a certaine coine to be made, called croyscz, of the value of a marauedis, and an other kinde called rials, of the value of foure maraudis. Every maraudis in those times being worth ten of the lesser at this daie.

Truce offered by the King
D. Henry, and refused by him.

Henry current in Castile.

The first that began to quarrel with him for the succession of the realme, was D. Ferdinand King of Portugal, who pretended to be lawfull heire, as Grandchild to D. Beatrix of Castile, daughter to D. Sancho the Braue: he was animated, in this ambition, by the Inhabitants of Zamore and Ciudad Roderigo, frontier townes of Portugal, who would not acknowledge D. Henry, but called in D. Fernand to raigne ouer them, as it seemed all the country of Galicia had the like intent, the towne of Corunna (commonly called the Groine) hauing voluntarily subiected it selfe to the king of Portugal. To prevent which inconueniences, the king D. Henry marched with a great army towards Zamore, to beseege it, but finding it strong and well manned, he past on into Galicia; D. Fernand finding himselfe inferior, both in number of men, in valour, and in experience of warre, vnto D. Henry, would not attend him, but imbarked, and returned into his country by sea, leauing a good garrison in the Groine. The King D. Henry, accompanied by Bertrand of Guefcin, entred into Portugal, betwixt the riuers of Duero and Minio, where he tooke Braga and Bragança, and ouerrun all that country, in view of the enemies, who durst not present themselves in battaile, and had done worse, if he had not bene called backe, by the newes which he receiued of the Moores attempts, and of the taking of Algezire, by the King of Granada, who hauing intelligence with the King of Portugal, had beseeged, taken and razed this place, euen vnto the ground, in hatred of the great losses, which the Moores his predecessors and their confederats had receiued by reason thereof. At that time there reigned at Fez, in Affrike, and in Algarue, or the plaines of Affrike, a prince of the race of the Merins, called Abasfer Andelaziz, to whom the Kings of Arragon and Granada (hauing conspired against D. Henry) sent their Ambassadors, in the yeere 1370. to treat a peace, and league with him, the which they did for fūe yeeres: and in the mean timethe King of Granada ceased not to annoy the country of Andalusia, and to doe all the spoile he could, giuing it out that it was in fauor and aide of D. Pedros children, who were in Carmona well manned and fortified.

Zamore and Ciudad Roderigo rise contrary to the King D.
Henry.

Moorish tale Algezire.

An. 1370.

The King D. Henry went to field against this Moore, who in passing attempted Ciudad Roderigo, but he could not take it. Being come to Medina del Campo, where the Estates were assembled, he was assisted with great summes of money, wherewith hee contented strangers which had serued him: and withal hee receiued for the ranſome of D. James of Majorca, who had bene taken in the castle of Burgos, 70000. ducats, paid by Queene Jeanne of Naples his wife. They hold, that Bertrand of Guefcin and others receiued there aboute fixe score thousand doubloons, besides the townes and places which hee gaue them; as to Guefcin the townes of Soria, Almazan, Atienza, Montague and Seron, and moreouer the Siegneury of Molina, which the King of Arragon held, that hee might breed a iarre betwixt them. There Bertrand of Guefcin took his leaue, and returned into France, where he was made Constable, and managed the warre against the English. The King D. Henry being come into Andalusia, hee was to arme himselfe against the Moores, against them of Carmona, & against the gallies of Portugal, who did trouble that coast, stoping the mouth of the riuier of Guadalquivir, so as the towne of Seuille was much annoyed. The King was nothing well provided of gallies & ships of warre, yet he gaue such order, as in a short time he had a good army made ready in Biscay and Guipuscoa, whereby the sea was assured; the Generall of this armie, was called Pero Gonçales of Aguero. During these actions, D. Tello the Kings brother, being reconciled, and left by him in Galicia, to make head against the Portugals, died, and was buried at Saint Francis of Palencia, the Siegneuries of Biscay

Castile.

these places by force: so as Saluaterra of Alaua and Saint Croix were reduced vnder A his obedience: but Victoria and Logrogno remained in the custody of D. John Ramirez of Arcellan. King Charles complained to Pope Gregory the eleventh, at Auignon, of this excesse done by the King D. Henry, then he came with all speed into his Realme of Na-uarre, to defend it against the army of the King D. Henry, who threatened to enter into his country, if hee did not restore him the townes of Logrogno and Victoria. King Charles gaue him to vnderstand, that seeing it had bene agreed to put their controuer-sies to compromise to the Pope, who had sent a Legat into Spaine, which was Cardinal Guy of Bologno, Bishop of Portuense, that (for his part) hee was well content hee should determine thereof, the which the King D. Henry did also yeeld vnto: wherefore B the Legat being come to Saint Dominike, and hauing bene made acquainted with the
the Legat being come to Saint Dominike, and hauing bene made acquainted with the contrights and pretensions of both Kings, hee made a peace betwixt them, vpon these conditions: That the townes of Logrogno and Victoria, should be restored to the King of Castile: That the Infant D. Charles, eldest sonne to the King of Nauarre, should take to wife Donna Leonora Infanta of Castile, daughter to D. Henry, with a dowry of a hundred thousand doubloons at the celebration of the marriage: and moreover besides the said summe, King Henry should pay at the same time, twenty thousand doub-lons to the King of Nauarre, for his charges during the time he had held the said places:
That for assurance of the accomplishment of this marriage, the Infant D. Pedro, the younger sonne of Nauarre, should remaine in hostage in Castile, in the hands of C the Queene D. Jeanne, vntill that the two Kings met at Briona, where they did confirme what had things thus determined, the two Kings met at Briona, where they did confirme what had bene formerly concluded, being come into Nauarre, hee presently sent his sonne D.
Charles to bee made sure to the Infanta D. Leonora, who came to Briona, well accompanied by the chiefe Noblemen of Nauarre, where this ceremony was done with great pompe: the townes of Victoria and Logrogno, were restored, and after the returne of the Infant D. Charles, D. Pedro his brother was sent vnto the Queene of Castile, to remaine there in hostage, according to the accord.

The King of Nauarre hauing giuen order for this businesse, hee examined their assions, which had gouerned his Realme during his absence; and hauing found that some faults had bene committed by the Bishop of Pampelone, and the Deane of Tudelo, whom he had left for counsellors to the Queene his wife, they fearing to bee punished, absented themselves. The Bishop tooke his way to Rome, where hee arrived safely, and there ended the remainder of his daies; but as for the Deane, who sought to saue himself in Castile, he was pursued, and taken nere vnto Logrogno, and there slaine by the Kings commandment. Soone after Queen Jean returned into France, where she liued not long.

4. About the end of this yeere 1373, the King D. Charles and his eldest sonne, came to Madrid to see the King D. Henry, whom the King of Nauarre let vnderstand, that to auoide a great trouble in his affaires, which might grow by the meanes of Edward King of England, and Edward Prince of Wales his sonne, he should embrace their friendship, E the which he had charge to offer him, vpon conditio he should breake the league hee had with the French king, their enemy, in regard whereof they promised to giue no aide vnto the daughters of the deceased King D. Pedro, who were in England, making great surety to King Edward, and to the Prince of Wales, to restore them to their fathers inheritance: and moreover that John Duke of Lancaster had married D. Constance the one of them, by reason whereof he pretended the Realme of Castile to belong vnto him, as holding the place of the eldest, being declared lawfull, and receiued in that quality by the Estates of the realme, her sister, D. Beatrice being dead. Al which pretensions should bee relinquished by the English, if he left the alliance of France, & paid a certaine sum of money vnto the Prince of Wales, the which the D. Pedro his brother did owe him. F
The King of Nauarre propounded these things, as hauing charge from the English Princes, who were enemies to France, whose party he had alwaies held, for the wrongs which hee pretended had bene done him by the French King his brother in law: giuing many reasons, to induce the King D. Henry to incline to this party; but hee (who held not the crown of Castile of any other after God, but of the French) would not thinke himselfe thanked.

A confiement of the and Nauarre.

The King of Nauarre let to see the King of Castile
from the friendship of France, to knowe what the English.

A vntankfull, but answered resolutely, that he would neuer quit the friendship of France:
but if the question were to disburse money to content the English, that he was well content to do it: the which the King of Nauarre sayd was not sufficient, and that hee must necessitie breake the League he had with France, but if he held it not fit to do, hee intrea-ted him not to take in ill part what he had sayd vnto him, seeing hee had it in charge from the King of England, to whom he was bound to do all good offices. The King Don Henry thanked him for the paines he had taken, to come so farre into Castile, saying, that he could not take that ill which he had spoken, but (for his part) he would persist in his first resolution: so as the King of Nauarre returned into his Realme, and the King Don Henry into Andalusia.

B The King of Nauarre aduertised the English Princes of the answer he had receiued, the which did much discontent them: for the king of Castile did much ballance their affaires, by the succours he gaue by sea vnto the French, hauing sent a good number of ships of warre, vnder the command of Ambrose Bocanegra a Genouois, his Admirall, who stopped the passage in such sort betwixt France and England, as besides many small prizes which he had taken, hee defeated a fleet of English, about that time, and tooke fixe and thirty of their vessels neere vnto Rochel; by which victorie Rochel came vnder the obedience of the French king, and the greatest part of the prey and prisoners were carried into Spaine, among the which was the Earle of Pembroke Generall of the army. Besides which succours, the king Don Henry being come from Burgos to Saint Ander, he sent Don Ray Diaz of Rojas into the Prouince of Guipulcoa, to make ready a new army of 40. ships, the which he sent soone after vnder the command of the same Ray Diaz to the French K.
who came to Rochel, and hauing ioyned with a French Captaine called John Calais, who had about twenty Barkes, all together came and set vpon another fleet of English, whom they likewise put to rout, and then Don Ray Diaz returned a victor into Spaine: so as the English had reason to feele to diuide the king of Castile, from him of France, and to draw him vnto their partie. Pope Gregorie the eleventh presumed to interpose his authoritie in these Princes quarrels, the which did not please them. Hauing made an accord betwixt the Kings of Castile and Nauarre, he would also reconcile the controuerfies that were D betwixt Castile and Arragon, and to this end hee sent the Cardinall of Cominges into Spaine, who prest the two Kings to send their Deputies to debate their cause before him.
Don Henry named for his part the bishop of Burgos, and Don Aluiz Garcia of Albornoz Lord Steward of his house: the king of Arragon deputed the bishop of Lerida, and Don Raymond Alam in Cernillon, who agreed that the Colledge of Cardinals should determine this controuersie. But these Princes being better aduised, that it was not fit their quarrels should be decided by the Court of Rome, they tooke a better course to agree betwixt themselves. The towne of Tuy which had for many months refused to obey D. Henry, now submitted about this peace of Arragon.

But the warre was renewed betwixt Castile and Portugal, by reason of many prizes taken in the port of Lisbonne, and at sea, of ships and merchants of Biscay, Guipulcoa and Afluria: and also for that the King Don Fernando gaue a retreat vnto the banished men of Castile, concerning matters of State; and also that hee had contemned the marriage concluded betwixt him and Donna Leonora of Castile, to marrie Donna Leonora Telles of Meneses, Niece to the Earle of Barcelos, a Lady of great beautie, but much inferior in quality to the Infanta Donna Leonora of Castile, and Donna Leonora of Arragon, whom he might haue had with great profit to his Realme, and to himselfe honour. Hee contem-ned these marriages, which had bene very beneficiall to himselfe, and to his Realme of Portugal, to marrie this Ladie, offending God and all good lawes: for he tooke her violently from her husband Laurence Vasques of Acugna, forcing him to flee into Castile, F where hee past the remainder of his dayes in exile, carrying commonly hornes of siluer on his hat, to witnesse the lust and infamy of his Prince; yet I come, to excuse this fact, write, that the king caused this marriage to be dissolved by the Popes authoritie, as vnlawfull, by reason of the neerenesse of consanguinitie: of the which (notwithstanding) there was issued one sonne, called Aluaro of Acugna. The king was made sure vnto her in the presence of the Earle of Barcelos, and a sister of hers, called Don Mary, who had mannaged
this

Don Henry K.
of Castile
sits in the ambly of France.

Rochel yielded to the French.

Portugal.

5.
Marriage un-lawfull of the king of Portugal, taking away his wife
from his wife.

Tumult at Lisbon for the kings marriage.

this marriage, and to whom the king had imparted his lous. When this marriage was published in Lisbon, the inhabitants incensed (that the king had left so profitable and honorable a marriage, as that of Castile) began to mutine, and having taken Fernand Vasques of Acugna for their Captaine, they sent 300. armed men about the kings pallace, and gaue the king to vnderstand in the behalfe of the city, that hee should leaue this woman, else they would take her, and do vnto her as their Predecessors had done to the king D. Sancho Capello in the like case. The king fearing the furie of this multitude, answered them mildly, that in what they did, they were good subiects, being iealous of his honour, and thanked them for their good will: but he let them vnderstand, that D. Leonora Telles was not his married wife, and intreated them to retire vntill the next day, when he would talke to them more amply of that businesse, in the Monasterie of S. Dominicke. This blaine being blowne ouer, the king parted by night out of Lisbon, and carried D. Leonora Telles with him into the countrie betwixt Duero and Minio: and retiring towards Porto, he lodged neere vnto it in the Monasterie of Leza, where he married this Lady publicly, not caring how his subiects tooke it. He commanded that all men should acknowledge her, and call her Queene, and gaue her the townes of Almadra, Sintra, Torresvedras, Atogna, Quiedos, Alanguier, Abrantes, Villa viciosa, and many other places. All in the end yielded to it without murmuring, seeing it was the kings pleasure, and D. Leonora had the title of Queene given her by all men, but by D. Denis the kings brother, who would neuer kisse her hand, saying, That it was her duty to kisse his: whereat the King D. Fernand was so incensed, as if Don Denis had not retired presently by the meanes of those that were then present, he had stab'd him with his dagger: for this cause the Infant retired himselfe for euer after into Castile. When as D. Leonora Telles saw her selfe installed Queene, she made a diligent search who had bin the chiefe motiues of the mutiny at Lisbon, and vnderstanding that they were of the family of Vasques of Acugna, she ceased not to pursue them with a deadly hatred, vntill she had forced many of them to flee into Castile.

Genealogie of Portugal.

Of this marriage betwixt the king D. Fernand and D. Leonora Telles issued D. Beatrice, who was married to D. John the first King of Castile, borne at Coimbra, and afterwards a son and a daughter who died yong: some Authors hold, that they were borne in aduentic, committed by the Queene with D. John Fernandes of Andeiro, a knight of Galicia, borne at Corunna. Moreover the king before this marriage, had a daughter called D. Isabel. The king D. Henry hauing these causes of discontent against the king of Portugal, he gaue him to vnderstand by his ambassadors, that he could not take it in good part, that he had retired his rebellious subiects, of which he demanded some: and moreover, that he should deliuer the ships and merchants of Asturia, Biscay, & Guipuscoa with their goods, which he had taken and stayed: whereof the King D. Fernand made no accompt, wherefore the king of Castile prepared to armes. Diego Lope Pacheco a knight of Portugal, was then in Castile, who was retired thither, by reason of the death of D. Agnes of Castro, by the fury of the king D. Pedro: and had bin so fauored by the king D. Henry, as he had got great reuenues & honors. This Knight had left many friends in Portugal, by whose means he was aduertised of all that was done in D. Fernand's Court: and as he was a most affectionate seruant to the king of Castile, so he sought to draw vnto him all those that were valiant in Portugal: and if any one were persecuted, he perswaded him to come into Castile, declaring vnto them the bountie of the king D. Henry. He had had intelligence of all that had past touching the marriage of D. Leonora Telles, and of the discontent betwixt the King and his brother D. Denis, and them of the house of Acugna, and the city of Lisbon: wherefore embracing these occasions fir for the war, which was like to grow betwixt these two kings, Diego Lope Pacheco wrought so, as he drew D. Denis to come and put himselfe vnder the protection of the king D. Henry, & entertained by all means such Gentlemen as were ill affected to their King, to be reuenged of the wrongs he had done them. Matters being thus prepared, and the ambassador being returned, who had bin sent to summon the king D. Fernand to deliuer the banished men which he had in his Realm, & to make restitution of the prizes which had bin taken by him, the king D. Henry entred into Portugal with an army, and hauing sent D. Alphonso his son to Coimbra (a castle in Galicia where the banished men had fortified themselves) the place was taken.

War betwixt the King and Portugal.

The

A The king on his side seized of Almorda, Panel, Cillonico and Linares, and there Don Denis ioyined with him, with other Noblemen of Portugal, who were liberally intreated, and much honoured. Pope Gregorie the eleuenth residing in Auignon, hearing of the troubles betwixt these two kings, was carefull (like a good pastor) to send a Legat, which was Cardinal Guy of Bologno, with full authoritie to reconcile them. But before that hee could draw the parties to any friendly composition, the king Don Henry made a new entrie, tooke Viseo, and ranne vp the countrie as farre as S. Iren, finding no resistance: for Don Fernand was not so able to maintain a quarrell, as he was ready to breed one: wherefore keeping himselfe within Saint Iren, the king Don Henry had the passage free and open to go vnto Lisbon, where he spoyle and burnt the lower part of the towne, as the new street, and some other places, for that he neither found walles, nor any resistance the quarter called Sus, held good, being walled in, and well manned; for all the inhabitants were retired thither: during the which, the sea-armie of Castile entred into the mouth of the riuer, which is large and spacious, where they did not onely recouer the ships of Biscay, and others which had bene taken; but many vessels of all sorts, which were fit for seruice, were carried away by the Castilians, and the rest burnt. In the meane time the Legat laboured what he could to end these miseries, wherein he prevailed so much, as hee reduced the two kings to a peace, the which was concluded to the great aduantage of the king of Castile, after which the kings met neere vnto Saint Iren, either of them in a barke vpon the riuer of Tayo, where they finished their accord and capitulations: among the which there was a marriage concluded betwixt Donna Beatrice, sister to the king D. Fernand, and Don Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, brother to the king of Castile, and of Donna Izabella base daughter to the king Don Fernand, and Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon, base sonne to the king Don Henry. The marriage betwixt Don Sancho and Donna Beatrice was celebrated; the places taken were restored, the peace was proclaimed, and the king of Castile returned into his countrie, leading his daughter-in-law Donna Izabella with him, being but eight yeares old, who was afterwards married to the Earle of Gijon, to his great griefe.

Lisbon spoiled and burnt by the King of Castile.

Peace betwixt Castile and Portugal.

The quarrells betwixt Castile and Arragon, being not well ended, they were forced to come to a new compromise, wherein the Duke of Anjou brother to the French king was a dealer, but with so bad successe, as he became enemy to the King of Arragon. At that time were celebrated the marriages of D. John D. of Gironne, the heire of Arragon, and Martha daughter to the Earle of Armaignac, who had siterne thousand pounds sterling in dowrie: and of Don Martin of Arragon, the Kings youngest sonne, with Donna Mary, daughter to Don Lopes Earle of Luna, and Lord of Segorbe. The same yeare 1372. Don Pedro king of Arragon finding too late, how easie he had bene to beleue false reports, and repenting himselfe of the vnworthie death of Bernard of Cabrera, hee restored his Grand-child Bernardin, sonne to Bernardin of Cabrera, to all his goods, except the Earldome of Vic, which he kept to himselfe. The father of this young Nobleman dyed in Castile, in the seruice of the king Don Henry, notwithstanding that hee had sought his fathers death. There were this yeare seene in Arragon horrible Earthquakes, with the ruins of mountaines about Ribagorza, where as many villages were ouerthrowne, and great multitudes of people perished.

Castile.

In Castile the king Don Henry was prest by Donna Maria of Lara, Countesse of Alencon, to do her right for the Lordships of Biscay and Lara: she had many sons which were all aduanced in France: the first was Earle of Alencon, the second of Edampes, the third of Perch, and two of the Church. The king Don Henry made answer, that he should send him two other sonnes to remaine in Spaine, and that he would giue the Lordship of Biscay to the one, and that of Lara to the other. He presumed that he could not do it all her children being so well aduanced in France, and for some other reasons.

Biscay belongs to the house of Alencon.

F Edward king of England, and his sonne John Duke of Lancaster, (who intitled himselfe King of Castile and Leon, in the right of his wife Donna Constance, daughter to the king Don Pedro the Cruel) sent Ambassadors to the king of Arragon, in the yeare 1373. to treat a League with him: being resolved to send a great army into Castile; to conquer that Realme, whereof the Duke of Lancaster should be General, as belonging to his wife: offering offering great conditions to the king of Arragon, if he would adhere to their partie. The A king of Arragon demanded the Realme of Murcia, the townes of Requena, Oriol, Moya, Cagnete, the city of Cuenca, and the Segneurie of Molina, with other places vpon the frontier of Castile, whereof he held some: but hoping he should haue a better composition with the king D. Henry, he kept himselfe betwixt both, being doubtfull what to do, so as nothing was concluded for that time with the ambassadors of England.

1373. Pretensions of John Duke of Lancaster to Castile.

During these reuolutions in Spaine in temporall affaires, religion was managed by diuers sects of Monkes, especially by the begging Friars of Saint Dominick and Saint Francis, who this year incensed the people against a new Order which had risen in Spaine in the time of the king Don Pedro, through the deuout ignorance of certaine Italians of Sienna, religious Hermits, who had heard one of their companions, called Friar Thomas, say dying, by a Prophetical spirit, sayd they, that within few dayes the holy Ghost should come into Spaine, and that he had this by reuelation: wherefore all these religious men thinking that the holy Ghost did not frequent much in Italy in those times, and that it was something which they must seeke farre off in a strange country: they left Italy, and came into the countrie of Toledo, hoping to get the grace of the holy Ghost, and thereby saue their soules.

The fame of these men being spread ouer Spaine, a bishop of Iaen called D. Alphonso Pechas, and Don Pero Fernand Pechas his brother, Chamberlaine to the king Don Pedro, Hernando Ianes Chanoine of Toledo, and chiefe Chaplaine of the chappell of the auncient Kings, with many other Christians, commending the resolution of these Friars, and their ignorance, being desirous to liue in that contemplation, ioyned with them, leaving Bishopricks, Chanonries, Benefices and Estates, and chusing their aboads in caues and woods farre from the societie of men, where they began to liue a wonderfull austere life, saying, that it was according to the rule of Saint Paul, that they must suffer many discomforts, to liue like Christians, and that it was the meanes to gaine Paradise. This sect being in great esteeme, the begging Friars began to blame the people for following of these men, who had no settled Order nor discipline among them, and (which did more import) had no approbation from the Pope. For these reasons the inconstant multitude began to retire themselves, and to abate much of their deuotion, which these good Hermits finding, to their great grieve, they tooke counsell among themselves to send vnto the Pope, to get authority from him for a name, rule, profession, order, and aboad. The messengers were Friar Peter Fernandez of Guadajara, and Friar Peter Romaine of their company: who being come before the Pope, exposed their deuotion vnto him, their manner of life, exercises in religion, their meanes and merits, beseeching him that he would bee pleased to approoue their Order and profession, giuing them for Patron the great Doctor Saint Ierome, to whome all were most addicted.

The Pope made no difficultie to allow of them, having had some former information of that which they had sayd, appointing them to liue vnder the rule of S. Augustine, hee prescribed what manner of garment they should weare, and sent backe these Deputies into Spaine, with Bulls, in October, 1373. By this approbation from the Pope, these Monkes crept into credit, and did build their first conuent in a place called Lupiana, in the Archbishopricke of Toledo, two leagues from Guadalajara, dedicating it to Saint Basilianus, the which was since the chiefe of the Order: the Prior of which Monasterie is General of the Order for three yeares, and is bound to reside in that Monasterie during his charge. Since by the bounty of the Princes of Spaine, these Hermits haue built many Conuents, and haue greatly enlarged their possessions. Their exercise is more in singing then studying, the which they do neglect expressly, to the end they might not be diuerted from their simple contemplation, notwithstanding there haue bene some great Preachers found among them, and men of vnderstanding in great affaires of State.

Returning to politicke worldly affaires, the king D. Henry being aduertised of the praides betwixt the English and the king of Arragon, he sought to entertain the hope of compromise propounded by the Cardinall Gay of Bologne, who by the Popes commandement, was a mediator to make this peace. In the meane time hee had intelligence with Lewis Duke of Aniou, Governor of Languedoc; and concluded, that hee should

preffe

A preffe the English towards Bayone, and the duke of Aniou vpon the limits of his gouernement, and then hauing ioyned their forces together, they should annoy them all they could in Guienne: for he had intelligence that John Duke of Lancaster had imparted his enterprises, and ioyned his forces with those of John of Montfort Duke of Brittaine, making preparation to enter into Castile: the which he thought fit to prevent, and to assaile him in Guienne, whilst that Philip the Hardy, Duke of Bourgogne, and brother to the French king, made warre against the English in Artois and Vermandois: and to this effect the king D. Henry gaue order to rayse an armie in Rioja. Whilst that the troupes were leuying, the Court being at Burgos, there fell a quarrell betwixt the seruants of D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, the kings brother, and them of D. Pedro Gonzales of Mendoza for their lodgings, whether the Earle running to pacifie this broyle, (whereof neither hee, nor D. Pedro were guilty) he was thrust through with a lance and flaine, by one that knew him not. The killing parting from Burgos, came to Rioja, where hauing mustred his army, he found 6200. horse, whereof 1200. were Genets, with the which hee past to Bayone, being assured by the Duke of Aniou, that he would come and ioine with him. And to keepe the king of Arragon in awe, Don Iames Infant of Majorca, husband to Jeanne Queene of Naples, was come to Narbonne with good troupes, threatening to enter into Catallogne.

The K. D. Henry passing by Alaua and Guipuscoa, entred into the territorie of Bayone, where he found no great resistance, for the armie of English, which had bene hotly pursued by the Duke of Bourgogne, being come to Bordeaux, was much diminished. There he staid some dayes for the Duke of Aniou, hauing sent Pero Fernandez of Velasco, his Lord Chamberlaine, and Don John Ramires of Ateilan, to hasten him: but they found him busied in taking of townes and castles from the English, some by force, some by composition, so as the king Don Henry returned with his army into Spaine, hauing done no great exploit.

Passing through Guipuscoa, Don Bertrand of Gueuara, Lord of Ognate, who had done him great seruice, made sute vnto him to giue him the towne of Mondragon, whereof the Inhabitants being aduertised, they sent their Deputies to informe the king what wrong he should do himselfe, if hee should alienate such a place from the Crown, the which (besides the great commerce, by reason of the forges of Iron and Steele, which were continually set a worke thereabouts) was a sort of great consequence, vpon the which there might be many destinies made: for the Castell (which was then entire) was impregnable: beseeching him to be an eye witness, and to passe by the place, remembering that the Inhabitants of Mondragon had bene alwaies faithfull vnto him, and that during the warres betwixt him, and the King Don Pedro, they had alwaies followed his partie. The king promised to passe by their towne, wherefore the Inhabitants thereof, and of the countrie thereabouts beganne to make the lower way, which goes from that towne to Ognate, whereas before they were forced to passe the mountaine called Baque, to the end the King should not be tyred with passing ouer it. This passage is at this day called Euripide, a corrupted word, in sted of Erreguevide, the which in that countrie language signifies a way for the king.

The King Don Henry hauing viewed the situation of the towne and fort, with the commodities thereof, and considered of the Inhabitants reasons, he would not yeeld vnto the petition of Don Bertrand of Gueuara, but he gaue him in recompence the valley of Le-niz, with all iurisdiction, both ciuill and criminall. This valley was wont to depend vpon Mondragon, but then it was taken from it, and the sayd Bertrand, and his successors haue enjoyed it for the space of an hundred, fourescore, and two yeares, or thereabouts, vnto the year 1556. when it was vniued vnto the Crowne, by a decree of the Kings Councell of Castile. The king parting from Mondragon, returned to Burgos, from whence hee past to Leon, and then to Seuille.

Whilst that the king of Arragon was attentiu to the warre against the English, the Infant Don Iames of Majorca, husband to the Queene of Naples, entred into Catallogne with fiftene hundred lances; being assisted by the Kings of France and Castile, and by the Duke of Aniou, where hee did much harme. On the other side Bernard bastard of 8.

Foix,

Arragon.

Preparation
John Duke of Lancaster and John of Montfort Duke of Brittaine.

D. Henry of Castile enters Guienne with an army against the English.

7.
Order of Saint
Ierome in Spain

Approbation of the Order of S. Ierome
by the Pope.

Don John Alphonso Telles, to be Admirall of the Realme: an other brother called D. A. Gonçalo Telles, was at her request made Earle of Neyua. To the Earle of Barcelos son, he procured the suruivance of his fathers Estate, in the same country or gouernment of Barcelos: a brother of hers was made Earle or Gouernor of Viane, and D. Henry her brother in law, Earle of Seaa. To D. Lope Diaz de Sosa her Nephew, sonne to Donna Maria Telles her sister, and to Aluar Diaz de Sosa; she caused to bee giuen the dignity of great maister of Christ.

Don Henry of Albuquerque, whose sisters were married to the brethren of this Queene D. Leonora Telles, was by her fauour maister of Saint Iames. She caused D. Iuanne Telles of Meneses her bastard sister, who was commandresse of Sançtos, to be married to D. John Alphonso Pimentel, and Bragança to be giuen vnto him: She married D. Agnes Botello, one of her gentlewomen, and her kinswoman; being of a Noble family to Pera Rodriguez of Fonseca giuing him the castle of Oliuencia: She also concluded the marriages of D. Mencia Vasques Coutina, with Martin Gonçales of Tuy; and of D. Therese of Meyra, with Fernand Gonçales of Soça, giuing vnto the last the castle of Chaves, and to the other that of Portel: She made D. Aluar Peyer of Castro, Castellan, Earle or Gouernor of Aroyolos, and procured many fauours and graces for D. Fernand de Castro his elder brother.

They say, that by her meanes the King on a time sent a present to John Alphonso of Muxica, being in the towne of Eboia, of thirty horse, thirty armors complete, thirty mules, thirty pounds of gold, a hundred and thirty markes of silver, and foure mulets laden with tapistry, and other rich furniture, adding thereto, as an hereditarie gift, the towne of Torrefredras. Such also was the fauour she bare vnto Don Fernand of Andeiro a Knight of Galicia, who was come to serue the King her husband, in his last warres against Castile, as besides that hee was made an Earle, hee had the neereft place next to her selfe, in the Kings fauour: so as by his meanes many Gentlemen were gratified and aduanced in Portugal: and moreover hee liued in such familiarity, as hee lodged in the same lodging with the King and Queene, and did often remaine alone with her a long time, whereat many murmured, and grew ielous: saying that their conuersation was not honest, and the Portugois did beleue, that the children which shee bare, were not the King D. Fernand's (a Prince which was vncloud, and of a weak' complexion) but begotten by stealth by this Earle of Oren. Finally she wrought, so, as all the dignities, honours and sorts of Portugal, were in the hands of her kinsmen, friends and allies.

But to what fury doth the desire of command thrust a woman vnto? The Portugall authors write, that the Infant Don John, the Kings brother, being in loue with Donna Maria Telles of Meneses, the Queenes sister, who had managed the loue betwixt the King and her, a widow woman, and mother to Don Lope Diaz de Sosa, but faire, and pleasing, hee serued her and sought her loue, the which shee could not refuse, Don John being a Knight in the floure of his age, goodly also and full of grace: yet shee was thus farte discreet, that before shee would yeeld to that which hee desired, hee promised to marrie her secretly, the which being afterwards made knowne vnto the Queene, shee was much discontented: it may bee desisting that Don John (who was much beloued of the Portugalls) should marrie Donna Beatrice her daughter: fearing that if the King her husband should die, hee should bee chosen King, and her daughter reiected, or that shee her selfe did beare him some good will, and seeing her husband ill disposed, had an intent to marry him, if her husband died, that shee might reigne still: wherefore being transported with these passions, shee began to practise the death (by a notable cruelty and detestable stratagemme) of her who had raised her vp, conspiring with Don John Alphonso Telles her brother, Admirall of Portugall, to perfwade the Infant Don John, that Donna Maria Telles, who said shee was his wife, abandoned her selfe to other men, to his great dishonour, in whom they wrought such an impression, as this simple and ill aduised Knight, transported with extreme ielousie, came in a morning to Coimbra, where this Lady did remaine, where entering furiously into the house after that hee had forced her chamber doore, finding and detestable

Politic cruelty
of the Queene
D. Leonora
Telles.

A not any signes of that which had beene told him, hee slue his miserable wife most barbarously, who called to God for aide, but in vaine, holding vp her hands to her iraged husband.

This was the reward which Donna Maria Telles of Meneses had, hauing beene the broker of that vnfortunate marriage, and as it were the Gardien of the Queene Donna Leonora's loues, who not content therewith came to complaine vnto the King of Don John for the death of her sister, and preuailed fo, as he was forced to absent himselfe from court, and to keepe himselfe secret in places of hard acceffe, for his safety, yet finding not himselfe well secured; he retired into Castile: for Gonçal Telles, brother to the deceased, and her sonne D. Lope Diaz de Sosa, the Earle of Barcellos, and his brother the Earle of Viana, with other of her kinsfolkes, fought to kill him, to reuenge the death of Donna Maria. Besides these excesses, the Queene Donna Leonora attempted the death of D. John maister of Auiz, the King her husbands base brother, a Knight of great valour, who had neuer offended her: but only in conceit, that hee onely did crosse her desires. To effect her wicked intent, shee caused letters to bee counterfeited in the name of the maister, and of a gentleman called Gonçalo Vasques of Azebedo, his cousin and very familiar, being of the Kings counsell, whom shee would also draw into this danger. These letters were directed to the King of Castile and did treat of matters against the seruice of the King D. Fernand, whom shee did aduertise that they had beene surprized vpon the frontiers.

C The King giuing credit to her malice, after that hee had taken counsell of his wife, and of D. John Fernandes of Andeyro, hee commanded that the maister of Auiz, and Gonçal Vasques should be apprehended, and put into the tower of the castle of Eboia, where they were kept rigorously in chaines, the maister being ignorant of the cause of this his milery. As for D. Gonçal Vasques, hee remembered that hee had giuen care vnto his wife, telling him that on a time D. Gonçal Telles the Queenes brother, and D. John Fernandes of Andeyro her mignon, entering into her chamber all sweating, shee gaue them akerchise she had vpon her, to wipe themselves withall; and that D. John Fernandes approaching neere vnto her spake certaine lasciuious words, which being heard by the wife of Don Gonçal Vasques, and reported by her vnto her husband, hee was so indifferet as to tell the Queene thereof, aduertising the Queene of the Earles small respect vnto her, and of his impudency, whereof she, who wished him well, did not seeme to care: wherefore D. Gonçal doubted that this was the cause of his imprisonment, and that the Queene would dispatch him before the King should be aduertised thereof.

E Being thus imprisoned, the Queene did counterfet letters from the King, vnto Vasco Martin of Merlo, captaine of the castle of Eboia, by the which hee was commanded to murder these two personages: but being a discreet man, and considering the quality of the prisoners, thinking that hee must not proceed so lightly to the execution thereof, hee forbore, vntill hee had spoken with the King, to whom hee went the day after this charge, to know if it were his pleasure, that the maister of Auiz and Gonçal Vasques should be put to death. The King answered that hee knew not of it, commanding him not to touch them, and so he sent him backe, enioyning him to keepe it secret, and soone after hee went from Eboia, whereas the Queene remained; who seeing that her desires did not succeed, shee tooke a milder course, and sought to bee reconciled to these two personages, who were freed from their irons, and within few daies after set at liberty. Some time after, the Queene being at masse, shee caused them to come vnto her, shewing them the best countenance they could desire, and invited them to dinner, the which they did vnwillingly accept, fearing shee would cause them to be poisoned: yet they did eate in the Queenes lodging, in the company of the Earle of Oren, to whom after dinner, discourfing of her rings and jewels, shee gaue (in their presence) a Ring, set with a rich ruby, pressing him to take it, although hee excused himselfe, to the end shee might not forget any thing to be held very impudent.

F Amidst these tumults, D. Isabella the Kings bastard daughter, who had beene made sure by the last treaty of peace, to D. Alphonso of Castile, Earle of Gijon, base sonne to King Henry, was married at Burgos, whereat the Earle was much grieved: an vnfortunate marriage,

Treachery of the Queene
D. Leonora
against the maister of
A-uiz

Imprisonment
of the maister of Auiz, and
D. Gonçal
Vasques.

Impudency of the Queene
D. Leonora.

marriage, of which there was one sonne borne, who was called D. Henry. But the marriage which was made betwixt D. Beatrix sister to the King D. Fernand, and D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, was blessed of God: so as a daughter which they had, called D. Leonora, the sole heire of her fathers great Estates, was married to D. Fernand Infant of Castile Lord of Lara, and Duke of Pennafiel, sonne to the King D. John the first, then reigning, which D. Fernand came afterwards to be King of Arragon and Sicile. Shee was Queene of these realmes, and mother of fise children, renowned by the Histories of Castile and Arragon, of whom we shall hereafter make mention. This King Fernand of Portugal being in good peace with his neighbours, considering what had happened in the city of Lisbon, in the last warre of Castile, for want of good walles, he caused it to be fortified and walled about from Saint Catherins gate vnto Saint Vincents. And as hee was carefull of this publike worke so hee did gratefie the Franciscan Friars of Saint Iren, causing the quier of their church to be built, with other workes of deuotion. This is all we finde in Histories of the affaires of Portugall, vnto the yeere of our Lord 1380. that the aboue mentioned marriage betwixt Don Henry sonne to King John the first of Castile, and Donna Beatrix the daughter of Portugal, was concluded with the aboue named conditions, for the succession of the two Realmes, by the iurruuance of the two Kings.

Buildings
made by D.
Fernand King
of Portugal.

An. 1380.

Castile.

18.

The King of Castile ac-knowledgeth
the Pope as Auisgon.

About the end of this yeere, Donna Leonora Queene of Castile was brought in bed at Medina del Campo, of her sonne D. Fernand aboue named, who came to be King of Arragon, as we will shew.

At that time Spaine was a Neuter, in regard of the obedience which the two Popes pretended, and did affect in the Christian common weale, continuing some time in this Neutrality, by reason of the disagreement of the Prelats, who were assembled for that cause onely, at the instance of the Ambassadors of the two Popes, Clement and Fr-bain: but soone after it was declared by a sentence given by the King of Castile, and his counsell, that his countries should acknowledge Clement the seventh, for Pope, and Christs Vicar, he being resident at Auisgon, the King D. John inclining therein, as to other things to the French. The deuotion of men in Spaine, and other places, in those daies was contrarie to that of more ancient times: for whereas before they thought they could not giue sufficient to the Clergy, to augment their houses and reuenues, now euery one sought to spoile them, and to vsurpe their lands and reuenues: whereof the Abbots and Conuents of the Order of Saint Benet in Spaine, having complained, they had a notable sentence by Iudges deputed by the King for that businesse, against many Noblemen and Knights which detained their goods: yet they still inctroched vpon them all they could.

An. 1381.

In the yeere of our Lord 1381, died D. Jeanne Queene of Castile, mother to the King D. John, who through great deuotion had in a manner all her life time carried the habit of Saint Claire, and died in it, and appointed he should be buried in it: A great argument of the religion of that time. She lies at Toledo, in the Chappell of the last Kings.

19
Portugal.

The peace betwixt the Kings D. John of Castile, and D. Fernand of Portugal, was broken, by the bad counsell of a Knight, who had bene accustomed to be often shut vp with the Queene of Portugall, and was her favorite, hee was Earle of Oren. To giue some collour and beginning to this warre, the King D. Fernand sent to John Duke of Lancaster, perswading him, that as husband to D. Constance, daughter to the deceased King D. Pedro of Castile and Leon, hee should pursue his right which hee pretended to those Realmes. The English Prince relying vpon the fauour of Portugal, with the consent and aide of King Richard his Nephew, raised a thousand men at armes, or Launces, and a good number of foote, whereof he gaue the charge to his brother Edmond of Langley, Earle of Cambridge, who led them into Spaine, for that the Duke could not goe in person to this warre. The English army arrived vpon the coast of Portugall, whereas the warre was already violent; for the King of Castile being aduertised of this practise, had led his army into the country, and taken the towne of Almoيدا: And at sea, euen vpon the arriual of the English army, Fernand Sanchez of Tour Admirall of Castile had taken twenty galleies of Portugal, with their Admirall D. Alphons Teller, Earle

Signon of Queene Leonora's Lessile and Portugal in war.

A Earle of Barcellos the Queenes brother, the which fell out vnhappyly for the King Don Fernand, who being sodainly transported with hatred against Castile, receiued this Prince Edmond, with al shewes of loue and royall pompe: and the more to gratefie him, he made a promise of a future marriage, betwixt Donna Beatrix his daughter (who had bene twice before contracted) and Edward his son, a young child, which hee had had of Donna Isabella his wife, the third daughter of the deceased King Don Pedro of Castile, there present; yea he made them to marry and lie together, and to confirme this marriage, they performed al accustomed ceremonies, except the consummation, which could not bee, by reason of the tender age of both parties, the Bridegroom being not full sixe yeeres old. During their stay, the English (before they were led to the warre) spared not the Portugals, but made spoile of their goods, as if they had bene in the country of Castile: So as the Portugals in steed of one warre, found themselves ingaged betwixt two enemies, hauing the Castilians abroad, and the English within their houses.

King of Portugal makes and breakes his daughters marriage at his pleasure.

In the yeere of our Lord 1382, the King D. Fernand went to field, with the Earle of Cambridge, and came and lodged his army at Yelbes: On the other side the army of Castile camped at Badajos, whereas hauing continued some daies without any exploit of armes, a peace was concluded, and Donna Beatrix Infanta of Portugall was the fourth time promised to Don Fernand the younger sonne of Don John King of Castile, the King of Portugall being glad this marriage should take place, to the end his Realme should not bee vnited to the crowne of Castile.

An. 1382.

In the meane time Donna Leonora Queene of Castile died, in the towne of Cuellar, being brought in bed of a daughter, which died also. The Queenes bodie was carried to Toledo, and interred in the chappell of the last Kings. This Princeesse is honoured for her vpright and good conscience aboute all the Ladies of her time, whereof some authors bring this example: Certaine Iewes deputed from the Sinagogues of them of their sect, dwelling vpon the Queenes Lands, being come for some affaires vnto the court, being moued with good will vnto their Ladie, by reason of her vertues, and good behauiour, came vnto her Confessor being an Arragonian, a verie religious man, of a good life, and told him, that they vnderstood the Queene had occasion for to vie a certaine summe of money, and knowing how much the Iewes, dwelling in her countrie, did honour her, they intreated him to let her vnderstand that shee should demaunde what money shee pleased of their Sinagogues, being assured it should bee verie willingly furnished; and that withall hee should certifie her, that the Iewes desired to doe her this seruice, for that since the time shee had bene their Ladie shee had neuer employed them. The Confessor thinking to bring pleasing newes vnto the Queene, made report of the Iewes speech, and perswaded her by all meanes for to make vie of their kinde offer, assuring her that shee might take with a good conscience that which they did willingly present vnto her. But the Queene answered him, that shee would neuer doe any such thing, and that God forbidde that shee should exact money, or any other thing of any person, for the which the King, she or their children might be cursed. And notwithstanding any reply the religious man could make shee would not yeeld vnto it, but willed him for to thanke the Iewes.

Integrity of
the Queene
D. Leonora.

Don Fernand King of Portugal, hearing of the death of Donna Leonora Queene of Castile, hee beganne to practise a fifth marriage for his daughter Donna Beatrix, with the King Don John himselfe; sending sodainly vnto him, being then at Pin-to, three Leagues from Madrid, to know his minde therein. The King Don John made no deliaie, but (with the aduice of his good seruants) entred presently into capitulation with the Ambassadors of Portugal, who were therein duellie instructed: Amongst other Articles it was agreed that the children issuing of this marriage, should bee Kings of Portugal.

And some daies after hee married Donna Beatrix Infanta of Portugall, hauing escaped many other parties of lesse preferment. The marriage was celebrated, at Badajos, or at Yelbes, according vnto some, in the yeere of the Incarnation 1383. the

D. John King of Castile marries the Infanta of Portugal.

Eff

Death of Ferdinand King
of Portugall

20.
Castile.

Rebellion of Don Alphonso
Earle of Gijon, Aer of Castile
whilst was 21

Portugal.

Disposition of the Kingdom
of Portugall.

King of Castile
enters Aragon and Portugal and is not well received.

the Queene Donna Leonora Telles de Meneses her mother being present, the King Don A Fernand remaying at Lisbon very sicke, where within few daies after hee died, having reigned but ill fixteene yeeres and nine monthes, the three and forthi yeere of his age.
His body was buried at Saint Iren, in the Franciscans church, where as D. Constance Ma- nuel his mother is also interred.

After the marriage betwixt Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon, and Donna Isabella of Portugal, against the liking of Don Alphonso, hee did neuer loue the King his brother, some times hee rebelled, and caused reuolts, and then was reconciled, but it lasted not long. At this second marriage of the King Don John, hee was in the Asturias, where hee put all into combustion, against whom the King sent some companies of men at armes.

This yeere of our Lord 1383, was held a generall assembly of the Estates at Segobia.
And for that vnto that time they had accounted the yeeres according vnto the Era of Cesar, which differed eight and thirty yeeres from the accounts which was then in use in other Christian Kingdomes, it was ordained that the Castilians should take the beginning of their yeeres from the nativity of Christ: the which was more fit for Christians, than to retain the memory of Cesar Augustus. This manner of accounting the Era had bene long before left in Nauarre and Arragon, but was retained by for some time in Portugal. The cause of this name of Era is diuersly related, but the most probable is, that the ancients hauing accustomed to write these wordes A. N. S. C. erat Augusti centes. or some other number, by abreuiation thus, A. E. R. A. C. the which the vulgar people ioyning these letters together pronounced Era. C. the which was afterwards vied vnto that time. They say that the last letters which were dispatched in the court of Castile, where the Era of Cesar was obserued, were two preiudges granted by the King Don John, the one to the towne of Santa Cruz of Cestone; the other to Villa Real of Virechua, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1421. of the Era, answering to that of our Lord 1383. from the birth of Christ.

The King Don John, before his departure from Segobia, did celebrat the funerals of his father in law, in which Realme, by an Article made in the treaty of marriage of the Infanta Don Beatrix, Queene of Castile, and heire proprietarie thereof, the Queene Donna Leonora Telles her mother should remaine Regent. The chiefe of the Nobility of Portugal were of diuerse humours touching the succession of the Realme: for some (amongst which was the maister of the Knights of Auiz, base brother to the deceased King) would maintaine the right of Donna Beatrix, and called Don John King of Castile her husband, to come and take possession of the Realme, which did belong vnto him: others did abhorre the Castilians commaund, and could not endure that Portugal should be vnto Castile. The King Don John solicited by many letters and messages to come into Portugall tooke aduice of his counsell, whether hee should enter in hostile manner, or peaceably. The worst counsell was followed by him, which was, for: Wherefore hee speedily gathered together all the forces hee could, and first of all hee staied Don John of Portugall, one of the brethren of the deceased King Don Fernand, who hauing retired himselfe out of Portugal, by reason of the murder of Donna Maria Telles de Meneses, and the mallice of the Queene Donna Leonora, had serued the crowne of Castile faithfully. But fearing least hee should cause some troubles in Portugal, hee caused him to be put prisoner in the castile of Toledo, from whence hee was afterwards remooued to Almonacid, three leagues from the cite.
Hee also caused Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon to be imprisoned, who stirred vpp se-ditions in Castile: and then with those small forces which hee had, hee marched to La Garde, where hee was receiued by the Bishop of that place; but the captain of the fort would not acknowledge him, knowing the diuerse dispositions of the Nobility, and vnderstanding all the troubles which had happened at Lisbon since the Kings death.

The Queene widowe did reside in this chiefe Citie of the Realme, being assisted by Don Henry Muniz, Earle of Sintra, Vncle to the deceased King by the mothers side, by Don John Maister of Auiz, and others which did fauour the Queene Donna Beatrix,
and

A and had set vp the armes of Castile and Portugal quartered, as the Don John had taken him: but the ielousie which was bred in the hearts of the Noblemen, and people, by the too great familiarity which was betwixt the widow Queene and Don John Fernan- des of Andeyro Earle of Oren, moued the maister of Auiz (who remembered still his imprisonment) to enter into quarrell with him, the which proceeded so farre, as the Earle was slaine in the Queenes lodging, which was at a place called Limonero: and instantly (as if it had bene a thing premeditated) the people of the city fell in such a mutiny, as not any one durst burie the Earle. Don Fernandes body, in the day time, but they were forced to staie till night, to put him secretly in the ground at Saint Martins; Queene Leonora being so amazed, as shee sought all meanes to flee out of Lisbon: And the rage of this multitude was so violent, as they fell vpon Don Martin their Bishop, who, blaming them for their infolencies and rebellion against the Queene, they chased him into a tower of his church, into the which this poore prelate had fled to saue himselfe from the rage of the people, where they beseeched him, and entering into the tower, cast him downe head-long pouring forth a thousand iniu-rious words against the Queene Donna Leonora, the Earle and the Bishop: whose bodie being stript, they drag'd it by the heeles to the place of Ruse, where this miserable spectacle laie all that day, and the next night following, and then they buried it in the market; the furious multitude not suffering it to haue Christian buriall.

In the meane time the Queene Donna Leonora got away, and leauing this mutinous city, retired to Alauquer, and from thence to Saint Iren, where as shee vnderstoode that many other townes, especially Ebora had done the like, taking armes tumultuouly against her and her faction. At Ebora the heads of the multitude were Vincens Ianes a Taylor, and one called Gonsill Ianes, who committed strange infolencies, as it is the custome of a mutinous multitude. Amongst others, knowing that the Abbesse of Saint Benet was allied to the Queene Donna Leonora, they entred into her Church and pulled her from the Altar, holding that which keeps the Hoste in her armes, imploring in vaine the aide thereof, and the mercie of the commons, and so drew her into the market-place, where they murdered her most cruelly.

The Portugall authors write, that in that citie, a little small Infant being in the cradell, in the house of one Stephen Ianes, did rise three times out of her swaddling clothes, and stretching out the armes, cried, Portugal, Portugal, for the King Don John; the which was then ambiguous, but afterwards (by reason of the euent) was applied to the maister of Auiz, who was also called Don John. The King of Castile being aduertised of all these disorders, went to Saint Iren, to his mother in law, about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1384. where to free her selfe from trouble and daunger, and to gratifie the King her sonne in law, shee yielded vnto him all the right shee had to the Government of the Realme. Hether came many Noblemen and Gentlemen holding the partic of the King Don John, to doe him homage: who by this good beginning conceiued great hope that all would succeed well and wishfully, and that hee should restore his mother in law to her dignity. Don John of Portugall maister of Auiz, a young Prince, but vertuous, hauing bene prouoked by the dishonest conuersation of the Queene Donna Leonora, with the Earle of Oren, to take armes, knowing the nature of this woman, by former experience, with the hazard of his life; hee would no more fall into her power, but aspired to the regencie of the Realme, and wholly to deprive both her and the King D. John her sonne in law of all government.

In this designe hee found such fauour and support of the Nobility and townes, who had long detested the manners of the Queene, and the deceased King her husband, as hee had meanes to resist the attempts of the King of Castile, and to make himselfe a way to the crowne. And to make the name of Castile more odious to them who desired not the vnion of these two Realmes, hee caused a standard to be made, in the which was painted D. John of Portugall his brother, a prisoner, standing at a grate in the castile of Toledo, causing it to be displaid in the city of Lisbon, in view of all the people, who were already mutined, which made them to arme with great resolution against the forces of Castile, who soone after came and presented themselves before
the

Earle of Oren
the Queene of
Portugal
Miguel Ianez

Mutiny at Lisbon.

Bishop of Lisbon Don Ianez by the mutines

Prodigious
Ebora

An. 1384.

D. John maister of Auiz to the government of Portugal.

All of the maisters of A-uiz to make the standard odious.

drew young Gaston their sonne to poison his father and gaue him a venomous poulder A to that end, telling him that it was a remedy to make him change the hatred hee bare him and his mother, into loue. This young Nobleman being simple and ill aduised, believing what the King his vnclie had said vnto him, he returned into Foix, to his father, with an intent to season him some meate with this poulder, but hee could not so play his part, but casting the poulder into the meate, it was perceived by the cookes, or otherwife discovered: wherefore the Earle commanded his sonne and onely heire to be taken, causing him to die miserably in prison, so as after him hee left none but bastards, which did not succeed in the Earledome of Foix: one of them was Bernard, who serued Henry the second King of Castile, in the conquest of the realme against the King D. Pedro, and was rewarded by him, and endowed with lands and Estates in Castile, from whom descended the dukes of Medina Celi, or Zelim, who by the mothers side belong to the blood of Castile, according to the order which followeth.

My table
death of young Gaston of Foix.

beginning of the house of Celi or Zelim.

D. Fernand de la Cerde, eldest sonne to D. Alphonso the Wife, or the Philosopher, left two sons, D. Alphonso and D. Fernand: of D. Alphonso, married into France, came D. Lewis Earle of Clermont, and D. Charles, or Iohn, according vnto some, Countesse of France, and Earle of Angoulême. D. Lewis Earle of Clermont married in Andalusia, Don and Leonora of Guzman, daughter to D. Alphonso Peres of Guzman, and was Lord of Hulua, and of Port Santa Maria, and other lands in the right of his wife: of which marriage issued Don Lewis, Don Iohn, and Donna Isabella de la Cerde. This Donna Isabella was by C the King Don Henry the second, being settled in the realme of Castile, married to Bernard bastard of Foix, and had in dowry Medina Celi, with the title of an Earle; of them came D. Gaston, surnamed de la Cerde, leaving the name of the house of Foix; and Bernard. Hee was the second Earle of Medina Celi, and married Donna Mencía of Mendoza, daughter to Don Pedro Gonzalez of Mendoza, a great Nobleman in Alaua: by her hee had one sonne called Don Lewis, who was the third Earle of Medina Celi, and married with Donna Iean Sarmiento, daughter to Diego Peres Sarmiento, from whom came Don Gaston de la Cerde the second, and fourth Earle of Medina Celi, who married Donna Leonora of Mendoza, daughter to Don Luigo Lopez of Mendoza, Marquis of Semillana, from whom descended Don Lewis which succeeded him in the Earldome, in whose time it was made a Dutchy, D. Lewis married Donna Anna of Nauarre and Arragon, base daughter to D. Charles, Infant of Nauarre and Arragon. This is the Genealogy of the house of the dukes of Medina Celi.

King Charles
a Leaper.

Such, as wee haue sayd, were the actions of Charles King of Nauarre, whom in the end God strooke with a Leaprosie, which made him to leaue all care of the affaires of this world, and to giue himselfe to workes of piety, according to the manner of those times, which was to build chapells, to ordaine Masses and Anniversaries for his deceased parents, and to adde rents and giue entertainment to Clergy men and Priestes which did the seruice: but aboue all hee labored to liue in peace with Christian Princes.

The Infant Charles being come into Nauarre about the beginning of the warre betwixt Castile and Portugal, the King Don Iohn demanded some supplies of souldiars out of Nauarre, to lead with him, wherevnto the King of Nauarre consented willingly, remembering the good Offices hee had done with the French for his sonnes liberty, whom hee sent well accompanied to this warre, being vnable to goe in person, by reason of his indisposition. The Infant made some stay with his wife Donna Leonora, who was in Castile, and then passing on, hee came to the King being incamped before Lisbon, where hee staid not long, the King Don Iohn being forced to raise the siege by reason of the plague which ruined his armie, and returne into Castile, as wee haue said, dismissing the Infant his brother in law, with all loue and content.

23.
Portugal.
Affaires of the King of Castile
succeed well
in Portugal.

The yeere 1385. being come, the King D. Iohn preparing to returne into Portugal, hauing already sent some ships and gallies against Lisbon, hee had news that the souldiars which hee had left in Saint Iren, had defeated some troupes of Portugal, whose leaders were the maister of the Knights of Christ, and the Prior of Saint Iohn, of reason of which victorie, many places within the Realme had planted the Standard of Castile.

A Castile: wherefore he made all the haste he could to enter into Portugall, being loth to let slip this occasion: Before his departure, he propounded in council to put his brother the Earle of Gijon to death: but he was perswaded by many graue reasons and examples to forbear.

Don Iohn Master of Auiz, a bastard, the first of that name, and tenth in number, chosen King of Portugal.

IN Portugal his aduersaries lost no time, but provided for all that was necessarie for a future warre: for the better managing whereof, they were of aduise to chooe one, who should haue soueraigne authoritie among the rest, for the effecting whereof, the Noble men and Knights of the Realme, who reiected the gouernement of Castile (among the which the most eminent were, Don Iohn Master of Auiz, and Don Nuno Aluarez Pereira) assembled in the citie of Coimbra, and there held a kind of Parliament, whither also came the Deputies of the townes of their partie: there it was debated whether they should chooe a Regent or a King. Many were of opinion they should chooe a king, and gaue their voices, some to Don Iohn Master of Auiz, base sonne to the king Don Pedro; others sayd, it was more reasonable to make Don Iohn lawfull sonne to the king Don Pedro, king, who was prisoner in Castile.

Assembly in Portugal for the election of a king.

Many considering the wrong they did therein to the Queene D. Beatrice, were of opinion, that it was better to seeke some good accord with Don Iohn king of Castile her husband: whereunto some did oppose, saying, that the Queene D. Leonora Telles de Meneses could not be lawfull wife to king Fernand, hauing taken her by force from her husband Laurence Pasques of Acugna: and therefore D. Beatrice was no more legitimate then the Master of Auiz, and that being both base, it were better to acknowledge him for king, D then her: that as for the Infant D. Iohn a lawfull son, to whom the crowne of Portugal did rightly belong, that his deliuerie was vncertaine, and therefore they must not stand upon it, the Portugals hauing then need of a free king, to oppose himselfe against the attempts of Castile who sought to oppress them. This opinion prevailed, and they all consented to chooe D. Iohn Master of Auiz, for king of Portugal, and so he was proclaimed eightene moneths after the interregne, in the Monasterie of Saint Francis of Coimbra, in Aprill, this yeare 1385. the people crying out, that it was that king which was prophesied by the Infant at Eborá, whereof mention was made.

Don Iohn Master of Auiz chosen king of Portugal.

This king is called by the Portugals (of happie memorie) for that he freed the country from the Castilians, whose gouernement was exceeding hateful vnto them: he was also furnished the Bastard, for that the king D. Pedro begat him out of marriage. He shewed a great courage and generositie in the reception of this great charge, to defend a Realme diuided, against the power of the king of Castile, being allyed to France and Nauarre, but a Royaltie, and the liberty of his country, did sufficiently require the perill and danger which hee did vndergo. The king D. Iohn being aduertised of that which the Portugals had done at the Estates at Coimbra, he sent D. Pedro Troncoso Archbishop of Toledo, a Portugall borne, with some troupes, to retaine in their fidelitie such as followed his party in Portugal. This Prelate entering the countrey by Viseu, made a miserable spoile where hee past, for which hee finatred soone after, being encountered and defeated by the Portugals nere to Troncoço. On the other side, the inhabitants of Algarbe, following the new kings F partie, had seized vpon the towne of Mertola, and as they battered the castile, they were suddenly charged by them of Seuille, and put to flight: the leader was D. Aluaz Peres of Guzman, Gouernour of that city, a yong Nobleman of 18. years of age: and in a manner at the same instant the Castilians tooke a great quantitie of victuals and munition, which they of Ylbes and Estremoz kept in Ronchez. The king of Castile resoluving to beseege Lisbon againe, had prepared many vessels both for war, and to carrie victuals, the which came

Castilians defeated at Tron-coço.

exploits of the new king of
Portugal.

came neere vnto Lisbon, and kept the mouth of the riuer, so as no man could go in, or A come out from Lisbon. All this did not daunt the new king of Portugal, but hauing speedily assembled his forces, he went to assaile Guimaraes, the which was valiantly defended by Arias Gomes of Silua a Portugal, who was affected to the king of Castile, yet it was yeelded vpon a good composition: after which he tooke the citie of Brags, pour de Liuan, with other places and forts.

Whilest these things past in Portugal, the king of Castile, burning with desire to see himselfe king of this other Realme, made great preparations, and notwithstanding that his Councillors vpon his returne into Portugal were of diuers opinions, yet he yeelded to those that perswaded him to enter: wherefore leauing Donna Beatrice his wife at Aui- B la, he marched towards Portugall, and layed seerge to Cillorico de la vera, where during his stay, considering the doubtfull euents of warre, especially against Rebels, the vipers of Realmes, who shew themselves alwaies violent, hee made his will, and sent it to the Arch-bishop of Toledo to keepe, by the which hee ordained many things, the which shall be specified in the life of his sonne and successour Don Henry, which bred much trouble within the Realme, for that hee gaue out, whilest he liued, and after the making of this will, that he meant to alter many things, and yet he made no other will, whereof the chiefe witnesses were Don Pedro of Arragon, sonne to D. Alphonso the first Constable of Castile, and Marquis of Villena, D. John cap de Vasa Bishop of Coimbra, Peter Gonzales of Mendoza, Lord Steward of the kings house, Diego Gomes Manrique great Governour of C Castile, Pedro Lopes of Ayala, Standard-bearer of the Order of the Band, with Tello Gonzales Palameque, and other men of marke. The Castile of Cillorico was taken, from whence the armie marched towards Coimbra, burning all the villages thereabouts, and so passing on by Leyra, they came and camped at Soria, whereas a messenger sent by Don Nugno Alvarez Pereira newly created Constable of Portugal, came vnto the king, intreating him in his masters name, to auoyd the battell, which should be soone presented vnto him, and that it might be there would be means to come to some good accord, if it were earnestly fought.

This was but the Constables policie, to stay the king of Castile, for that the king of Portugalls armie was not strong enough to encounter their enemies: whereunto the king D made a gracious answer. The new king of Portugal was in Arbanes very penfue, seeing himselfe much inferior to his enemy, who besides the Castilians, which were in great numbers, had many Noblemen of Portugal in his armie, the which beeing within a league and a halfe of that of Portugal, there were many things propounded, to end their quarrels without a battell, but they were all without effect: for the king of Castile finding himselfe strong, had a desire to fight, promising vnto himselfe all aduantages, and yet his captaines were of another opinion; and among others, Monfieur de Rie, Chamberlaine to the French king, and his ambassador with the King of Castile, a Gentleman 70. yeres old, and a capraine of great experience, saying, that his men were wearie, and it was late, and that the Portugall army, in the which were 2200. men at armes, and 10000. foote, were E camped in a place of strength: from whence, if he would haue patience, hee should see them soone dislodge for want of victuals, beeing aduertised that they had not any meate, but for that night: that vpon their dislodging he should haue better oportunitie to fight with them: & if they went to affront them in the place where they were, it was likely they should reape more shame then honor, But notwithstanding all these reasons, hee would needes fight: wherefore the Castilians hauing put their armie in battell, they were receiued courageously by the Portugals, along the mountaines of Maos, in the fields nere vnto the village of Aljubarot, where at the first charge, notwithstanding all the indeauour of the Portugall fore-ward, they gaue ground to the Castilians: but the new king of Portugal flying thither with his squadron, not onely fortified his men, but also charging the enemy with great courage (who thought they had won all, and fought without order, & carelessly) he brake them, and put them to a shamefull flight with great slaughter, the king of Castile himselfe being in danger, who fled 11. leagues that night vnto S. Iren, where he arrived at the breake of day in great perplexity, and then recovering the sea-shore, hee caused himselfe to be carried to Seule.

Battel of Aljubarot and the Castilians defeated.

Polydore

A Polydore Virgil in his Historie of England, failes in the discourse of this battell, saying, that Edmond Earle of Cambridge was there with good troupes of English for the new king of Portugal against him of Castile, and giues the honour of the battell to the English: but it appears by all the Spanish Writers, (more credible in matters of Spaine then strangers) that the coming of the Earle of Cambridge into Portugall was not at that time, but in the life of king Fernand. Neither were there any French troupes for the king of Castile, as some Authors make mention. Vpon the place of battell there was an Hermitage built to S. George, who is held to be the patron and protector of Portugal, as also of Arragon, as S. James is of Castile: and this victorie is more celebrated by the Portugals, then any they euer had: for that by reason thereof they were freed from the sub- B jection of Castile: it is called the battell of Aljubarote, or of S. George. In this battell there dyed many Noblemen of Castile; and among others Don Pedro of Arragon, sonne to the Constable of Castile, D. John of Castile, Lord of Aguilar del campo, son to D. Tello, L. of Biscay, D. Fernand of Castile, a yong Prince, son to D. Sancho, Earle of Albuquerque, Peter Dias Dama Prior of S. John, D. Diego Manrique, Governour generall of the frontier of Castile, D. Pedro of Mendoza, a Lord Steward of the king of Castiles house, Don John Fernandes of Touar high Admiral, D. Diego Gomes Sarmiento Governour of Galicia, Pedro Carrillo Marshall of Castile, D. Aluar Gonzales of Sandomal, and his brother Fernand Gonzales, D. John Ramir of Arellan, John Ortiz of Cueua, Gonzalo of Cerbantes, Ruy Braue, and Fernand Carrillo: and of the Portugals following the partie of Castile, D. John Alphonso Sello, Admirall of Portugall, brother to the Queene D. Leonora, D. Pedro Aluarez Pereira, Master of the Order of Calatraua, and his brother D. Diego Aluarez Pereira, brothers to D. Nugno Alvarez Constable of Portugal, Gonzal Paques of Azeuedo, with Aluar Gonzales his sonne, and others. There dyed also in this defeat Monfieur de Rie Ambassador for the French king, and his Chamberlaine. Great was the spoile of the Castilians campe, & many prisoners caried away by the Portugals, who hung vp their enignes & other spoils for trophies in the Monasterie of Alcouça, and in the chiefe church at Braga, and at the Carmes at Lisbon, the which were afterwards founded by the Constable D. Nugno Alvarez Pereira, and among others the royal Standard of Castile was taken. As for those which C escaped the battell, some gathered themselves together in S. Iren, and some of them recovered Castile, as well as they could. They of S. Iren hauing past the riuer of Tayo, with D. Gonzal Nugnes of Guzman, Master of Alcantara, (who was since made Master of the Calatraua) they ioyned with the forces of Nauarre and France, which the Infant Don Charles of Nauarre brought to the king of Castile his brother-in-law, but too late: wherefore they returned all together into Castile, hauing made all the spoile they could in the Realme of Portugal: the which by this battell of Aljubarote remained assured for the king Don John the tenth in number, and the first of that name, hauing attained to that royall dignity, to the which in the beginning he did not aspire, and that with the consent of the Nobilitie and States of the countrie.

Noblemen of Castile flaine
in the battell.

Portugals slaine
of the Castilians side.

The end of the sixteenth Booke.

THE

THE SEVENTEENTH BOOK of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 Don Iohn Master of the Knights of Auiz, chosen king of Portugall, the tenth in number, and the first of that name.
- 2 Continuation of the warre betwixt Castile and Portugal, in the which the English assisted the one, and the French the other.
- 3 Whence the title of a Prince in Spaine growes.
- 4 D. Charles the third of that name, and 31. king of Nauarre.
- 5 Marriage of Prince Henry of Castile, and Katherine of Lancaster.
- 6 Exploits of D. Iohn King of Portugal in Castile, and a truce betwixt the two Realmes.
- 7 Tyrannous priuiledges of the Nobility of Arragon. Troubles in Sardynia, Estates at Magon: policie of Sybille Queene of Arragon: authoritie of the Iustice Mator.
- 8 Contention betwixt the Arragonois and Angeuins for the rights of Majorca. Adoption of Lewis of Anjou by Queene Ione the first of Naples, who sold Auignon to the Pope, and what followed.
- 9 D. Iohn the first of that name, and 14. King of Arragon, his acknowledgement to the Pope in Auignon, during the Schisme. Estates in Arragon.
- 10 Marriage of Don Martin of Arragon, sonne to the Infant Don Martin, with the heire of Sicily.
- 11 Lisbon made an Arch-bishopricke.
- 12 Estates of Castile: at Guadaluara. Orders concerning souldiers and iustice. Erections of Duke domes and other Decrees.
- 13 The stay of D. Leonora Queene of Nauarre, wife to D. Charles the third in Castile, disliked: and the causes thereof: her excuses, and the Kings instance to haue her returne.
- 14 Institution of the Order of the holy Ghost in Castile.
- 15 Farjanes, a race of Christian Affricans, and the death of the king D. Iohn.
- 16 Coronation of D. Charles king of Nauarre, and the ceremonies thereunto accustomed.
- 17 D. Henry the third of that name, 17. king of Castile, and 38. of Leon. Carriage of D. Pedro Tenorio Arch-bishop of Toledo.
- 18 Marriage concluded betwixt D. Fernand brother to the king of Castile, and the heire of Albuquerque.
- 19 A testamentarie Decree made by the deceased king D. Iohn, and the resolutions taken by the Noblemen of Castile, for the quiet of the Realme.
- 20 Troubles among the Lords of the Councell, procured by the Arch-bishop of Toledo.
- 21 Seditious Preachers, incensing the people against the Iewes.
- 22 Continuance of troubles in Castile, and manes made by the Pope to pacifie them.
- 23 Persecu-

- A 23 Persecutions, thefts, and murders committed upon the Iewes, by the instigation of Preachers.
- 24 Confusions in Castile, entertained by great men, for private respects.
- 25 Troubles in Guipuzcoa against Collectors. Assembly in that prouince, and Articles of their union, and preservation of their priuiledges.
- 26 Meanes to reconcile the disordered passions of the Noblemen of Castile, but of small effect.
- 27 Treaties betwixt Portugal and Castile, and the practices of Don Frederic Duke of Beneuent.
- 28 Mutinie at Zamora.
- B 29 Treatie of peace betwixt Portugal and Castile: practices to pacifie D. Frederic. Factions, partialities, &c.
- 30 Truce for 15. yeares betwixt Castile and Portugal.
- 31 Troubles continued in Castile by the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and a peace mediated by the Princes allies.
- 32 D. Henry the third is declared of full age at 14. yeares.
- 33 Discouerie of the Islands of the Canaries.
- 34 Estates of Castile at Madrid. Marriage of the Infant D. Fernand. Discontents of D. Frederic Duke of Beneuent.
- C 35 Meanes to make D. Leonora Queene of Nauarre returne to her husband. Her practices with the Noblemen rebelled, Contemners of the Kings young yeares.
- 36 A foolish trial of the truth of Religion by armes, and what succeeded.
- 37 Meanes held by the king D. Henry to draw the Princes and Noblemen rebelled, to their duties. The Queene of Nauarre subdued, warre against the Earle of Gijon, and accord betwixt the king and him.
- 38 D. Pedro de Luna chosen Pope at Auignon, who by his obstinacie continued the Schisme.
- 39 The Queene of Nauarre sent to the king her husband.
- 40 Ieanne Countesse of Foix, wife to Matthew of Castelbon, reiected by the Arragonois from the succession of the Realme of Arragon.

Kings ruling in Spaine mentioned in this seuenteenth Booke.

Portugal.	Nauarre.	Arragon.	Castile and Leon.
10 D. Iohn Master of Auiz.	D. Charles 3. 14	D. Iohn 1. 17	D. Henry 3. 83.
1. 31

SUCH as are to rule ouer Nations, and especially where there is great store of Nobility, must be carefull how to gouerne their affections, left by their too great libertie they force their subiects, either in regard of their honours, or for their iust defence to haue recourse to armes. For it is often seene when a warre is kindled, and that they which are teamed Rebels, haue gotten any aduantage, they do no longer containe themselves within the bounds which at the first they had propounded, but they proceed, and seeke a totall change of the Estate, thinking they cannot be otherwise assured:

assured: or that the superior whom they would make their equall (which is the true effect of armes) can euer be a true and perfect friend. Such are chiefly possessed with this iea-lousie and distrust, as are to contend with men that are giuen to reuenge, and of base dispositions, as women and effeminate persons, who seeke to maintain their excellie by the name and credit of a Soueraigne degree wherein they are placed, thinking that this great-nesse doth purchase them a priuiledge in any thing they do, and giue authoritie to their cruelties and impieties, wherein they please themselves, although they be many times de-ceined: It is most certaine, and verified by infinit examples, that neither force, nor great-nesse can auayle a Prince, whose bad life makes him hatefull to his subiects. And on the other side, there is no such guard, as the loue of subiects, the which is concited by the opinion of vertue. Opinion follows the effects: and therefore a Prince should be alwaies carefull what opinion men should haue of him, and remember still the precept of the wife: That a man must be alwaies such as he would be esteemed. If he be giuen to impudence and voluptuousnesse, with the oppression and ruine of his subiects, let him assure himselfe, that good men will hate and detest him and his actions, and estrange themselves from him: so as he shall remaine ingaged among flatterers, where many times he is impeded, but at the least he is for cuer infamous. The name of Rebelle is iustly detested, but the common people iudge by the euents, and the wife and well-advised according to the causes.

And there is nothing more certaine, whatsoeuer the flatterers of Court say, that neuer any Conspiracie against a Soueraigne Magistrate was durable, or could take roote, if the hearts of the subiects were not formerly distracted by the Princes owne guilt and excessie. But if it please God to stirre vp some noble courage, who imbrace the pub-licke cause, then shall a tyrant hardly auoid his due punishment, whereof Spaine affords vs assured proofes in Don Pedro King of Castile, and D. Leonora Telles of Mendez, widow to king Ferdinand, and Regent of Portugall, who by her vnchastnesse and tyrannie, as we haue formerly related, ruined her selfe; and did frustrate Donna Beatrice her daughter of that Crowne, setting it vpon the head of Don Iohn the Bastard, Master of the Order of the Knights of Auiz her enemy, who had no lawfull right, and (it may bee) neither thought nor hoped to arraigne vnto it, but when hee saw himselfe armed and followed.

I
 Portugall.

This King notwithstanding his victorie, was alwaies called the Master of Auiz, by the Castilians, who would not aduow him for king, to the preiudice of their Queene Donna Beatrice: and the king D. Iohn his aduersarie intitled himselfe king of Castile, Leon, Portugal, Toledo, Gallicia, Seuille, Cordoua, Murcia, Iaca, Algarue, Algezire, and Lord of Lara, Biscay and Molina, some few daies after this great victorie wonne by the Portugal. S. Iren yielded, with all that countie, there remaining not any place on this side the mountaines, that held for the king of Castile. At Saint Iren D. Nugno Aluarez of Pereira Constable of Portugall, was made Earle of Oren, in recompence of his valour and faith-full seruice: and the new king D. Iohn vied great bounty vnto all the Castilians that were prisoners, sending them home free without any ranfome. After that time, leaving the conduct of the warre to his Constable, he employed his time in workes of pietie, and gi-uing thanks to God for the victorie which he had giuen him, that is, he went in pilgrimage on foote to Saint Mary of Oliuera of Guimaraes, which is foure daies journey from S. Iren. In the meane time the Constable passing Guadiana, entred into Castile with two thousand lances, comprehending the light horse and genetis, and good troupes of foote, where he got another victorie against the Castilians: whereof the king his master was aduertised being at Porto; who to reward the Constable, and to encourage him to do better, he gaue him the title of Earle of Barcelos. This Constable, besides that hee had in him the chiefe parts and ornament which make Nobility, hee was issued from one of the noblest families in Portugal: for his father Don Aluar Gonçales had beene Prior of S.
 Iohn, or of Crato, as the Portugals say, being at the battaile of Salado or Tariffa, wonne against the Moores, in the year 1340. by the kings D. Alphonso the 12. of Castile, and D.
 Alphonso the fourth of Portugal, he founded our Ladies Church of Fleur de Rose, and the strong castle of Ameyra, with the palace of Bonjardin.

This

Liberalitie of the new king
 of Portugall.

A This Prior besides many other children (for some say he had 32.) had this Don Nugno Aluarez of Pereira, Constable of Portugal, a great and famous Captaine, the founder of the house and state of Bragance: whose mother was called Heira Gonçales of Caruahal, he being borne in the year 1360. At the age of seuentene years he married the widow of Vasco Gonçales Barosso, a chiefe Nobleman in Portugal: of which marriage besides two sonnes which dyed young, issued one daughter named D. Beatrice, who was heire to her fathers Estate, and was married to D. Alphonso of Portugal, bane sonne to this king Don Iohn, who was borne whilst he was Master of Auiz, of a mistress of his called D. Agnes, she being afterwards made commandresse of Santos. This Constables Grandfather was D. Gonçalo Pereira, Arch-bishop of Braga, a Prelate of a royall magnificence in his manner of liuing, and exceeding bountifull. The Constable hauing charge to continue the war, whilst that the King D. Iohn was otherwise employed touching the gouernement of the realme, he past into the Prouinces beyond the mountaines, where hee reduced to the new kings obedience, Chaucis, Bragance, Almeyda, and other places, which held yet for the Queene D. Beatrice, and her husband the king of Castile, so as there remayned few which were not made subiect, and brought vnder the iurisdiction of Don Iohn king of Portugal.

But for that such quarrels are not determined by one or two victories gotten by the weaker, against one more mighty, the new king duly considering all this, and with good counsell, thought it necessarie, that D. Iohn king of Castile should be quite ruined, that he might the better maintaine his new conquest, and to this end he called the English with the pretext of apparent right: for as we haue sayd, the Duke of Lancaster, Vncle to king Richard the second then reigning, hauing married D. Constance daughter to the deceased king D. Pedro of Castile, pretending that the Realmes of Castile and Leon did belong to him, and carried the title and armes. Wherefore Ambassadors were sent vnto him, to summon him to come into Spaine, with assurance and promise, that he should be assisted with all the forces and means of Portugal, protesting that if he let slip this goodly occasion, besides the losse, he should reape dishonor, and be scorned of all the world. On the other side, D. Iohn king of Castile, hauing beene visited by the Infant of Nauarre, who came expressly to Seuille, and receiued letters from Pope Clement at Auignon, full of consolation, he came to Valledolid, and there held a generall assembly of the Estates of his Realmes, from whence he sent Ambassadors to Charles the sixth the French king, intrea-ting him to send him succours to recouer his Realmes of Portugal and Algarbe, his wifes patrimonie, which were detayned from him by a bastard rebell. Thus these two princes called in strangers to the preiudice of Spaine.

John King of Portugal calls the English in to Spaine.

D. Iohn King of Castile calls in the French.

The Duke of Lancaster passed into Portugall with fiftene hundred Lances, and as many Archers on foot: and Lewis Duke of Bourbon the kings Vncle, was sent out of France with two thousand Lances in fauour of D. Iohn king of Castile. The English armie running along the coast of Galicia, tooke sixe galleies of Castile, and came to the Groine on Saint Lames day, in the year 1386. In the meane time the king of Portugal had led his armie into Castile, and besieged the towne of Coria, but could not take it. It was then that he sayd, He had need of the good Knights of the round table, to which hee was answered by Men Rodriguezes of Valconcellos, that they had also need of a king Arthur, who could distinguish and reward good Knights: the which the king D. Iohn turned to a least and would not seeme to be touched.

At this seege hee had newes, that the Duke of Lancasters armie was landed: wherefore hee presently dislodged, and came to receiue and entertaine them at pont du Maure, nere vnto the Towne of Porto: The Duke had brought with him his wife Donna Constance of Castile, and two daughters, the one by her, whose name was Katherine, the other by his first wife, called Philippe. At this interview, a marriage was treated betwix the King Don Iohn and that Ladie Philippe, who was then deliuered into the hand of the King, her future husband, and soone after they were married, with such pompe as con-sorted with their persons and dignities.

Hauing consulted concerning the warre, they beganne to spoyle the Countie of Galicia, where they took some places: but the heat of the plague, which consumed both the Ggg country

countrie people, and the English armie stayed the course of these conquests. The King of A Castile had fortified and manned the citie of Leon, Benaudent, and other places in Galicia with good Garrisons, vntill he went to field, vpon the coming of those succours which hee expected from France and Nauarre. In the meane time hee caused the Duke of Lancaster to bee dealt withall about an Accord, but hee continued constant in his demands to haue the Realmes of Castile and Leon: Wherevpon the King sent Ambassadors vnto him, to let him vnderstand publicly, that hee should content himselfe with that which hee had done, and not to vex the Countie any more: and that if hee pretended any wrong were done vnto him by him, hee desired him to the combat, man to man; and hee that vanquished should bee King of Castile: but vnder hand the Ambassadors had charge to propound other conditions vnto him, wherevpon they came to treatie of a marriage betwixt the Infant Don Henry of Castile, and Catherine the Dukes daughter, by Donna Constance, with many offers, which were not accepted, at the least it did not then appeare so: for the Portugals hauing ioyned with the English armie, they marched farther into the territories and iurisdictiones of Leon, in the year 1387. and beseged Benaudent in vaine, they passed by Villalobos, Piasas, and Valderas, the which they took: from whence returning with the plague; and moreover they had newes that the French supplies had passed Nauarre, and were entering into Castile: the which aduanced the conclusion of a peace betwixt the King of Castile, and the Duke of Lancaster, the which C was made at Troncofo with these conditions:

Accord betwixt the king of Castile and the Duke of Lancaster.

That the Infant Don Henry the eldest sonne of Castile, should marrie Catherine, the daughter of the Duke of Lancaster, and of his wife Donna Constance of Castile, for whose dowrie the king D. Iohn should assigne certaine places: That the citie of Guadalajara, with the townes of Medina del campo, and Olmeco should be given to the Dutchesse D. Constance, to enioy the reuenues thereof during her life: That the king should pay sixtie thousand pounds sterling to the Duke, and to D. Constance his wife at certaine dayes: and moreover, foure thousand pounds pension during their liues, and the longer liuer of them. In consideration whereof, the Duke of Lancaster and Donna Constance should renounce all rights, actions and pretensions which they challenged to the Realmes of Castile, Leon, and their dependances, and that the places taken in Galicia should be restored. This accord beeing thus concluded, the Duke retired himselfe into the towne of Porto, where he made his accord also with the King of Portugal: to which treatie it seemes the Duke had bene forced by the plague, which had consumed two third parts of his men. The duke of Lancaster then hauing for the fruites of his voyage married his two daughters to two kings, he returned into Guienne in the year 1387. not very well satisfied with the King of Portugal, nor the king with him. Of the marriage of Don Iohn king of Portugal, and of D. Philippe, there came this issue: first, they had a daughter called D. Blanche, which dyed young in Lisbon: then the Infant D. Alphonso borne in the year 1391. at S. Iren, who liued not about two years: their third child was Don Edward borne in the Towne of Visco, and succeeded in his fathers Realme. Moreover, they had the Infant D. Pedro, borne at Lisbon in the year 1392. he was Duke of Coimbra, and Lord of Mont Major the old, and of Amero: then the Infant Don Henry, of whom the Queene was deliuered at Porto, hee was Duke of Visco, and Master of the Knights of Christus, and it was he which first discovered the Ilands of Madera in the Ocean sea. Of this marriage also came Donna Izabella, borne at Eborra in the year 1397. who was Dutchesse of Bourgongne, and Countesse of Flanders, wife to Philip Duke of Bourgondie: by her was built the Monasterie of Prolonga neere vnto Sintra, of the Order of Saint Ierome. They had besides these the Infant Don Iohn, who was Master of Saint Iames, borne at Saint Iren in the year 1400. hee was Countable of the Realme, and beeing married with Donna Izabella daughter to Don Alphonso Duke of Bragance his bastard-brother, he was grandfather by the mothers side to D. Izabella Queene proprietarie of Castile and Leon. And in the end the king Don Iohn and Donna Philippe his wife had the Infant Don Fernand, borne in the year 1402. at Saint Iren, who was Master of Auiz, a zealous prince to the Christian Religion, and full of charity.

Before

A Before that the king Don Iohn came vnto the Crowne, beeing but Master of Auiz, he had two base children by a Gentlewoman called Donna Agnes, that is, Don Alphonso, Barcelles, and Duke of Bragance, called D. Beatrice; and one daughter named also Donna Beatrice, who was married to Thomas Earle of Arondel. This is the issue of the King D. Iohn the first of Portugal, who had yet a quarrell with the King of Castile, the pursuite whereof was deferred for a time: for the king of Castile beeing to performe his promise to the Duke of Lancaster, and to pay him great summes of money, he made choice at that time to send backe the French forces, and not to suffer them to stay B in his countrie, giving them part of their enteraynement, and good assurance for the rest. Then hauing held an assembly of the Estates at Birbieca, by reason the plague was at Burgos, he propounded the neede he had of money to pay the English Duke: and therefore he attempted to impose a generall Tribute vpon the Clergie, Nobility, and third Estate without exception, wherein he was crost, beeing forced to seeke some other expedient. From Birbieca he came to Soria, and then to Caloorra, where he heard the French Ambassadors, and sent others to Bayone, to the Duke of Lancaster, to confirme their accords: and then it was concluded anew, that from thence forth the Infant Don Henry should be called Prince of the Asturia's, and his wife Princeesse, after the manner of England; whereby the kings eldest son is called Prince of Wales: and then began the custom C to call the eldest of Castile Princes, whom before they called Infants, and it is an error to entitle them Princes of Castile or of Spaine: for they are not called Princes for any other occasion, but that they haue the Asturia's for their portion and interaynement, the which was made a principality, first in this D. Henry, and his wife D. Catherine: to the patrimony of which principality, Iden, Vbeda, Baeça, and Andujar haue bene since annexed. It is an error also to thinke that this title of principallitie is giuen to the Asturia's of Ouedo, for that in that region was the beginning of the recouerie of Spaine: for it proceeds not from anything else, but from this marriage betwixt Henry of Castile, and Donna Catherine of Lancaster. Before the king Don Iohn of Castile parted from Caloorra, Charles the third king of Nauarre, brother-in-law to king Iohn, came to visit him, with the Queene Donna D. Leonora of Castile his wife.

French succor
1 mile for
castile.

Title of Prince first giuen in Spaine to the Kings eldest sonne.

4
D. Charles the
3. of that name and 31. of Nbr
mar.

This prince had succeeded king Charles the Bad his father, in the year 1386. beeing dead at Pampelona of a Leprosie, as the Spaniards say, and the French Histories, of a disease he got by his incontinencie, whereof he languished long. It is he of whom they write that the Physicians hauing him in cure, applying Aqua-vita to restore him, they let fire of it, which tooke hold of the bed, so as he was burnt and could not be releued: Others say, that he was fowed vp in a sheet steeped in Aqua-vita, and that the Surgeon seeking to cut the threed, holding a waxe light, the sheet was suddenly set on fire and burnt the king: but howsoever, hee ended his daies in great sicknesse at Pampelona, in the year 1386, the five and fourth year of his raigne, hauing reigned 73. His body was interred in the Cathedral church of that citie, where the heart of the Queene his wife lyes, who dyed in France in the year 1378. his bowels were buried at Saint Maries of Roncevaux, and his heart at S. Maries of Vxue. The same year he dyed, his daughter Jeanne was first married to Iohn of Montfort Duke of Britanny, by whom he had foure sonnes, and three daughters, and afterwards to Henry King of England. Before his death he pacified the seditions which they of Pampelona had raised among themselves, causing the authors to be punished: among which, one of the chiefe was called Andrew of Turilles, who was executed.

Ggg 2

Charles

Charles the 3. of that name, the 31. King of Nauarre.

This Charles succeeded to the Realme of Nauarre, being called the Noble, for his bountie, affabilitie, and other vertues, which made him to be esteemed by all Christian Princes his neighbours, and generally beloued of all men. Hee was 25. yeares old, when he came to the Crowne. At the deceale of his father, he was at Pehnañel in Castile, with the King D. John his brother-in-law, of whom he tooke his leave with infinit teares, yppon the receit of these newes. And such was the loue and singular affection which the King of Castile bare him, as from the beginning of his raigne he granted him full restitution of the townes and castles of Tudela, S. Vincent, Viana, Guadara, Estella, Miranda, Larraga, and other places, which were in deposito since the last pacification made with Don Henry king of Castile, although the ten yeares capitulated were not yet expired: moreover he forgave him 20000. doubions of gold, which had bene lent to the deceased king his father, and did discharge him of the promise of two thousand pounds sterling, which he had made for the libertie of Perlas of Tortui an Englishman being prisoner in Castile. Such and greater was the bountie of D. John king of Castile to Charles the third king of Nauarre his brother-in-law, and likewise to the Queene D. Leonora his sister, and to their daughters who were at that time in Castile; and moreover hee caused the king to be accompanied into his Realme by the chiefe of his Nobility, who being come to Pamplona, and there receiued with great pompe and ioy by the Estates of the Realme, the first age he did for the government thereof, was to resolute with his subiects and Counsellors, to adhere to Pope Clement the 7. remaining at Auignon, and to reject Phibane the first, as the kings of France and Castile had done, yet with this protestation, that hee would not separate himselfe from the holy Apostolike church, but obey that which should be decreed by a generall Councell concerning the Schisme. Then he sought the allyance of neighbor Princes, sending ambassadours vnto them; especially into Arragon, where hee made a league with the duke of Gironne, the heire of Arragon, and treated the marriage of Donna Jeanne his elder daughter, with D. James eldest sonne to the Duke of Gironne, hauing an intent to vnite the crowne of Nauarre to that of Arragon, for that hee had no sonnes, but this marriage tooke no effect.

King of Nauarre during the schisme adheres to the Pope of Auignon.

Genealogie of Nauarre.

In the beginning of the yeare 1387. Queene Leonora his wife fell into a long and languishing sickness, which bred much trouble betwixt them. He had by her these children following: D. Jeanne the eldest, who was wife to John of Foix, sonne to Archambault; D. Maria who dyed a virgin at Pampelona; D. Blanche, who was Queene of Sicily and Nauarre, D. Beatrix Countesse of Marche, wife to James of Bourbon, and D. Isabella, who dyed also a mayd. After these five daughters they had Don Charles their sonne, who dyed a child, and Don Lewis which liued but fixe moneths. These be the lawfull children of the king Don Charles the third, he had out of marriage one sonne called Gedfrey of Naur, who was Marshall of the Realme, and Earle of Cortes, and one daughter named Donna Jeanne of Nauarre, who was married to Inigo Ortiz of Estuniga, sonne to Diego Lopes of Estuniga.

Of these children mention is made in this kings testament, the which is in the Cathedral church of Pampelona, in the which his brethren are also named: Peter Earle of Mortaing, and Leon a Bastard, and Donna Maria also a Bastard, married to the Earle of Denia.

In the yeare 1387. the warre betwixt Castile and Portugal being hote, the French troups led by Lewis Duke of Bourbon to the succour of King John, past through Nauarre, where they were furnished with all necessities by King Charles, who after their retreat and accord made by the king of Castile with the Duke of Lancaster, hee came to Calor, as we haue sayd, to reioyce with the King Don John, for this pacification.

Retur.

A Returning to the treatie of this warre, we lay, that the Princesse Catherine hauing followed her father into Guienne, was after a new confirmation of the accord, sent by him to Castile, and there deliuered to the Prelates and Noblemen deputed by the king of Castile, to receiue her, who conducted her to Palence, where the marriage betwixt her and the Prince D. Henry was solemnized, he being but ten yeares old, and three moneths. The Dutchesse of Lancaster, mother to the Princesse, past afterwards into Spaine, and came to the king D. John her cousin at Medina del campo, to whome among other presents she gaue a rich Crowne of gold, saying, that the duke her husband had caused it to be made, hoping to be crowned king of Castile: but seeing they were agreed otherwise then he expected, it was his due, and therefore she presented it vnto him. The king receiued it with great ioy, and required the Dutchesse with other gifts of price, putting her in possession of the townes promised by the accord, whereunto he added Huete. The Dutchesse past afterwards to Guadalaajara, hauing had a promise of an enterview betwixt the king and the Duke of Lancaster her husband, at Fontaraby or Bajone. The king staid not long to come to Victoria for this meeting, and the Dutchesse went before to draw her husband to Fontaraby: but he excused himselfe by reason of his apparent indisposition, and vpon the sharpnesse of the winter, which made the passage of S. Adrian difficult. D. Pero Lopes of Ayala, Bishop of Olma, and Fernando of Illesca were sent vnto him from the king to whome he propounded an allyance which he desired to make betwixt Castile and England, and to induce the King D. John to quit that of France, whereof the ambassadors excused their master. The interview being hindered by this occasion the king D. John came to Segobia, to giue order for the warre of Portugal, which had bene somewhat quenched since the duke of Lancasters retreat: for the pacifying whereof Fernando of Illesca, of the Order of the preaching Friars, and the Kings Confessor, had laboured much, but could not conclude any thing.

The King of Portugall falling sicke in his pallace of Cordal, gaue some hope that matters would turne fauourable for Castile: for his sicknesse was so violent, as all men despaired of his life: whereat the Queene Donna Philippe was much grieved, so as shee was deliuered of her first child before her time, which made them doubt the would not haue any more: but midwiues rules are not alwaies true; for shee had afterwards those children whereof we haue made mention.

Friar Fernando and others, who treated a truce betwixt these two kings, being not able to effect that which they pretended, the King of Portugal being recouered, he entred into Galicia, and spoiled the countrie, and tooke Tuy by Intelligence, and Saluaterra: after which spoiles the Confessor Fernando returned into Portugal, and renewed the treatie, where he wrought so, as he yielded to a truce for six yeares, in the yeare 1389. by the which Tuy, Saluaterra, and all the Portugals had taken from Castile, was yielded. By this pacification which continued long, Don John King of Portugal, had meane to settle himselfe in his Royaltie, and wholly to exclude D. Beatrix.

As for the affaires of Arragon, we find that before the war betwixt Castile and Portugal, the king D. Pedro being very old, married the fourth time with D. Sibilla, widow to Aras of Foixes, whom he caused to be crowned at Sarragossa, in the yeare 1381. whether the Estates were called to that effect. At the which the Noblemen which had subiects that were not Gentlemen, maintained that they had soueraigne power ouer them, their goods and liues, and that it had bene long practised in Arragon. This action was begun vpon the complaints made by the Inhabitants of Anzanego, against D. Pedro Sanchez of Latras their Lord: but it was prohibited, and a sentence was given by way of prouision, that the Noblemen should enioy the rights which they had accustomed, although they were not according to the common law or written law: and although they could not shew any priuiledges granted vnto them in that behalf, yet should it not be lawfull for the king to draw them into question, for any violence or bad vsage done vnto their subiects, but the punishment of any excess done by the superiors to their subiects, should be left to God, the which gaue way to infinit wickednes. These Estates ended with trouble & confusion, for that D. Briande of Luna, hauing left D. Lopes Ximenes of Vreca her husband, and married D. Lewis Cornel, these two Noblemen went to armes, and kept the field.

Ggg 3

As

Portugal.
6.
explains of the K. of Portugal
in Spaine.

1389.

7.
Arragon.

Aragon. It is remarkable that at the same time both in Castile and Portugal, there were Kings reigning of the same name. The King Don Pedro his father was a lover of learning, he entertained the university of Lerida, and erected one in Huesca. Having given to his sonne John the towne of Girone with the title of a Dutche; then beganne the custome, that the eldest of Arragon are called Dukes of Girone, as the eldest sonne of France is called Dauphin of Vienne.

The new King Don John beganne his raigne with the persecution of his mother in law, who like unto Donna Leonor of Castile, was retired from Barcelona, seeing the death of the King D. Pedro approach, and had put her selfe into Zaroca, where she was soon besieged, and taken by Don Martin of Arragon the Kings brother. And for that the King Don John lay languishing in his bed, and could not be eased by the art of Physicke, this widow Queene was accused to haue caused him to bee poisoned, whereupon she was strictly examined, and all those of her household. All the goods the deceased King had bestowed on her, were made forsaite, and given to the Queen reigning Donna Violant. The Regency or Government of the realme was given to Don Martin, who also was made duke of Montblanc, by letters given at Grenoillez neere to Barcelona. The preuiledges, lawes and statutes of that city were confirmed by him at his coming to the crowne, and hee did aduow Pope Clement at Auignon, by the council of the Cardinal Don Pedro de Luna, and the perswasion of the Queene D. Isant or Violant, and he of Rome was declared vnlawfull, as made by force.

All grants made by the King D. Pedro since the yeere 1365. were reuoked. Such were the first acts of this King: a Prince weake both in body and minde, giuen to idleness, hunting, dauncing, musike and poeise, with so violent an affection, as they say, hauing at his coming to the crowne, sent a solemne Ambassage to the French King, to treat of the affaires of their Estates, the chiefe Article was to require the French King, to giue him certaine Poets of Prouence and Languedoc which did flourish in those times in their vulgar tongue, not much differing from the Catalan, whom hee received as a singular fauour, honoured them, and assigned them great pensions, insinuating for the loue of them schooles of their poesies. And to fill vp the measure of his imperfections, he had no care but to please his wife, unto whom he was wholly vowed and addicted. The Generall Estates being assembled at Monçon, the Deputies had charge to require the severity of the ancient manners, and the restoring of martiall discipline, and that the honour of arme might bee reuiued, whereunto the King had no inclination. But above all, that the houses and courts of the King and Queene should bee reformed, and reduced to the fashion and manner of their ancestors, and that some base and vicious persons should be chased away. There were certaine Articles presented against D. Carrasco of Villaragut, one of the Queens Ladies, in whom she wholly trusted, and gaue her so great credit with the King, as the honors & offices of the realme, were distributed according to her aduice and will, without reason, measure, or regard of merit. The chiefe which sought this reformation, were Don Alphonse of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, D. James his brother bishop of Tortosa, D. James of Prages, D. Bernardin of Cabrera, Vicont of Lisle and Roa, D. Pedro Queralt, D. John Bellera, and Raymond of Bages; against whom their banded some of the Kings Mignons, so as all the realme was in combustion and armes: but the Kings weaknesse was at that time profitable; for it kept them from fighting; and hauing granted a safe conduct to D. Alphonse, D. Lopes Ximenes of Virea, John Ximenes of Virea, and other their complices, they met with Don Martin the Kings brother, had conference vpon the reformation, and agreed vpon many Articles. Amongst others Don Carrasco of Villaragut was chased from the Queenes court, with a prohibition neuer to conuerse with her, or any of the Princes or Princesses. During these contentions Bernard brother to the Earle of Armaignac entred into Catalogne, with an infinit number of souldiers French and English, who foraged and spoiled all they encountered, Bernard their leader hauing no other reason, but that he sought meanes to entertaine the souldiers. This danger forced the King to arme, and to march against these vagabond troupes, whereof some beeing found scattered and out of order, were defeated, and the rest forced to repasse into Languedoc.

The

Pope Clement
at Auignon acknowledged in Arragon.

Estates require reformation of the King and Queens house

French
troups spoile Catalogne.

A The affaires of Sardynia had beene compounded about the time of the death of the King D. Pedro, so as the lands held by Marian Iudge of Arborea, were restored to Leonor his daughter, and Brancalon of Oria her husband deliuered out of prison; and be set downe, as the Siegneury of Genoua might not keepe nor arme any galleys, but in the ports of Genoua, Sauona, Albenga, and Porto Venere, in the riuer of Genoua, and the Ligustike sea, and in other seas at Pera, Capha, Famogosta and Scio, Valencia, Majorca, Minorca, Iuiza, Cailierij and Alguer; so as a peace was entertained in the Island of Sardynia, about the yeere of our Lord 1389, when as the marriage was accomplished between D. Martin sonne to the Infant D. Martin duke of Mombanc, and Mary daughter to Frederic the third King of Sicile; a subiect of new warre, by reason of the factions and partialities which were in that Island, amongst the Noblemen, some allowing and others disliking this marriage of their Princesses, who according vnto some, had beene taken out of the castle of Carrane, where by the will of the deceased King her father, the Cattelogne, by them of Clermont.

The new Kings being come into Sicile, with the duke of Mombanc, who served as a Tutor, being accompanied by D. Bernard of Cabrera, Don Artal of Luna, allied to the King, and many other Noblemen of Cattelogne, Arragon and Valencia, and with a good army, they were receiued by them that held their party in the towne of Trapani, from whence they fought to reduce the factious, some by mildnesse, and others by rigour. The towne of Palermo was yeelded vnto him by the Earle of Modica, and there they were crowned; from whence they made a progresse, so as they were acknowledged throughout the whole Realme, yet there were often troubles renewed through the naturall lightnesse of that nation.

This yeere 1389, died Pope Vrbain, residing at Rome, in whose place the Cardinals of his faction did chosse Boniface the ninth, called before Peter Tomacel, a priest, Cardinal of the title of Saint Anastasius. In the yeere of our Lord 1390, the cite of Lisbon was made an Archbishopricke by him at the request of the King D. John, who followed D. the Pope at Rome, and not him, at Auignon. To it was giuen for Suffragan the bishop of Coimbra for that time; and in proceesse of time the church of Portalegre was made a Bishops seat by Paul the third.

The same yeere the King of Castile hauing assembled his Estates at Guadajajara, being thrust on with a continual desire to be King of Portugal, whereunto he was animated by the Queene Donna Beatrice his wife, hee propounded to his counsell, that hee had resolved in that assembly to giue ouer the Realmes of Castile and Leon to his sonne Don Henry, together with his other Lands and Siegneuries, except Seuille, Cordoua, Iacn, Murcia, and all the Moores frontiers: referring also for himselfe the third part of the reuenues of the church, granted vnto him by Pope Clement, saying, that he was aduertised, that vpon this renunciation the Portugals would receiue him for their King: for they had no other reason to oppose themselves, and to reiekt him, but for that they could not endure to see the realme of Portugal vnitd to that of Castile. But his counsell did aduise him not to doe a thing so dishonourable for himselfe, and not profitable for his countrie, in quitting his fathers realmes, to thinke to get a strange one, which was held by a resolute enemy: shewing him by reasons and examples that he did hazard the losse of both, and to bee a fable to the world for euer. Hee did willingly heare and beleue his counsellors, and suppress this desire, enioyning them silence. In this assembly he granted a generall pardon to all those that had offended him during the last warres, except the Inhabitants of Tuy, who had yeelded to D. John King of Portugal, and to his brother D. Alphonse Earle of Gijon, to whom he would shew no mercy. The Estates granted him a greater subvention of money then euer any King before him had. Being required by the Deputies of the Prouinces he reformed the expences and superfluities of his court, and reduced his ordinary troupes of horse, for the gard of the realm, to foure thousand Launces, fiftene hundred Genets, and one thousand crossbowes one horsbacke: he ordained that every launce should furnish two horses of seruice, and the Genets in like

To Marriage of
D. Martin
with Mary the heire of Sicile.

II
Portugal.

Lisbone made an Archbishop-ricke.

12.
Castile.

Estates of Castile.

like manner. To the Launciers and Genets he assigned fiftene hundred Mautaudis by A the yere, and fixe hundred to the crosbow men, a coine which was then very current; granting them moreover many great privileges and immunities. There also it was decreed, that the King should send vnto Pope Clement, to intreat him that in the prouision of the benefices of Spaine he would not admit any that were not borne in the country by reason of the great inconveniences which did grow thereby: vpon the complaints made by the Clergy especially of Guipulcoa, Biscay, Alaua and Galicia, by the Bishops of Calaoira and Burgos, for that many lay men, vnder colour of right of Patronage, had seized vpon many lands, rents and other goods of the church, by reason wherof the diuine seruice was ill attended in many places of those Prouinces, the buildings were ruined, and there were not Ornamentes necessary for the places and persons dedicated to holy workes.

The King being not well instructed of those rights, left matters in the Estate they were, least he should cause some tumult before it were iustified. Besides this, the subiects complained that many Noblemen hauing iurisdiction presumed to carry themselves in a manner like Soueraignes, both in ciuill and criminall causes: it was therefore ordained, that it should be lawfull for any one of what estate or quality soeuer, finding himselfe grieved by the Chastellans, or other subalternall Iudges, to appeale to the Iudge royall. In the behaile of the Nobility it was required, that it would please the King to take away the claue mentioned in the testament of the deceased King Don Henry, touching the succession in the collateral line to lands of the crowne, given by him to Noblemen and Knights which had followed and serued him in the conquest of those Realmes: wherevnto answer was made, that euery one should enioy that which had bene giuen him by the deceased King his father, but hee would in no sort reuoke that claue.

In this assembly of Guadalajara the truce was confirmed with Granado, the Moors Ambassadors being come thither, who brought vnto King John many rich presents. There also the King gaue vnto the Infant Don Ferdinand his sonne, who was Lord of Lara the title of Duke of Pagnafal, hauing a ducale crowne set vpon his head, with great solemnity, the which was made like a bande round and vnited, without any floures surpassing one another, which did belong onely to Kings, though now it bee otherwise vsed, euery one seeking to countenance his authority, by vsurping of title and marke beyond their due. Hee also gaue armes to the said Don Ferdinand, that is, a caske and a Lion with the royall Bands of Arragon, for that hee had him by the Queene Donna Leonora of Arragon his first wife. He was the second Duke in the Realme, for that hee of Benauent was the first. These and other things were decreed at Guadalajara, whether Ambassadors came from Charles the Noble, King of Nauarre, to sommon the Queene Donna Leonora, sister to King John, to returne into Nauarre, to the King her husband, but they could not preuaile.

This Princesse being two yeres before fallne into a great sicknesse, and finding no helpe by physicke, shee was aduised to change the ayre and to goe into Castile, hoping shee should recover her health sucking the breath of her native soile. For this cause the King Don Charles her husband, who loued her much, conducted her himselfe vnto the King Don John her brother; with whom shee had continued some daies in feasting and sportes in the towne of Nauarre, and then hee returned and left the Queene Donna Leonora to remaine there, vntill shee had recovered her health.

The Queene was not onely well entertained by the King of Castile her brother, but her whole household was defraied, and shee was honoured as much as might bee. Being thus at her ease, shee soone recovered her health againe: but as her bodie was in better disposition by this change of ayre, so her minde was much impaired; for were it for the commodities and delights shee receiued in this stately and magnificent court of Castile, or for some other occasion, shee resolved to remaine and keepe there still, and to returne no more into Nauarre, grounding this vnreasonable resolution vpon the badde vltage shee said shee had receiued from the King her husband, who did not loue her said shee, but was hard vnto her; that her reue-

Visitation of the Clergy.

Lord of the crown giuen
in recompence
of seruice.

Duke of Benauent
the first duke in Castile.

13.
Nauarre.

D. Leonora
Queene of Nauarre light and vnkind.

newes

A newes were not well paid her: that the Knights and other Castellans which did serue her, were not respected in Nauarre, with other such womanish excuses, with whom vanity in an other place was of more esteeme; then honesty in her owne house: the which the King Don John did heare with a brotherly affection, but with great discontentment, knowing, or at the least doubting, that they were but collours without truth, King Charles hearing that shee was in good health, hee wrote diuerse times vnto her, to haue her returne, but shee excused herselfe, finding sometimes one let, sometimes another: so as in the end knowing her intention, hee employed the Cardinal Don Pedro de Luna a Cattelán, but without effect: for the Queene seeking to capitulate with the King her husband, she propounded such vnreasonable conditions, as they were forced to take an other courte.

Shee had continued two yeres in Castile, the King her husband vsing all friendly meanes to draw her home, forbearing to cause himselfe to be crowned King of Nauar, for the desire hee had to celebrate this ceremony in her company, and to haue her crowned with him: but seeing that hee lost time in writing and sending messengers, hee sent Don Ramires of Arellán and Don Martin of Ayuar, Ambassadors to the King of Castile, being at the Estates at Guadalajara, to intreat him to enterpise his authority with his sister Donna Leonora, that she might returne into Nauarre, and liue with the King her husband, as God and honesty did require. The King gaue a courteous audience to the Ambassadors, and offered to doe his dutie therein, the which he performed.

C For going the day following to his sisters lodging, he let her vnderstand that it was iust & reasonable, seeing shee was in health, and her husband required it, that she should goe vnto him; and the better to perswade her he promised that if she had not entertainment first for her royall State in Nauarre, he would impart some of his vnto her, and giue her a good company of Knights and Ladies to conduct her into Nauarre, with that honour which did belong vnto her. Shee hauing no iust reason to contradict the King her brother, answered him in these termes, Sir I am much bound vnto you for many respects, besides the good counsell it pleaseeth you now to giue me, wherein I know you seeke my honour and profit. The King my Lord and husband, must also be mindfull of your bounty and brotherly loue, vsed towards him in many matters of great consequence, for my sake: for if you had not imploied your selfe, at my request to the French King, who held him prisoner, it may bee hee should haue found greater difficulties in his deliuey. Being come into Spaine he knows what honours, and what guilts he hath receiued from you during the life of the King his father: And when he came to succeed in the Realme of Nauarre, all the world hath seene how liberally you haue restored him the places, which you might iustly haue retained in Nauarre, being left in deposito at the peace made betwixt your fathers: Moreover you haue discharged him of twenty thousand doubloons of gold, and of his promise for the English Nobleman, who was a prisoner taken in warre, being two thousand pounds sterling: presently after the death of the deceased King his father, you caused mee to goe out of your Realme, into his country, whether I carried whatsoever I had good and precious, to appeare the more honourable amongst the Nauarrois, with the Ladies and Gentlewomen of my traine, borne of great families, all things tending to the honour and profit of the King my Lord: But in steed of acknowledging all this (it grieues me to speake it, and I cannot speake it without blushing) hee hath not receiued mee, nor intreated mee as hee ought. He appointed me certaine prouisions monthly, for the entertainment of my house, my state and attendants, whereof I haue bene alwaies so ill paid, as I haue bene often forced to ingage my iewels, to content my seruants, who complained often vnto me. Besides falling dangerously sicke in Nauarre, and almost dead, I was duly informed, that my languishing proceeded from certaine hurtfull herbes which were giuen mee by a physician a few, sent by the King my Lord to cure me. I doe not thinke that these herbes were giuen me by the commandement of the King my Lord, or with his priuie, and God forbid it should once enter into my thought: but I finde it very strange that hauing complained, he did not vouchsafe to punish this bad physician, as hee deserued.

Seeing my indisposition to continue I intreated him to giue mee leaue to come into Castile, Admonition of the King of Castile to his sister the Queene of Nauarre, Excuses of the Queene of Nauarre.

Castile, to your court, whereas God be thanked and your good reception, I have recovered my health. But during my abode here, in this case, I have bene advertised, that many flatterers and bad servants to the King my Lord and mee, haue charged me with many slanders, the which hath much incensed him against me, so as I know not how my Estate, or my life can be well assured in Nauarre, if I returne as you perswade me: wherefore I beseech you Sir in the name of God, and for the brotherly loue you beare me, that you would be pleased to consult with your good and faithfull counsellors, vpon my returne to the King my Lord and husband, whom I loue and honour, and to provide for the safety of my life and honor: for if I should fall into any danger, or receive any indignity, you should haue interest therein.

These words accompanied with a mournfull countenance, did much moue the King D. John, who promising his sister that he would haue a care of her affaires, he conferred with his counsell, imparting vnto them the speech which the Queene of Nauarre had vsed, causing them all toswear that they should giue him good and faithfull counsell touching her returne to the King her husband. The counsell hauing duely consulted of this businesse they came vnto the King, and told him, that they had found it expedient, that hee should cause King Charles his brother in law, to sweare to vse the Queene Donna Leonora his wife well and honourably, and for assurance thereof he should leaue some places of Nauarre in deposito in the hands of some Knights that were not suspect whereby they thought the Queene might bee well assured to returne into Nauarre, and to liue freely with her husband. The King of Castile allowed of this aduice, and hauing caused his sister Donna Leonora to be called, he acquainted her therewith, exhorting her to follow it, the which seemed nothing pleasing vnto her, yet shee yielded, hauing no iust cause of contradiction: wherefore the King D. John hauing caused the Ambassadors of Nauarre to bee called, hee would haue returned them home with this answer, but they replied that the King their master would take any oth, but to deliuer places into a third mans hand, hee would not doe it: giuing many pertinent reasons, why hee should not yeeld to it.

After many allegations and disputes herevpon, the Queene said, that if it pleased the King her husband to sweare and promise to Pope Clement, the French King, and to the King her brother to vse her well, she would returne. The Ambassadors answered, that the Cardinal D. Pedro of Luna had already propounded such an oth, and that the King their master had answered, that it was not needfull the French King should meddle with any controuersies betwixt him and his wife, and that for the rest he would make no difficulty. These disputes increasing more and more, to the great griefe of the King of Castile, who knew well that the Queene his sister was staid for some other consideration, and that the obiections made against her husband were mere slanders, he was much perplexed: for he both loued Charles King of Nauarre, and the Queene also. The Ambassadors being out of hope to worke the Queenes returne, they demaund the Infanta D. Leonne, the King of Nauarres eldest daughter, to whom the succession of the Realme did belong for want of heires males, to be deliuered vnto them, to carry her into Nauarre, to the King her father, seeing he might not hope for any more children by the Queene, persisting in her vnreasonable resolution, to liue from his company. The Queene excusing her selfe, said, that it was not her intent to liue seperated from King Charles: she desired to bee assured of her life: And the King her brother (who alwaies perswaded her to bee well aduised, and to beleuee what he said vnto her) was forced to send Aluar Nunez of Villa Real, President of his Chancery, into Nauarre, to take information of these venomous herbes, which shee said had bene giuen her by the physician a Iew, and to bring the depositions of the witnesses, whom shee named: but this was an information made without any aduerser party, to the great scandale of Queene Leonoras marriage: so as by the aduice of the royall counsell of Castile it was suppress. The Queene remayning obstinate, not to returne to her husband, the King of Castile prevailed so with her, as shee yielded to send Don Leonne her eldest daughter, for hee gaue her to vnderstand that it would somewhat pacifie the King of Nauarre.

Besides it was to bee feared that if shee staid her, hee might in despite institute

B

C

D

E

F

A his brother Peter Earle of Mortaign heire of his realme. It did much import the Nauarrois, to haue this daughter in the fathers power, fearing least the mother should marry her to some Castilian, against the fathers will, and to the preiudice of the liberty of the Realme: The daughter was deliuered to the Ambassadors, with one of her sisters, being royally accompanied from the towne of Roa, whether the King and his sister came to send her into Nauarre, where shee was receiued with great contentment to the King and the Nauarrois, yet he was much discontented at the rebellion and contempt of the Queene his wife.

This businesse being ended, the King of Castile came to Segobia, where he did institute the Order of the Knights of the holy Ghost, causing collars of gold to bee made like vnto the sunne beames, at which did hang a white doue. This collar hee himselfe did weare, and gaue it to many Knights that were most familiar with him, shewing them a certaine booke of Orders, which they must obserue. Moreover he would also institute an other device, which he called Realon, the which Elquires, which carried themselves valiantly in Iousts and Tournayes, and did any commendable act, should carry: yet hee being dead these things died likewise with him, which followed the same yeere 1390.

He was resolu'd to passe into Andalusia, to order the affaires of that Province, and administer Iustice: passing in the month of October by Alcala de Henares, thence came vnto him fifty Christian Knights borne at Maroc in Affrike, who being sent for by him had past the seas with leaue from their King, and were cometo doe him seruice: Hee receiued them graciously, and promised them pensions and lands in Castile. They were of the most ancient families of Maroc, hauing alwaies held the Christian religion, and were called the Farfanes. The King desirous to see them manage their Genets (for they had the report to bee good horlemen) went to horse-backe, and going out at the port which is called of Burgos, he entred into a plowed field, and beginning to gallop his horse ouer the furrows, he stumbled in the midst of his course, and fell vpon the King, who was so brused as hee died, being but two and thirty yeeres old, whereof hee reigned eleuen and three monthes; his body was carried to Toledo, and buried in the Chappell of the last Kings, where his father and mother lie. A Prince endow'd with good parts but vnfortunate, and too sharpe to his brother the Earle of Gijona, the which did somewhat blemish the luster of his vertues: he was a friend and rewarder of valiant men, and religious according to the time. Hee was founder of three of the chiefe Monasteries in Spaine, and gaue them great reuenues; that is, the Carthusians at Valdeleroya in the territorie of Segobia in Rascaille, the which is commonly called Paular: The royall Monasterie of the Order of Saint Benet at Vaileadolit, the chiefe of the religion in the Realmes of Castile, Leon, Arragon and Nauarre, built whereas the old fort did stand. And moreover hee founded the church and house of Santa Maria of Guadalupe, whereas he put religious men of Saint Ierosimes Order, and tooke away the Chaplains which were wont to bee there; at which place there is an Image, which they hold doth miracles.

This King was very pittifull to Princes and men of marke that were strangers and afflicted, as it appeered by the deliuey which hee sought with great affection of Leon King of Armenia, who was prisoner with the Sultan of Egypt to whom hee sent an honorable Ambassage to that effect. And afterwards this Prince being retired into Spaine, he gaue him conuenient reuenues and pensions vpon the towne of Madrid, and other places in Castile. It is he whose tombe is in the Celestins church at Paris, where he died mediating a peace betwixt the French and English.

The King of Nauarre hauing laboured in vaine for to haue the Queene his wife returne vnto him, desyring to haue her crowned with him, like vnto other Queenes, hee resolu'd not to delay his coronation any longer: wherefore he assembled the Estates of his realm in the city of Pampelone, whereas the solemnity of his coronation was made, as followeth: The Deputies of the Clergy, Nobility and third Estate, being assembled, with the Ambassadors of forraigne Princes, in the great chappell of the Cathedrall church; the Bishops being in their Pontifical habit; Don Alonso of Salua

Hhh

Fiihop

24

An. 1390.

Farfanes christi
then affi-sians.

15

16

Cremoyat
the King of Nauarres coronation.

Bishop of Pampelone, who was afterwards Cardinall, spake the words vnto the King: A O King our naturall Lord, it is fit before you receiue the Sacrament of the holy vnction, that you take the oth vnto your people of Nauarre, which hath bene accustomed to be taken in this Realme of Nauarre, by Kings your predecessors. Wherevnto the King answered, that he was ready to sweare: then a crosse being presented vnto him, and a booke; laying his hand thereon, he pronounced these words with a loude voice, We D.
our people of Nauarre, vpon this crosse and vpon the holy Euangelist toucht by vs, and to you the prelates and rich men of the cities and good townes, and to all the people of Nauarre, for all your rights, lawes, customes, freedomes, liberties and preiudges: that euery one of them, as they now are, shalbe maintained and kept, to you and your successors, whom God pardon, or to you, by Vs or our Officers, we shall hereafter command it to cease, and satisfaction to bee made, according vnto right, as they shalbe made manifest by good men and of credit.

Form of the Kings oth
to his people.

Form of the subjects oth
vnto the King.

Paction of the King of Na-
uarre.

King of Nauarre carried vpon
a target.

After the Kings oth, the Deputies of the Estates, according to their degrees, standing vp, did also sweare after this manner. We N. N. Barons of Nauarre, as well in our owne names, as for all the Knights and Gentlemen of the realme, sweare vnto you, our King and Lord, vpon this crosse, and these foure holy Euangelists, handled and toucht by vs, to guard and faithfully to defend your person, and our country, and to aide you to keepe, maintaine and defend the lawes and customes with all our power. After this manner did the deputies for the cities and townes sweare, euery one according to the rights, lawes, customes, preiudges, freedomes and liberties, which they did enioy. This oth beeing taken of either side, except by the Clergy, who sweare not, the King retired himselfe into Saint Stephens chappell, of the same church, where he put off his robes, and tooke one of white tuffe, which was vsuall in such ceremonies, and then was brought backe by the Bishops of Tarrafone and of Dax, to the great chappell, where as all things necessary were prepared for his vnction. The King beeing there enuironed by the Bishops, he was annointed with oyle by the bishop of Pampelone, with the prayers and suffrages vsuall in such actions: and the King hauing instantly put off that white roabe he was richly attired in other royall habits, and so approached neere vnto the high altar, where there was a sword, the royal crowne glistering with precious stones, and the royall Scepter, hee put on the sword, and then drew it forth, holding it vp on high in signe of Iustice, and then sheathed it againe, then hee tooke the crowne, and set it on his head, and last of all hee tooke the scepter in his hand, and in the meane time the prelates continued their prayers. These things beeing done the King mounted vpon a target, on the which were painted the armes of Nauarre, the which was borne by the Deputies of the Nobility, and them of the city of Pampelone and the three quarters thereof, Bourg, Peuplement and Nauarre, as well in the name of the said city, as of other cities and townes of the realme, as it had bene appointed by the King: wherevpon publike protestation was made by the Deputies of Estella, Tudela, Sanguesa, O-lite and other townes, which could not fer to their hands to support this target, on which the King was, that it was without preiudice at that time, or hereafter, to their commonalities. Thus the King was raised vp by the deputies, who cried out thrice, Real, Real, al Real.

The King beeing thus carried after the manner of the ancient French, hee cast money vnto the people, which done, hee was taken from thence by the Cardinall Don Pedro of Luna, the Popes Legat (who assisted at this ceremonie) and by the Bishops of Pampelone and Tarrafone, and led to a royall throne in great state: the prelates and other Clergy men continuing still in their prayers and ending with a Te Deum.

These things thus performed, the Kings Attorney General, called Garcia of Leach, in the Kings name, the Bishop of Pampelone for himselfe and all the Clergy of the realme, with the Deputies of the Nobility, townes and commonalities, demanded an act of Peter of Godeille Apostolike Notary, of Peter of Iauariz Clarke and Apostolike Notary,

A Notary for the Diocefe of Pampelone, and of Iohn of Ceilludo Notary, and Secretary to the King, the which was formally done. For the last act of this solemnity, masse was sung by the Bishop of Pampelone, whereas the King, according to the custome of his predecessors, offered scarlet, gold and siluer. This coronation was the fourth yeere of this Princes reigne, in February in the yeere 1390. and to make more particular relation of men of quality, which were at this assembly, deputed for the Estates or otherwise, First of all there was D. Pedro of Luna Cardinall, of the title of Santa Maria in Cosme-din, Legat a Latere in Spaine, to Pope Clement residing in Auignon: Don Martin Salua Bishop of Pampelone, D. Iohn of Calaoorra and Calçado, D. Pedro of Tarrafone, Don Fernand of Vic of Ossona, D. Pedro of Ampurias, D. Iohn of Dax, D. Garcia of Eugui of Bayone, Confessor to the King, all Bishops. Moreouer the Abbot of Trache, the Deane of the Collegiall church of Tudelo; the Abbots of the Monasteries of Saint Saluator of Leyra, Oliuia, Yranzu, Hitero and Saint Saluator of Vrax: the Prior of the Order of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, the dignities, Chanoins and Clergy of the church of Pampelone, for the Estate of the Clergy. For the Nobilitie and military Order were Don Lionel of Nauarre, the Kings base brother, D. Arnaud Raymond Lord of Grammont, D.
Arnaud Sanchez Lord of Lule, D. Pedro Lord of Laxaga, D. Martin Henriquez of Lacarra Marshal of the realme, D. Ramir of Arellan, D. Martin Lord of Meargan, and of Saint Julian, D. Iohn of Vcara, D. Fernand of Ayanc, D. Martin of Ayuar, D. Bertrand of Lacarra, D. Aluar Diaz of Medrano, D. Ximen Garcia Vicont of Baigner, D. Pedro Sanchez
C of Corella, D. Pedro Ynigues of Vxue, D. Martin of Artieda, D. Pedro Arnaud of Garro, D. Iohn Gaston of Vitroz, D. Garcia Ramires of Alfayn, D. Iohn of Bern, the young Don Pedro Sanchez of Licaraga, D. Iohn Rodrigues of Ayuar, D. Raymond of Esperza and Don Pedro of Ayanc: these were accompanied with many other Noblemen and Gentlemen, as it was fit for the Maiesty of such an act. The were also the Deputies of the commonalities, and good townes of the realme of Pampelone, Bourg, Peuplement and Nauarriere which were three quarters, or countries of the city, euery one hauing a feuerall luffe, the which kept them long in diuision, and bred lamentable mutinies and sedi-tions: but this King by wise counsel reduced them all into one body, and supprest the cause, to the good and quiet of the Inhabitants: Moreouer there were present the Deputies of Estella, Tudela, Sanguesa, Olite, Puente la Reyna, Arcos, which at this day be-longe to Castile, Viana, Garde, which is also of Castile, of Saint Vincent, of Saint Iohn of Pie de Port, of Montreal, Roncevaux, Lumber, Villafranca de Aguilar of Bernedo, at this day vnto the crowne of Castile, and of Lans. Besides these deputies, there were many Barons, Knights and others of quality of Castile, France and England, which did honour this coronation, with the Ambassadors of forraigne Christian princes. Namely Iohn Vicont of Fussenaguet, Raymond of Beruar, Lord of Castlenau, D. Alphonso of Luna, Archdeacon of Gironne, Doctor Iohn Fernandes of Arana, D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, high Treasurer, Diego Lopes of Lagran, Steward to the King of Castile, Francis of Pau of Arragon, Searct of Montagu, Bernard of Roftaing a Basque. These with many others, were witnesses of all that past at this ceremony, as appeares by the acts and writings which are in the chamber of accounts of that realme. In Iuly following the quire of the church fell, where these things were celebrated, for the re-edefying whereof, the King and others did contribute very much. The death of D. Iohn King of Castile, fell out then vnfortunatly for the King of Nauarre: for besides that hee loued him, and was beloued of him like a brother, hee was a fir instrument to tame the wilfulness of the Queene Donna Leonora, who did afterwards much trouble him, before hee could make her leaue Castile, and returne to him.

Act of account at the King of Na-uarres coronation.

Hhh 2

Don

the realme with such care and loyalty, as the young yeares of the king his nephew requir-red. And they of the Duke of Lancaster demanded, that the league made with the decased king, at the conclusion of their peace, should be renewed. All these received courteous answers, and were sent backe with content.

In the meane time the Arch-bishop of Toledo leauied forces, and made great pradises throughout all the chiefe townes, and with the Nobilitie of the Realme. And on the other side, at the incitation of the feditious Arch-deacon Don Fernand Martinez, the people of Seuille, Cordoua, Toledo, Logrogne, and other townes, of Castile, had fallen vpon the Iewes, making a horrible butcherie of this miserable people, and spooyling their goods, forcing by this meanes the rest, who escaped the present fury to become Christians, or at the least to faime themselves so: What can poore Infidels thinke (seeing such cruelties practised by Christians, and such greedinesse in them to imbezzle other mens goods) but that their religion is bloudie, desiring nothing lesse then the health of those whom they entertaine in their ignorance, by such detestable courses, and diuulish couteroufnesse? With the like furie were the neighbour countries infected: for they of Valencia and Barcelona did the like, yea the rage of these zealous men had extended vnto the Moores dwelling in Castile and Arragon, if they had not feared that the king of Granado would haue massacred many Christians that were his prisoners, and that it should cause some new warre with the Arabians.

This worldly consideration respecting the commoditie of this life retayned them, not to the zeale and honour of Iesus Christ, which consists not in murders and spoiles, but to do good to all men, and to pray for their enemies. The King Don Henry was aduertised of all these disorders, but by reason of his youth which was contemned, he could not apply fit remedies. Yet he did somewhat pacifie the mutinie against the Iewes: But as for the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and his Confederates, they had need of a sharper restraint. The Councell sent twice vnto him: that is, the Master of Saint Iames, who came vnto him at Illesca, and afterwards at Talauera de la Reina. D. John of Velasco, Lord Chamberlaine to the king, and Peter Fernandes of Villegas Merin Maior of Burgos, who admonished him to forebare to assemble forces, and that he should be content to vndergo with them, the resolution of the Estates, vpon their differences, but they had no other answer, but what he had formerly made.

Amidst these tumults there fell out a new occasion to increase them: for hauing beene propounded in the Councell of the deceased king D. John, to take the office of Constable from D. Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, for certaine reasons: being now in duision with the Councell, and not greatly beloued of the young King D. Henry, D. Pedro of Castile Earle of Transtamara, came to demand this office, who had yearly for his dyet and entertainment 70000. marauidis. The Councell did let him vnderstand, that the king at the beginning when the Estates assembled at Madrid, to gratifie the Marquis D. Alphonso, had confirmed him in the dignity, and that there were no reason thus to degrade him, without some apparent cause, the which might be a means to increase the troubles which were but too great wherefore they were of opinion, that he should for that time forebare and content himselfe with a pension, equal to the Constables entertainment, the which they promised him in the meane time: but they sayd, that they must proceede against the Marquis by the course of Iustice: for the effecting wherof, they would procure the king to cite him to come to Court, and if hee did not obey, they promised to giue him his Estate.
D. Pedro was satisfied with this answer, and D. Alphonso Ianes Fajardo, Gouvernor of Mur-cia was sent by the King vnto the Constable, to cause him to come to court: but hee excused himselfe from coming presently, promising to be there soone after, notwithstanding it was farre from his thoughts: for he had intelligence with the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and others of the league, who drew men together from all parts, to come to the Court in armes, to the end they might haue the testament of the deceased king D. John, put in execution, and chase away the Councell.

The Arch-bishop of S. Iames, the Earle of Transtamara, the Masters of S. Iames and Calatraua, John Hurtado de Mendoza, Lord Steward of the kings house, & others (wherof some were named Tutors by the kings will, and some not) knowing that this was not the cause

A cause which drew the Arch-bishop of Toledo, but only a colour pretended by him and his confederates to retire from Court, and to take armes; they also provided for their parts, and called all their friends to ayde them: they drew D. Leonora Queene of Nauar, vnto their league, binding themselves by oath one vnto another, and they wrought so, as the king Don Henry continued vnto the Queene his Aunt the pensions which the decased King D. John was wont to giue her with an increase: By whose perswasion, and others of the Councell, he tooke the office of Constable from Don Alphonso of Arragon, who had enjoyed it nine yeares, and gaue it to the Earle of Transtamara, who was sonne to D.
Frederic, Master of Saint Iames, and cousin to the King. Herevpon they fell to armes in Castile, committing great spoyles, robberies, and murders of all sides, diuiding the Realmes, Prouinces, Citties, and Townes, especially Seuille, whereas Don Aluar Perez of Guzman, great Admiral of Castile, and D. Pedro Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, Gouernor generall of that citie, held the Councells part: and Don John Alphonso of Guzman, Earle of Niebla and others, that of the Kings testament.

The Arch-bishop of Toledo with the Master of Alcantara were about Auila, to whom they of the citie of Burgos made many protestations, offers and prayers in vaine, for a peace; the like they did to the Duke of Benauent, and then they sent vnto the King, who was come to Cuellar, beseeching him to giue care vnto a peace, and to end the troubles by a conuocation of the Estates; the which if he thought good to hold in their citie, they offered to deliuer all their children in hostage, for their assurance that should come. The King moued with the loue and willingnesse of them of Burgos, sent the Legate and others to the Arch-bishop and his confederates, but they answered, That when they should be neere the place where the king was, they would declare their intentions more at large.
The Duke of Benauent, and the Arch-bishop of Toledo, were already ioyned with their forces, consisting of fiftene hundred men at armes, and 3500. foote, vnto whom the Queene of Nauarre came, intreating them, that before matters grew worse, they should be satisfied with the resolution of the Estates: and whilest that the laboured with the confederates, the king went to Valledolit, whither came about sixteen hundred men at armes, with some other forces. The confederates litle regarding the Queene of Nauarre, came to lodge at Simancas, where as he was more amazed then before, and employed all her endeauors to make some accord: In the end shee obtayned that there should be a conference at Perales, whereas at diuers times, in the presence of the Queene and Legate, the parties met and conferred. Once among the rest, the Arch-bishop being demanded by him of Saint Iames, if he had any true intent, that the deceased kings testament should take place: he made him no answer, for that the Duke of Benauent, who was not named in it, was present, whom he feared to offend: an infallible argument, that priuate respects did moue him more, then any zeale of the publike good, or the Kings seruice. It was concluded in Perales, that the Kings testament should be of force, and that the tutors named therein should gouerne: and to the end a peace might be the better entertained, and that all emulation and ieaousie might cease, there were added vnto them Don Frederic duke of Benauent, Don Pedro Earle of Transtamara, and the Master of Saint Iames: and for the better strengthening of this accord, the generall Estates were held at Burgos, John Hurtado de Mendoza, Pero Lopes of Ayala, Diego Lopes of Estuniga, and John Alphonso de li Cerde, either of them giuing one of his sonnes in hostage, for the assurance of such, as should come to Court.

Thus the Estates were called at Burgos; which citie was at great charges for that cause, and for the kings seruice. But before any proceeding, the Councell pretending to bind Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon vnto them, being prisoner in the hands of the Master of S.
Iames, they decreed his deliuerie, and procured the king to restore vnto him all the lands which he had enjoyed in the Asturia's. There came vnto the assembly at Burgos, the king with Queene Catherine his spouse, the Infant Don Fernand, and his future wife D. Leo-nora, who lodged in the Castle, whercof Diego Lopes of Estuniga was capitaine. The Estates being entred into conference, there grew a new tumult: for some of the Noblemen not satisfied with that which had bene concluded in Perales, would haue D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon admitted to councell, besides the aboue-named, wherewith the Duke

Queene of Na-
uar intreated
in the troubles
of Castile.

Archb. of Toledo respects
not the publike
good.

Estates at Burgos for a peace.

D. Alphonso
the kings sonne deliuered out
of prison.

the realme with such care and loyalty, as the young yeares of the king his nephew required. And they of the Duke of Lancaster demanded, that the league made with the deceased king, at the conclusion of their peace, should be renewed. All these received courteous answers, and were sent backe with content.

In the meane time the Arch-bishop of Toledo leauied forces, and made great praesent throughout all the chiefe townes, and with the Nobilitie of the Realme. And on the other side, at the incitation of the seditious Arch-deacon Don Fernand Martines, the people of Seuille, Cordoua, Toledo, Logrogne, and other townes, of Castile, had fallen vpon the Iewes, making a horrible butcherie of this miserable people, and spoyleing their goods, forcing by this meanes the rest, who escaped the present fury to become Christians, or at the least to faine themselves so: What can poore Infidels thinke (seeing such cruelties practised by Christians, and such greedinesse in them to imbeazle other mens goods) but that their religion is bloudie, desiring nothing lesse then the health of those whome they entertaine in their ignorance, by such detestable courses, and diueltish couetousnesse? With the like furie were the neighbour countries infected: for they of Valencia and Barcelona did the like, yea the rage of these zealous men had extended vnto the Moores dwelling in Castile and Arragon, if they had not feared that the king of Granada would haue massacred many Christians that were his prisoners, and that it should cause some new warre with the Arabians.

This worldly consideration respecting the commoditie of this life retayned them, not the zeale and honour of Iesus Christ, which consists not in murders and spoiles, but to the good to all men, and to pray for their enemies. The King Don Henry was aduertised of all these disorders, but by reason of his youth which was contemned, he could not apply fit remedies. Yet he did somewhat pacifie the mutinie against the Iewes: But as for the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and his Confederates, they had need of a sharper restraint. The Councell sent twice vnto him: that is, the Master of Saint Iames, who came vnto him at Illesca, and afterwards at Talauera de la Reina, D. John of Velasco, Lord Chamberlaine to the king, and Peter Fernandes of Villegas Merin Maior of Burgos, who admonished him to forebore to assemble forces, and that he should be content to vndergo with them, the resolution of the Estates, vpon their differences, but they had no other answer, but what he had formerly made.

Amidst these tumults there fell out a new occasion to increase them: for hauing bene propounded in the Councell of the deceased king D. John, to take the office of Constable from D. Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, for certaine reasons: being now in diuision with the Councell, and not greatly beloued of the young King D. Henry, D. Pedro of Castile Earle of Transimara, came to demand this office, who had yearely for his dyer and entertaingment 70000. marauidis. The Councell did let him vnderstand, that the king at the beginning when the Estates assembled at Madrid, to gratifie the Marquis D. Alphonso, had confirmed him in the dignity, and that there were no reason thus to degrade him, without some apparent cause, the which might be a means to increase the troubles which were but too great: wherefore they were of opinion, that he should for that time forebore and content himselfe with a pension, equall to the Constables entertaingment, the which they promised him in the meane time: but they sayd, that they must proceede against the Marquis by the course of Iustice: for the effecting wherof, they would procure the king to Marquis by the course of Iustice: for the effecting wherof, they would procure the king to cite him to come to Court, and if hee did not obey, they promised to giue him his Estate. D. Pedro was satisfied with this answer, and D. Alphonso James Fajardo, Governour of Murcia was sent by the King vnto the Constable, to cause him to come to court: but hee exasped himselfe from comming presently, promising to be there soone after, notwithstanding it was farre from his thoughts: for he had intelligence with the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and others of the league, who drew men together from all parts, to come to the Court in armes, to the end they might haue the testament of the deceased king D. John, put in execution, and chase away the Councell.

The Arch-bishop of S. Iames, the Earle of Transimara, the Masters of S. Iames and Calatrava, John Hurtado of Mendoza, Lord Steward of the kings house, & others (wherof some were named Tutors by the kings will, and some not) knowing that this was not the 23. cruelties and murders committed on the Iewes.

24.
D. Pedro of Castile demands
the office of Constable.

A cause which drew the Arch-bishop of Toledo, but only a colour pretended by him and his confederates to retire from Court, and to take armes; they also provided for their parts, and called all their friends to ayde them: they drew D. Leonora Queene of Nauar, vnto their league, binding themselves by oath one vnto another, and they wrought so, as the king Don Henry continued vnto the Queene his Aunt the pensions which the deceased King D. John was wont to giue her with an increase: By whose perswasion, and others of the Councell, he tooke the office of Constable from Don Alphonso of Arragon, who had enioyed it nine yeares, and gaue it to the Earle of Transimara, who was sonne to D. Federic, Master of Saint Iames, and cousin to the king. Hereupon they fell to armes in Castile, committing great spoyle, robberies, and murders of all sides, diuiding the Realmes, Prouinces, Citties, and Townes, especially Seuille, whereas Don Aluar Perez of Guzman, great Admiral of Castile, and D. Pedro Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, Governour generall of that citie, held the Councells part: and Don John Alphonso of Guzman, Earle of Niebla and others, that of the Kings testament.

The Arch-bishop of Toledo with the Master of Alcantara were about Auila, to whom they of the citie of Burgos made many protestations, offers and prayers in vaine, for a peace: the like they did to the Duke of Benaunt, and then they sent vnto the King, who was come to Cuellar, beseeching him to giue care vnto a peace, and to end the troubles by a conuocation of the Estates; the which if he thought good to hold in their citie, they offered to deliuer all their children in hostage, for their assurance that should come. The King moued with the loue and willingnesse of them of Burgos, sent the Legate and others to the Arch-bishop and his confederates, but they answered, That when they should be neere the place where the king was, they would declare their intentions more at large. The Duke of Benaunt, and the Arch-bishop of Toledo, were already ioynd with their forces, consisting of fifteene hundred men at armes, and 3500. foote, vnto whome the Queene of Nauarre came, intreating them, that before matters grew worse, they should be satisfied with the resolution of the Estates: and whilst that she laboured with the confederates, the king went to Vailledolit, whither came about sixteen hundred men at armes, with some other forces. The confederates little regarding the Queene of Nauarre, came to lodge at Simancas, where as she was more amazed then before, and employed all her endeauours to make some accord: In the end shee obayned that there should be a conference at Perales, whereas at diuers times, in the presence of the Queene and Legate, the parties met and conferred. Once among the rest, the Arch-bishop being demanded by him of Saint Iames, if he had any true intent, that the deceased kings testament should take place: he made him no answer, for that the Duke of Benaunt, who was not named in it, was present, whom he feared to offend: an infallible argument, that priuate respects did moue him more, then any zeale of the publicke good, or the Kings seruice. It was concluded in Perales, that the Kings testament should be of force, and that the tutors named therein should gouerne: and to the end a peace might be the better entertayned, and that all emulation and ialousie might cease, there were added vnto them Don Federic duke of Benaunt, Don Pedro Earle of Transimara, and the Master of Saint Iames: and for the better strengthening of this accord, the generall Estates were held at Burgos, John Hurtado of Mendoza, Pero Lopes of Ayala, Diego Lopes of Estuniga, and John Alphonso de la Cerde, either of them giuing one of his sonnes in hostage, for the assurance of such as should come to Court.

Thus the Estates were called at Burgos; which citie was at great charges for that cause, and for the kings seruice. But before any proceeding, the Councell pretending to bind Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon vnto them, being prisoner in the hands of the Master of S. Iames, they decreed his deliuerie, and procured the king to restore vnto him all the lands which he had enioyed in the Asturia's. There came vnto the assembly at Burgos, the king with Queene Catherine his spouse, and his Infant Don Fernand, and his future wife D. Leonora, who lodged in the Castle, wherof Diego Lopes of Estuniga was capitaine. The Estates being entred into conference, there grew a new tumult: for some of the Noblemen not satisfied with that which had bene concluded in Perales, would haue D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon admitted to councell, besides the aboue-named, wherewith the Duke

Queene of Na-
uar intangled
in the troubles
of Castile.

Archb. of Toledo respects
not the publicke good.

Estates at Bur-
go for a peace.

D. Alphonso
the kings vnkle deliuered out
of prison.

To these Articles the sayd townes bound their goods and persons for ever, vpon paine of fifty maraudis of money then current to be payed by him that should infringe them, and applyable to the Councell of the rest, which should maintaine the contents thereof, to dispose according to their wils: and the towne which hath sayled, shall be forced by the rest to pay the fine, by all ordinarie and extraordinary means, with all charges, damages and interests.

It is credible that the other townes of Guipulcoa made the like associations, in regard of their priuileges and liberties. Vpon this question they pleaded against the Kings Receyuer, and there are letters found granted by the King Don Henry vpon the same, by the which he did abolish these tributes and exactions in fauour of the townes and places of Saluaterra of Iraurgi, Miranda of Iraurgi, Villamajor of Marquina, called Egoyas, Pal of Mendaro, Monreal of Deua, S. Andrew of Ayuar, Placenzia, Elgueta, S. Cruz of Cestona, the Chastellenie of Sayas, S. Nicholas of Orio, Bellamont of Vsurull, with Aguinaga, Astigarraga, Aynduayn, Vireota, S. Peter of Alteaugu, the quarter of Larraul, Ichaço, Cicurguil, Gauria, Arau: the country of Lescano of Aduna, the Chastellenie of Aizondo, that of Aleria, Cumarraga, the parish of Beasain, Arama, Alcega, Echafonda, Saldibia, Gainça, Legerretera, Goyas, Vidania, Beycaina, Rexil, Aya, and the territorie of Azgoytia, whereof there are letters found giuen in Saint Marie of Pelajos, in the year 1399. and confirmed at Villedoit 1401. and by other kings. Thus the Guipulcoans defended their freedoms and liberties against the Kings Officers, who made them profite during the confusions and troubles betwixt the Noblemen and the Councell. Afterwards all the Townes, Boroughs and places of this Province of Guipulcoa were vnitid and made one bodie, and haue maintained themselves so vnto this day, to the great good and general commoditie of the Countrey, and the seruice of the soveraigne King.

26
Paine of all the townes of Guipulcoa.
An. 1392.

The Estates of Burgos continued with little concord, by reason whereof in the beginning of the year 1391. the Deputies of the Estates, with the consent of the parties contending, propounded every one to write: his voice in bulletins, vpon that which was in question: Whether they should follow the testament of King John, or not, and the sayd bulletins beeing cast into a coffer and then opened, the partie that had most voyces should carrie it: but without coming to this trial, the Queene Donna Leonora, who alwaies laboured to reconcile these differences, made another accord, and brought so many reasons, as Don Frederic duke of Benauent, and Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon, were receiued into the gouernement and counsell: so as the Councell should consist of tenne spiritual men, besides the Deputies of the fixe townes, whereof fife should reside fixe moneths: and these were thus diuided: the Duke of Benauent, the Arch-bishop of Toledo, the Master of Saint James, and John Hurtado of Mendoza for one fixe moneths: the Arch-bishop of Saint James, the Earles of Gijon and Tranlamara, and the Master of the Calatrava for the other: the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla should make vp the ten, but they would not come to Court. It seemed by this expedient, practised by the Queene of Navarre, that the affairs were in a course of peace: but the death of Diego Sanchez of Roja a knight of the Earle of Gijons faction, who was slaine neere vnto Burgos by two horsemen of the Duke of Benauents house troubled the whole assembly againe, and had like to haue caused great slaughter in the citie: he that was slayne was interred, and the murderers escaped. For which fift the Deputies of the Estates were so much discontented, as they neglected all that had bene decreed, and done, touching the establishing of a Councell, and took the way of writing their voyces in bulletins, the which being put into a coffer & thag opened, it was found that all did ioyntly require to haue the will of the K. D. John in force. Whereupon the Duke of Benauent, who was not mentioned, went from Court much discontented. The Arch-bishop of Toledo seeing him retired, agreed with them of the aduersie party, vpon these conditions: That whensoever the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla should forbear to come to Court, hee should supply their places, and that a moiety of the kings reuenues should be delivered to him, to be distributed as he should thinke, firs that he should be satisfied for the charges hee had bin at in seeking the execution of K. Johns testament. These things thus concluded, the next day the Agreed betwixt the Noblemen of Castile.

A king with the knights and deputies of the Prouinces being present, it was decreed, that the testament of the deceased king D. John should be observed, and that fixe tutors with the Deputies of Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seuile, Cordoua and Murcia, should gouerne. There were then present of the tutors, the Arch-bishops of Toledo and S. James, the Master of Calatrava who was successor both in the dignity and tutelage to D. Pedro Nugnes, and D. John Hurtado of Mendoza, representing in like manner in this charge D. Pedro Gonzales of Mendoza, named by the will. And for that the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla were absent, the king sent for them to come to Court by a certaine day. The Legate was very ioyful of this accord, and absolved all them that had sworn to the contrary: and in like manner the king did pardon all those that had made any leagues or assemblies. And to giue some contentment to the Duke of Benauent, and the Earle of Gijon, who were excluded from the gouernment, the tutors agreed to giue to either of them a pension of a million of maraudis yearly, during their liues. In this manner the gouernment of the realmes of Castile began to take some form: but yet the factions dyed not, for euery man fought rather his owne aduancement, then the publike good, as well such as remained in Court, as those that left it: some with extreame ambition and desire to gouerne all, as the Archb. of Toledo, and others vpon diuers pretexts of discontents, they did for a long time entertayne diuisions and factions.

Order for the gouernment of
Castile.

During the troubles of Castile, D. John king of Portugal, did quietly enioy his conquered realme, with whom the tutors of Castile sought to prolong the truce, which was almost expired. For the effecting whereof they sent vnto the frontier D. John Serran bishop of Siguença, Garcia Gonçal of Herera, and Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, Marshals of Castile, with Anthony Sanchez, Doctor and Auditor: to whom vpon proposition of a perpetual peace, or of a long truce, there were such vnreasonable conditions demanded by the deputies of Portugal, as the Castilian Ambassadors were forced to return without effect. The K. of Portugal showed himself intractable in his demands, by reason of the new support he thought to find in Castile. For they treated a marriage betwixt a bafe daughter of his called D. Beatrice, and D. Frederic duke of Benauent, who gaue willingly care vnto it.

27
Portugal.

The Ambassadors hauing made their report to the king D. Henry their master, whome they found at Segobia; hee sent back into Portugal the bishop of Siguença, and Doctor Anthony Sanchez, adding vnto them Pere Lopes of Aiala, Alcaide Maior of Toledo. They were much troubled concerning the marriage of D. Frederic, whereof the K. of Naue did aduertise the king D. Henry, yea the did solicit in the name of the D. of Benauent, that either he might bee allowed to marry the daughter of the K. of Portugal, or else they should giue him the Countesse of Albuquerque to wife, who was secretly accorded to the Infant D. Frederic. The K. of Portugal desiring neither of these marriages, seemed to refer all to the Countesses will, who told the Archb. of Toledo in the presence of them all, that shee would do all that pleased the king: wherefore there was hope giuen to the Queene of Naue to haue the marriage finished at Arenual, and a dispatch was sent to D. Frederic, to aduertise him of what was past: but all this was but to diuert the marriage with Portugal, being more pleasing to the Duke, then that of the Countesse of Albuquerque, the which hee made openly knowne vnto the king: wherefore the king proceeding in the same manner, sent the Archb. of Toledo to him, to perswade him with reason, that neither of these two marriages was fit for him, and rather to offer him the Marquis of Villena's daughter, with a more ample dowrie, then that which the king of Portugal could giue to D. Beatrice his daughter. But he could draw no other answer from D. Frederic, but that many Noblemen about the king declaring themselves his enemies, he was forced to seeke fauor and friendship in Portugal.

28

At the same time the Inhabitants of Zamora, growing iecalous of the taptain of the castle, and of the tower of S. Sauior (being a gentleman called Nugno Martinez of Villaycan, a deuoted seruant to the Duke of Benauent) put themselves in armes, and made trenches and barricado's against him, saying, that he had some bad dessein with the Duke of Benauent, whose men he receiued daily into those forts in great numbers, so as they sent to demand succours of the king, and of the Master of the Calatrava, who had bene sent with some troupes, to keepe a garrison at Salamanca, against the frontier of Portugal.

Troubles in Zamora.

The Master considering the consequence of this trouble, at this time when as the truce A with Portugal being expired, they expected warre, would not send any succours, left he should incense the Duke in shewing himselfe partiall; the which pleased the king, who sent the Bishop of Sigüenza speedily to Benauent, whereas the Arch-bishop of Toledo was yet, to the end they might so worke with the Duke, as these troubles of Zamora might be pacified, the which they effected, and the Archb. came to Zamora, & brought the captaine, vpon assurance that the king would take it well to promise to deliuer the fort of S.
Sauior, into the hands of Fernand Alphonso of Montenegro, Governour of Toro: the towne also gaue hostages: which things being thus ended, the Archb. returned to the king at Segobia.

29
Portugal.

conditions of peace proposed by the king
of Portugal.

Castile.

The Deputies of Castile appointed to treat a peace with Portugal, hauing met with the Prior of S. Iohn of Portugal, and others appointed by the King D. Iohn at Sabugal, & conferred often of that busines, they could not yeeld to those hard conditions which were demanded: for the Portugals would haue the townes of Miranda and Sabugal left free to them: that the king D. Henry should giue 12. Gentlemen, and 12. good Burgesse in hostage for 12. yeares, for the assurance of the peace, which should be changed every foure yeares, and others of the like quality deliuered for them. And that during the sayd 12.
yeares he should not giue any ayde vnto the Queen D. Beatrix, nor to the Infants D. Iohn and D. Denis, brethren to the deceased king D. Fernand, who were in Castile, nor to any other that should attempe against the Portugals: that all prisoners of either side should deliuered, with other conditions, which seemed so hard vnto the Castilians, as they durst not adventure to promise any thing, but onely concluded a truce for two moneths, that they might conferre more amply vpon this pacification.

In the meane time the king D. Henry came to Medina del campo, to bee neere to Portugal, and to the duke of Benauent, who made them to breed some inuouation within the realme, hauing drawne together about 500. lances and a great number of Gentlemen at Pedroço, and about Toro. By reason wherof, & of many other insolencies, wherof complaints came daily to Court, the king sent the Archb. of Toledo againe vnto him, with some Deputies of the citties which were of the Councell, to let him vnderstand, how vnseemely it was for him to entertaine the realme, whereof he was a member, in such ielousie, and to consume the people by the spoils and robberies of his men who kept the fields:
to what end went he so armed: what feared he? whereon did he complain: what greater nefit did he pretend by the alliance of Portugal, that he should disdain the fauours of his king, who had dealt both bountifullly and honourably with him, giuing him a million of marauidis yearly, and might hope for greater matters, and seeing that he had such ample testimonies of the kings loue, and the counsels, to perswade him to come to court, where he might purchase more fauor then euer? The duke answered to all that which the Archb.
had propounded vnto him, that he had neuer giuen care to a marriage with Portugal, but in case a peace or a long truce were concluded betwixt the two realmes. As for that he went accompanied with souldiers, it was well knowne that he had enemies in Court, who had factions throughout the realme, which forced him to stand vpon his guard, and therfore they should not hold it strange if he came not to court. Morcouer, if he had receiued fauors from the king, he was ready to employ them in his seruice, and his whole estate.
The Archb. deliuered many reasons vnto him, in presence of the Deputies to pacifie him, and then returned to Medina del campo, where hauing giuen an accompt vnto the king and councell of his employment, he held it fit to content the duke in some sort, for the ma-riage of Portugal was much advanced. Thereupon it was bruted (whofoeuer were the au-rator) that the Duke approached neere vnto the towne, and that hee had intelligence with some, to be brought in with his forces, which caused a great mutiny among them, and e-uery man began to gather souldiers together for his owne assurance.

The Archb. who was a friend to the duke (so far-forth as he did entertaine the troubles wherein he tooke delight) propounded a means which he held very conuenient, to auoid the spoiles which might follow these quarrels, which was, that he with the Archb. of S.
Iames, and the Master of the Calatrava should retire themselves to their houses, and that about the king there should only remaine Iohn Hurtado of Mendoza, and the Deputies of townes,

A townes, and that the king should consult with them how to giue content to the duke of Benauent, and to find him a party equal to that which was offered him in Portugal.

By these factions, all the Realme was in combustion, and all sorts of insolencies were committed both in town and cuntry, iustice was abused, and the treasure misgouerned. Mistries of his will warre.
The city of Seulle was molested by D. Pedro Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, and D. Alfonso of Guzman, Admirall of Castile, who seized thereon, in the absence of D. Iohn Alphonso of Guzman, Earle of Niebla one of the tutors, chasing many of his seruants and followers out of the city. On the other side Nuño Martines of Villaycan, capitaine of the fort of Zamora, not satisfied with the accord which had beene made by the means of the Archb. of Toledo, sent to the duke of Benauent to haue him approach, and he would deli-uer him vp the castle which he had in guard: the duke posting thither, could not effect this enterprize, for that the inhabitants of Zamora, being aduertised by some of the dukes men, provided for it, whereupon the Duke returned, and many that followed him did abandon him: wherevpon the king sent the Archb. of S. Iames, and the Master of Calatraua to assure the townes that were suspected, but they were shut out of Toro, the Inhabitants saying, that they would not receiue any, if the king were not in person, but they entered into Zamora, where as many knights of the dukes traine yielded vnto them, and soon after the king came. But the Duke was aduertised thereof at the castle of Majorca, belonging to the Infant D. Fernand, by Iohn Alphonso de la Cerda, who hauing bin high Steward of the Infants house, and then displaced by the kings tutors, substituting in his place Pero Sueres of Quignones, Governour of Leon, had through despight fallen to the Duke of Benauents partie.

Whilste that these contended in Castile, the Deputies, appointed to treat a peace with the King of Portugal during the truce which had beene prolonged, came to Extremos in the yeare 1393. the Portugal demanding for a small resolution, these Articles following. That they should giue in hostage the base sons of the duke of Benauent, of the Earls of Gijon, and of Niebla, (for the great men of Spaine had more base children then legitimate) the nephewes of the Masters of S. Iames and Calatrava, of the Arch-bishops of Toledo, and S. Iames, of Iohn Hurtado of Mendoza, and of Diego Lopes of Estuniga. But about all they demanded the Duke of Benauents son, thinking he would not giue him, vnlesse the king of Castile, would deliuer the castle of Zamora into his hands, the which they desired, being assured that the Duke was wholly at their deuotion: but when they vnder-stood, that he had sayled to enter that fort, and that he began to be abandoned by many of the knights which had folowed him, they became more tractable, and yielded to a truce for 15. yeares, so as they would giue them in hostage, the Earle of Gijons son, and eleuen Knights sonnes more, with 12. children of the cittizens of Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seulle, Cordoua, and Zamora: yet would not the Deputies of Castile conclude this truce, which was most beneficiall for Portugall, but demanded some repite to aduertise the king and his tutors. The king with his councell hauing considered the danger wherinto the home-bred troubles, together with a forraigne warre would draw them, they yielded to all the Portugals demanded, namely, not to ayde nor assist D. Beatrix the widow Queen, nor *D.
Iohn*, nor D. Denis her Vncles. Thus a truce was concluded for fifteene yeares betwixt Castile and Portugal.

The Court being in the cittie of Zamora, the capitaine of the castle refused for some daies to deliuer the place vp to the king, saying, that his father Iohn Martines of Villaycan lately deceased, being Governour of Zamora, and He had held it by fealty and homage, and that they might not deliuer it vp vntill the king were 14. yeares old complete: but the tutors sought him by so many meanes, and made him such promises, that he should be recompensed for his fathers estates, which had beene giuen to others, as in the end he deli-uered the place into their hands, for the which he was in effect recompensed. They had promised him the gouernement of Ledesma, which did belong to the Countesse of Albuquerque, but they of the place refusing him, for that they did not trust him, he was otherwise provided for. The Court remaining at Zamora, the Archb. weary of too much rest, retired himselfe into his Bishoprick, being not greatly affected to the kings seruice, but to take part and adhere wholly to the Duke of Benauent, he now gaue them greater cause to suspect to court, to give his opinion touching these things, but hee answered, that hee would A not come, whilst the Archbishop of Toledo was in court.

With these intestine troubles, the King D. Henry was almost drawn into an vnseason-able warre, with the Moores of Granado, by the vaine ouerweening of D. Martin Iuable warre, with the Moores of Granado, a Portugal borne, who being entred into quarrel with Isoph King of Granado, touching religion, would make trial of the truth of Christian religion by armes; of his person against the King of Granado, or of a hundred Christian Knights against two hundred Moores, or more, to that proportion, vnto a thousand. The King being aduertised of this other tumult, hee commanded the maister by his letters not to enter into this action; for that hee would not by any means haue B the truce broken with the Moores: but the maister not regarding the Kings prohibition, marched to Cordoua, with three hundred Launces, and one thousand foote, hauing a crosse for his Ensigne. They of Cordoua, let him know that he should not undertake this enterprise, which was contrary to the Kings will and seruice, and the peace of the country, giuing him many examples of their ruine which haue caused vnecessary war:
but he gaue more credit to an Hermit, called Iohn del Sayo, who had assured him that hee should haue the victory, wishing him not to giue care to any that said the contrary: Moreouer being much giuen to Astronomy, he thought he had foreseene some thing by the starres. The wisest men of Cordoua, namely D. Alphonso and D. Diego; Lords of Aguilar, seeing that no reasons could preuaile with the maister, would haue stopp'd C passage at the city bridge: but he was so fauoured by the superstitious multitude, vnder colour that it was dishonourable to hinder an enterprise of the crosse against Infidels:
so as he not only past, but so augmented his troups, as being come to Alcala the Royal, he had about five thousand foote. At Alcala D. Alphonso Fernandes of Cordoua Lord of Aguilar, and his brother D. Diego Fernandes, came vnto him, who did admonish him again, adding withall, that euery one would hold it indiscreetly done of him, who was reputed a wise Knight, and Maister of the Order of Alcantara, to goe and defie the King of Granado, who was so neere, as with in lesse then two daies hee might encounter him with two hundred thousand foote, and fifty thousand horse, and that without doubt, he sides the danger and hurt hee might doe vnto the realme, by the breach of the truce, D and defeat of his men, he should blemish his honour, and draw vpon himselfe perpetuall blame, amongst all men that professe armes as a rash and ill aduised capitaine: but first-ing him obstinate, and pretending that it would be held cowardise and basenesse in him, if hauing past so farre, hee should now returne: wherevpon they wished him to lead his men to the riuier of Ayres, which makes the limit betwixt Granado and Castile, and there attend the King of Granado a day or two: if hee appeered, hee should either fight with him body to body, or else a hundred Christians against two hundred Moores, as they agreed: But if the Moores came not to the confines, hee should bring backe his troups, and so hee should preserve his honour and reputation. The Maister who was confirmed in his desire to fight with the Moores, being moreouer incenled for that the Granadins had intreated two Gentlemen ignominiously, whom hee had sent vnto their King, to carry this challenge; hee answered brauely to these Knights, that hee thanked them for their good aduice, but he was resolu'd not to stay, vntill hee saw the port of El-uira at the city of Granado, or fight with the Moores, if hee met them vpon the way, & that he did hope to let the world see a miracle within few daies. Thus he entred vnadvisedly into the country of Granado, and did assault the tower of Excla, where hee was hurt in the hand, and neere vnto him were three of his men slaine by the defendants, whereas hee beganne to be amazed, for the Hermit which followed him had told him, that he should not loose a man, and therefore hee demanded of him what it meant, that they had already slaine three of his men, to whom the Hermit answered, that it was ment, in battaile, and not at the seeing of places, the which the Maister beleued, as assaying the tower more furiously then before.

The King of Granado seeing the rashnesse of this vnadvised Maister of the Order of Alcantara, sent Ambassadors to the King of Castile, to complaine of the breach of the truce made betwixt them, and to demand if it were by his commandement or not. On 36.

Moores.

Great power of the realme of Granado.

After the battail bet-twixt Granado and Castile.

Hermit an Impostor.

A On the other side hee assembled a good number of horse and foote, with the which hee marched towards the frontier, he surpris'd the maister, who was ill aduertised, and charged him, with his troups so furiously, as without giuing them time to arme, hee slue the maister, and all his horsemen, with most of his footmen, of the which about fiftene hundred saued themselves by flight. The maister D. Martin Iuares caused himselfe to bee burn'd without feare, and there is such an Inscription found vpon his tombe in Alcantara, whether his body was carried by the permission of the King of Granado.
The King of Castile had newes of this defeat being in the Monastery of Santa Maria of Pelayos, neere vnto the towne of Saint Martin de val d' Eglice, where in a manner at the same time arriv'd the Ambassadors from the King of Granado, who made their complaint, and demanded if the maister of Alcantara were entred in hostile manner into Granado, by his commandement, and what his pleasure was for the entertayning of the truce. The King answered, that what the maister had done did much displease him, and that he had forbidden him by his letters to vndertake such quarrels, it auaying nothing to countenance religion by the breach of the truce, which he desired to entertaine with the King of Granado his friend: but he had not obeyed him, for the which hee had beene punished, if God by his iust iudgement had not abandoned him to bee slaine by the Moores, and his men defeated, as they had well deseru'd, whereof he was newly aduertised, to his great content. The Messengers were sent backe with this answer, the which did increase the ioy which the Moorish King conceiued for his victory, by the assurance which they brought him of the continuance of the truce betwixt Granado and Castile.

This trouble vpon the Moores frontier, was a pretext for the Duke of Benauent and other of the confederates to arme, and to fortifie themselves, euery one in his quarter, saying it was to be ready at the Kings commandement, if the Moores did enter into Andalusia. The King did cause D. Fernand Roderiques of Villalobos, to bee chosen Maister of the Knights of Alcantara, in the place of the deceased Barbuda. D. Laurence Suarez of Figueroa Maister of Saint Iames, vnderstood of this route in Ocagne, where he was, and came presently to the King being at Pelayos; he aduised him to haue his forces in readinesse for all euents, assuring him that he should easily suppress the Duke of Bena-uent and the Earles of Gijon and Transamara, with other Malcontents, the which hee should not much regard, but rather be carefull of the Moorish warres, if they grew wor-
And to assure the frontier of Andalusia it was expedient that he were sent to Villa Real, with the Archbishop of Toledo, to ioine with the Maister of the Calatrava, and that the King should come to Toledo: promising moreouer that he would perswade D. Al- phonso of Arragon Marquis of Villena to come and doe him seruice. The King beleeued this counsell, and came to Toledo, whether D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga came vnto him, and gaue an account of the goiage which hee had made vnto D. Iohn Garcia Atin- rique Archbishop of Saint Iames: but the King being otherwise aduertised of the disobedience of the Duke of Benauent, and of his confederats, and how they continually leauied men, he came to Illesca being followed by the Archbishop of Toledo, the Maister of Saint Iames, the Earle of Niebla, D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoza Admirall, Iohn
Hurtado of Mendoza Lord Steward, Diego Lopes of Estuniga chiefe Iustice, Ruy Lopes of Aualos Chamberlaine, and other Noblemen, with about seuentene hundred Launces.

Heere D. Alphonso of Arragon Marquis of Villena, who had not approched neere the court all the Kings reigne, came and kist his hands, being accompanied with a hundred Knights and Squiers of the country of Valencia, which he had aduentured through the absence of the Earle of Transamara his competitor, who was in disgrace with the King D. Henry. The Marquis hauing purged himselfe of such things as might bee ob-iect'd against him, and made many excuses, for his not comming to court, he made sure to be refore to his Office of Constable of Castile, which had beene taken from him by the Governours, to conferre it vpon D. Pedro Earle of Transamara, to the preiudice of his honour and dignity, to whom the King gaue a gracious answer, assuring him that he would order his affaires with all equity and Iustice: then he intreated him to passe the mountaines and to come with him into Castile the Old, but the Marquis excus'd him selfe,

Ambassade
from the king of Granado to
the King of Castile.

37.
D. Henry receiveth the rebells to his obedience

D. Alphonso of Arragon receiveth gratia easily by the king of Castile.

selfe, saying, that he was not come so well appointed as he desired to doe him service, A but if he gaue him means he would returne willingly to serue him. So he returned into his country, not well satisfied with the King D. Henry, who made no account to restore him to his office of Constable, but soone after, by the aduice of the Archbishop of Toledo, he tooke from him the title of Marquis of Villena, for that it seemed not safe, nor profitable for the Estate of Castile, that a Marquisate fronting vpon a forraigne Realme, should remaine in the hands of a Knight who had so strict an alliance as the Marquis D. Alphonso had with the Kings and Realme of Arragon. From Illesca the King past to Vaileddolir, where he was aduertised that the duke of Benauent was at Cisneros with six hundred Launces, and two thousand foote; and the Archbishop of Saint Iames in Amusco, with other fix hundred Launces and one thousand foote. Many were of opinion that the Kings forces should be led against them, to fight with them: but the founder iudgment diswaid al fighting, if it were possible, for the realm should loose of either side, besides the hazard where into the King should thrust both his Estate and life, by a battaile, to the which a Prince must neuer come against his subiects, vnlesse he be forced by inevitable necessity. This aduice preuailed, and there were sent vnto the Archbishop of Saint Iames, and at his request, John Hurtado, and Diego Lopes of Mendoça to Calabazanos, with whom they wrought so, as they drew him to court vpon alliance, whereas the Archbishop did also obtaine a safe-conduit for the Duke of Benauent, to whom he went himselfe, and brought him to court. The duke being in the Kings presence, sought to free himselfe of the accusations which were laied against him. First he maintayned that he had taken none of the Kings reuenues within his iurisdiction, but that was due vnto him, the which should not be held to great a crime, seeing that many prelats and others of lesse quality then himselfe, had often vied it, and were not drawn in to questiō. As for the men of war which he had gathered together, he had therein followed the general command, for feare of war with the Moores, after the defeat of the maister of Alcantara: and if he had bene at Roa, to see the Queene of Nauarre his sister it was not preiudicial to the realm, nor contrary to the Kings seruice. These excuses were held neither good nor true by the king, who notwithstanding told him, that he would willingly forger al that was past, so as he would from thenceforth liue in peace and obedience, D propounding vnto him these conditions. That if it were found he had leauied more money then had bene assigned him at the last Estates held at Madrid, he should restore it vnto the king, or to such as it did belong: that he should cause D. Pedro to come to court, whom the King pardoned, for that which did concerne him, restoring to others their interests: that the duke should giue his two base sonnes in hostage, and should leaue in deposito the castles of Medina del Riosecco, and Tordehumos for foure yeeres; with this clause that if he raised any tumults, those places should come vnto the King: That if he should fall from the Kings seruice, certain Knights of his household should promise & swear to turne vnto the kings party: that the pension of an hundred & 15. thousand Marauidis, grauented vnto the Duke at the Estates at Madrid, should be augmented to six hundred thousand: that for the fuenty thousand frankes of gold which had bene promised him for his marriage, the King gaue him the reuenues of Valence de Campo, the which John of Portugal had till then enjoyed, and now he tooke it from him, for that hee had bene a praetiser and confederat against his Estate. These things being thus ordred, the duke and the Archbishop went from court, and being come to Cisneros, the duke ratiſied al, and dismissed his troups, retayning only a hundred launces for the Kings seruice.

Within few daies after D. Alphonso Henriquez came vnto the King being at Vaileddolir, with a letter of credit from the Constable D. Pedro Earle of Trantamara his brother, telling the King, that if it pleased him to giue some assurance vnto the Earle, hee would come to court: wherevpon the King assured him, and hee came presently, freeing himselfe of many things whereof he had bene accused: then he complained of D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, who had forcibly taken from him the towne of Alua de Tormes, which the deceased King D. John had giuen him in exchange for the towne of Naua, which he had taken from him, to giue it to D. John Infant of Portugal.

The King gaue the Constable a good reception, promising to provide for all things according

Duke of Benauent comes to court, and seeks to purge him selfe.

conditions propounded to the Duke of Benauent.

D. Pedro Earle of Trantamara comes to court.

A according vnto Iustice: and presently he went in perfon to Paredes of Naua, which place he deliuered into the hands of Ray Lopes of Aualos his Lord Chamberlaine, and did sommon his vnkle D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, to appeere within threecore daies, and to produce what right he had to this place, wherevpon Iustice should be done him: but if he did not appeere, it should be adiudged to D. Pedro. The King did also presse him to swear the Articles of the truce of Portugal, as other Noblemen, Prelats and Knights had done according to the capitulation; the which the Earle would not doe, but sought excuses and euasions, wherewith the King was very much discontented. This was a matter of great importance, for the Marquis of Villena and the Earle of Gijon refusing to swear the Articles, the King of Portugal pretended that the truce was of no force, and that the hostages were forfeited vnto him: So as he refused the oth which the Marquis, after his refusal, would haue taken when as hee came to court, saying, that the time prefixed for such ratifications was past, wherefore they must capitulate anew.

During these troubles in Castile, the King of Nauarre did still sollicit his wiues returne or at the least of his two daughters: and the King D. Henry had a great desire to see her dislodge, but he knew not how to send her honestly out of Castile: But she her selfe prepared the way: for when as hee vnderstood that the Duke of Benauent, and others of the league were reduced vnder the Kings obedience, fearing some surpris, he procured D. Pedro the Constable to come to Roa, with two hundred Launces, and some footmen, and then seeing her selfe as it were assured, shee sent vnto the King to demand assurance to come to court, to iustifie her selfe: but the King thinking that the Duke of Benauent, the Constable, his aunt, and all they of the league in General, did smother in their breasts the same wils they had before, hee resolved to punish them, one after an other; and therefore he caused them, that the Queene of Nauarre had sent vnto him, to be staied, and then being come to Burgos, he propounded in counsell, what was to bee done. There were present the Archbishop of Toledo, the maiſters of Saint Iames and Calatrava, D. John Hurtado of Mendoça the Admiral, D. John Hurtado, D. Ray Lopes of Aualos, and others, whereof some came armed to counsell, by the Kings commandement. D. Frederic Duke of Benauent came also, notwithstanding that some of his friends had wished him to retire, telling him that they ment to take him: as he entred into the place where the counsell was kept, the King went forth, making shew that he would goe up, and speaking aloude, that they must consider what answer to giue to the Queene of Nauarre.

And soone after hauing sent them word, that they should speedily dispatch that which they had to doe, the Duke was taken prisoner, and put in the castle of Burgos, in the custody of the Maister of Saint Iames, from whence hee was afterwards transported to Montreal, and in the end in the time of the King. D. John to the castle of Almodouar del Rio neere vnto Cordoua, where he ended his daies.

This is that famous prison of D. Frederic duke of Benauent, celebrated throughout all Spaine. This done the King sent Diego Peres Sarmiento the Gouvernor, to seize vpon all the Lands and goods, not onely of the Duke of Benauent, but also of the Constable D.
Pedro, and by the same means he seized vpon the lands of his aunt, Donna Leonora Queene of Nauarre, and he himselfe, being followed with some troups, went to Roa (where she was) to beseege her, and take her: wherevpon the Constable who was with her, abandoned her, and went into Galicia, to provide for his owne affaires. The Queene seeing her selfe forsaken, beganne to lament, filling all the castle of Roa with pitifull cries; and the more to moue them to pity, she attired her selfe, her daughters and women in mourning weeds, and sent her Confessor vnto the King, to know his pleasure, seeing hee came in that manner with an army. The King gaue him some reasons, and marched on to Valera, from whence he sent John Hurtado of Mendoça and Ray Lopes of Aualos to the Queene, to whom (being full of teares, and with a mournfull habit and countenance) she complained much of the King her Nephew, saying, that hee sought to take away her goods; and demanded assurance to see and speake with him.
The Inhabitants of Roa, carefull of their safeties, sent to offer the place vnto the King, if it pleased him to receiue them as his owne, and not to alienate them any more, wherewith

D. Frederic Duke of Benauent is prisoner.

Queene of Nauarre.

with the King was content: whereupon they received the Archbishop of Toledo, John Aluarez, Diego Lopes and Ruy Lopes with their followers, and soone after the King entred, to whom the Queene being come, they entred into a church, and there had much conference. In the end the King granted her the reuenues of Roa, Sepulveda, Mardrigal and Arcualo, retayning the Iustice vnto himselfe and he commanded her to follow him to Vailledolit.

Earle of Gyon seizes upon Ouedo.

This businesse being ended, the King marched towards Leon to make warre against his vnkle D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, who was in the Asturia, and had seized vpon the city of Ouedo, which did belong vnto the King, the which he did fortifie, with his towne of Gijon, and other places. By the way hee had conference with the Archbishop of Saint Iames, who was much moued for the imprisonment of the Duke of Benauent: for he had come to court vpon his word and assurance. The King made him promise that he should not enter into any league, yet the griefe hee had for the Dukes detention, made him forget all the affection he had had to the seruice of the crowne of Castile, which in the end he left, and retired into Portugal, making the Schisme in the church his pretext, saying, that of his knowing the Pope reigning in Auignon was not lawfull, but he that held his seat at Rome: and for that the Portugals did adhere vnto him he retired into Portugal, where he obtained the Bishoprike of Coimbra, and then the Archbishoprike of Braga, where he ended his daies. He was of the noble family of Manriques, a man of a small stature, but of an active spirit, full of courage, high minded, eloquent, liberrall, apt to compound great mens quarrels, ambitious, and one that enuid the Archbishop of Toledo. D. Pedro of Tenorio, who was of a different humor; seuer, statly, ambitious also, but he couered his ambition with modesty, maintayning his dignity in such sort as he was respected and feared. He lost in Castile the Archbishoprike of Saint Iames, the office of Chancellor to the King, with many other Iuyings. The King in passing caused the castle of Manilla to be razed, and vniued the towne (which had belonged vnto the Duke) vnto his demaines. He then sent his men against Gijon, the which they did beseege both by sea and land.

Archbishop of
S. Iames comes into Portugal.

His disposition

Being come to Leon, he made a declaration in a great assembly, in the chiefe church, of the rebellions and felonies of the Earle D. Alphonso his vnkle, committed both against the King D. John his father and himselfe, the fauors he had done him since his enlargement by the Gouvernors, and his Ingratitude, for the which he did confiscate all his goods to the crowne, except the Siegneury of Noruegna, which he gaue to the church of Ouedo, as had beene formerly ordained by the deceased King his father. The King hauing sent some troupes towards Ouedo the Earles men were chased away, and the King was maister of the city; so as the Earle was forced to shut himselfe into Gijon, where he was straightly beseege. One of his base sonnes called D. Hernando holding the castle of Saint Martin, deliuered it vnto the King, and came vnto his seruice. The Constable D. Pedro Earle of Transimara, seeing what had befallne the Duke of Benauent and the Queen of Nauar, and how they handled the Earle of Gijon, he found means to make his accord, and came vnto the King at the seige of Gijon, by whom he was well receiued, and had giuen him the townes of Pont Ferrada, Villafranca and Varcarell, which had beene the Duke of Benaunts. The yeere growing towards an end, and the country of Asturia being barren, not able long to maintaine an army, the King resolved to make some accord with the Earle, who sought it: whereupon they concluded these Articles. That the French King should be Iudge of their controuerfies, who should iudge within six monethes whether the Earle had offended, and if it were found that hee should loose his lands, he was content, if not, all should be restored to him againe: That vntill a definitiue sentence, the towne of Gijon should remaine in the Earles hands, vpon condition it should remaine in the Estate it was then, without adding any supply of victuals or men; and that the Earle should not goe about three leagues from the town, if it were not into France, to sollicite the iudgement of this cause. In which case the King should giue him thye hundred thousand Marauidis, to defray his charges: That the Earles other Lands should remaine in the possession of D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, Lord Chamberlaine to the King, who should hold them vpon his faith; and that the Earle

VPon against the Earle of Gijon.

Accord made with the Earle of Gijon.

A Earle should giue his sonne D. Henry for hostage. By this composition the Earle D. Alphonso was freed from seige.

This yeere 1394, died D. John Alphonso of Guzman Earle of Niebla, a man of a peaceful spirit, yet was he somewhat engaged in the troubles of Castile, leaving his sonne D. Henry of Guzman heire to his great possessions. Pope Clement died also that yeere in Auignon, the sixteenth yeere of his Popedom, in whose place the Cardinals of that seat, meaning to proceed to the election of an other, receiued letters from the Vniuersity of Paris, to perswade them to deferre it for some daies, to know the intention of Pope Boniface the ninth, resyding at Rome, touching the vniou of the church; yet notwithstanding they entred into the Conclau nine daies after the funeral, and without regard of any letters written by the Vniuersity, and King Charles, they gaue their voices, and withall made a protestation in writing, that the future Pope should not hinder the rooting out of the Schisme, and that he should bee bound to giue ouer his dignity if neede were; they made choise of D. Pedro de Luna, carrying the title of Santa Maria in Cosmedin, a Carellan and Doctor of the Canon law; a man of great authority, and well practised in worldly affaires, whom they called Benedict the thirteenth. The French King yielding to that was done, sent his Ambassadors to Auignon, to doe the accustomed homage to the new Pope: but being afterwards sollicit by some of the Cardinals, who repented themselves of Benedict election, he fought, by means of the Cardinals, which had beene made, to force the Pope to quit his dignity, vnder pretext to reconcile the Schisme; but Benedict was loth to leaue so sweet a morcell, which so many of his order had gap'd after, resisting long, to the great preiudice of all Christendome, and the French King did in vaine sollicite by many Ambassages, D. Henry King of Castile, to ioyne with him, in the displacing of Benedict from his Popedom, whom the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon did also obey.

38
Death of the Earle of Niebla.

Death of Pope Clement at Auignon.

Election of Pedro Luna
to be Pope, called Benedict
the 13.

The King D. Henry hauing proceeded, as we haue said, against the chiefe authors of the troubles of his realme, he returned to Vailledolit, and knowing by good experience the disposition of his aunt, whom he had brought with him, he resolved to send her into Nauarre, to King Charles her husband, the which (notwithstanding the Estate shee was in) she did impugne by all means possible: wherefore the King fearing she would steale away, and put her selfe into some place of strength, which would be very troublesome to take, he commanded the prior of Saint Iohn to set a gard about her lodging, and he himselfe went to Tordeffillas. Then the Queene knew that she must of force returne into Nauarre, without any other assurances then such promises and othes as the King her husband had giuen, and seeing no euasion, nor delay, she sent to intreat the King her Nephew to be well aduised what he did, in seeking to force her to returne into Nauarre; and seeing that it did concerne both her honour and life, she intreated him to propound it to the graue and learned men of his council, to resolve what was fit for her to doe. The King was very well pleased herewith, and committed the businesse to the Bishops of Palence and Zamora, by whose aduice it was concluded; that the Queene Donna Leonora should returne to her husband, and that the King her Nephew should accompany her to the frontiers of Nauarre, whereof she was aduertised, that she might dispose her selfe to obey, but it was against her will: whereupon the King returned to Vailledolit, and from thence they tooke their way towards Nauarre, hauing sent the Archbishop of Toledo and him of Zamora, an Arragonois, and the bishop of Albi a Frenchman, with others, to Tudele, to aduertise King Charles of his wifes coming and to take a new oath of him, to intreat her well and honourably. The Archbishop of Saragossa came to meet the Queene, being accompanied by many Knights of Nauarre, France and Arragon; to whom she was deliuered, with her daughters, vpon the confines of Castile and Nauarre, to the great contentment of King Henry, to whom she had beene chargeable many yeeres, by her turbulent and ambitious spirit. The King D. Charles did shew by the effects, that he was neuer ill-affected towards her; for he receiued her, with all that did accompany her, with great honour, and shewes of loue and ioy: he intreated her courteously, and honoured her as much as she could desire: commanding there should be feasts and bonfires made throughout all the realme of Nauarre, by reason of her coming.

39
Nauarre.

Queene of Nauarre sent to her husband against her will.

ning. And for that they had not yet had any sonne, he would haue the Estates of his A realme assembled to that end at Pampelone, some monthes after the Queenes returne (swearing the Infanta's his daughters for lawfull heires of the realme, and of his other Estates, who should succeed one after another, vnto the last liuer. He caused his subjects to take this oth, as it was accustomed in Spaine, and to auoide warre and sedition, whereof they had fresh examples in the neighbour countries of Arragon and Valencia.

Arragon.

D. John King of Arragon, sonne to D. Pedro the Cerimonious, hauing reigned nine yeeres and three monthes, went about that time into the Island of Majorca, whether he had beene drawne by the seditions of the Islanders, rayfed against the Lewes, which dwelt among them, whom they had slaine, and spoiled, after the manner of the Castilians and Arragonois, incensed by a seditious Archdeacon, preaching at Seuile, with which B mischief all the townes of Spaine were in the end infected except Saragossa. The King hauing punished the chiefe authors of these hatefull mutinies, in his returne, he was driven by a storme, to Cap de Cruz, about Ampurias, from whence being come to Castillon, he was surprized by Iodaine deathsome hold that it was in chasing the Wolfe in the woods of Foxa, others say, hee fell and bruized his skull, in the yeere 1395. This Prince, as we haue formerly said, had taken to wife a French Lady, called Marthe, daughter to Iames Earle of Armaignac, who gouerned him quietly, by whom he had one only daughter called Joane, married at the time of his death to Mathew of Castellbon, Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearn, which was the cause of much warre in Arragon. C Queene D. Marthe being dead, soone after her deliuey, the King D. John married Donna Violant daughter to the Duke of Bar, who brought him a sonne, but of short life, and lies interred at Saragossa, and afterwards a daughter, carrying the mothers name, and practised in Spaine, that the crowne of Arragon did belong vnto his wife, and sought all meanes to obtaine it: but the Arragonois would not then subiect themselves vnder a strange Prince, and reiecting the womans right, they did choose D. Martin for their king, who was brother to the deceased, and was then in Sicile.

The Arragonois reiect D. Joane from the succession and choose D. Martin.

These quarrels ryling from the succession in Arragon, and the reiection of the heire of that realme, which happened soone after the returne of the Queene Donna Leonora into Nauarre, it moued King Charles to take an oth of his subjects, that they should maintaine the Realme to his eldest daughter, and successiue to the rest.

The end of the seauenteenth Booke.

THE

THE EIGHTEENTH BOOKE

of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

1. Proceeding of D. Henry King of Castile, against the Earle of Gijon in France.
2. Actions of Mahomet Guadix, and other Kings of Granada, treacheries, poisoning, and other excesses of that nation to reigne.
3. Deeds of D. Henry King of Castile, called the sickly. Examples of his Iustice, temperance and rigour, with other politike acts.
4. Iohn Pablo, a lew, a learned man, and his conuersation with the honours and dignities, which he and his children obtained in Spaine.
5. Reformation of the Knights of the Calatrava.
6. Warre betwixt Portugal and Castile, for the crowne.
7. The Dutchesse of Momblanc seizeth vpon the realme of Arragon, in the name of her husband D. Martin, who was the 15. King of Arragon, and the first of that name, wherevnto the Estates consented.
8. Confirmation of D. Martin King of Arragon: his carriage in the gouernment of his realme to foraine Princes and the Pope.
9. Death of D. Pedro Tenorio, Archbishop of Toledo, his family, qualities, workes and buildings, vacancy of that sea souere yeeres.
10. Ruy Lopes d' Aualos, and the beginning of the house of Aualos.
11. Continuation of the Schisme, friar Vincent Ferrier a great preacher.
12. Warre against the Moores of Granada: the death of King Henry the 3.
13. Marriage of D. Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, with Don Martin King of Sicile. Accord made by the King of Nauarre with the French King, for the Lands of his patrimony that were seized.
14. D. Iohn the second of that name, King of Castile, an Infant of two and twenty monthes old. Fidelity and modestie of D. Fernand the Kings uncle: Castile gouerned by him and the Queene mother.
15. Warre of Granada managed by the Infant Don Fernand: first use of Artillerie in Spaine.
16. Superstitions, new sects and a third head in the church of Rome.
17. Warre of Saraxia, troubles at Valencia, death of D. Martin, the sonne King of Sicile: Marriage of D. Martin the father, King of Arragon.
18. Warre of Castile against the Moores.

Kkk 2

39. Death

The Contents.

- 19 Death of D. Martin King of Arragon: Factions for the succession to that crowne: The A pretendants: Arbitrators named to choose a King.
20 Duke of Benavent escapes out of prison. The Jewes and Moores commanded to carry certaine markes by the councill of fr̃s Vincent Ferrer.
21 D. Fernand first of that name, and the 16. King of Arragon: opposition of the Earle of Vrgel, his imprisonment: the Kings coronation.
22 Retreat of Pope Benedict into Spaine. Councill of Constance. Estates at Saragossa: Marriage of the Infant D. Alphonso of Arragon, with Donna Maria of Castile.
23 D. Alphonso the fifth King of Arragon.
24 Government of Castile under Donna Catherina the Queene mother. B 25 Proceeding of the Councill of Constance against Pope Benedict, and his obstinacy.
26 Conquest of the Canaries by John of Betancourt.
27 Family of Estuniga: death of the Queene Regent, and other affaires of Castile.
28 Deeds of D. Iohn King of Portugal: Manastery of the bastille, and other workes built by him. Taking of Ceuta in Barbary: descomtrie of the Madera's. First search of the Portu-gals into the South and East seas.
29 Marriage of the Infant D. Iohn, brother to D. Alphonso King of Arragon, and of D. Blanch of Nauarre, widow Queene of Sicile.
30 Marriage pursued with violence by Don Henry maister of Saint James, brother to the King of Arragon, of Donna Catherina, Infanta of Castile; and what fol- C
lowed.
31 Causes of the warre of Naples attempted by D. Alphonso King of Arragon: Estate of that Realme under Queene Ioane the second.
32 Advancement of D. Aluaro de Luna, to be Constable of Castile.
33 D. Iohn first of that name, and 32. King of Nauarre, in the rights of D. Blanch his wife.
34 Deliquery of D. Henry maister of Saint James being prisoner, Estates at Toro. Relitituiton of the Constable, being chased away: ambition of D. Iohn king of Nauarre, and of his brother D. Henry.
35 New Order of Monkes of Saint Ierome in Spaine.
36 Estate of the Moores of Granada under Mahumet the left-handed, and other Kings. D 37 Trouble betwixt Castile, Nauarre and Arragon.
38 Marriage of Donna Isabella of Portugal, to Philip duke of Bourgondy. Institution of the Order of the golden Fleece.
39 Proceeding by iustice against the King of Nauarre and his partisans in Castile.
40 Peace concluded betwixt Portugal and Castile. D. Nugno Aluarez of Pereira first Constable of Portugal, and his last act.

Kings in Spaine mentioned in this eighteenth Booke.

ARRAGON.

CASTILE and LEON

NAUARRE.

15. D. Martin 1.
16. D. Fernand 1.
17. D. Alphon 5.

18. D. Iohn 2. and the 39.

32. D. Iohn 1.

IN

The generall History of Spaine.

A  N the reigne of King Henry the third, it often appeared how vaine the enterprises of bad subiects are against a vertuous and innocent Prince: for God did preferre this poore pupill, from the ambitious rage of his Tutors, Princes, Prelats and great Lords of Castile, ruining them by their owne discord. And he did so much honour the royall Maieesty, as when as this young Prince had taken vpon him the government of the realme, at the age of foure-teene yecres, he deliuered them into his hands, to punish them, as their obliuate rebellion, and ingratitude had deserued. Being freed (as we haue said) of the Duke of Benauent, the Queene of Nauarre, and the Archbishop of Saint Iames, and hauing by their example reduced the Earle of Transamara and the Archbishop of Toledo, to their duties:
B there onely remained D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon his vnclē, who was reduced to that extremity, as he was forced to vndergoe the censure of a strange Prince, in a cause which concerned his honor, his goods and his liberty: the which he might haue enioyed with reputation, yea much augmented his dignity, if he had contained himselfe with modesty, in the fauor of D. Henry King of Castile his naturall Prince.

According to the accord made at the seege of Gijon, the King sent his Ambassadors to the French King, to debate the causes he had to dispossesse D. Alphonso, who hauing staid many daies in the court of France, the Earle of Gijon, nor his Attorney appeering, and the time of the assignation being expired, they prepared for their returne, when they C had newes that their aduersie party was come to the coast of Brittain, and was coming towards Paris: wherefore to giue more countenance to their cause, they attended.
Being arriued, hee spake with King Charles, for his iustification, accusing the King his Nephew, that he sought to take his portion from him, lying in Asturia, Leon and Castile, the which was assigned him by the deceased King D. Iohn his brother, adding many other charges and excesse, wherevnto the Ambassadors answered pertinently, laying open the Earles ingratitude, rebellion and conspiracy, against the King his Lord, and benefactor, who had drawne him out of prison, and restored him to all his goods, the which King Iohn had iustly taken from him, adding therevnto pensions, Estates and honours; and accusing him in particular of the violent usurpation of the towne of Paredes of Naua, and other tyrannicall actions done by him, hauing also refused to signe the D truce of Portugal, with many other acts of contempt and felony: concluding that hee ought to loofe the Earldome of Gijon, and to be wholly left to the discretion and will of the King his Lord; so as in the proofes of these crimes, exhibited by the Ambassadors, in defence of their Princes actions, hauing not any thing to reply publicly, he gaue the Lords of the French Kings councill secretly to vnderstand, that the ill will which the King his Nephew bare him, incensed by his bad counsellors, who were corrupt and mercenary, proceeded from nothing else, but that hee had alwaies opposed himselfe to the practises and secret intelligences which they had with the English, in league with whom they would draw the King of Castile, to the preiudice of the friendship and ancient al-E liance, which was betwixt the houses of Castile and France: wherefore he intreated them to deale so with King Charles, as he would iudge fauorably of his cause, causing his Estates and Lands to be restored to him againe, promising, all his life time, to doe him good and loyal seruice.

The King desirous to reconcile Princes that were neere in blood, caused the Ambassadors to be treated with about a prorogation of the assignation; for they had protested that the time prefixt being expired through the Earles negligence and contempe, to whom the King their maister had caused three hundred thousand maraudis to be de-liuered, for the charges of his voiage, and to take from him all excuse, that they could no more appeere before him, as before, their Iudge: yet they said, that seeing the King of F Castile their Lord had submitted himselfe vnto his Iudgement, for the brotherly loue that was betwixt them, notwithstanding, that many of his councill had diswaied him, holding it a dispraggement for the soueraigne Prince to contend with his vassall and subiects before a strange Iudge, and out of his country and iurisdiction.

They were of opinion that if the Earle Don Alphonso did willingly deliuer the towne of Gijon vnto the King of Castile, and submit himselfe to his will and mercy, Kkk 3 that

that by his intercession the Earle should obtaine a safe conduit and assurance to come in A to Castile, and so he should treat of his affaires more profitably then by any other course. They withall made a request vnto King Charles in the name of the King their Lord, that for the league which was betwixt the two Kings and realmes, he would be pleased to command D. Alphonso to depart his country, which the French King could not refuse, and therefore he caused notice to be giuen vnto the Earle, that he should retire himselfe, commanding all Gouvernors of Prouinces, especially of port towns, not to giue him any fauor or aide, wherefore he went away in poore estate, & kept himselfe some daies about Rochelle. The six monthes of truce concluded betwixt the King and him being many daies before expired, and yet the Ambassadors had not written any thing concerning the conclusion of this lute, there were some troupes of horse and foote sent about Gijon, B after which the King came with greater forces, both by land and sea, the which did so presse the place, as the Countesse, Donna Isabella of Portugal, yielded it, compounding for her life and liberty, and of some Knights that were within it, and the deliuey of her sonne D. Henry, whom the King held in hostage. In the meane time letters came out of France, from the Ambassadors, containing what had past in this cause, wherewith the King was well satisfied. The miserable Countesse Isabella, daughter to D. Fernand King of Portugal, being destitute of all meanes, went into France to her husband D. Alphonso, who was poore, and without any helpe or fauour, but from the Viconesse of Tours, in whose country he liued in the towne of Marant. After the taking of Gijon, the King went C to Seuille to treat a truce with the Moores, being solicited by King Mahumet then reigning in Granado, the third after the death of Mahumet the old, who was bruted to haue poisoned the King D. Henry the second, and this was his succession.

Great yielded vnto the King, and the Earle dispossessed and banished into France.

Mahumet Guadix the tenth King of Granado.

<sup>2</sup> Mahumet surnamed Guadix, after the death of Mahumet the Old his father, was sedd King of Granado: he onely among all his predecessors, receiued this Scepter peaceably, and left it quiet at his death. During his reigne which beganne in the yeere 1379. and ended 1392. he had not any warre against Christian Princes for all the time of his reigne, the Estate of Castile vnder King John was so troubled with wars with D. Fernand King of Portugal, and afterwards with the maister of Auiz, and besides with the Duke of Lancaster, as the Realme of Granado felt no trouble. This Mahumet Guadix was sonne in law to the King of Tunis, whose daughter, named Hadisa, of the ancient lineage of the Almohages, he had married when his father liued, by whom he had Ioseph his successor to the Realme, and yet he had other wiues, and many children by them, according to the liberty of the Mahumetists, in that point. During this calme, he fortified many places in the Realme of Granado, especially towards the frontier of Andalusia; by the which the Kings of Castile were accustomed to invade the Moores. Hee renewed the truce betwixt the two realmes of Granado and Castile, with King John, in the yeere 1390. the which was sborne and confirmed by the Kings, and by their eldest sonnes and successors. The name of Guadix was giuen him, for the great loue he bare to the towne of Guadix, and that country, from his Infancy, the which he did frequent and beautifie with many things whilest he liued. He died in peace, in the yeere of our Lord 1392. the thirteenth of his reigne.

Ioseph the eleuenth, King of Granado.

TO him succeeded this King Ioseph, of whom wee haue made mention, in the route which he gaue vnto Martin Ianez of Barbuda, maister of Alcantara. Before there was

A was some likelihood of warre, during the raigne of D. Henry the 3. king of Castile, but it was soone pacified, after an encounter neere vnto Lorca, whereas the Moores at the coming of this king Ioseph, beginning to flie, were defeated with great losse. If the father had raigned peaceably, as well among his subiects, as with Christian Princes his neighbours: his son gouerned with great difficulty & tumults: for besides the quarrels he had with the Christians, (which succeeded reasonably well) he was pursued by his owne sonne, and in danger to loose both Crowne and life. This bad sonne called Mahumet, as his Grandfather was, thrust on with ambition to raign, ioyned with a Nobleman among the Moores, called Aben Mohaya, who had long hated King Ioseph. These two together did what they could to put him from his royall seat, dispersing among the Moores all the slanders they could inuent against him: but chiefly they did charge him with the vice of clemencie, which he had vsed to many Christian captiues, hauing set them free without ranfome: an vndoubted argument, sayd they, that he was a Christian in heart. There were great combultions throughout all Granado, by meanes of this peruerse sonne and his confederats, the which were pacified by the mediation of an Ambassadour from the king of Maroc, of the lineage of the Merins, who was then at Granado, for his Princes affaires, who wrought in such sort, as the sonne and all that followed him, yielded obedience vnto the king, to the good of the Realme, which for a time enioyed a desired peace: for by reason of the troubles, many Christians had imbraced these quarrels of the Moores, ioyning with either partie, but all tending to the ruine of their estate. Besides this Mahumet, son to king Ioseph, who made warre against him, Histories make mention of three others: that is, Ioseph the eldest, who raigned, but not immediately after his father, Cidi Ali and Cidi Amed. After this pacification, and the defeat of the Master of Alcantara aboue-mentioned, king Ioseph was more respected among his subiects, and gouerned his Realme in peace the remaynder of his dayes without any opposition: He kept friendship with the Princes of Spaine his neighbours, and with the Kings of Affricke, as much as he could: yet he grew into secret hatred with the king of Fez, whereof no man knows the occasion, neither did he discouer it, vntill he felt the poison, which this trecherous king sent him: for among many rich presents, there was a cassocke of cloth of gold, of great price, but infected with D this mortall poyson, which did not worke sodenly, but by degrees: an art much practised among those damned creatures, to free themselves of their enemies, or to make States and Principalities voyd, as their ambitious appetites did driue them. King Ioseph hauing no cause, as he thought, to suspect any such treason from a king of his sect, whome hee had not offended, receiued the presents: but hauing one day put on the cassocke, he felt himselfe presently poysoned without remedie: the which was of such force, as hauing depriued him of all his naturall faculties, his flesh fell away by peece-meale, with great horror to them that were about him, and amazement of the Physitions, which had him in cure, to whome the true cause of his infirmities, nor the remedies were euer knowne. Thus this king died miserably, hauing raigned about foure yeares in Granado, in the yeare of our Lord 1396. and of the Arabians 779.

Some perscutes the father in raigne.

Ioseph king of Granado poysoned.

Vnderfall force of poyson

Mahumet the 9. of that name, and 12. king of Granado.

MAHUMET this sonne surnamed Aben-Balus, who had so much desired to raigne in his fathers life-time, vsurped the Realme from his elder brother Ioseph, who yielding to the time, supported it as well as he could, beeing countenanced by some Noblemen, that were friends to his deceased father and him. The first entrance of this king Mahumet was pleasing vnto the Moores, by the cruelty he suffered to be done to two Priars brethren, who moued with an inconsiderate zeale, would goe and preach in Granado. Being forbidden by the king to preach their doctrine to a people ill prepared to receiue it, they persisting in their resolution, the Alfasquis and Doctors of the Alcaron fell vpon them, and hauing whipt them, they slue them most cruelly, so as these two poore Friars were A held holy Martyrs, whereof some of their bones were gathered together, and carried to Seuille and Cordoua, to them of their Order, all men periuading themselues that they wrought miracles. This king thinking himselfe seded in his estate, he confirmed the truce with Christian Princes, especially with D. Henry king of Castile, who freed him of the tribute which the kings of Granada were wont to pay to the Kings of Castile. The King Don Henry shewed himselfe tractable, by reason of the indisposition of his person; who being the rest of his daies ill disposed, purchased the surname of Sickly, and made him to desire peace with his neighbours, and to hate warre. The friendship and familiaritie of these two Princes was very great, and continued long, visiting one another by ambassages, and sending presents, struing who should be more stately and bountifull: and King B Mahomet desiring on a time to make demonstration of his loue to the king D. Henry, sending him rich presents, hee gaue the charge of the ambassage to one of his wiues, the which gaue great content to the king of Castile.

D. Henry of Castile called the Sickly.

3
Castile.

But to returne to this king Don Henry, after that he had subdued the Princes of his blood, and their confederates, who contemning his youth, and thrust on by ambition, had troubled his Realme, he beganne to besickely, and vnfit for the actions of warre, the causes whereof by the singular grace of God ceased. Hee had a great care of Iustice, and to ease his subiects, and being in that estate hee sought all meanes to maintaine his reputation and authoritie, fearing nothing more then to bee contemned of his seruants, to whome he sometimes seemed seuer and rigorous, and sometimes was content only to terrifie them: Whereof they produce this example. The king on a time hauing hunted late in an vnknowne countrie, and ill followed, recovered his lodging, being ready to sit downe to his supper, hauing a very good stomack, he found it ill prepared, so as hee began to grow in choller with the Clarke of his kitchen, saying, that hee was negligent, and that he would punish him. The Clarke who (it may be) sought for this occasion, excused himselfe vpon the small meanes which were appointed him by his Councillors to furnish his table: so as, sayd he, besides the assignation which is very short, I recover it with such difficultie, as I am forced to pawne mine owne, to supply it: wherewith the king was very sad, taking it for a great argument of the small esteeme the Noblemen that ruled, made of him, by this dishonest sparing for a kings table, into whose coffers there entered of yearly reuenue 70. millions of Marauidis, if Writers do not erre. And therefore he beganne to studie, how he might make them know it, giuing to his Clarke one of his robes, called at that time Balandras, the which hee pawned for two shouldres of mutton; with the which, and some Quails which they had taken, the king supped, being serued by the Clarke.

Being returned to Burgos, he dissembled that which he had in his heart, and watched an opportunitie to be reuenged. Hee was aduertised that the chiefe Noblemen of his trayne and Councell, holding the greatest dignities in the Realme of Castile, the Prelats, the Masters of knightly Orders, the Duke of Medina Celi, D. Ray Lopez of Aualos, Don Iohn and D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, Diego Lopes of Estuniga, Iohn of Velasco, Gomes Manrique, Peter Alfan of Ribera, and others hauing gouernements in the chiefe Prouinces, should meet together one night at a stately and sumptuous banquet: wherfore hee found meanes to enter disguised, to see their cheare, and heare their discourse: where hee saw all things furnished in great abundance, and with more then royall state, where there wanted not any thing that might please the appetite, and as for their discourse and table-talk, it was nothing but of the great and bounteous pension they drew from the King, of the profits and commodities of their Offices and Gouernements, gifts, presents, honours, fauours, and such like, which makes the Courtiers paradise. The King hauing observed all this, being returned vnto his lodging, hee secretly in the night, drew in his Guards, and many other souldiers: and when it was day, hee sent for all these Noblemen of the Banquet, to come vnto his Pallace, to bee witnesses to the Will which hee would make, who flocking thither with all expedition, they stayed in the great Hall, vntill it was past noone.

In the end the king came forth with a naked sword in his hand, setting him downe in

A in his chaire, and then presently the hall was full of his armed guards, so as the Noblemen were amazed at this vnaccustomed ceremonie. The king addressing his speech to the Arch-bishop of Toledo, asked him, how many kings of Castile hee had seene: he answered, that he had seene foure; which were the king D. Pedro, D. Henry his grandfather, D. Iohn his father, and himselfe. The like demand the king made vnto the rest, and euery one answered as he had seene, according to their ages, some three, some foure, and some fise. How can it then be, sayd the king, that I who am younger then any of you, can brag to haue seene aboute twenty: The Noblemen replied, that they knew not what hee meant thereby; for naturally with his corporall eyes he could not haue seene so many kings. Yes truly, sayd the king, I haue seene them, and all you here present are those kings, who dis- B pose of my Realme, and mannage my rents and reuenues at your pleasures. I am king but in name, and as a shade, but you are the bodie and the effect, waisting my goods to my dishonor, and the contempt of my authoritie. I haue seene, I haue seene the pompe and abundance you liue in at my charge, and haue vnderstood how you intreat my subiects, and abuse the power which I giue you in your estates and gouernments: but you shal not liue vnpunished, I haue conuicted you all by your owne confessions and brags, and iudge you all to die, like bad and trecherous vassals. This speech being ended, the Ministers of iustice appeared, & among them the executioner of the court, carying an axe and cords, the which did much amaze all the Noblemen, thinking verily, that they should lose their heads: seeing themselves compassed in his guards, and considering that they had to do C with a young king, who for want of iudgement might giue way to his choller, and reuenge his wrong without regard to the consequence. Being thus amazed, looking one vpon another, and not knowing what to answer, the Arch-bishop of Toledo tooke courage to speake vnto the king, who kneeling downe, told him, that so seuer a sentence was happily more iust then honourable for a young Prince, or profitable for the realme of Castile, which for euer would feele the losse of so many great and worthy men, both for counsel and armes, as he meant to put to death, for that they had committed some faults which are common to all that liue with kings, and are bred vp in great charges of realmes. Moreouer, it was not reasonable to take that for a confession to conuict one, which is spoken at banquets, and in wine, where men do usually talke, and bragge, and oftentimes D without truth, yet he spake not these things to iustifie himselfe, or any of his companions not to contend against his clemencie, as being free from offence, the which they would rather implore and trie, demanding with all humilitie, the liues of all these offenders, and his pardon, adding many other reasons, the which were allowed by the king, for he desired an occasion to pardon them, yet he would haue them yeeld vp all the fors which they had in guard, and he condemned them in pecuniarie fynes, so as he drew from them aboute an hundred and fifty millions of marauidis, for the exactions and concussion done vpon his people, and the kings money: keeping them two moneths in the castle of Burgos, vntill the full payment and execution of these things.

E If he were moderate in this act of iustice, hee vsed greater rigour at Seuille, where all were full of partialities, proceeding from the diuisions and quarrels which his tutor had bred, which the Magistrates and kings officers could not suppress. Being declared of full age, he went thither and caused the Earle of Niebla, Peter Ponce of Leon, and other heads and chief authors of these seditions to be put in prison, and hauing examined every mans actions, he banished some, others he condemned in great fynes, and losse of their offices, and caused many to be hanged, or lose their heads: so as there were aboute a thousand persons intangled in the punishments and executions of iustice: one of the chiefe ministers whereof, was Doctor Iohn Alphonso of Toro, to whom the gouernement of Seuille was given for matters of iustice: and the more to countenance him, the king stayed there many daies.

This king gaue many other testimonies of his loue to iustice: he gaue audience to all suitors indifferently, three daies in the weeke, he heard all the complaints of his subiects, and provided for them: he could discerne of men of iudgement, which were fit for council, and the gouernment of the commonwealth. The most esteemed, and of greatest authority about him, were Don Pedro Tenorio, Arch-bishop of Toledo, Friar Iohn Henriquez,

Executions at Seuille.

Elision of m... men to make great eff...

4 Don Pablo a few learned and of a good life.

Don Pablo's
children a l
learned.

Counsel of a few against them.

ques, and Friar Fernando of Illeca, with the Cardinal D. Pedro of Frias Bishop of Osma, A and these for the Clergie: of Knights he made great esteeme of Don Laurence Suarez of Figueras, Master of Saint James, Gonzales Nagues of Guzman, Master of Calatrava, Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, high Admirall of Castile, Ruy Lopes of Aualos, his Lord Chamberlaine, and afterwards Constable, Diego Lopes of Estuñiga chiefe Iustice, Peter Lopes of Ayala, a knight of great learning, who came to be Lord Chancelour, John Pe- lasco a Chamberlaine, and other knights of his Councell, which consisted of sixteen grave personages. Among others, that were very deare vnto him, there was a Doctor, a law yer, borne at Burgos, who afterwards embraced the Christian Religion, called Don Pablo, who for his learning and good life, was in time chosen Bishop of Carthage, and B in the end obtained the Bishopricke of Burgos. He had many times oppugned the Christian Religion, as a Jew Rabin, and Master in the Jewish Law, but hauing receiued in gift a Christian Doctor, the booke of Saint Thomas Aquinas intituled de Legibus, he read it diligently, and was so moued with the reasons thereof, as he left his Jewish religion, the which is not strange, say the Diuines of Spaine: for he that knowes not Saint Thomas knoweth not any thing, and he that knoweth him, knowes all things. This Prelate who was a great Preacher, a great Philosopher, wise and iudicious in matters of State, and of the kings Councell, wrote many bookes, whereof some are yet extant. Being a Jew, he was married, and had three sonnes all learned men, whereof the one was Deane of Sego- biz, and succeeded his father in the Bishopricke of Burgos, he was called Don Alphonso C of Carthage, from whence we haue the genealogie of the kings of Castile. Written in Latine. Don Gonzalo another sonne of D. Pablo was Bishop of Paleña, a Prelat of great learning: and the third was Aluar Garcia of S. Maria, a learned man also, D. Pablo their father being of the King Don Henries Councell, notwithstanding that he had bin a Jew, did aduise him and his successors, not to receiue into their seruice, either of his households Councell, or to any Offices of the Realm, any Jew, although he were conuerted, and that for some speciall causes.

The King Don Henry being endowed with these good qualities beyond the Ordinary of young Princes, had also some blemishes, like other mortall men: for hee was noted to be sparing, and desirous to heape vp treasure, and yet they say, that it was without the oppression of his subiects, the which is hard in a Prince: yet hee gaue many prouisions and pensions to them that were neere to him in blood, or allyed to him by amitie: as to the Queene D. Beatrix, his mother-in law, whom he maintained in the estate of a Queene, and to Don Fernand his brother, who shewed himselfe alwaies obedient to his will. His countries being in peace, he gaue himselfe to repaire and fortifie the frontier places, and did build a new castle of Carthage. As for religious buildings, the church, and conuent of the Carthusians at Burgos, called Mirefleurs, are his worke: he was a great fauorer of the Franciscans, to whom Queene Katherine his wife, had a particular deuotion, who was a Ladie of great pietie, according to the instruction of that time, bountifull, maiesticall, wife, and discreet in her words, yet superfluous in her manner of liuing, and louing wine, whereby in her latter dayes she fell into a palsey.

The Kings infirmity which began at the age of seuentene yeares, did in time fo vndermine him, being incurable, as he became drie and leane, so as the proportion of his body was changed, and he seemed another man, then formerly he had beene: moreover, he was so sad and melancholicke, as most commonly he was alone, and would not admit of any company. Yet he was alwaies carefull of the gouernement of the Realme. He alwaies entertained Ambassadors in Princes Courts, as well Christians as Mahumetists, by whom he was aduertised what was done in forraigne countries, their manners, and manner of go-uernements: a thing most profitable for him that sends them, but not for them that receiue them: for by Ambassadors which are resident, the Councels and actions of Princes are discouered, to the great preiudice of their estates. Two of his Ambassadors sent into the East, the which were Pelazo of Soto maior, and Fernando Pelafuel, fell into the hands of Tamberlaine, Emperour of the Tartarians, after the defeat of Batazer; who intreated them graciously, and sent them backe into Spaine with an Ambassador of his, to demand friendship of king Henry.

During

A During his raigne, in the yeare 1397, the order of the Knights of the Calatrava, in steed of a blacke hood which they had worne vntill that time, tooke for their make a red square crosse, which they carry at this day, the which was done by the Bull of Pope Bene- dict of Auignon, at the instance of Don Gonzal Nagues of Guzman, maister of the Calatrava.

The realme of Castile being at peace with all men it was engaged in new troubles by Don John King of Portugall, for that the Articles of the truce, concluded betwixt their Ambassadors for fifteene yeares, had not bene signed and sworn by certain Noble men of Castile, as had bene agreed: with other light occasions, which drew him to field, being yet proud of his former victories, and contemning the youth and infirmity of King Henry his aduersary, wherefore he suddenly brought his army before Badajos, which towne hee tooke, and the Marshall Don Garcil Gutiere of Herrera in it: whereas the King Don Henry was much incensed, and speedily provided for all things necessary, to suppress the boldnesse of this Portugall King, both by sea and land. One of the most remarkable exploits of this warre, which continued three yeares, was the encounter of five Castilian gallies with seauen of Portugall, comming from Genoa, laden with armes and soldiers:
the fight hauing continued very sharpe some houres, in the end foure of the gallies of Portugall were taken, one broken and the rest put to flight. In this encounter the Portu- galls lost about five hundred men, besides the armes and equipage of their gallies, the which were drawne to St. Lucar. Many noble men of Portugall at that time left King John, and retired into Castile, where they were entertained, and had lands and houses gi-uen them by the King D. Henry. Among others Martin Vasques of Acugna, and his brethren Giles Vasques and Lopes Vasques came also with an hundred lances, John Fernandes and Lopes Fernandes Pacheco bretheren, Aluar Gonzales Camelo Prior of S. John, with many others. The king of Portugall entring by Gallicia, he tooke from king Henry the towne of Tuy, and towards extremadura he layd seige before Alcantara: to whose succour was sent D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, then made Constable of Castile, in the place of the Earle of Transmara, who raised the seige, and entring into Portugall, spoiled and burnt the countie, and tooke Pegna maior, a place of strength, by force. On the other side, the D. towne of Miranda of Duego was beleeged by King Henries captaines, who prest in such sort as it yielded. After some courtes and prizes made at sea by the Admirall of Castile, the truce was renewed betwixt the two kings, and was so entertained, as it was the last war which the Portugals had with Castile vntill our daies, so as these two Princes gouerned their Estates in peace and quietnesse the remainder of their liues.

In Arragon whilest they contended for the right of the succession against Mathew of Castellon Earle of Foix, and his wife D. Isane eldest daughter to the deceased king D. John as we haue sayd: D. Maria wife to the D. of Momblanc, being absent in Sicily, took vpon her the title of Queene, by the aduice of the counsell of Cattelogne, in the city of Barce- lona, where there assisted D. Inigo Valterra, Archb. of Tarragona, Bernard of Pinos, Hugh Angelo, Roger of Moncade Viceroy of Sardinia, Michel Gurria, Francis of Aranda, who was held the wisest of his time, Bernard Michel, William Pujade, Gerard Patol, and Bernard Zairille. These were of opinion that the Regencie of the realme should be put into the hands of D. Maria, vntill her husbands coming, to whom they had sent D. Hugh of Bage, Bishop of Tortosa, John Foull son to the Earle of Cardona, Emanuel Ragidell, Raymond
Zaua, a Citizen of Barceloneta, and Peter Grimald of Perpignan, Ambassadors, to giue him notice of his election, and to hasten his returne. The widow Queene Violant, was in the meane time accompanied by foure of the chiefe Ladies by order from the Councell, the which did neuer abandon her, and should haue a care of her deliuey, for that she was with child. And for that many men of state, and others hauing had charges & offices in the time of the deceased King, had abused them, their actions were now called in to question during this Interregne, and some of them were committed at Barcelona. The Will of the deceased King, being opened in the Assembly of Cattelogne, they found that the same Duke of Momblanc, to whom the peoples fauour inclined, was there named heyre and successor to the Crowne, in case the King Don John dyed without issue male, the which was signified to the Countesse of Foix.

As

Red crosse the mark of the Order of Calatrava.

6
Portugal.

Victory of the Castilians at sea

7
Arragon.

Francis of Aranda a wise man.

Officers called into question

At the Estates assembled at Sarragossa, to giue order that the realme should receiue no A losse in the absence of the king D. Martin, these chiefe men were present:

D. Garci Fernandes of Heredia, Archibishop of Sarragossa.

D. Iohn Martin Murillo, Abbot of Montarragon.

D. Pedro Fernandes of Ixar.

D. William, and Raymond Allamans Cernillon.

D. Pedro Ruiz Morio, for the great Prior of Aruposta.

The Prior of Rota.

The Abbot of S. Fides.

D. Pedro de Ladron, Vicount of Villanoua.

D. Lopes Ximenes of Virea.

D. Fernand Lopes of Luna.

D. Iohn Martin of Luna.

D. Alphonso Fernandes of Ixar.

D. Pedro Fernandes Vergua.

D. Francis of Allagon.

D. Pedro Ximenes of Virea, son to D. Lope.

The Attorneys of D. Lewis Cornel, of D. Aral of Allagon, of D. Iohn Ximenes of Virea Arasillo, of D. Pedro Galcerand of Castro, and of D. Anthony of Luna. Moreouer, Iohn Ximenes de la Cerda, Iustice Maior of Arragon, with many other Noblemen, knights and Deputies of towns and commonalties, who without regard to the demands and protestations of Mathew Earle of Foix, and D. Ieanne his wife, confirmed the Duke of Monblanc testamentarie heire of the Realme, disannulling the conuentions made by the deceased king D. Pedro, grandfather to D. Ieanne, at the treatie of her marriage with the Earle of Foix, by the which it was sayd, that if Don Iohn her father dyed without issue male, she should inherit the Realme: whereupon Mathew Earle of Foix sought to obtaine his right by armes, seeing that iustice was denied him. And hauing employed the ayde of the Earle of Armagnac, of Iohn Duke of Berry, the French kings vncl, and of other Noblemen of France, he passed with a thousand men at armes, and three thousand light horsemen, from the Vicountie of Castellbon, beyond the Pyrennees, and by the valley of Ferriere at Villemur, he tooke Camaraca, and marched as farre as Lerida, where he spoyle the country: against whome the Estates did chosse Don Pedro of Vrgell for General. And for that it was suspected that D. Iohn Earle of Ampurias, had fauoured these French troupes at the passage of the mountaines, he was committed to prison, but soone after deliuered, hauing made prooue of his innocencie. Although the Earle of Foix did much annoy the Arragonois, yet the greatest losse fell vpon himselfe, for beeing too weake a partie to encounter the power of Arragon, he did nothing but spend his estate, ingage himselfe, and strue for nothing, his army beeing forced to rise from before Barbalro, and to retire for want of victuals and other discommodities towards Huelca, and then to passe by Caparosso belonging vnto Nauarre, into Bearne, on this side themountaines, after which hee neuer made any memorable attempt. The king D. Martin, notwithstanding all the importunitie of the Arragonois, was not resolved to leaue Sicile, yntill he had seene his sonne peacefull king of the Iland, the which he effected after a long and tedious warre, by the ruine of the noble families of Clairmont and Alagon, and of other rebels, whereof Andrew of Clairmont Duke of Modica was beheaded at Palermo, after which Aral of Alagon was expelled Sicile, with all his family, by vertue of whose Predecessors, that Realme had beene in a manner conquered for the house of Arragon.

Articles of marriage between by the Estates to the prescience of the Earle of Foix.

Andrew of Clairmont beheaded at Palermo.

D. Martin

D. Martin the first of that name, and 15.
King of Arragon.

Matters beeing thus brought to passe, D. Martin clea King of Arragon, leauing with the King his sonne, called also D. Martin, and his wife Marie, William of Moncado, Marquis of Malta, chiefe Iustice and Constable of the Realme, Peter Serra Bishop of Catriana, Francis Zagarriga, Hugh Santapaz, and other Cattelans and Arragonois, for Counsellors, he sayled towards the Island of Sardinia, where he was visited by the Noblemen holding his partie, as well of that Island as of Corfica, whereas the Earle of Cinerche and others of the familie of Istria, and of that of Rocca, held many townes and castles at his deuotion. From thence the King past into Prouence, where he did visit Pope Benedict in Auignon, receiuing a rose from him on Palme Sunday, hauing done him homage for the Islands of Sardinia and Corfica: then continuing his voyage, hee arrived in Cattellogne in the beginning of Maie, in the year 1397. At his entrie into the countie, hee found a stately ambassage, where were the chiefe Noblemen of Arragon, and deputies of the cite of Sarragossa, who intreated him, that without any stay he should goe vnto the Estates assembled at Sarragossa, and that he would not deale in any affaires of the realme, vntill (according to the auncient custome) hee had taken and receiued their othes, the which seemed something strange vnto the King: yet he answered these ambassadors graciously, that beeing tired with so long a voyage, he had need of rest: wherefore after some little staid at Barcelona, hee would come presently to Sarragossa: notwithstanding after his entrie into Barcelona, which was very stately, sitting in his tribunall, hee pronounced a sentence against Mathew Earle of Foix, and D. Ieanne his wife, beeing his neece, by the which he declared them rebels, and guilty of high treason, and fallen from all their rights: he did confiscate the Vicontie of Castellbon, and other lands held by them in the realme of Arragon and Cattellogne, adiudging them vnto the crowne. Moreouer, hee sent from thence shippes and souldiers into Sardinia and Sicile, sending backe D. Roger of Moncado into his gouernment of Sardinia, and D. Pedro of Bage into Sicile. After which, hee went to Sarragossa to the Estates about the end of October. The King presiding in this assembly, did much commend the vertue, fidelitie, and valour of the Arragonois, seeking by good words to make them tractable and well-affecte to him and his children: for after the oath taken by him for the obseruation of the rights and priuiledges of Arragon and other Prouinces, and reciprocally by them, he intreated the Estates to acknowledge his sonne D. Martin King of Sicile, beeing absent, for lawfull heire of that crowne after him, the which was willingly done, the King of Sicile ambassadors hauing promised an vnion of the two realmes for euer, and to cause the King their master to ratifie it, and to take the othes accustomed in such acts. There was giuen vnto the King at these Estates 13000 florins of gold to pay his debts, and 30000 for his expences. During the assembly, there was some tumult of warre in the Mountains, there being entred by the pace of Sarrazal some of the Earle of Foix troupes, who tooke and sacke Thermes: but without any other exploit they returned. In the meane time Mathew of Castellbon Earle of Foix dyed without any children, being in the year 1398, whereby D. Martin remayned peaceable King of Arragon, who setled himselfe, and disposed of his affaires according to his desire.

First of all knowing that the wisdom of a Prince consists chiefly in knowing wel how to chuse men of valour, whose seruice he must vse in the gouernment of his Estate, he laboured to draw vnto him, by his bounty and fauour, the hearts and affections of those which he knew to be such: namely, he gratified D. Alphonso of Arragon much, and honored him with the Dutchie of Gandia; he made D. James of Prade Constable of Arragon, and to many other Noblemen and knights, hee gaue gifts and priuiledges: hee reitored Archambaud of Graille, who had bene heire in the right of succession to the Earledome of Foix by reason of his wife, sister to the deceased Mathew of Castellbon,

L. 11

to

Sentence against the Earle of Foix.

Death of the Earle of Foix.

Prudence necessary in a Prince to chuse men of valour.

to the lands which he had forfeited: yet he made but a bare recompence to his Neece the Countesse of Foix, who retired her selfe to Valencia, with 3000. florens of yearly pension, for her whole entertainment, where she ended her dayes. He married his other neece D. Violant to Lewis Duke of Anjou, chosen king of Naples, to whom hee gave 16000. florens in dowrie, so as the should renounce all rights and pretensions which shee might haue to the Crowne of Arragon, and other lands of the deceased king D. Iohn her father, adding afterwards to this bond, an alliance which he made with Navarre, to be the better assured of the French. And not to forget the workes of pietie, covered with the vale of religion, seeing Pope Benedict greatly molested in Auignon, although it were by the praeligion, the French king, he sent an armie by sea, to assist him, and if need were to carrie him away, the euent whereof was miserable: for being come vnto the mouth of the river Rhodie about December, in the heart of a very sharpe winter, the gales not being able to go vp the riuier, by reason the water was low, most of the flauies, mariners and soldiers dyed for cold.

Statues sent by the Pope into
Arragon.

The fauour which the king of Arragon did shew vnto the Pope, did so far auayle him, as it made the French king forbear for a time to oppose himselfe: to acknowledge the which, and in his loue to his country, he sent into Arragon foure statues of siluer and gilt and enriched with stones, the which were kept in the city of Sarragossa, and therein were inclosed the reliques of Valerius, Lawrence, Vincent and Eustratia, reputed by the Sarragossians for Saints, patrons and protectors.

Thus the king D. Martin fought in the first yeares of his raigne, to content the world by his humane wisdom, and to purchase the fame of a politicke and religious Prince: notwithstanding as humane wisdom failes most commonly, he could not keep such a mean, but in gratifying some, he discontented others, yea the Arragonois themselves: the Realme being often in combustion, by reason of the old quarrels betwixt the houses of Luna, Vrrea, and Gurrea, and especially during the interregne many of these families presumed to go to field, and did rob and spoile euen to the towne gates: whereupon the king raised some troupes to suppress these theues, giving the charge thereof to Don Alphons, sonne to D. Alphons of Arragon Duke of Candia, making him as it were Gouernor of the realme, and his Lieutenant generall: a great dignity, which was presently impugned by the Noblemen of Arragon, moued through enuy, alledging, that that charge ought not to be giuen according to their ancient customes, but to one that was borne in Arragon: wherefore they appealed before the Iustice maior, being an attempt against their liberties and freedoms: so thinking to preuent a mischiefe, hee augmented it for the Realme was presently full of armes, which hee was forced to remedy with great difficulties and seuerer meanes, it may be vnworthie of his royall Maiestie.

Troubles in
Arragon.

Castille.

The Schisme which was in the church of Rome, did somewhat trouble Spaine: yet by the wise counsell of Princes, all past without any great alteration. The French king did greatly sollicite him of Castile to ioyne with him, to force Pope Benedict of Auignon to submit himselfe to a compromise treated by the Princes, and according to the protestation of the Cardinalls which had chosen him, to leaue his dignity, vntill it had bene determined who should be Pope, and head in the church of Rome. For the which the king D. Henry having called a great assembly at Salamanca of Prelats and Doctors, both Diuines and Canonists, in the end he yielded after many difficulties: whereof D. Martin King of Arragon being aduertised, he was wonderfully moued, for he did much support Pope Benedict, a Cattelane by nation, and therefore sent to Salamanca before the kings departure, his ambassadours were Vidal of Blagues, and Raymond of France, to complaine of this vnion which the king of Castile had made with him of France, without communicating any thing vnto him: to whom an answer was made in friendly tearmes, which did satisfie them.

In the assembly of Salamanca it was aduised, that the two Popes should reuoke all the proceedings made one against another, and should haue an interview in some place of this assurance, where they should denie betwixt themselves how to free the church of this Schisme, the which they should declare within a certaine time: and during the delay they should giue a certaine pastor vnto the church, but if they could not, or would not agree, that

At that time there sprung vp a Sect of white coates: their author was a Priest of the mountains of Sauoy. They were men moued with deuotion, who began to runne ouer Italy, as it were in procession, attired in white shirts, and wearing their haire long ouer their faces, demanding pardon of God, and mercie for their sinnes, with great and lamentable cries: and moreover in going they sung Hymnes, as that which begins, Stabat mater dolorosa, and other such suffrages. Their troupe in the beginning being but small, they grew to so great a number, there ioyning with them at all the townes where they past, as they were forced to diuide themselves into bands, which sometimes were not lesse then ten, twelue, or fifteen thousand persons, which made many Princes and Potentates of Italy to suspect, that vnder a shew of religion they had some hidden enterprise to the prejudice of their Estates. The towne of Luca gaue them most credit. They ranne vntill that they came vnto the farthest point of Calabria, and then returned backe.

beginning of
the white coate

Their captaine with a great multitude of his followers being come to Viterbo, Pope Benedict found meanes to draw him to Rome, where being examined of his intention, they found nothing in him but meere ignorance and superstition, whereby all the townes and families in Italy had bene troubled: many men leauing their houses, wiues, children, parents, with all publike and priuate affaires, to follow this poore ideot, who for all the pain he had taken, was by the Popes sentence condemned to the fire, who being burnt, eury one retired to his home, and his followers were dispersed into diuers parts.

About the yeare 1399. died D. Pedro of Tenorio, Archb. of Toledo, being forrie hee could not attaine vnto the yeare 1400. to the end he might depart this world in the yeare of Iubile. The Spaniards speake much good of this Prelate: that he had bene employed during the raigne of three kings, in the weightiest affaires of Spain, with opinion to haue bene a wise and discreet Councillor, a learned man, and a louer of learned men: but he was wilfull, and that which he himselfe bragged of, nor very liberrall (for the great reuenges which he enjoyed) especially to his kindred, who neuer receiued any aduancement from him, nor by his fauour, from the king of Castile. His house was ancient, issued from Galicie, but growne greater in Portugall: he himselfe was borne at Tauira, the sonne of a simple Gentleman, and but poore. He left many remembrances of him in his buildings in diuers parts of Spaine, as S. Martins bridge in the cite of Toledo, and the castle of S. Seruant towards the port called Alcantara, the Monasterie of S. Catherine of the Order of S. Ierome, and the Collegiall church of Chanoins in the towne of Talauera, the chappell where his bodie lyes in the great church at Toledo, and the cloyster thereof, a stately and royall worke. Besides these buildings, he repaired the castles of Canales, Alhamin and Almonacid. He caused a strong castle to be built neere vnto Alcala the royall, to serue for a refuge for Christian slaues, which escaped the Moores that were nere vnto the frontier, and ordained a certaine rent for the entertainment of a wonderful great lampe, the which should be a direction in the night for poore fugitives, giuing light three great leagues round about. The towne of Villafraanca, the church and the bridge vpon Tayo, betwixt Talauera and Guadalupe, were his worke, it being called at this day, the Archbishops bridge. By the death of this Prelate, the sea of Toledo was void foure yeares, the Schisme in the Romish church being the cause thereof. In the meane time D. Iohn Bishop of Siguencia had the gouernement of the Church, who gaue credit to the image of Saint Marie of Nieua, and beganne to build the Church thereof, the which was afterwards augmented by the Queene Donna Catherine. This image was found by one Peter, who for that cause was surnamed, Of good aduerture, who hauing found it, aduertised the bishop. It is much reuerenced by the Spaniards, who hold, that shee doth wonderfull and great miracles.

An. 1399.

Deaths of the Arch-bishop of Toledo.

See of Toledo void for foure yeares.

The yeare 1400. at what time the Iubile was, the Spaniards going about to set vp a great

Deu'd of King Henry of the 1. of France.

of a hundred millions of Marauidis then currant, paying to every horseman twenty Marauidis a day, and to every footeman tenne. He therefore intreated the Estates, to provide and contribute that summe freely and speedily, seeing it must be employed for the defence and safety of all Spaine. The Estates were amazed at so great a charge at that season and had so great a treasure lying at Segobia, whereof a small portion might ease the Estates. The Prelats and Clergy men above all others, made great difficulty for this contribution: which in the ende the King, after conference with his Brother, and other his familiars, ordered in this manner.

Testament of
the King D.
H. 17.

That the Estates should presently furnish fourey fve Millions of Marauidis, B which are valued at a Million of Crownes by the Authors of those times: and if the King should neede any more, hee might impose it without calling of the Estates. The condition to impose money vpon the subiects without calling the States seemed hard, yet they all consented for that time, so as it might not be a president. Matters standing thus, the Kings infirmity increased in such sort, as foreseeing his approaching death, he made his will, and instituted for heire of his realmes his Sonne D. John, being but twenty two moneths old, leaving him for Tutors, vntill hee came to the age of fourteen years compleate, the Queene D. Catherine his wife, and his brother the Duke of Pegnasil. And if his heire should die, hee did then substitute his daughter Catherine, and vnder the same tutors, to whome also he left the gouernment of his realmes.

Death of King
Henry of Castile.

His will was to be buried in the habit of Saint Francis, and that his Sonne should bee bred vnder the discipline of Diego Lopes of Estuniga, chiefe iustice of Castille, of D. John Pelayco his Lord Chamberlaine and of D. Pablo Bishop of Cardagena. Hauing thus disposed of his last will, hee died loone after. Some Authors say, that he was poysoned by a Phisition a Iew, the which was knowne afterwards by the confession of other Iewes that were prisoners, for other disorders committed in derision of the on of other Iewes that were prisoners, for other disorders committed in derision of the ceremonies vsed in the Christian Religion, and were executed at Segobia. The King D. Henry the third hauing rayned sixteen years and almost three months, dyed in the year 1406. in December, in the City of Toledo, being not much above twenty seauen years old: hee was interred in the Chappell of the last Kings in the Cathedrall Church there. The same year dyed Pope Innocent the seauenth at Rome hauing rayned two years, in whose place was chosen Angelo Carairo a Venetian, Patriarke of Constantinople, and Cardinall of Saint Marke, by thirteen Cardinalls of his faction, and was named Gregory the twelfth by whome the Schisme was continued.

13
Nauarre.

After the returne of the Queene D. Leonora to the King of Nauarre her husband, shee was deliuered of a Sonne in the city of Pampelone, who was called by his Fathers name, but heelyued little. The peace of this realme was great vnder this King Charles, who liued very contentedly with his wife, after her returne, and made her Regent when hee past into France, which was in the year 1397, for hee had many great affaires to decyde with King Charles the sixt, who detaineyd many places from him, which had beene seized on in his fathers time, and had often sollicitied him in vaine by his Ambassadors to do him reason: wherefore hee was forced to goe in person. Before his departure, hee ordaineyd that there should bee payed towards the building of the great Church of Pampelone, ruined some yeares before, the fourth pennie of all the reuenues of his realme, for twelve yeares, where-with it was built in the forme we now see it. Hereof there were letters given by this King at Saint John of Pie de Port this year 1397. in May. His voiage into France did benefit him little, for besides that the French King was not counsellled to yield vp the places which he held, especially in Normandy, the friendship which the King of Nauarre had with the English, was suspected and odious vnto him, although this amity were not prejudiciall to the French, but rather a Neutrality (to the end they might liue in peace) then a league. Seeing therefore that hee was not wellcome, hee returned presently into Nauarre, from whence loone after he sent the Cardinall of Pampelone, who had rettyred himselfe into Nauarre, after that hee had endured many milicies in Auignon, for Pope Benedict.

Hee

A He vfed such diligence and fit meanes, as he made the French King and his counsell willing to giue recompence to the King of Nauarre for his lands, wherefore he was constrained to repasse the Pyrenees againe. In the meane time died John of Montfort duke of Britaine, husband to Joane, sister to this King Charles of Nauarre, who had by her husband foure children, John who was duke, Richard, Arthur and Gyles. This Princeesse was afterwards married to Henry of Lancaster King of England, fourth of that name, he who depriued his cousin Richard of the crowne: by him he had not any children. Charles King of Nauarre, hauing caused his sonne Charles to be borne his heire by the Estates of his realme, he married D. Joanne his eldest daughter to John the eldest sonne of Archibaud, who had succeeded in the county of Foix and Bearn, by the death of Mathew B of Castellon: his second daughter called Donna Maria died a Virgin: and as for the third, Mary Queene of Sicile, being a little before dead, who by her testament had left this realme to D. Martin her husband, sonne to D. Martin King of Arragon, he thought to make her Queene of Sicile, and to marry her to this young D. Martin being a widower. He therefore sent his Ambassadors to the King of Arragon to this effect, who was very well pleased, and yielded to the marriage, although they had offered him many other matches for his sonne D. Martin King of Sicile, and that the Sicilians did what they could to make him incline to a marriage with Joane sister to Ladislaus King of Naples. The accord was made betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Ambassadors both of Nauarre and Sicile (amongst which was Peter Serra, Cardinal of Carthage) at a place called C Altamira in the Realme of Valencia, in the yeere of our Lord 1401. where it was concluded that the King of Nauarre should giue in dowry with his daughter a hundred thousand florins, of the stamp of Arragon: whereof forty thousand in hand, and three score thousand at a certaine time, for the which he should giue in pawns the townes and castles of Arguedas, Santa Caro, Murillo, and Gallipienso: the King of Arragon should binde for her dowry the townes and castles of Sos, Saluaterra, Vncastillo and Ruefte. And for that they were somewhat allied by affinity, there should be a dispensation procured from Benedict. For confirmation and execution of these things, the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre had an interview vpon the confines of their Realmes, betwixt Cortes and Mallen, where they did sweare what had beene concluded. With the King of Nauarre did sweare D. Lionel of Nauarre his brother, D. Charles of Beaumont chiefe Standard-bearer, D. Martin of Lacarra Marthal, D. Francis of Villa Espeça, Chancellor of the realme, John Ruys of Ayuar, superintendant of the treasure, and D. Martin of Olloqui prior of Saint John with others: In like manner did many noblemen and prelates for the King of Arragon.

Marriage of
D. Martin
King of Sicile
and D. Joane
of Nauarre.

This don the King of Arragon was conducted to Cortes, where hauing bene royally feasted by the King of Nauarre, the Infanta D. Blanch was deliuered vnto him, a Princeesse of excellent beauty, whom he led into his country, & hauing prepared a fleet at Valencia, he lent her into Sicile, to the King D. Martin his son vnder the charge of D. Martin of Cabrera, a Knight of Carcelogne, in 1402. This Lady was in the end Queene of Nauarre: for loone after the content of this marriage followed a discontent for the death of D. Lewis the second son to the King of Nauarre, being but sixe months old, and not long after that of D. Charles his eldest, which two Infants are buried in the Cathedrall church at Pampelone, and D. Blanch suruiued her eldest sister D. Joane. The crowne of Nauarre fell then to the succession of daughters, and the King caused D. Joane his eldest daughter, to be againe (sworne heire of the realme, with her husband D. John of Foix. This same yeere the Episcopal sea of Pampelone was voided, by the death of Cardinal Martin of Salua, bishop of that city, who had past the age of 66. yeeres, in great trouble and paine, to maintaine the party of Pope Benedict in Auignon. D. Michel of Salua his Nephew obtained the Bishoprike after him, who was afterwards made Cardinall by Pope Benedict, in following of whom he died two yeeres after at Monaco. The King of Nauarre being the third time called in France, his voiage was then more profitfull vnto him, then at the precedent, for he obtained of king Charles the sixt the Lordship of Nevers, the which was erected to a Dutchy, and moreover twelve hundred pounds sterling of yeerely rent, to be taken out of the reuenues of Bry and Champagne, with a good

Death of the two Infants of Nauarre.

Title of Earle of Ebreux ceased in the house of Navarre, and takes that of duke of Nemours.

good summe of ready money for all pretensions and rights, the which he renounced, seeing he could not doe otherwise: in respect whereof the title of Earle of Eureux ceased.

The towne of Cherbourg in Normandy, held in the King of Nauarres name, by the Marshall D. Martin Henriquez, was by this accord deliuered to the French: all letters and for expeditions being ended, the King D. Charles returned into Nauarre, another way; for he paſt by Languedoc and Cattelogne, where he viſited the King D. Martin at Leniz, with great content and pleaſure to theſe two Princes allied. Paſſing from thence by Sarragoſſa, he came into his country, where afterwards he gaue himſelf to building in many places, yea two ſumptuous palaces, one in Tafalla, the other in Olite, where the B now fall to ruine, for want of reparations, eſpecially that of Olite, where the Marſhalls of Nauarre were accuſtomed to lodge; and the Spaniards fay, that he had intent, to make a paved caufey and covered, to paſſe at all times without diſcommodity, from one of theſe places to the other, being but a little league diſtant. The bridge of Eſtella vpon the riuer of Ega, was this Kings worke, who for that he had liued in continual peace, had ſtoore of treasure, to imploy in ſuch buildings. During his aboad in France, there had beene fome ſpeech of marriage betwixt his youngeſt daughter D. Beatrix and D. Iames lord of Vergele, of the blood royall of Arragon, the which by reaſon of certaine lets,ooke no effect: wherefore the King being returned, he married her to Iames
taine lets,ooke no effect: wherefore the King being returned, he married her to Iames of Bourbon Earle of March, one of the goodlieſt and actiue Princes of his time. The marriage was celebrated in the city of Pampelone, in the yeere 1406. with great ſolem-nity, and conſourſe of the nobility of Spaine and France, about the beginning of warre of Granado, and alittle before the death of D. Henry King of Caſtile, the newes whereof were greceous to King Charles, a great friend and alie to the houſe of Caſtile.

D. Iohn the second of that name, 18. King of Castile, 39. of Leon.

14
Castile.

Factions in Castle after the Kings
death.

THē heat of the warre against the Moores was somewhat quenched by the death King Henry, leaving his sonne and successor in his realmes , an Infant, in his sweth-ling clothes, being but two and twenty monthes old . For it behouded to have a speedy care of that which was necessary for the peace of the Realme, wherein the Queene D.
Catherine, and the Infānt D. Fernand duke of Pnegasial, appointed Gouernors by the testament of the deceased King, employed all their care; but they could not keepe the noblemen from entring into factions : and as the gouernment of two is neuer firme, they were the first which diuided themselves . The prelats, noblemen and deputies of the towncs which were in court, assembled againe in Toledo : Some perswaded the Infānt D. Fernand duke of Pnegasial, to take vpon him the title of King, promising to maintaine and defend him, alledging that it was no new thing in Spaine, when as the decated Kings children were young and not fit to gouerne, or they left none but daughters, that the royall Scepter was put into the vnclen hands, or some forme other Prince of that blood, a man of fit age and endowed with wisdom, to gouerne the affaires of that realme : producing many examples of D. Sancho the fourth, who had bene reigned for his grandfather, who had raignd with the consent of the Spaniards, although he was a bastard, to the prejudice of D. Constance Dutchesse of Lancaster, being then eldest daughter to the King D. Pedro; with other examples more antient, as well of Castile as of the first Kings of Leon, either well or ill reported ; That the wgent affaires of the realme, and the warre of Granada which he had lately seene in his brotthers time, did aduertise him to preuent others, which were a breeding if Castile should receiue an Infānt of two and twenty monthes for King . The Infānt D. Fernand was not well pleased with these perswa-sons, but the Constable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, hauing in a publike assembly, required openly,

A openly that they would raise him to the royall throne of Castile, being a plot laid among the noblemen, thinking that most victious would chuse D. Fernand, he made an answer of rare example, and perswited therein; and to whom then said he belongs the realme, but to my Nephew D. John sonne and onely heire to the King D. Henry my brother? Thus by this conscientious Prince, the crowne of Castile and Leon was preferred for the Infant, who was then at Segobia, with the Queene Donna Catherine his mother, whether the duke of Pegnafel went, with the other noblemen, after the funerals of the deceased King. The breeding vp of the young King was left in the mothers charge, who made great intestine against D. John of Velasco, and Diego Lopez of Eslunga, who demanded it, according vnto the fathers will, to stop whose mouthes, and to giue them some content there was presently giuen them twelue thousand florins of gold. The will being read, and an other taken, the Queene and the Duke charged themselves with the gouernment of the King, swearing in the hands of D. John of Illeca Bishop of Siguença, and promising the obseruation of the lawes, rights and preiudleges of the realme, Prouinces and cities thereof: But within few daies the Queene and D. Fernand disagreed in their commands. The Queene being a woman was gouerned by an other woman of Cordoua, called Leonora Lopez, without whose aduise she did not any thing, so not that which was resolved in council; so as without the dukes great modesty and patience, the realme had been full of feditions and great confusion. It was ordained that the King should haue three hundred lances for his gard, and the Duke two hundred, the which did much displeafe euery man of iudgement. And for that the soldiars which were vpon the frontier were not paid, and endured much, there was drawne out of the Kings cofers twenty millions of Marauadies, vpon condition it should be repaied out of the first of the Kings reuenues that should be receiued, or others that should be leaued.

Whileſt they were attentive about theſe affairs at Segobia, the Marſhal of Caſtile Fernando Garcia of Herrera, being in Lorca, entered into the country of Granada, to ſurpriſe ſome Moors, who had their retreat at Vera, but for want of ladders he could not eſſect it. Some daies after he incountered with other troups neere vnto Xurena, where hauing defeated them, he entered into the towne, but he could not take the caſtle; wherefore the Chriſtians retired, hearing that a great number of Moores came to charge them. Theſe petty exploits did ſomewhat kindle the warre of Granada, wherein the Infant D. Fernando deſired to employ himſelfe.

Difficulties increasing in Segobia, in respect of the government, it was thought fit Donna Catherine the Queene mother, and D.Fernand duke of Pegnafel should divide it betwixt them: so as the places remotest from all tumults of warre, and within the country, should be at the Queenes disposal; which were the dioceses of St. James, Tuy, A. florga, Ouedo, Leon, Zamora, Salamanca, Ciudad Rodrigo, Auala, Segobia, Oima, Burgos and Caloorar. And vnder the dukes charge, should remaine the Archbishopsricks of Toledo and Seulle, and the Bishopsricks of Cuena, Sigüenza, Carthagena, Caliz, Cordoua, Ilaen, Badajos, Coria, Plallance, Lugo, Mondonedo, Palence and Orense, with certain conditions upon the iudgement of wits, and other things.

The King of Granada hauing for his allies and assistants in this warre the petty Kings of Tunes and Tremessen, he cauled his army to march towards Priego. And at the same time the Duke of Pegnafel went towards the frontier, and came to Seule. There were many light incounters, sometimes with cueas, sometimes with losfe: the towne of Zaara, the castle of Andito, Priego, Cagneze, Las Cueuas and Ortexica were taken from the Moores. The strength of the Moores army was about Iacen, and yet they durst not giue battaile to the Christians, who went and camped before Septemil, hauing in their campe some peeces of ordinance, whereof the Spaniards were in those daies very vnskillfull, the inuention of that deuillish Engine being then new. At fea thirtene galleies of Castile did fight against three and twenty of the Moores, D. Alphonso Henriquez being Admiral of Castile, who tooke eight of the enemies galleies, the rest some perished, and some fled.

The siege of Septenil was long, during the which D. Pedro of Estuniga took Ayamont: and in the end through the valour of the Moores which were within Septenil, they

The Infant
D. Fernandez
susets the realm of Cansile.

Gouernments Castile diuided betwixt the Queene mother and the Duke of Peg-nasick.

15
First use of Artillery in Spain.

they were forced to raise the siege. The Moores after this retreat recovered Priego A and Las Cuevas, and burnt them: they attempted Cagnette, but they found it well manned.

The duke of Pegnafiell going from Seuille, had carried in this warre the sword of King Fernand furnished the holy, who tooke that city from the Moores, attributing some vertue and happinesse thereunto: and for that hee had promised to bring it backe, and leave it in its place, hee did it at this returne, and then past into Castile, leaving good order upon the frontier: this is all was done in the yeere of our Lord 1407. in the warre of Granado; at what time died Don Pero Lopez of Ayala great Chamberlaine of Castile, being threecore and fiftene yeeres of age, a Knight endowed with two principall qualities which adorne nobility; for besides his learning, which was great, he had made B proofe of his valour in the two battailes of Nagera, betwixt the two Kings D. Pedro and D. Henry brethren, and in that of Aljubarote, betwixt D. John King of Castile and D. John of Portugal. He hath left in writing the History of Castile, of his time; a treatise of hunting, whereunto he was much giuen, and other Bookes.

An. 1407.
Death of D. Pero Lopez of Ayala, valiant and learned Knight.

An. 1408.

The yeere 1408. being come, the Estates of Castile and Leon, assembled at Guadajara, whether came the King, the Queene-mother and the Infanta. The duke of Pegnafiell came also, whereas the deputies of the Estates having had diuerse conferences touching the continuance of the warre of Granado, they agreed and offered money for the furnishing thereof, yet with some delays and difficulties. D. Pedro de Luna Archbishop of Toledo, who had bene at this assembly, had led a young man of eightene yeeres of age with him, whom he aduowed to be his kinsman, and was called Aluaro de Luna, whom he brought into the Kings house, and made him Page of the chamber, by the meanes of Gomez Carrillo the Kings Governour. He was held to be sonne of Aluaro de Luna, Lord of Cagnette, who was chiefe cup-bearer to the King D. Henry: but he who was held to be his father, did not avow him for his sonne, for he was borne of a dishonest woman, called Mary of Cagnette, who had bene common to others, and had brought them children: wherefore Aluaro de Luna did not thinke that this was his sonne, and for that he should not inherit his great possessions, hee souled all in his life time, leaving to this child only eight hundred florins, and that at the intreaty of his friends. Aluaro the father being dead, the child retired to Auignon, to the court of Pope Benedict, where he remained some time, he came into Castile to the Archbishop, by whose meanes he was receiued into the Kings house, and in time grew so great, as he was made Constable of the realme, and yet it was not very successfull for him. His mother Mary of Cagnette, had also by a captaine of Cagnette, D. John of Crezuela, who was Bishop of Olma, and afterwards Archbishop of Seuille, and in the end of Toledo.

Exploits of warre betwixt the Castilians and Moores.

Truce with the Moores.

Whilest they remained at Guadajara, the King of Granado came to the siege of Alcaudete, having seven thousand horse and 26000. foote in his army: yet through the valour of Martin Alphonso of Montemajor and others, which were within the place, it was preferred. The Moores victuals were many times cut off by the garrisons of Andalusia, & many light victories gotten one of another, whereas Garcia Fernandez Manrique captaine of Xeres, and Fernand Rodriguez of Vallezillo, who held Zahara, and Fernand Arias of Sahauedra, Governour of Cagnette, shewed themselves both valiant & vigilant, carrying great spoiles out of the Moores country, every one in his quarter. This warre being more difficult to the King of Granado then hee had esteemed, he sent Ambassadors to the Governours at Guadajara, to demand a truce, the which was granted, against the will of D. Fernand Duke of Pegnafiell, who desired the warre should continue. Wherefore the Estates reduced the subvention which they had granted of threecore millions of marauides, to five and forty.

Joseph

Joseph the thirteenth King of Granado.

During this cessation of armes, King Mahumet Aben Balus died, having put on a poisoned shirt, the twelfth yeere of his reigne, and of the Arabians the 791. in whose place came King Joseph his eldest brother, a little before put in prison in Salobregne, from whence he was drawne and led with great silence to Granado, to raigne ouer the Moores, being loath presently to divulge Mahumet's death, for feare of the Christians enterprises. Seeing himselfe settled, he sent a messenger presently to D. Alphonso Fernandez Governour of Alcala the royal, aduertising him of his aduancement, and withall he sent vnto the King of Castile and to the Governours, a Moorish Knight called Abdalla Alamin, to let them vnderstand what had past, intreating them to reioyce at his good hap, and to continue the truce made with his predecessor Mahumet, the which the Queene mother, and the duke D. Fernand did conforme for the said time, and sent a Secretary to Granado to see it sworn. At his returne, he was accompanied with an other Ambassador, who had charge to present vnto the King of Castile, horses, swords, some peeces of veluet, rayfins, dried figs, almonds and other presents, and to require a prolongation of the truce for two yeeres, but he obtained it not; for the Queene mother and the duke of Pegnafiell, would haue King Joseph acknowledge himselfe vassall to the King of Castile, whereof the Ambassador excused himselfe, saying that he had no charge to treat of any such matter: yet all acts of hostility ceased that yeere 1409. notwithstanding some tumult at Priego, the Moores contrary to their plighted faith, running vpon them which did repaire it: but this was pacified and satisfied, with excuses from King Joseph, and the truce prolonged for five monthes.

An. 1409.

The court being at Valledolit, was then in some combustion, for that many imagining that D. John Velasco and D. Diego Lopez of Estuniga, did entertaine the Queene mother in quarrel with the duke of Pegnafiell, D. Frederic the young Earle of Transimara, sonne to D. Pedro, did presse him to punish them, offering to lay hold of them, if he pleased: whereof they hauing some intelligence, retired from court, whereas the Queene was much discontented, and was not quiet vntill she had caused them returne, hauing obtained a safe conduit from the duke D. Fernand. At Valledolit there arrived Ambassadors from the French King, and from Lewis Duke of Orleans his brother, who offered the King of Castile and his Governours to come to the war against the Moores, with a thousand launces entertained: with them were Ambassadors from the Dukes of Austria and Luxemburg, making the like offers: and moreover the Duke of Orleans demanded Queene Beatrix, widow to King John the first to wife. There were great thanks giuen vnto them all, and the truce made with the new King of Granado made knowne vnto them. As for the marriage the widow Queene would giue no eare vnto it, contenting herselfe to liue a widows life, in her house of Villa real, from whence she did not part. The French Ambassadors confirmed the ancient league betwixt the houses of France and Castile.

At Valledolit there was an assembly, in the which was ratified the marriage of the Infanta Donna Maria the Kings sister with her cousin Germain D. Alphonso eldest sonne to the Duke of Pegnafiell, to her was assigned for dowrie the Marquise of Villena, Andalusia and Portillo: and for an earnest penny of the marriage, there were thirty thousand doubloons of gold deliuered. This yeere D. Laurence Suarez of Figueroa, maister of Saint Iames being dead, there was substituted in his place D. Henry the third, sonne to the Infant D. Fernand Duke of Pegnafiell, notwithstanding all the labouring of Garcia Hernandez, Lord of Villagarcia, great Commander of Castile.

About that time there was set vp (as a most holy thing in Spaine) an Image of the Virgin Mary, found by a religious Frenchman, in the mountaine which is betwixt Salamanca, and Cité Roderigue, called La Peña of France, where afterwards there was a Monastery

16.
Marriage betwixt D. Alphonso eldest sonne to the Duke of Pegnafiell, and D. Maria the Kings sister.

monastery built, in honour of this Image, whereof the Spaniards report many Prodigies A and miracles, of the which they haue made whole bookes and treatises. This age was fertile (during the Schisme of the church) of sects and new monasticall institutions. For besides the reformation of the regular Chanoinis of Saint Augustin, by the diligence of Leon of Carrate Prior of Frigionaja of Santa Maria in the fields of Luca, by Bernard and of White Monkes of Mount Oliuet had its beginning neere vnto Siena, by Bernard and other Monkes of Siena, and that of Saint George of Alaga, by Laurence Iustinian a Venetian otherwife called blue Celestins.

The same yeere the Schisme in the church did produce a third head in the church of Rome: for many Princes hauing insisted much for the reuision of the church, that the B two Popes Benedict of Auignon, and Gregory of Rome, should meet at Sauona, and take some good course for the quiet of Christendome, these good fathers, zealous of their glory, did so contemne one another, as there was no meanes to draw them together: wherefore many Cardinals being disbanded, as well from the sea of Rome, as from that of Auignon, there was a council celebrated by them at Pisa in Tuscany, by the which Benedict and Gregory being depoued from their papal dignity, Peter Philargia friar, borne in Candy, Archbishop of Milan, and Cardinal of the title of the twelve Apostles, was chosen, and named Alexander the fifth, who liued but tenne monethes: wherefore the Cardinals were forced to meet againe at Bologna in Lombardy, whereas Balthasar C the Cardinal of the title of Saint Eustace, and Legat of Bologna, was chosen, and named by them John the three and twentieth. This was a tripling of the Schisme, and confusion in the church of Rome: for the two first Popes did still hold their dignities, and had their followers, to the contempt one of another, namely Castile and Nauarre held for Benedict relying in Auignon, holding the other two for false Popes.

Three Popes at one time in the church of Rome.

Arragon.

About all others D. Martin King of Arragon did reuerence and support Pope Benedict, who at that time had many crosses both within and without his realme: for the King of Sicile his sonne, being young and gouerned by young men, had so discontented the Noblemen of the country, both Sicilians and Arragonois, as finding himselfe plunged againe in very great difficulties, the King his father was forced to send him succors both D of gallies and souldiars, whereby in the end he became maister of all Sicile, but with great paine: and being better counselled he did gouerne it with more honour and authority, but not without continuall ieaousie and distrust: Yet hee had meanes to imploy himselfe in the warre of Sardynia, and to preferue that Island to the crowne of Arragon:
In the which Brancaloon of Oria, had made such attempts against the Arragonois, as they were in a manner ready to abandon it, hee hauing ioyned vnto his forces those of Americ Vicont of Narbonne, who had married Beatrice sister to his wife Leonora of Arborea; these two brothers in law, being strong and also fauored by the common-weale of Genoua, it was needfull to haue the forces of Sicile and Arragon vnto to supplee them. D. Martin King of Sicile came thither in person with tenne gallies, with ar- E restion not to leaue the Island, vntill he had wholly subdued it, whereof he did aduenture the King his father, who soone after sent D. Pedro Torellia into Sardynia with an hundred and fifty faile, which transported good numbers of foote and horse with many Noblemen and Knights of fame.

Viceroy of Valencia (saue
by the treachery of his own brother,

During this preparation D. Raymond Boil, Viceroy of Valencia, was murdered in Easter weeke, going out of the castle, whereof his owne brother was a praeficer, whereof being conuicted, he lost his life, with the rest that had committed the murder. Within a while after there was a marriage in the same city, betwixt D. James of Arragon Earle of Vrgel, sonne to D. Pedro, and D. Isabella the Kings sister, and daughter to the deceased King D. Pedro, and of Sibille of Storza, his last wife, an vnfortunate marriage, as we will see. And for that a son which D. Martin King of Sicile had had by D. Blanche of Na-uarre, was dead about that time, D. Martin King of Arragon the grandfather, conceiued warre, as retrying himselfe from all affaires, he shut himselfe vp in the Monastery of Val de Christus, which hee had caused to bee built, and left the whole charge of the warre of Sardynia to his sonne Don Martin King of Sicile, who (with the forces
of

A of Arragon, led by D. Pedro Torellia) charged the enemies campe about Sauluri, and put them to rout with great slaughter, forcing the Vicont of Narbonne to saue himselfe in Montreal: he tooke Sauluri and the castle, with the towne of Eglice, and laid seige to Oristagno, the chiefe fort of Brancaloon of Oria, and of the Sardinians rebelled: but the King being surprized with sickness in this fortunat victory, hee caused himselfe to be carried to Cailley, where he died, to the great griefe of all the Sicilians and Arragonois, and extreme sorrow of the King of Arragon his father, who liued not long after him. By his death without any lawfull children, the realme of Sicile fell to the King of Arragon, and was for euer after vnto that crowne. Blanche of Nauarre, the widow Queene, remained Regent of the Island, by the will of the King her husband, confirmed by her father in law. A bafe sonne of his called D. Frederic, had for his portion the Earldome of Luna. At that time there grew great troubles in Arragon, whereof *D.
James* Earle of Vrgel was the chiefe author, a turbulent Prince, who made no difficulty to challenge the crowne euen in the life time of the King Don Martin: and for that it was a tickle point, and did not succeed well, he aspired to the ordinary Regency, which was a dignity wherewith the eldest sonnes of Arragon, and the presumptiue heires, were wont to bee honoured, the which hee obtained, and was moreover made Constable: but vnderhand the King gaue order that he should not be receiued in his Regency, and caused an appeale to be made by the factions of Vrrea, Heredia and other, before the Iustice Major of Arragon.

Death of Don Martin King
of Sicile.

This was in the yeere 1409. when as the King desirous to see if he might haue a child to succede him in his great Estates, married with Donna Ioane of Prades, or Marguerite, as some write, a faire young virgin of the bloud royall, the which hastened his end: and in the meane time hee was much sollicit by Lewis duke of Aniou, who had married Donna Violant, daughter to D. John King of Arragon, and by the Duke of Pegnafiel, borne of Donna Leonora of Arragon, daughter to the King Don Pedro, and sister to this King D. Martin, that he would declare his successor, the which he refused to doe, at their requests, but tired with their importunities, he was ready to name by his testament, for heire of the realmes of Arragon, Sicile and other lands, Don Frederic de Luna, bastard of his deceased sonne. This King being thus distracted with passions in his age, the fares of Sicile and Sardynia were more troubled then before.

Marriage of
D. Martin
King of Arra-gon & Donna Ioane of Prades.

In the yeere 1410. beganne the warre in Castile against the Moores, the truce beeing expired, and the Moores army hauing surprized Zahara with great slaughter of the inhabitants and souldiars, and great spoile of them that remained. The Infant Don Fernand coming for this occasion to Cordoua, hee caused the ruines of Zahara to bee repaired, and went to beseege Antequera, hauing in his army tenne thousand foote and three thousand five hundred horse. Neere vnto the towne were two hills, the approaches whereof beeing kept, the army might bee safe from all attempts of the Moores, who were in field with five thousand horse and 80000. foote, led by Cidi Ali and Cidi Amer brethren to Joseph King of Granado. These passages were garded, the lower part of the hill with fixe hundred Launces and two thousand foote vnder the command of Don Sancho of Rojas Bishop of Palencia, Don Diego Fernandes of Quignones Gouernor of the Asturia, D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, and Don John Hurtado of Mendoza.
And at the other hill of harder access, being higher and easier to be kept, there were set foure hundred Launces and one thousand foote, commanded by Don Martin Vasquez, D. Fernand Perez of Ayala, Gouerrior of Guipulcoa, D. Raymond of Guzman and John of Soto Major great commander of Alcantara. The Duke of Pegnafiel had caused many ladders to bee brought from Seuille, with other Engines of warre to assaile townes.

18
Castille.

The Moores beeing desirous for to raise the seige from before Antequera, came to assaile the Bishop of Palencia and his troupes in this passage of strength, from whence they were not only repulst, but the skirmish growing very hot, in the end, beyond the Moores expectation, there was a great encounter, the Bishoppe being fortified with new bands, which came from the campe, so as the Moores fighting without order, and rather hindered then fauoured by their numbers of rascally footemen, M m m they

they were forced to turne their backs with great losse; for authors write that there were A about fiftene thousand of them slaine vpon the field, and onely twelue hundred Christians.

After this victory the sege was continued, and the place battred by all meanes, the which in like manner was valiantly defended, where as the Christians lost more in the fallies of the besegged, then they had done in the battaile. There died Martin Ruy of Aben Dagno, of a poisoned arrow. On the other side three hundred christians honemen, going out of their garrison of Iaca, were incourted, and cut in peeces by the Moors about Montexicar. But the Moores garrison of Archidona within two leagues of Antiquera, were happily defeated by the Christians that were at the sege, for they did much annoy them, by their continuall courses, and cutting off their victuals and foragers that came to the campe. The river of Gorza was their common waiting place whether they could not go without a gard. The Christians being aduertised of an enterprize made vpon their men, hauing set a sentinell vpon an high eminent place, called the rocke of two Louers, they found themselves so strong, when as the Moores came to charge them, as they repulst them, and pursued them beating and killing euen vnto the gates of their fort: there were two thousand slaine vpon the field, and many carried away prisoners. The rocke of two Louers was so called from the deed of a Christian slaine, and his Maisters daughter being a Moore, whom he had perswaded to flie with him from Granado, to enioy their desired loues, and to lue freely together in Castile: C they being pursued by her father, who was well accompanied, and overtaken vpon this rocke, which is midde-way betwixt Archidona and Antiquera, after that they had long defended themselves against them that would take them, and seeing no meane to escape, they cast themselves downe head-long from the top of the rocke, imbrasing one an other, and so flue themselves. To diuert the sege of Antiquera, the Moores sent some to burne the Engines of battery that were before it with wilde fire, vnder colour of treating of a truce. The treason being discouered and punished, the Infant called a trench to be cast and a rampart to be made round about the place, setting good guards, and then he pursued the sege, hauing fortified his army with the companies of Seulle and Cordoua, who haue alwaies done great seruice in these Moorish warres, the which D kept King Ioseph for aduenturing of a battaile.

The towne of Antiquera being prest with all violence, it was taken, there going first vnto the assault, the companies of D. Garci Fernandes Manrique, of D. Charles of Artillan Lord of Los Cameros, and Roderigo of Narbaez. The first which died in fighting, was Iuancho a Biscaia, and the first which entred were Gutierte of Torres and Sancho Gompaes Cherino. The castle did hold out eight daies longer, and then was yielded by the Moores, to haue their liues saued and their goods, who were safely conducted to Archidona. There entred into it, Don Frederic Earle of Translamara, and the Bishop of Palencia: the garde of the towne and castle was given to Roderigo of Nar-baez. In the meane time the Moores did forrage the territorie of Alcalá the royall, E and the Christians after the taking of Antiquera, did ouerrunne the country of Azna-mara, Cabecha and Yehar, small rownes which were taken by force, through the wil-dome and valour chiefly of the Constable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos: after which exploits the Infant Don Fernand returned a victor to Seulle, where he had messengers from the King of Granado, soliciting him to make a truce, wherevnto hee yielded, being prest to attend the affaires of Arragon: wherefore there was a truce concluded betwixt Castile and Granado for seuentene monthes.

We haue before left Don Martin King of Arragon, beeing without children, so succeed him, importuned by many Princes, pretending to bee his heires, troubled with the seditions and rebellions of the Sardinians and Sicilians, beeing old and broken, and yet newly married to a young Princeesse, with hope to raise his house: But beeing F the weak both in bodie and minde, griefe and care made way to a pestilent feuer, the which seized on him this yeere 1410. in the Monastery of Valdonzellas, neere to Barcelona, hauing reigned about 14. yeeres, whose body was buried in the Monastery of Poblette.

There

A There was no will of his found, or any heire instituted in his Realmes of Arragoni, Sicile &c. The reason thereof was thought to bee for that hee knew not to which hee should incline amongst all the pretendants to that crowne, after his decesse. Wherefore the Arragonois, Valentians, Cattelans and Sicilians were in great perplexity, for Don Fernand Duke of Pagnafel Infant of Castile pretended a right, being sonne to Donna Leonora of Arragon, sister to the two last Kings deceased: Lewis Duke of Anjou hauing married Donna Isabel, daughter to King John the first, maintained the succession to belong to him: the like pretension had Don James Earle of Virgel, hauing also married one of the daughters of the King Don Pedro: Don Frederic of Arragon, Earle of Luna, base sonne to Martin King of Sicile, put forth himselfe, and so did Don
B Aphonso Earle of Gandia: all these pretendants had their partisans within the Realme, and euery one tried all meanes, with great contention, and likely hood of sedition, to attaine vnto that which hee pretended, so as in these tumults Don Anthony of Luna flue Don Garcia Archbishop of Saragossa treacherously. To prevent which disorders in time, the Noblemen of the Realme agreed, that of the three Estates there should be nine men chosen, by whose Iudgement the Scepter of Arragon should bee given to him of the pretendants whom they should thinke most profitable for the common-weale. For Arragon there were named Don Dominie Bishop of Huelua, Francis of Aranda and Don Berenger of Bardaxi a great Lawier. For the principality of Catalog-
D D. Pedro Zagarriga Archbishop of Tarragona, William of Vallesca and Bernard of Gualles. And for the Realme of Valencia were chosen Vincent Ferrer, of the Order of the preaching friars, who was afterwards canonized, his brother Boniface Ferrer a Lawier, a Monke of the Order of the Carthusians, and Maister Peter Bertrand, this last was substituted in the place of Gines of Rabesca who fell mad. These nine men being assembled in the castle of Calpe which is in Arragon, all those which pretended a right vnto the Realme, were summoned to exhibit their reasons before them, whereof some appeared personally, and others by their Ambassadors. In the meane time in Castile the Infant D. Fernand, for himselfe and the King his Nephew, caused this businesse to be consulted of by the learned of the country, who in the beginning were of opinion that both of them had an interest, and that they must frame an opposition before the Delegates, as well in the Kings name, being a pupill, as in his vncle and tutor Don Fernand; yet hauing better considered, or being otherwise perswaded, they gaue all the right of the succession, in the realme of Arragon, to the Infant D. Fernand, who for this cause deputed Ambassadors, the Bishop of Palencia, and D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, chiefe Iustice of Castile, and Lord of Bejar, with Doctor Pero Sanches of the Kings council, to send them into Arragon: and at the same time hee caused fiftene hundred launces to draw neere vnto the frontier of Arragon: hee and the Queene-mother with the young King coming to Aillon, a neere place to Arragon.

Whilest they are busie about these pursutes, the Duke of Benauent a prisoner in the castle of Mont-real, brake prison, and escaped, hauing slaine the captain which had him in gard, whereof they beeing aduertised at court, they provided speedily for all the passages, especially towards Portugal, thinking that hee would bend that way: but hee went towards Nauarre, where hee was kindly entertained by the King D. Charles, and by the Queene Donna Leonora his sister: who notwithstanding hauing receiued letters from the Queene-mother, the Infant Don Fernand, and the councill of Castile, intrea-ting them to set a gard vpon the Dukes person, vntill they had further newes, they caused him to bee put into a strong castle, yet intreating him with all honour and respect, and then they sent an Ambassador into Castile, to make their excuse, for that they had receiued this fugitiue Prince, and intreated him as their brother, but they kept him in sure garde, that he should not attempt any thing against the crowne of Castile. This F Ambassador found the court at Aillon, where he was well receiued, and his excuses allowed.

There arriued also Ambassadors from the French King, with very rich presents, the which were requited with others of no lesse value, being sent by an expresse Ambasage some monthes after.

Mmm s

This

Disfaul
Christians
were to Mon-texico.Rocke of two Louers.Antiquera taken.Truce with the King of Granado.19
Arragon.Princes pretending to the realm of Arragon.Murder of the Archbishop of Saragossa.Nine arbitrators to choose
the King of Arragon.D. Fernand with his wife 15th arms.

20

Castile.

An. 1411.
Green cross the badge of the Knights of Alcantara.

This yeere of our Lord 1411. Pope Benedict graunted that the Knights of Alcantara, in stead of hoods which they did wear in signe of their profession, should from thence forth carry greene crosses. During the courts aboad at Arllon, attending what would be the end of the troubles of Arragon, which increased daily, they sent the hofdemen of Castile to fauour the friends of the Archbishop of Saragossa that was slaine, by the which the lands of D. Anthony de Luna were spoiled. And at that time friar Vincent Ferrer, that great preacher, made a voiage to the court of Castile, who made some sermons before the Queene mother, and some Noblemen; by whose aduice there was an Order made, that all Iewes, dwelling in Castile, should carry for the marke and distinction to bee knowne, a peece of red cloth vpon their cloakes, and the Moores greene hattes with white moones. The affaires of Arragon growing tedious, the King was carried backe to Vailledolit. The truce of Portugall being expired it was treated by Ambassadours to make a perpetuall peace, the which was not then concluded.

Arragon.

The arbitrators appointed to iudge to whom the Realme of Arragon did belong, hauing bene many daies in conference in the castle of Caspe, in the end they did agree to adiudge it to the Infant D. Fernand of Castile, whereof hee had notice giuen him in line, in the yeere 1412. being at Cuenca: wherefore hauing made his election he thanks for the fauour he had receiued in that respect by the forces and meanes of Castile, he prepared himselfe to goe and take possession of his Realme. And first of all he declared for Tutors and Gouvernors of the Realme in his place, D. John of Illeca, Bishop of Siguenza, D. Pablo bishop of Carthagea, D. Henry Manuel Earle of Montalegre, and Pero Alfan of Ribera, Gouvernor of Andalusia, with whom hee ioyned other men of State and learning. This and other things being ordred hee went into Arragon, where he found great resistance, especially of Don James Earle of Vergel, who pretended to reigne: him he sought by all friendly meanes to draw vnto his seruice, but in vaine for the Earle being obstinate, he drew the English into Spaine, notwithstanding whose aide he yielded.

D. Fernand the first of that name, the sixteenth King of Arragon.

21.
Genealogie of
a ragon.

Don Fernand the first of that name, reigned in Arragon, Cattelogne, Valencia, Sicile, Majorca, Minorca &c. By the consent of all the Estates: and for his good parts was furnamed the honest, whose posterity was famous: Before hee came to the crowne of Arragon, he had by his wife the Countesse of Albuquerque, Don Alphonso, who was heire of the Realmes, and was in his fathers life time called Prince of Girone, in stead of the title of Duke, vsurped vntill that time by the eldest sonnes of Arragon. He had also by her the Infant Don John, who was King of Nauarre, and afterwards of Arragon and Sicile by the decease of his elder brother. Moreouer hee had, Don Henry maister of Saint James, Don Sauecho maister of the Alcantara, and the Infant Don Pedro, who died in the warres of Naples, being slaine with a great shot: all these five Princes were borne in Castile. The daughters which issued from this marriage were Donna Maria Queene of Castile, married to King John the second her cousin germaine, and Donna Leonora who was Queene of Portugal, wife to Don Edward. D. Fernand was two and thirty yeeres old when hee beganne to reigne in Arragon, being Lord of was two and thirty yeeres old when hee beganne to reigne in Arragon, being Lord of Lara to Don John his second sonne, all which Inheritance, both by father and mother in Castile, his children enioyed for a time, but being turbulent, and not able to entertaine themselves with the Kings of Castile, they lost all.

In the yeere 1413. the King Don Fernand hauing besieged the Earle of Vergel, in A Vergel, in the towne of Balaquer, for that hee did still raise new troubles, hee prest him in such sort, as his wife was periwaded to goe forth, and casting her selfe at the Kings feete to demand her husbands life. The King vsing his accustomed clemency, pardoned him his life: but the Earle comming forth, and hauing killt the Kings hands, hee was shut vp in the same castle. There were many Knights of Castile which serued the King in this warre, and amongst other forces, there were sent vnto him by Donna Catherine Queene of Castile, foure hundred launces with promise to furnish him with foure thousand, if he had need; but the Earles yeelding freed him of that necessity. Hee seized vpon Lerida, and other places, and in a short time made all within the Realme to bow, and therefore hee sent away his souldiars of Castile well satisfied, Don Godfrey of Nauarre, Earle of Cortes, and Marshall of Nauarre, the Kings base sonne, was at this warre, with some men at armes.

The new King did afterwards cause the Earle of Vergel to bee arraigned, and condemned him to perpetuall prison, depriving him of his dignity and goods, and then he sent him prisoner to Vruagna, a fort in Castile, from whence he was afterwards transported to Mora. The Countesse his mother was also condemned to loose her goods, and some men of base condition were put to death. These things being done, the King came to Saragossa, where he was crowned by the Archbishop of Tarragone, in the presence of many Noblemen of Arragon, Valencia, Sicile, Cattelogne, Castile and Nauarre, at the which there were great and stately triumphes. To serue at this ceremony, the Queene of Castile his sister in law had sent him a crowne of gold, weighing fiftene marks, inrich with many stones of great value. He was armed Knight by the Duke of Gandia, and then annoited and crowned in the great church of Saragossa: after which ad he was very bountifull to the Noblemen and Knights that assisted at his coronation. From Nauarre came the Marshall D. Godfrey, Peter Martin of Peralta, with many others.

Goeing from Saragossa, he came to Morella, where he should meete with Pope Benedict, who after his deposing had retired himselfe into Arragon, yet retaining still his dignity, as much as he might. There they had an interview, whereas Pope Benedict went in a sollemne procession, in his pontifical habit, with a white Miter on his head set with stones of great price, to whom the King did all the honour hee could deuise: Before his departure from thence there came Ambassadours from the Emperour Sigismund, who periwaded the King of Arragon to fauour the counsell, which was then called at Constance, for the rooting out of the schisme. To treat whereof there was an interview concluded betwixt the two Princes at Nice, and the King was intreated to periwade Benedict, willingly to renounce his dignity of Pope. The counsell began the fifth day of Nouember in the yeere 1414. and continued aboue three yeeres. There were Ambassadours sent from Castile, by the aduice of King Fernand, D. Diego of Anaya Maldonado Archbishop of Seuille, and D. Martin Fernandes of Cordoua, accompanied with many great Doctors in Diuinity. This yeere died in Castile Vincent Arias a great Doctor, and the first that did comment vpon the lawes of Castile.

The King D. Fernand hauing held the Estates of Cattelogne at Momblanc, hee past to Valencia, where hee found Benedict held for Pope onely in Castile, Arragon and Nauarre. In that court there were also many prelates, noblemen and knights, as well of the realme as strangers, by reason of the marriage which was celebrated there, betwixt the Infant D. Alphonso of Arragon, the Kings eldest sonne, and Mary of Castile, sister to the King Don John, by reason whereof there were great sports, so as some Bishops, according to the manner of that age, carried the praise, namely Don Sauecho of Roias Bishop of Palence: to whom at the intreaty of the Queene of Castile, Benedict, the pretended Pope, did conferre the Archbishoprike of Toledo, being void by the decease of Don Pedro de Luna. And for that in the contract of future marriage, there had bene granted in dowry to the Infanta, the Marquisate of Villena, when as there was no likely-hood that the Infant should come to the crowne of Arragon, it was againe concluded, for that it seemed by this meane the Marquisate should bee alienated from the crowne of Castile, that in lieu thereof there should bee giuen two hundred thousand doubloons of Castile.

Coronation of the King D.
Fernand at Saragossa.

22
Pope Benedict
in Arragon.

Counsell of Constance.
An. 1414.

Marriage betwixt D. Alphonso of Arragon and D.
Maria of Cas-
tile.

M m m 3

During

Tholoufa, Rafan, S. Angelo, S. Enfface, S. George, and Montarragon, the Archb. of Tarragona, and the Bishops of Barcelona, Vic. Elne, Girona, Huesca, and Tarrassone, with many Abbots, and other Clergimen, who held him for true and lawfull Pope.

26 Conquest of the Canaries by Joins of Betan-
court.

This year John of Betancourt, knight of France, by gift from Queene Catherine, conquered the Ilands of the Canaries, and intituled himselfe King. He could not take the great Canarie, for all the Inhabitants of the Iland had retired themselves thither: wherefore finding too great resistance, he retired himselfe, having built a fort in that of Lancelor, from whence he did traffice, and drew profit from the neighbor places, of Iether, tallow, slaues, and other such commodities: but this king Menauls hated him, in whole time Pope Martin instituted an Episcopall see in those Ilands, to the which there was a certaine Monke called Friar Mendo advanced: but this king Menauls having no great regard, when there was question of profit, to the soules health of the Ilanders, he sold them indifferently, as well the Pagans, as those which had received Baptisme: whereof the new Bishop did complain to Queene Catherine, requiring her to free them of that Lord: whereupon she sent Peter Barba de Campos with three ships of warre, with whom Menauls having long contended, in the end by the Queenes sufferance, he sold these Ilands to a Knight of Seville, called Fernando Peres, in whose hands, and his successors of Seville, they have remained vnto the time of the king D. Fernando the 5. and of the Queen D. Isabella.

Menauls the 2.
King of the Canaries, sold the Ilands to Seville.

27
Family of Bha-niga comes out of Nauarre.
An. 1418.

D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, Justice maior of Castile, having long serued King Henry the 3. and John now reigning dyed this year. His house came out of Nauarre, and was of the blood royall, as some Authors have left in writing. The year 1418. Queene Catherine dyed suddenly, being fifty yeares old, she was buried at Toledo in the chappell of the last kings. By her death King John was freed from tutors, and there was a Councell established, with the which he should gouerne his Realmes, whose letters and expeditiōs should be signed on the back-side, by two of his Councillors. This year there came ambassadors to him from France, to demand ayde against the English, to whom they gaue hope of an army at Sea. The king of Portugal did also send to confirm a perpetual peace betwixt Castile and Portugall, but there was nothing concluded at that time. The English proclaimed warre against Castile, whereupon the truce with Granada was prolonged for two yeares. King John being at Medina del campo, was betrothed to D. Maria of Arragon his cousin, daughter to the deceased king D. Fernando: then hee held a Parliament, when for his new accord of marriage, they granted him a great subuention. The same year mention is made of the death of Friar Vincent Ferrer of Valencia, afterwards canonized a Saint by Pope Calixtus, who was also of Valencia. Hee that most gonerned the king at that time entering into his maioritie, was Don Sancho of Rojas, Arch-bishop of Toledo, whereat they did murmur, from which time the Estate of Castile was very turbulent.

The Guipulcoans and Biscayens fell to theeing at sea, without any subiect of warre, euen vpon the coast of Brittain, whereof D. John then liuing complained much by his ambassadors, to the King of Castile, who desirous to liue in peace with Christian Princes, sent Fernando Peres of Ayala, Gouernour of Guipulco, to bee an arbitrator. Hee with another chosen by the Duke of Brittain, caused all disorders to bee reformed, and restitution to be made. The Councell of King John, was then reduced to siseene Prelates and Knights, whereof sise should assist and serue, and they should change eury four moneths.

28
Portugal.

Don John King of Portugall laboured to quench and qualifie all occasions of new troubles, betwixt his Realme and that of Castile, by a firme peace: Wherefore having sent backe his ambassadors in the year 1419. to Don John King of Castile, they were returned with good hope and promise, to send ambassadors into Portugall, expressly to that end. This king D. John the first of that name then reigning in Portugall, having made a long truce with D. Henry King of Castile, during that time he gaue himselfe to gouerne his Realme with iustice, to repaire the ruines which had growne by the precedent warres, and to adorne it with new buildings: wherein employing himselfe with judgement, bountie, and wisdom, hee was beloued and respected both of his owne subiects, and of strangers.

In

A In remembrance of the victorie which he had gotten at Aljubarrote, he did build neere vnto it a sumptuous Monasterie, which he dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and did call it Saint Mary the royall of the battell, or victorie, which is a Conuent of Iacobin Friars. And for that he had a better iudgement then many other Princes, knowing that most of the religious Monks, and other persons did not vnderstand the Latin tongue, in the which the houres and suffrages were sung in churches, he caused them to be translated into the Portugall tongue, and in like manner many bookes of the holy Scripture, and the interpretation thereof, namely, the foure Euangelists, the which did afterwards much displease our Doctours in Diuinity. Hee was so zealous of the honor of his house, as a Græme of his chamber called Don Fernando Alphonso of Saint Iren, having so much for gotten himselfe as to defloute one of the Queenes maides, daughter to D. Aluar Peres of Castro, Earle of Arrôyoles, he caused him to be burnt in the place of Ruffio in Lisbon, and as for her, hee chafed her shamefully from Court, sending her to her parents, neither could the Queenes intercession preuaile any thing. He did also punish with great severity, the other insolencies of his Courtiers, and about all things he shewed himselfe a louer of iustice, only he did forget to do reason to D. Beatrice Queene of Castile, pretending to be right heir of the Realme, which he enioyed whilest that he liued (as it were) in a priuate estate in Castile, an example of rare patience and chastitie: for shee would neuer heare speake of a second marriage, although the were sought vnto by Princes of great state, who happily might haue settled her in her fathers kingdome.

C Besides the aboue-named buildings, he built the towne of Almerin vpon the riuer of Tayo, the pallace of Sintra, the castle at Lisbon, those of Sierra Balada, neere to S. Iren, and other. Seeing himselfe in peace with all Christian Princes, and well obeyed of his subiects, he passed the sea with an armie, and tooke Ceuta from the Moores of Affricke, having in his company the Infant D. Edward, holding then the place of the eldest, for Don Alphonso was dead, the Infant Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra, and Lord of Montmajor the old, and of Auero, Don Pedro of Meneses, Earle of Viana, Standard bearer of the realm, who was the first Gouernor of Ceuta, which victorie was intermixt with mourning for the death of the Queene D. Philippe his wife, which happened in the year 1415. at what time the king D. John did take a vay the vse of accomplishing the yeares, by the æra of Cesar, the which had bene till that time obserued in Portugall, ordaining, that from that time the yeares should begin from the Natiuity of Christ: and that it should bee so dated in all publike and priuate writings, to the end to conforme himselfe to that which was brought into Castile, Arragon and Nauarre, and to auoyd the confusion which fell out in contracts and bargains, betwixt the subiects of the Realmes of Spaine.

In the year 1419. the Infant Don Henry his sonne, who was Master of the Order of Christ, moued with an honest emulation, by the conquest which his father had made vpon the Barbarians, hauing conferred with some men of knowledge and experience in Cosmographie, resolved to runne ouer the Ocean sea, and to discouer the shore and Ilands thereof. Going from Lisbon with some ships, hee came to the Iland of Madera in the year 1420. the which he found desert and full of wood, whereof it carries the name: for Madera is that which the Latins call Materia, and we timber. He set fire to this wood, so as hauing cleansed it, they found the foyle good and fruitfull for all things, especially for sugar canes, which grow in such abundance, as both Spaine and all Europe make great vse of it.

The Infant did afterwards continue this and other nauigations, and was the first spur to the Portugals, which came after, to discouer the coasts of Affricke and Asia, and the Ilands of the South, and Easterne seas, with great honor to their nation, and infinit profite to the whole world. These things were attempted by the Portugals, when as the peace betwixt them and the Castilians was doubtful: for the Councell of Castile delayed it, by reason of the kings minority, yet they liued quietly one with another.

About that time the ambassadors of Castile, which had bene sent to the Councell of Constance, returned into Spaine, bringing home the re-union of the church of Rome vnder Pope Martin the first. Among them was Don Diego of Anaya Maldonado Archb. of Seville, who built the Colledge of Saint Bartolomew at Salamanca, this year 1420. being

Book of the Holy Scripture translated into Portugall.

1419.

An. 1420.
A. alexa disp.
conceda

D. Henry Master of Christ, the first discouerer of sea.

Castile.

being called the great Colledge, the most auncient of all Castile, where many learned men haue bene bred. In that vniuersitie of Salamanca are many other Colledges, built and endowed with good liuings, where there is good exercise of Diuinity, arts, and tongues, as also in other townes of Spaine, by the care of Bishops and good Prelates, labouring chiefly to maintaine learning which are the grounds of pietie and vertue.

29.
Nauarre.

The same yeare a marriage was made betwixt D. Blanche of Nauarre, the widow-Queene of Sicile, and the Infant D. John of Arragon, second sonne to the King Don Fernand deceased. By the treatie concluded the yeare before, it was sayd: That if the Infanta, the presumptiue heire of Nauarre (for the elder sister the Countesse of Foix, was already dead without children) should die before her husband, hauing children or not, that he should raigne during his life in Nauarre, after the decease of King Charles, his father-in-law. From this condition and promise being sworne, there grew many troubles in Nauarre. Besides the expectation of the Realme, there was giuen to the Infant Don John by King Charles, in dowry with D. Blanche his daughter, foure hundred twenty thousand, a hundred and twelue florens of gold, of the coyne of Arragon, sixte folz, and eight deniers: a notable summe for a King of Nauarre, an argument of the great treasure which hee had gathered together during the long peace of his raigne. It was also agreed, that the lands and fons which the Infant did hold in Castile and Arragon, should descend to the heire which should be borne of that marriage, succeeding to the Crowne of Nauarre. The Infant did enioy in Arragon the Dutchie of Gandia and Momblanc, the Earldome of Ribagorça, and the towne of Balaguer: and in Castile the Dutchie of Pagnafiel, Infantazgo, and the Seigneurie of Lara: and moreover, the townes of Cuellar, Castro-Xeris, Villalon, and Haro: afterwards he obtayned Alba de Tormes, Olmedo, Paredes of Naua, Majorca, Villaredo, Cerezo, Medina del campo, Aranda of Duego, Roa, Colmenar, and other places, all which he afterwards lost by the wars he had against Castile, the titles and patters whereof are remainyng in the records of Nauarre.

Possessions D.
John Infant of
Arragon.

These articles of marriage were sworne by the three Estates of the Realme. And it was long disputed betwixt the Infant Don John, and the king of Castiles counsell, where this marriage should be celebrated. In the end he got fortie dayes libertie to go and perform it in Nauarre, whether he went accompanied with many of the Nobility of Castile: From henceforth D. John will entitle himselfe Infant of Nauarre and Arragon. The marriage being ended, returning with his wife D. Blanche towards Castile, hee met with a messenger from Don Sancho of Roias, Archbishop of Toledo, who aduertised him of a great excellence committed by his brother Don Henry, Master of Saint James, soliciting him to returne with all speed to court: and thus it was.

30
Castile.

Don Henry the third sonne to the deceased Don Fernand king of Arragon, desired to marrie Donna Catherine, king Johns youngest sister, who had the Marquise of Villena for her dowrie, but fearing that he should neuer obtaine her by any due course, he resolved to haue her by force: so as being rash and exceeding bold, he entred on a time into Toledo with three hundred armed men, where he seized on the kings person, wherein he was assisted and fauoured by Don Ruy Lopez of Aualos the Constable, and D. Pedro Henriquez. They tooke John Hurtado of Mendoza Lord Steward of the kings house, and others who were opposite vnto them, and holding the King as it were a prisoner, they caused many of his household seruants and Officers to be chased away: about all they desired to displace D. Aluaro de Luna, kinsman to the deceased Archbishop of Toledo, who of a page of the chamber was come to be the kings great minion. But D. Henry held it now the best to winne him by mildnesse and bountie, that hee might make vse of him in that which he pretended.

The Infanta Donna Catherine, to whom this marriage with Don Henry was not pleasing, entred into the Monasterie of Saint Claire in that citie, from whence she was afterwards taken, for that Don Henry led the King to Segouia, and then to Auila, promising nor to vse any force concerning the marriage. Don John Infant of Nauar and Arragon, hearing of these newes, he much blamed the attempt of Don Henry his brother, and resolved to oppose himselfe against him, wherefore he called all his friends to Olmedo, and such Noblemen and Knights as disliked of this excess: so as in few daies hee assembled 3000.

A three thousand Lances, the Infant D. Henry preparing also for the warre, hee was in a manner equall in strength to his aduersaries, being in the towne of Auila, whether hee had led the King. The factious being ready to enter into a furious warre, D. Leonora the widow Queene of Arragon, and mother to these two Princes, laboured to betwixt them as all these troupes retired except a thousand Lances, which remained for the Kings guard: then comming to the treaty of marriage, the Infanta D. Catherine being instantly intreated by the King her brother (who was not free) to take D. Henry for her husband, she would by noe means harken to it, D. Henry being the stronger about the King, thinking that D. John was opposite to his desires, he kept him from the king, & not respecting him, nor them that followed him, he called an assembly of his partizans, in forme of a Parliament, where he caused the fact of Tordeillas to be allowed, and ordained what he pleased: yea he caused letters to be written in the Kings name to the Pope, by the which hee intreated him to giue vnto the Infant D. Henry the Lands of the Maisterhippe of Saint James in fee simple, to him and his children for euer, with the title of a Dutchy: an impudent demand, and so reiected by the Pope. The King married with D. Maria of Arragon, in Auila, without feasts or ceremony, and then they led him to Talauera and the Infant D. Henry neuer ceased vntill he had celebrated his marriage with D. Catherine his Cousin Germaine, causing the Marquise of Villena to be assigned for her dowry with the title of Dutchy, who was the third Duke of Castile: and the question being of marriages, where they doe usually shew themselves bountifull, Aluaro de Luna the Kings Minion, had in guist the towne of Saint Stephen of Gormas, and other Knights were aduanced to other lands, as it pleased D. Henry. The King being much discontented with his retrained Estate, hee conferred often with Aluaro de Luna of the means how hee might escape, but there appeared great difficulties on euery side, for the confederates which held him watcht carefully ouer him, notwithstanding going one day abroad vnder colour of hunting, he aduentured to runne to Villalua, and finding himselfe not safe there he past to Montalban, which is betwixt Talauera and Toledo, some what out of the way: whereof the Infant D. Henry being aduertised, who had newly synished his marriage he was wonderfully troubled in mynde, drawing what forces he could to field, and then the Constable and he followed the King, but in vaine, for he was in a place of safety, who sent some to aduise them that they should not follow him, but returne to Talauera, which the Infant D. Henry did, but the troupes which were in the pousure stayed not vntill they had some newes, and came and lodged about the Castle of Montalban, yet they attempted not any thing, for the reuerence they bare vnto the King, who seeing him selfe as it were besegged, and without victuals in the place, he had means to aduertise the Infant D. John, D. Sancho of Roias, Archbishop of Toledo, the Admirall D. Alphonso Henriquez, and other Knights, intreating them to come and free him.

Estates foreu.

Diamonds D.
Henry must impudent.

Marriage forced betwixt D.
Henry and D.
Catherine of Castile.

King escapes out of D. Henrys hands.

In the meane time D. Henry held a counsell with his partizans at Talauera and provided for many things, least the King should escape from him. Being intreated by his men, who were in the forme of a Campe about Mountalban, hee came thither, bringing with him the Queene D. Maria his Sister and all the Nobility that was at Talauera, to repaire this disorder in some sort. The King and such as were with him in the Castle, for want of better food, did eate their horses: D. John of Torillas Bishop of Segobia, being brought in, hee sought to make an accord for the Infant D. Henry: but the King interrupted him, saying, that D. Henry should come himselfe, and so hee sent him backe. D. Henry would not aduenture to enter, but hee procured that the Constable of Aualos, and D. Aluaro of Luna conferred together, but they could not conclude any thing, nor yet the deputies of the prouinces of the realme, who entring into the Castle, were intreated to moue the King, but they could get noe other answer but that D. Henry must free his lodging from leage: who indeed was forced to dislodge, for the Infant D. John and other Noblemen, being followed by good troupes of men at armes approached, and would haue taken him from thence by force. Thus the King was deliuered from this leage, and the Castle furnished with victuals: wherefore he sent a commandement to the Infant D. John of Arragon, that he should not aduance with his troupes, vntill he had other newes from him. The Infant stayed at Fonsalida, where D. Alphonso Henriquez the Admirall ioyned with him,

King of Castile
besegged by his owne subjects.

him, being well accompanied, and others which came from all parts, to deliuer the King A as they laid, out of prison. This was at that time when as Villareal beganne to be called Ciudad real, in recompence of the good seruice which the Inhabitants did vnto the King in this tumult. Don Henry being retired to Ocagne, hee had commaundement from the King to lay downe armes, but hee would not obey. The King parted from Montalban to returne to Talauera, vpon the way hee was met by the Infant Don John, and Don Pedro his brother, with other Noblemen, who hauing kist the Kings hands, dined with him at Villalua, and then they were sent backe to their troupes: for Aluar de Luna, who gouerned the King, could not endure that any of the Infants should stay in court, least it should impair his credit and authority.

The King being come to Talauera, he sent a new commaundement to Don Henry and his confederates to disarm, who were content, so as D. John the Infant of Arragon, did also disarm, whom the King commanded to send away his men, wherein he obaid: after which the King hauing dispatched some businesse in his fauour at Talauera, hee went to Auila: by the way hee came to Pegnafiell, where hee did visit his cousin Donna Blanche of Nauarre, wife to the Infant Don John, making great demonstrations of loue vnto her. Don Henry would not disarm, especially being degraded of the title of Marquis of Villena, by a decree of the councill, and his lands being seized on, hee would recover them by force, if he might not otherwise, for prooffe whereof hee assailed Chinchilla, Alarcon and the castle of Garci Nugnes, where there was a garrison for the King: causing on the other side his wife Donna Catherina (to whom the Marquisate did belong) to bee a tutor vnto the King for his pardon: but the King was so incensed, as he would not heare speake of it, and he reuoked the title of Duke, which hee had caused to bee giuen him, of the lands belonging to the Order of Saint Iames, hoping to make them hereditary. The King did also reuoke the gift of Castagneda in the Aluria's of Santillana, which hee had made vnto Don Garci Fernandes Manrique, for that hee was one of Don Henries faction: Don Garci refusing to yeeld, being in possession, there were some companies of men at armes sent, who chased him, and tooke some of his followers, of whom Iustice was done. Don Henry hoping for no fauour from the King, marched towards Aguilar del Campo, as hee sayd, to kisse the Kings hand; but the King dislodged from Aguilar, and came to Palenzuela, sending word to Don Henry that hee should not aduance, and that hee should dismis his soldiers: then hee came to Vaileddolit, and from thence to Tordeillas, whereas Queene Mary his wife was: yet Don Henry followed the King, leading with him fiftene hundred launces, and came vnto Guardarama; so as the King was forced to draw companies vnto him for his safety. Don Henry sent againe to beseech him to giue him access, that he might discharge himselfe, causing the deputies of townes to make the like sute from him; but they laboured in vaine, the King giuing them so many reasons, as they laied all the blame vpon Don Henry and told him that he must obey, and leaue his armed troupes, the which he promised to doe, but he did not performe it.

The Queene Donna Leonora mother to these Infants of Arragon, being in great perplexitie to see this her Sonne in danger to be ruined, she laboured all shee could possibly to pacifie the Kings wrath: most iustly incensed against this rebell and rash vassall. Don Lope de Mendoza Archbishop of Saint Iames did the like, but they preuailed nothing, the King reiecting all prayers and sute, vntill hee had laid aside Armes: wherefore Don Henry hauing made fiew of two thousand Lances, and three hundred light horse, hee dismist them, and returned to Ocagne with the Noblemen of his faction, except Don Pedro de Velasco, who came to the Court. The King did also muster his men, where there were found aboute fixe thousand men at Armes, whom hee also discharged, being payed, except one thousand Lances which hee ratayned for his guard.

In the meane time Donna Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, was deliuered of a Sonne at Pegnafiell, in the yeare of our Lord, one thousand foure hundred twenty and one, the which was Christened at Olmedo by the King of Castile, and was named Don Charles, and Don Aluar de Luna was his other God-father: Don John the Infants father, sealed the

D. Henry deposed of his title and dignity of Marquis of Villena.

Intercession for D. Henry Infants of Arragon.

A the King and whole court, with great honour and state, Two yeares, after this Infants was carried into Nauarre, at the instance of King Charles, his Grand-father, who at that time made Vienna a Principallitie, affected to the eldest sonne of Nauarre, annexing to the towne and castle of Vienna, those of Guas, Saint Vincent, Bernardo, Aguilar, Yacouneilla, Pombation, San Pedro, Cambreda, val de Campego, Maragon, Toro, Herara and Buradon: and more ouer he gaue vnto him Gocela, and Camruenigo, Peralta and Cadrieta, these foure last being distant Sieges from the Principallitie: And at the Estates at Olme he caused him to be sworne heire of the realme of Nauarre, after the decess of the Infant Don John his father.

From Olmedo, the King of Castile came to Toledo, to the Estates, whether D. Henry, the Constable, and their confederates were cited, who appeared not, but sent their Ambassadors to make their excuses, saying, that they held for their professed enemies Don Sancho of Rojas Archbishop of Toledo, D. John Hurtado de Mendoza, and many others, and that they suspected the Infant D. John: whereof the King being more incensed then before, resolved to pursue them by armes, whereof they were: but Don Henry being aduertised and aduised, promised to present himselfe before the King at Madrid by the fourteenth of May this yeare 1422. where he appeared a day before the Assignation. Having kist the Kings hand, beginning to enter into a discourse, to excuse and iustifie himselfe, the King would not heare him, but sent him backe to his lodgings. The day following, there were produced in the Kings Councell, fourteen of the Constable d'Anslas letters, by the which he was charged with treason, and practising with the King of Granado against the King of Castile his Lord. They were openly read by Sancho Romero the kings Secretary, who said, that D. Diego de Fuenfildia, Bishop of Zamora had giuen him then. D. Henry and Garci Fernandes Manrique, thinking to defend the Constables innocence and fidelitie, were committed to prison by the Kings commaundement, and all the horses and furniture they had in Court seized on. The Constable and the Infanta D. Catherina, being aduertised of what had past at Madrid, they left Castile, and retired to Balueda, a castle in the realme of Valencia, and the Gouvernor Don Pedro Manrique fled to Tarassone: wherefore the King caused all their goods to bee seized, commanding all Gouvernors and Magistrates to apprehend them. These letters did not seeme very certaine, wherefore they of the Kings councell suspecting that they were counterfet, (as in truth they were) they caused the Kings Attorney general, to frame an accusation against the Constable, for that he had beene a confederate and sauourer of D. Henry, when as the King was detained in Tordezilla, and of the disorders which after followed: by reason whereof his goods were seized on, for it did appeare that the letters were counterfet, by the confession of John Garcia of Guadalaraja the Constables Secretary, who betraying his Master, had himselfe counterfettered them, and sealed them with his seale at Toledo, for which crime he was executed at Vaileddolit. The King caused Gonçala Mexia to bee named Administrator of the Order of Saint Iames, whereof the Infant D. Henry, being in prison, was Master, and did aduertise the King of Arragon of his detention and the causes. The Constable and the Infant D. Catherina being retired to Valencia, they were well entertained by them that did gouerne those realmes: in the absence of D. Alphonso of Arragon, who was at Naples, whereas D. John King of Castile was so much discontented as he sent his Ambassadors into Italy to the K. of Arragon to complaine of this fact. About the end of this yeare 1422. King John had by Queene Mary his wife, a daughter borne at Ilesca, who was named D. Catherina: and about that time D. Sancho of Rojas Archbishop of Toledo, died at Alcalá de Henares, in whose place was substituted Don John of Contreras Deane of the same Church, and borne at Riixa. The Infanta D. Catherina was declared and sworne heire of the Realme of Castile, the yeare following 1423. at the Estate of Toledo, if the King her father should die without heires male: for such was the custome of Spaine. There the truce betwixt Castile and Portugal was renewed for twenty nine yeares, with a condition, that if hereafter the one should offer to make warre against the other, hee should giue him warning 18. moneths before: A sinceritie which is contemned in this age, whereas they seeke to surpriue one another by any secret and indirect means. This truce was proclaimed the court being at Auila.

Castile.

An. 1422.

D. Roy de Aragon the Constable charged with treason.

Death of the Archb. of Toledo.

Nnn.

And

And soone after the king Don John being at Vailedoiir, there came ambassadours from A D. Alphonso King of Arragon, to excuse the reception which had beene giuen at Valencia, to the Infanta D. Catherina, and the Constable, Don Ruis Lopes of Aualos : and to acquaint the king of Castile with the successe of the waits of Naples, whereas they king of Arragon was buied.

31
Arragon.

Infantesse
of Joane 2.
Queene of Naples.

This Prince who was famous not onely among all them that had reigned in Arragon, but in all the rest of Christendome had this occasion to vndertake the warre of Naples:
after the decease of king Ladislavus, his sister Joane the second, widow to the Duke of Ester-lic, hauing succeeded in the Realme, as shee was infamous, by reason of the familiarity which was more then did befit the greatnesse of a Queene, which she had with Pandolfello Alope, a Knight of Naples, being held to be one of the goodliest men of his time. Shee to couer their loose life, contracted marriage with James of Bourbon, Earle of Marche, a Prince of the bloud Royall of France, vpon condition that he should not intile himselfe king, nor should not meddle with the gouernement of the Realme, but as she pleased. The Earle being come to Naples, he soone discouered what past betwixt the Queene his wife, and Pandolfello, wherefore being moued with a iust disdain, hee caused the aduiterer to be slaine, and deprived the Queene of the gouernement, hauing punished her onely with words and reproches. The Queene dissembling her discontent against the Earle, watched a fit oportunitie to be reuenged: wherein she wrought so by her practices and intelligences, as he not onely recovered her liberty, but she put the Earle her husband into prison, who being afterwards freed by the intercession of Pope Martin, who was molested by the faction of Visims, the chiefe whereof was Braccio Fortebracci, hee made a strict league with this Queene, by the which she promised to ayde him with three thousand horse, and other things : but their friendship was soone dissolved : and Pope Martin to annoy Queene Joane, did inuest in the Realme of Naples, Lewis Duke of An-iou, called the third, who was sonne to Lewis the second, and of the Infanta D. Violant of Arragon, and declared Queene Joane fallen from it, and deprived thereof : wherefore Lewis began to league himselfe in Italy with many Princes and Potentates, namely, with the Commonweale of Genoua, who were mighty at sea, from whom he was ayded to D conquer the Realme of Naples, with thirteene galleies, whereof Baptist Fregefo was Generall.

Alphonso King
of Arragon,
leads an Armie into Corfica,
against the Genouois.

These things beeing come to the knowledge of King D. Alphonso, who was newly aduanced to the Crowne of Arragon, beeing young, and desirous of glorie, considering how much it might preiudice the Estate of Sicile, if the house of Aniou should settle it selfe againe at Naples, he thought he should greatly disappoint Lewis his destines, if he should make warre against the Genouois: wherefore hauing prepared an armie at sea, he came and landed in the Iland of Corfica, which was wholly in the power of that State, and vnder colour of the right which the kings of Arragon did pretend, by reason of ancient donations made vnto them by the Popes, of the two Ilands of Corfica & Sardinia: E at his first landing he tooke Calui, and then besieged Boniface, pressing in in such sort, as without speedie succors from Genoua it had beene taken, and the whole Iland. During this siege Queene Joane, who saw a great storme ready to fall vpon her, sent Anthony Caraffa vnto him, intreating him to vndertake the defence of her and her Realme, against Lewis of Aniou, the Pope and their allies, in requitall whereof the would adopt him for her sonne and successor in the Realme of Naples, and for an earnest-peny he would deliver him the two castles of Naples. King Alphonso was well pleased with these conditions, who to make this accord authenticke, sent Raymond of Perillos to Naples with 18. galleies, and 14. gallions, and D. Bernard of Centillas, and D. John of Moncado his ambalsadors, with authoritie and sufficient instructions, who agreed with Queene Joane in the Kings name, and received the above-named forts: and after the releefe of Boniface by the Genouois, whereas the king received some losse, he passed with the rest of his army into Sicile, and from thence to Naples, where the accords and adoption was confirmed, the Queene inuesting him then in the Dutchie of Calabria, as presumptiue heire of the Realme: but the peace betwixt the mother and the sonne was not lasting : wherefore the repenting

A repenting to haue adopted Alphonso, he dealing in her affaires, there fell out warre betwixt them: so as after many encounters, and variable successe, the Queene left Naples, and was forced to retire to Auerse, from whence she sent to call backe Lewis of Aniou, being then at Rome, who in the year 1423. came to Auerse, where hee was receiued with great ioy, and was adopted there by the Queene, and was made Duke of Calabria, and of Henry Master of Saint Iames, brother to the king D. Alphonso, and the retreat of D. Catherine his wife, with the Constable to Valencia, and of other Noblemen into di-uers parts of Arragon, whose goods D. John King of Castile had confisked, whereupon B grew many quarrels: by reason whereof the King D. Alphonso was forced to returne into Spain, leaving his brother D. Pedro at Naples, to make head against the Duke of Aniou, with James Cadore, and many Noblemen Italians, of his faction to assist him. Sayling along the coast of Prouence, he surprized Marceilles, a Towne belonging to the Duke of Aniou, being Earle of Prouence, the which he spoyled and burnt, carrying away for a precious Jewell the body of Leis sometimes Bishop of Tholouza, sonne to King Charles the Lame, being held a Saint. It is noted for a noble and religious act in this Prince, that at the taking of the towne hee would not suffer any iniurie to be done vnto the women that were retired into the Churches, nor any thing to be taken from them. It was taken in the night at a second assault: Alphonso being rich with spoiles landed at Valencia.

Marceilles sur-prized by the King of Arra-
gon.

C In the meane time in Castile they made the proceffe of all the fugitiues, and degraded
D. Ruis Lopes of Aualos, of his Estate and dignitie of Constable, deprived him of the gouernement of Murcia, and did confiscate all his lands and goods. He had enioyed Xodar, Nimena, the tower of Alaquin, Arcos, Arjone, Arjonilla, Figuiera and Colmenar, in the countie of Auila, and Osorno and Ribadeo in Galicia, and other places, which were all forfeited to the King, who gaue the office of Constable to Don Aluar de Luna, who was afterwards created Earle of Saint Stephen de Gormas, and receiued with great solemnities, Alphonso James Eniarado was made Gouernor of the frontier of Murcia, and his lands were distributed to others : so as the house of Aualos remained very poore in Castile.
The King decreed, that D. John of Tordezilla Bishop of Segobia, who had beene Superintendant of the treasor, in the time of the deceased King Henry, should be apprehended, to make him giue an account of his charge: but the bishop of Zamora who had this charge, shewed himselfe a friend, and suffred him to escape into Portugal, from whence he past to Valencia. About the end of this yeere 1423. D. Leonora king Johns 2. daughter was borne: as soone as he had intelligence that the king of Arragon was arrived at Valencia, he sent him an Ambassage, to congratuat his arrival, and to intreat him to send him D.
Cathrina the wife of D. Henry and the fugitiues of Castile, or else to chafe them out of his country: whereof the king D. Alphonso excused himselfe, as well to these Ambassadors of Castile, as by others whom he sent expressly to K. John, who intreated him for an enter-view, wherewith the king was willing, but such as were enriched with the constables spoils, disliked him, wherewith the king of Arragon was discontented, and afterwards more, E they refusing him to let him confer with the Queen of Castile his sister. In the yeere 1424.
the Infanta D. Catherina died at Madrigal, whereupon the King caused the Princeesse Leona-ra to be sworn for heire of those realms, in case he died without any issue male. In which yeere there also died at Pegniscola, Benedict, being 90. yeeres old; hauing held the Popedom 31. yeeres 2. months and 10. daies, from his election made at Avignon, and after that hee had bin depozed by the council of Constance, 7. yeeres and 4. months, his body was interred in Illuega, in vnhalloved ground (as they say): a man too violent in all his actions, obstinate and indomptable: of so strong a constitution of body, as they could not attribute the cause of his death but to poison, the which they found had bin giuen him in certaine sweet meats, by a Monke, called Thomas, set on by the Cardinal of Pila, who was sent into Spaine to that end. The crime being auerted, the Monke Thomas was taken and quartered, the Cardinal who remained at Torrofa fled, fearing that Don Roderigo and Don *Aluar de Luna Benedict*s Nephewes should reuenge his death vpon him.
After his decease the Cardinals which were of his faction, and were retired with him, to Pegniscola, would haue continued the Schisme, and entering into the Conclau

32
Castile.

D Aluar de Luna made constable of
Castile.

Don Alphonso
King of Arra-gon & Leonor
by a new Seditious.

1425.

Birth of the Infant Don
Henry of Castile

Nauarre.

Death of Charles King
of Nauarre.

Pampelona
united into one body.

with the accustomed ceremonies, they did choose a Chanon of Barcelona, named Gil A. Mugnos, borne at Teruel, whom they called Clement the eight, wherevnto Don Alphonso King of Arragon consented, beeing in bad termes with Pope Martin at Rome. This Clement created Cardinals, gaue Benefices and Dispensations, and did all acts of a Pope as well as Martin, and by him the Church of Rome continued diuided.

In the year one thousand foure hundred twenty and five, D. Henry sonne to D. Iohn King of Castile, was borne at Vailledolit, who succeeded him in the Realmes. Hee was baptized by Don Aluaro of Osorno Bishop of Cuenca, the God-fathers were Aluar de Luna, the Constable, and Don Alphonso Henriquez Admirall of Castile; and the Godmothers Donna Eluira Porto-carrero the Constables wife, and Donna Joane of Mendoza B. the Admirals: and within few moneths after this Infant was sworne Prince and heire of the realmes in that Towne, in the Monasterie of Saint Pablo, the Infant Don Ihon of Arragon, as Lord of Lara, being the first that swore him fealtie and future homage.

The offences betwixt the Kings of Castile and Arragon were such, as they attended nothing but open warre, not onely in these two realmes, but also in Nauarre, the succed for thereof, Don Iohn, being much bound to either countrie: wherefore the King Don Charles vsed all meanes possible to reconcile them. Notwithstanding the King Don Alphonso sent a letter open, by a Secretarie of his, to the Infant D. Iohn his brother, to come into Arragon to assist at a Parliament which hee had called, vpon paine to bee declared a rebell. Don Iohn not onely obtained leaue to goe to the King his Brother, but hee C had also full authoritie to make an accord with him. When he came to the Court of Arragon at Tarassoue, hee had newes of the death of the King of Nauarre, his father in lawe, which happened suddenly at Olite, in September, beeing busie about his build- ings. A Prince much lamented both of his subiects and strangers, for his vertues and milde dispositions: who besides other remarkable things, fetled a perpetuall peace in Pampelone, the which before his time had beene deuided into three regions or coun- tries, called Bourg, Peuplement, and Nauarriere, gouerned by three diuers Iudges, with feuerall Iurisdiccions, so as there oftentimes fell out great contentions and mu- tinies among them, the which hee did abolish, reducing all the Inhabitants of the Towne vnder one Iustice, taking away for euer the factious names of parts and quar- ters, placing one Gouvernour or Magistrat oute them, with ten Iurates to assist him. Hee was threecore and foure yeares old when hee dyed, and had reigned thirtie nine yeares and nine moneths. His body was laide in the Cathedrall Church at Pampelone, with Queene Leonora his wife.

Don Iohn, first of that name, thirty three King of Nauarre.

Don Iohn his sonne in lawe succeeded him, in the right of Donna Blanche his wife, the Crowne of Nauarre passing from the house of France, to the house of Castile and Arragon, for want of heires male, the which continued not long: Hee was about eight and twenty yeares old when hee began to raigne in Nauarre: when as King Charles dyed, hee was in the campe of King Don Alphonso, who being incensed against the King of Castile, for his brother Don Henries imprisonment, was gone to Arrames, and had his forces on the confines of Arragon and Nauarre, about Tarassoue, the which hee caused to enter into Nauarre, as soone as the newes came of the Kings death. After which they vsed this ceremonie: Don Iohn, who should succede, kept F his chamber three dayes, after which hee went to horse-back, accompanied with the King his brother, and causing the Standard of Nauarre to be carried before him, by a Knight called Nugno Pace, and a Herald to march before with a coate of the armes of Nauarre, crying out aloud, Nauarre, Nauarre, for the King Don Iohn and Donna Blanche his wife: going often about the field, the Trumpets sounding, and being followed

Ceremonie in taking possession of the realmes of
Nauarre.

A followed by many Knights and Gentlemen of Castile and Arragon, on foote, but there was not one Nauarrois, for the Nobilitie of Nauarre had done the like at Olite, for the Queene Donna Blanche their naturall Princeesse, and not without a misterie.

Whilst that these things past vpon the frontiers, the King of Castile hauing made a great assembly at Palence, and gathered together much money, in the end hee was aduised to free Don Henry out of prison, beeing the cause of all this tumult, and for the which the King of Arragon had taken Arrames. The King of Castile would first haue the King of Arragon deliarmed, which difficulties being debated, it was agreed that Don Henry should bee deliuered in the hands of Don Iohn King of Nauarre, who should bee answerable vntill that the King of Arragon his brother had laide downe B Arrames. Wherefore Pero Garcia of Herrera, Marshall of Castile, followed by five hun- dred men at Arrames, came to the Castle of Mora, whereas the Infant Don Henry was deliuered vnto him, hee swearing to conduct him and deliuer him into the hands of Don Iohn King of Nauarre.

34.
Castile.

Don Henry brother to the Kings of Arra-gon and Nau-arre, deliue-red.

The two Kings Brethren being come to Saint Vincent of Nauarre, hearing that they brought Don Henry, they returned, and going to meete him, the King Don Iohn recei- ued him at Agreda, and then ledde him to Tarassoue, whereas the King of Arragon embraced him with great content. Beeing there, Don Lewis de Guzman Maister of Calatraua, and Don Ihon of Soto maior, Maister of Alcantara, sent to offer him their friendship and meanes, against them of the Kings Councell, and against his Mig- C nions, which had beene opposite against him. The which the King of Castile did not doubt, but sent Fernande of Robles, and Doctor Periagnez of his Councell, to Calcanta Towne of Nauarre, to treat with the King Don Ihon touching his returne into Castile to end that which remained to doe touching Don Henry, the which hee yielded vnto, and came to the King of Castile beeing at Roa, the which hee kindly, and hauing beene there some dayes together, without speaking of any affaires, the King of Castile went to Segobia, and hee of Nauarre to Medina del Campo. Soone after, in the beginning of the yeare one thousand foure hundred twenty and six, hee came to Toro to the King of Castile, where hee gaue him an accompt of that which hee had negotiated with the King of Arragon his Brother, wherewith the D King seemed to bee very well satisfied. The Estates were held there, by the which the King was let vnderstand of the superfluous charge of a thousand Lances which hee led for his garde, the which cost eight Millions of Maraudis, wherupon they were redu- ced to a hundred, vnder the Constables charge, who was in such authoritie and fauour, as every man feared him openly, or hated him secretly. The Estates requiring also that the Kings excessiue gifts should bee cut off, it was ordained, that all that had or should be giuen by the King before the age of twenty five yeares, should bee reputed voides: Many other good decrees were made, but they lasted little.

Estates at Toro, and their remouance.

The King of Nauarre staid in Castile, where hee had great possessions, and was much fauoured, yea for his sake many Noblemen Castilians were aduanced to Offices in the E Kings house, as Ruy Dias of Mendoza was made Lord Steward, and Ihon Aluaro of Ga- dillio Standard-bearer. As for himselfe hee was wholly gouerned by Diego Games of Sandoval, whom hee made Earle of Castro Xeris, a place which was of his patrimonie. There were three Leagues beginning in Court, one for the king of Nauarre, the second for Henry his brother, and the third for the Constable Don Aluar de Luna, who increa- sed dayly in authoritie. The king spent the rest of that yeare one thousand foure hundred twenty and sixe, at Fuente del Sauco, at Vailledolit & at Zamora, where hee caused some pettie mutiniers and rebels to bee punished by Iustice, whilst that great men, which troubled the realme, liued in all assurance.

In the beginning of the yeare one thousand foure hundred twenty and seauen, the In- fant Don Henry and his wife Donna Catherina came from Valencia to Ocagne, where the harred burst forth betwixt the King of Nauarre, and the Constable Don Aluar de Luna being much fauoured and highly supported by the fauor of the King, who desired also to entertaine the King of Nauarre. Don Henry aduancing towards the Court, came to Vailledolit, accompanied by the Maisters of Calatraua and Alcantara, ceremony of the vnction, and others accustomed in such cases. There were present the Ambassadors of forraigne Princes, the Bishops of Calaoorra, Tarrasone and Bayone, with many Noblemen and Knights of Nauarre, Castile and Arragon. At this coronation there was againe sworn and confirmed the matrimoniall conuentions betwixt the King D. Iohn, and D. Blanche the heire, made in the time of King Charles her father.

Nnn 3

and

The Estate of the Moores of Granado, during these tumults in Castile, had bene quiet, by prorogation of the truce with the King of Castile, and his counsell in consideration of a certaine tribute, which was paid by King Ioseph vntill his death, the which was in the yeere 1423. being very old, and hauing enioyed the realme fiftene yeeres.

Mahumet the Left-handed, called Aben-Azar the fourteenth King of Granado.

Moortes.

After Ioseph reigned his sonne Mahumet, called Aben-Azar, the Scepter of Granado continuing by him in the succession of Ferrachen, who was Gouvernor of Malaga. This King who was left-handed of his person, had also a sinister reigne: for he was thrice chased from his throne, after great miseries, and twice restored. These seditious changes were ordinary, and haue alwayes bene amongst the Arabians, who are inconstant, treacherous, rauishing and ambitious, if there be any liuing. King Mahumet did maintain the truce, and entertaine himselfe in the fauour and friendship of the King of Castile, for some yeeres, and in like manner with Muley Aben Ferriz King of Tunes: but he could not get the loue of his owne subiects. In the beginning of his reigne, he made a Knight whose name was Ioseph, of the family of Aben Sarrares (which was great and much esteemed amongst that nation) Alguazil Major or chiefe Marshall of Granado. The troubles of Castile, whereas many Noblemen, yea D. Henry Maister of Saint Iames, banded against their King, was a president for the Moores, who conspired against this Left-handed Mahumet, in fauour of another of the same name, surnamed the Little: so as they made him King, and forced Mahumet to flee to Tunes, to King Muley Aben Ferriz his friend: in which exile he was followed by about five hundred Moores of his faction, as well horse as foote, who were all well entertained, and afterwards assisted to recover the lost Kingdome in Spaine.

Mahumet Aben-Azar expelled.

Mahumet the Little, the fiftenth King of Granado.

Mahumet called the Little, reigned then about the yeere 1427. the eleuenth of that name, and fiftenth King of the Moores at Granado. The surname of Little, was given him, to distinguish him from his predecessor, who reigned before him. This King entering by tyranny, thought that rigour and cruelty was the best means to maintaine him in his Estate, as commonly tyrants doe; wherefore he beganne to persecute the Officers, friends and partisans of his predecessor (whom he had expelled) by imprisonments, banishments, confiscations and cruell deaths, whereas many were ruined, and many also escaped, amongst the which was the Alguazil Ioseph Aben Sarraz, who fled to Lorca a towne in the realme of Murcia, submitting himselfe to the mercy of the King of Castile, and of the Gouvernor of Lorca, who was Lope Alphonso of Lorca, who afterwards led him to court, and presented him to the King D. Iohn at Illesca, a towne belonging to the Archbishop of Toledo, seated betwixt Madrid and Toledo. The King gaue good entertainment to this Moore, from whom he vnderstood the resolutions of Granado, Lope Alphonso being truchman betwixt them. The King being intreated by Ioseph Aben Sarraz, to aide his maister to recover his realme, hee yielded vnto it, and hauing giuen him many presents, and shewed him all fauour, he sent him with Lope Alphonso in Ambassage to Tunes, to let King Mahumet vnderstand how much hee desired to doe him good, and to exhort him of Tunes, to aide and fauour his guest. The businesse succeeded so well, as Mahumet Aben Azar, receiuing money, and all other kinde of aide, from the King of Tunes, he past from Tunes to Oran, and then crossing the sea, hee came and landed at Vera in Granado, whose coming being divulged through the country, the towne thereabouts, yea that of Almeri, opened their gates vnto him. Mahumet the Little, who held the Realme, resolved to make head against him, thinking that his forces were yet but weak, sending about eight hundred horse and some foote before to encounter him, most of which ioyned with Mahumet Aben Azar, who pursuing his good fortune, entred with the like facility into Guadix, yea hee was receiued into the city of Granado: so as Mahumet the Little, his competitor was forced to shut and fortifie himselfe, in the Alhambra of Granado; where he was presently beleeged, Aben Azar lodging his campe at a place called Alcabisgar, neere to the fort of Alhambra: to whose obedience there presently yielded the townes of Malaga, Gibraltar, Ronde, and in the end the whole realme: wherefore Mahumet the Little, being hated and abandoned of all men, and fainting, hee was forced, and taken in the castle of Alhambra, with his children, where hee ended his daies miserably, and his children were kept prisoners. Thus Mahumet Aben Azar recovered the realme, two yeeres after he had bene expelled, in the yeere 1429. and of the Arabians 812.

Tyrants care not to be hated, so they be feared.

Mahumet Aben-Azar recovered his realme of Granado.

Mahumet the younger taken and put to death. An. 1429.

The King of Nauarre at his departure out of Castile, left Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Castro Xeris, his familiar friend there, who presently cauled the townes of Pegnassell, Portillo and Castro Xeris to bee repaired, which made D. Iohn King of Castile conceiue, that there was some enterprise in hand to his preiudice, and that the King of Nauarre was gone away discontented with him. In which opinion he was confirmed by the newes which he receiued, that they leauied both foote and horse in Nauarre and Arragon, the which they couered with a pretext to send them into France, to succour King Charles against the English: Moreouer that hauing treated an accord and pacification betwixt Castile, Nauarre and Arragon, although the King of Nauarre had signed it, yet he of Arragon would not heare of it. For these causes the King of Castile sent first Francis of Soria his confessor, and Peter of Bocanegra Deane of Cuenca, Ambassadors into Nauarre, to know what the King of Nauarres intention was, and to complaine of the Earle of Castros doings, and of other things, whereof hee was aduertised, which were practised against him, and the Estate of Castile. To whom answer was made, that they did not practise any thing against him, and that the souldiers which were leauied, were not to bee sent into Castile, and if they should, it were not for any thing that might offend the King their maister.

But in effect D. Iohn King of Nauarre, hee of Arragon, and D. Henry their brother, were conspired against the government of Castile, and they had an intent to trouble the State, to pull downe them that were great, and to aduance others, who were kept vnder or chased away; about all the King of Nauarre was furiously ialous of the Constables D. Aluaro de Luna's greatnesse, and other things that were managed in that court contrary to his liking: and as he was of a turbulent spirit, hee did not cease to seeke occasion of quarrels, entertaining his brother D. Alphonso King of Arragon in the hatred which he had conceiued against the king of Castile, for the imprisonment of D. Henry. These two Princes being thus disposed, all things prepared to warre, the which did much trouble the Queene Donna Blanche, and the Estates of Nauarre, who intreated him that hee would forbear, and enioy his realme in peace, and those goodly Estates which hee had in Castile, whereas the Queenes dowry was assigned, & the reuenues of many Lordships affected to Prince Charles his sonne: but they were not heard, and much lesse a second Ambassage from the King of Castile, in which were D. Alphonso Tenorio, Notary or Secretary of the realme of Toledo, and Doctor Fernand Gonzales of Auila counsellor of State to the King of Castile, with two deputies of townes: wherefore the King of Castile made preparation, and leauied men of all sides, to resist the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and he rooke a new oth of fealty of all the Noblemen of his realme, especially of the Infant D. Henry.

Ceremony taken possession of by the King of Nauarre.

Here.

Death of D.
Alphonso Henriques Admiral of Castile.

VVarres of the Castilian against Arra-gon and Na-
uarre.

Army of the King of Cas-
tile.

Hereupon the King of Nauarre sent to excuse himselfe, and to require an interview of A the King of Castile, but his excuses were not credited, yet the interview was granted. At this time there being dead D. Alphonso Henriques high Admiral of Castile, base sonne to D. Frederic maister of Saint Iames and grand-child to King D. Alphonso the twelfth, there was substituted in his place his sonne D. Frederic: his body was interred at Saint Clara in Palence, founded by him. The Kings troups being ready to march, the constable went towards the frontier of Arragon with two hundred lances, and the King led the rest of his forces towards Pegnasil, whereas the Earle of Castro and the Infant D. Pedro, brother to the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre, had forsaken themselves. Their other brother, D. Henry, fought in the meane time to leauy men about Toledo, but the Inhabitantes hindred him. The King sommoned D. Pedro and the Earle to yeeld vp the towne of Pegnasil, vpon paine to be proclaimed traitors, and to be so condemned; so as the Earle yeelded vp the towne, vpon honorable conditions, and amongst others, not to be bound to carry armes against the King of Nauarre. The castile which was commanded by Gonsalo Gomes of Sumel, held some daies. On the other side the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre, entred into Castile, with two thousand five hundred men at armes, and some few soote, whose entrie the constable could not stop, with whom Don Henry ioyned with two hundred and twenty horse, against the promises made. They ranne neere vnto Cogollado, and beeing come to Xadraque, the Constable following them, they presented him battail, the which he would not accept, for Peter Cardinal of Foix sonne to Archimbad, and Mary Queene of Arragon, sister to the King of Castile, came by great iourneies out of Arragon, and put themselves betwixt them, making an entrance to an accord, which was, that the two Kings should returne into their realmes, and that the constable and other noblemen of the King of Castiles army, should intreat him to restore vnto the King of Nauarre, and to the Infant D. Henry their lands: for as soone as the army of Arragon and Nauarre had entred into Castile, the King did cause all that the house of Arragon did hold in Castile, to be seized on. By this meanes the armies parted, and the two brethren Kings came to Huerta and Hariza, in Arragon, and the Infant D. Henry to Ocagne; but the indignation of D. John King of Castile, was so great, as he did not regard, that which had bene capitulated, but sent to all his subiects, that they should hold the Arragonois and Nauarrois for enemies, and make violent warre against them, and committing himselfe in person to the campe at Piquera, hee resolved to goe and charge his enemies in their fort at Hariza. Queene Mary and the Cardinall Felix returned againe to the King of Castile, propounding many meanes of peace, but all in vaine: wherevpon they returned, very much discontented. D. Frederic of Castile Earle of Arjone, was apprehended in the army, vpon suspicion that he fauored the Arragonois: war being proclaimed throughout all Castile, the inhabitants of the country of Biscay, Guipulcoa, Alaua, and Rioja, entred suddenly into Nauarre, where they committed infinit spoiles. Thus an innocent Realme suffered for a nocent King, whom they had earnestly intreated to entertaine peace with Castile.

The King of Castiles army being strong and ready to enter into Arragon, hee sent word to D. Alphonso King of Arragon, that he would spare his country, if hee would forsake the king of Nauarre, the which hee refused: wherevpon the constable of Castile being followed by five hundred horse, marcht to Montreal, tooke it, spoiled Ceitia, and finding no resistance, returned to the army, which consisted of 7000. men at armes, 3600. genets or light horse, and 60000. foot, with the which King John entred into Arragon, where he tooke and burnt the towne of Hariza, but hee attempted not the castle, which was very strong: this was all the exploit was done with that mighty army: for the two brethren Kings not presenting themselves to battail, and victuals fayling for so great an army, he was forced to retire into Castile, towards Medina Celi, from whence he sent for the gard of the frontier, D. Pedro of Velasco his Lord Chamberlain, with 600. lances to lie with them in Alfaro, Calaoarra, or Logroño: against whom the King of Nauarre did fortifie Tudela, Viana and La Garde.

In the meane time D. Henry and D. Pedro brethren to the kings, ouerran the country of Eftremadura, hauing to encounter them Don Roderigo Alanfo Pimentel, Earle of Benauent

A. Benauent, who finding himselfe weake, had the Constable sent to him, with sufficient forces. The king being returned to Pegnasil, wrought so as the captain of the castle yeelded it vnto him, fearing to be put in the ranke of rebels and traitors to their Prince. The king of Arragon slept not, but employing his forces (his enemy being farre off) hee tooke in Castile, in the country of Soria, Deca, and the castles of Ciria, Boronia and Bozmediano, carrying away an infinite number of prisoners, about forty thousand charges of corne, and great store of cattle and other spoiles. The king of Castile was much moued with these newes, and gaue all the lands which the king of Nauarre, his sonne D. Charles, the Queene Donna Blanche, and the Infant D. Henry held in Castile, to D. Henry his sonne, Prince of the Asturias, and he sent D. Pedro of Velasco to make most violent warres in Nauarre: and being resolved to enter himselfe in person the next yeere with a great army, he called the Estates to Burgos, to haue money, demanding a hundred millions of Marauidis to entertaine it sixe monethes: and for that their was some difficulty to draw together so great a summe he borrowed of rich men, and of churches, all their plate and silver vessel, and sent it to be coined at Seuille. During the assembly at Burgos, there came Ambassadors from the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, which were, Peter of Peralta, the Abbot of Roncevaux, Doctor John of Lezana, D. John of Luna, and Berenguel of Bardaxi, to treat of a peace, to whom answer was made, that the king of Castile would send Ambassadors expressly to giue them a conuenient answer: and to them of Nauarre, shewing particularly in the name of Queene Blanche and of her sonne D. Charles, that they had not done any thing, for the which they should seize their rents and pensions, yea the Queenes dowry, who had neuer consented to these quarrels, the like answer was made. The Ambassadors of Castile were D. Sancho of Rojas Bishop of Alborga, Pero Lope of Ayala Marshall of the kings body, and D. Fernando Gonçales of Auila, of the Kings council. Who being come into Nauarre, made great complaints of D. John King of Nauarre, accusing him of great faults, wherein they did also comprehend the Queene, saying, that she was a confederate in the warre, seeing that she had sold her jewels to furnish her husband with money; and made other demonstrations of an enemy. From Nauarre they past into Arragon, where they gaue as little hope of peace: wherefore King D. Alphonso sent Ambassadors to Rome, to Pope Martin, to complaine D of the King of Castile, who refused all honest meanes of an accord. The Constable being come into Extremadura, he made the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro retire towards Albuquerque, vpon the frontier of Portugal, whether they sent great store of cattle, hoping they should serue to victual them, for the which the King of Portugal was glad to excuse himselfe to the King of Castile, who complained. The Constable tooke Trugillo, and hauing seized also of the castle by the meanes of one of the captains of the garrison, he deliuered it into the Kings hands: hee attempted Montanches, and hauing taken D. Roderigo Alphonso Pimentel Earle of Benauent with him, he came and camped before Albuquerque, an impregnable fort, but hee desired to draw the Infants to fight Knight to Knight, but they would not vouchsafe to accept it: wherefore he retired his army towards Pierrebonne, from whence hauing aduertised the King of the Estate of his affaires, he came presently to the campe, and then the castle of Montanches yeelded, by intelligence which the constable had with the captain. The Prouinces and townes of Castile did furnish the King with five and forty millions of Marauidis for the warre: and there was an Ambassage sent to Rome to Pope Martin to free the King of Castile of the imputations which were laied vpon him by him of Arragon. The King of Nauarre making thew to enter into Castile by Briones, D. Pedro of Velasco went to field, with all the troups he could gather together, hauing drawne out of Biscay three thousand men, led by John of Abendagno, Ordengo Garcia Arcega, Gonsalo Gomes of Burton, and his sonne Gomes Gonsalo of Muxica, Lord of the house of Muxica, and finding no man to make head against him hee went to beseege the towne of Saint Vincent, the which was taken by assault, but whilst the Biscains were busie at the pillage, not caring to keepe any order, nor martiall discipline, entring confusedly into the houses, without any guards vpon the approaches: being entred into the houses, the Inhabitantes who were armed, and retired into the castles, seeing this confused multitude in their towne, they brake

exploits of the King of Arra-
gon.

Biscains de-fected by them whom they had vanquished for want of discipline.

brake out upon them, and encountering Gomes Gonçales in the street, with a small company they took him, having slain most of his souldiers: whose father Gonsalo Gomes of Buitron, running to succour him, being as ill accompanied as his sonne, was slain with some of his men, and could not be releued. D. Pedro of Velasco, seeing that the castle could not be forced with a long and painefull siege, he set fire on the suburbs, and of some houses in the towne, and then returned to Haro, carrying with him many of his Knights and good souldiers wounded. The towne of Saint Vincent, for the losse it sustained then, and for the good seruice it did in the warre betwixt Nauarre and Castile, obtained many priuiledges and freedoms for the inhabitants thereof. He among the Nauarrois which did most harme to the Castilians, was a Knight called Sancho of Londogno the kings Marthall, issued from the house of Londogno, neere to Ordugna, a member of Biscay: he running one day into Rioja, was surprized by the ambushes which Diego Peres Sarmiento captaine of Bal tide had layed for him, who carried him prisoner to that fort: but this losse was soone recompensed by Ruy Dias of Mendoça the bald, borne at Seuille, and yet he did serue the king of Nauarre faithfully, and was gone south of Tudela with foure hundred horse and five hundred foot, ouer-running the countrie of Ageda, against whom D. Inigo Lopez of Mendoça Lord of Hita and Buitrago (who kept a garrison there for the king of Castile) falling forth, and coming to fight in the field of Arauiana, he was there vanquished, with the death and imprisonment of many Castilians. At that time the Infanta D. Izabella of Portugall, daughter to the king D. John, was married to Philip Duke of Bourgondie, Earle of Flanders, and Lord of many other Seigneries, who had two wives without any children. Of this marriage was born Charles whose daughter and only heire was afterwards married to Maximilian of Austria. The very day that this marriage betwixt D. Philip, and the Infanta Izabella was celebrated with great pompe at Bruges, the Order of Bourgondie of the golden fleece was instituted by him, the tenth year after his coming to it, vpon a vow which he had made to go and make warre against the Infidels of Syria, and to conquer the countrie of Iuriebut his great affaires made his vow fruitlesse. His Order had for head and patron (I know not by what diuinity) S. Andrew, and the slemnitie of the Order was to be celebrated every year three dayes together, whose knights should be the first day attired in red, in signe that heauen is purchased by the effusion of blood and by Martyrdome: the second day in blacke, representing mourning for the dead: and the third in white, in honour of the purity of the Virgin Mary: and they should carry for a marke of their knight-hood, a chaine made in fashion of fuzils, with a rams skin & fleece hanging at it: a deuise taken, not from the Pagan Iafon, but from the faithfull Gedeon, as some say. The first knights of this Order were foure and twenty in number, of the Noblest and most renowned of his Estates of Burgondy, Flanders and the Netherlands: wherewith since many Princes and great Noblemen of Spaine and other places, haue held themselves much honoured. This was that Duke Philip, who to reuenge the death of his father Iohn, murdered at Montcaut-Yonne by the Dauphin Charles, drew the English into France, to the ruine of his naturall country, as you may read at large in the History of France.

1430.

The yeere 1430. being come, D. Iohn King of Castile prepared to make warre against the King of Nauarre, against whom he had the greatest spleene; and forgetting no kinde of rigour, he resolved to deprime him and his of all the lands which they held in Castile, without euer hoping to re-enter into them: and therefore he gaue to D. Gutierre of Toledo Bishop of Palence, and afterwards Archbishop of Toledo, the towne of Alua de Tormes, to D. Pedro Manrique Governour of Leon, the towne of Paredes de Naua: to D. Rodrigo Alphonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, Majorga: to the Marthall Luigo Ortiz of Estuniga, Cerezo: he would haue giuen to Fernand Diaz of Toledo, five hundred vassals in the lands which did belong to D. Iohn King of Nauarre, but hee refused them: He gaue to D. Frederic of Arragon Earle of Luna, bafe sonne to Martin King of Sicile, Villalon and Cuellar: to Queene Mary his wife Olmedo; and other places to other Knights. The king being come to field, before the fort of Albuquerque, hee caused the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro to be summoned, to yeeld him the place, promising that the Infants should be herd in Iustice, and that all the rest should haue a generall pardon:

giuing

Towne of Saint Vincent obtains new priuiledges.

Institution of the Order of the golden fleece.

Ceremonies of the order of the Fleece.

39.
King of Nauarre
lands in Castile confiscated and gi-uen away.

A giuing the Infants thirty daies time to resolu, and the rest forty: but their answers were arrows and bullets, with great daunger to the Kings person, who being in a great rage at their obstinacy, he caused D. Henries proceesse to be made, and gaue the administrati- on of the maiesty of Saint Lames to the constable, diuiding his lands to diuers Knights, very prodigally, as hee had done the King of Nauarre. In the meane time D. Diego of Estuniga, or Suniga, Bishop of Calaoarra, and Calpado and his vncler D. Pedro of Estuniga, Earle of Ledesma, Iustice Major of Castile, and another D. Diego of Estuniga his cousin, with the forces of the frontier, tooke the towne of La Garde in Nauarre, by Scalado, being two leagues from Logroño, the castle held out, and cost many good mens liues, on either side, and being fortified with new succors, sent from the King of Nauarre, they made furious and bloody sallies vpon their enemies, who held the towne, but in the end they were so prest by the Bishop and the Earle of Ledesma, as they did capitulate to yeeld, if by a day prefixt they were not releued by the King their Lord; during the which there should be a cessation of armes; and if there came any succors, the beleaged should bee bound to aduertise the Bishop that hee might doe as hee pleased. This accord being made, the captaine of the place beleaged made a mine vnder ground, by the which he drew into the castle a great number of souldiers, which the King of Nauarre had sent him, vpon the aduertisement of the capitulation. The time being ready to expire, the captaine aduertised the Bishop, that the succors were arrived, and at that instant he opened the mine in the midst of the place, from whence issued great numbers of souldiers of Nauarre, who beganne to charge the Castilians, which caused a great confusion amongst them, and did much trouble the Bishop; yet being made with this treachery, they put themselves in defence, and repulst the Nauarrois into the castle ditch, having lost many good men of either side. This hauing not succeeded so happily as the Nauarrois expected & their viduals sayling them, by little and little they abandoned the fort: So La Garde both towne and castle remained in the King of Castiles power. The Queene D. Leonora mother to the Princes of Arragon, sorrowful for so many ruines, being old, and wholly giuen to deuotion, lyuing at Medina del Campo, in her Monastery of St. Iohn de las Duegnas, was not exempt from the discomforts of this warre for the King of Castile suspecting that she fauored her children, caused her to be shut vp in Santa Clara of Tordisillas, and put garrisons in her houses of Montalban, Vireyna, and Tyedra: and would haue done as much at Castro Xeris, and Saldagne, but the Earle found meanes to exempt himselfe, and yet the King was not very well pleased with him. The court being in Astudillo, there came an Ambassador from Iohn Earle of Foix, father to Gaston, who afterwards married Leonora the heire of Nauarre, who besought the King of Castile, that he would bee pleased that the Earle his master might employ himselfe, to make a peace betwixt him and the Kings of Nauar and Arragon: to whom the King of Castile answered, that he did thanke the Earle of Foix for his good will, but there was no meanes of a peace. On the other side the Earle of Armagnac, an enemy to the King of Nauarre and the Earle of Foix, hauing giuen all the hindrance hee could towards Gascony, that no succors should passe out of France to the King of Nauarre, for the which he had bene at great charge, hee sent to intreat the King of Castile, to re-boueise him, to whom were paid ten thousand florins of gold. This yeere D. Pedro of Velasco, Generall vpon the frontier of Nauarre, was created Earle of Haro. The King Zamora, had taken the castle of Alua de Lita: and passing afterwards to Osma, which was the Rendezvous for the army of Castile, there came vnto him a Franciscan friar, confessor to Donna Blanch Queene of Nauarre, whom they called Archbishop of Tyre: Peter of Perault chiefe Steward to the King of Nauarre, and Kamis Deane of Tudelo, counsellor to the King, Ambassadors for the King of Nauarre; and for him of Arragon, D. Dominike Bishop of Lerida D. Raymond of Perillos, and William of Vigue, Knights, sent to treat and conclude a peace, at what price soeuer.

The difficulties were very great, and they were forced to send backe some of the Ambassadors to the two brethren Kings, and in the meane time the army marched: but the reasons, and propositions of the Ambassadors were in the end admitted, and a truce

O o o

Garde taken by the Casti-lans.

Leonora Queene of Arragon released by the King of Castile.

Truce betwixt
the King of Castile and the King of Arragon and Navarre.

Death of the Duke of Arragón.

truce was accorded at Majano, for five yeeres, both by sea and land, betwixt the King of Castile, and D. Henry his sonne Prince of Asturias, on the one part; and D. Alphonso King of Arragon, D. John King of Navarre, D. Blanche his wife, and D. Charles Prince of Viana, their sonne, on the other part: into which truce there entred for the King of Castile, the Earle of Armaignac; and for the two Kings brethren, the Earle of Foix. It was also agreed, that D. Godfrey of Navarre, Earle of Cortes, brother in law to King John, who had followed the party of Castile, should not be troubled nor molested in the perception of his goods, nor otherwise. This Knight staid long in Castile, and did the King good service in his warres against the Moores: the like assurance was graunted in regard of the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro: and to iudge of the differences during the truce, there were seven persons named for Navarre and Arragon, and seven for Castile, whose seat should be at Tarassone and Agreda, alternatively. Thus ended the warre betwixt Castile, Navarre and Arragon, to the great prejudice of the towne of Cardie, in Navarre. During these treaties, D. Frederic Duke of Arjone died a prisoner at Pegnasil, whose Dutchy and Estates were given to D. Frederic of Arragon, Earle of Luna. There were also restored unto Queen Leonora her houses & castles, and she was set liberty, and freed from the Monastery of Santa Clara of Tordeillas, at the intreaty of the King of Portugal, to whom the King of Castile sent the proceedings against her four sonnes, the King and Infants of Arragon, and their offences, to the end that the might see what cause he had to confiscate their lands. The same yeere King John of Castile, was solicited to make a league of friendship with the English, but he excused himselfe touching the league, being loath to doe any thing to the prejudice of the King and Realme of France, an ancient friend and confederate to the crowne of Castile, sending backe the Ambassadors with a discreet and friendly answer: and soone after having sent D. Sancho of Rojas Bishop of Astorgo to the King of England, he concluded a truce betwixt Castile and England for one yeere. At the same time being fought vnto by the King of Granada to continue peace and friendship betwixt them, the said Moorish King offered him all the force of Granada to serve him at his will, he gaue him thanks for the offer, and by an Ambassador which hee sent expressely to Granada, to conclude some truce, he deliuered the Estate of that realme. The Ambassador, who was Lewis Gonzales of Luna, Governour of Cordoua, found King Mahomet averse to those conditions, which the King of Castile demanded: wherefore he returned without any conclusion, reporting how little assurance there was of the Moores faith; which made the King of Castile to thinke vpon the affaires of that frontier, and to man it well, sending some presents to the King of Tunes, by Lopes Alphonso of Lorca, his Ambassador, with complaints against the King of Granada, intreating him that he would not succor him in the warre which he was resolved to make against him.

Moores.

Mahomet Aben-Azar King of Granada, was, as we have said, restored to his regal seat, in the yeere 1429. two yeeres after his exile, who shewed himselfe thankfull to the King of Castile, for the fauour and aide which he had giuen him in the recovery of his realme, offering sundry Ambassages vnto him, with offers and thanks: but refusing this yeere to pay the tribute and pensions to the King of Castile, which he demanded, of friends they became enemies, and the warre was begunne by Diego of Riueira, Governour of the frontier, who running through the plaine of Granada, tooke about two hundred horse, and towards Ronda. D. Fernando Aluares of Toledo, Lord of Val de Corneja, did great spoiles vpon the Moores. The King of Castile meaning to imploy D. Diego Games of Sandoval, Earle of Castro Xeris, in this warre, hee sent for him to court; but the Earle distrusting the King, retired to Briones a place belonging to Navarre, from whence hee sent to make his excuse, but it was not allowed. Wherevpon the King caused his proceesse to be made, and by a sentence giuen at Zamora hee was condemned by contumacy, as a rebell, his castile of Castro Xeris was confisked, and deliuered by the Captaine thereof to John of Luxan, Ramir of Tamojo, and to Doctor Fernando Diaz of Toledo, whom the King had sent thither. The Earle hauing many great men, and of the Kings fauorites which hated him, durst neuer more appeare in his presence.

Before

Castro Xeris
confisked.

A Before he entred into Granada, Don John King of Castile, keeping his Court at Medina del Campo, was solicited by the Ambassadors of Portugal, to make a perpetuall peace betwixt the two realmes, wherevnto hee consented, and it was sworne in the yeare one thousand foure hundred thirty and one, by the two Kings, and their eldest sonnes, and next successors to the Crowne, Don Henry of Castile Prince of the Asturias, and Don Edward of Portugal. This peace did end all quarrels betwixt Portugal and Castile, and continued fortie three yeeres, to the great good of both realmes. This yeere dyed Don Nugno Aluares Pereira, first Constable of Portugal, by vertue whereof Don John, from being Maister of Auiz, came to the royall dignity. This great personage towards the end of his dayes, posselt with a superfluous deuotion, left the affaires of the world, whereas hee mought haue serued God well, and beene profitable to the common-weale, retyring himselfe into the Monasterie of the Carmelites in the city of Lisbon, which he had built, and there he liued very solitarie and simply almost nine yeeres. The Portugals speake wonders of the almes-deeds, fastings, prayers, and other workes tending to piety of this Noble man, as well in his Monastical life, as before. Besides the Carmelites at Lisbon, he caused S. Georges Church to be built in the place of battaile at Aljubarote, that of Saint Mary of Villa viciosa; the great Chappell of the religious of Saint Augustin in the same place, the Church of Saint Mary de Monte, Saint Mary of Portel, and Saint Mary of Sonfel; and others. Before hee retired himselfe, hee distributed his goods after this manner. To Don Diego his grand-child, borne of Donna C. Beatrice his daughter, and of Don Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, her husband, hee gaue the Earldome of Oren, with all the lands which hee held in Extremadura, at Lisbon and thereabouts. To Don Ferdinand his other grand-child, borne of the aboue named, heire after his father of the Duchie of Bragance, and who succeeded in the Earldome of Arroyolos, with all the rents hee had on this side Tayo and Vdiana. To Don Isabella sister to his two grand-children, married to the Infant D. John Maister of Saint James of Portugal, the Kings Sonne, who was the second Constable of that realme, hee gaue the lands of Lonsada Payua and Tendanes, and the Towne of Almada, with the rents of Loule: and to his familiar vassalls and household seruants, he diuided his money, horres, armes, apparrell and moueables. And thus naked, and discharged of all temporal goods D. hee entred into the Monasterie, where hee was posselt with so strong an opinion to merite heauen by austeritie of life, trauell, and affliction of his body, as hee resolved to separate himselfe more from the company of men, and to liue alone in desarts, if the King Don John and Prince Edward his Sonne, had not diuerted him, shewing how much it would hurt the estimation which all men had of him, and of his wisdom: wherefore hee contained himselfe in his Monasterie vntill his death, which was in the yeare 1431. and 71. of his age.

40
Portugal.

Peace betwixt Portugal and Castile.

Religious built during of the Constable Don
Nugno Aluares
Pereira.

E

The end of the eighteenth Booke.

O o o . 2.

THE

F

THE NINETEENTH BOOKE of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

1. VV Arrē betwixt the Castellans and Moores: seditions among the Princes Moores.
2. Troubles in Castile.
3. D. Edward the first of that name, and 11. King of Portugal: his disposition: title of Prince of Portugal first usurped by the eldest &c.
4. Pursuit of the warre of Naples, after the death of Quene Ioane the second, by the Kings of Arragon.
5. Combats in Castile and else-where: warre of Granada.
6. Peace betwixt the Kings of Castile, Nauarre and Arragon, Alliance betwixt them by the marriage of Prince Henry of Castile with D. Blanch Infanta of Nauarre.
7. Vnfortunatē warre of the Portugals in Affrike.
8. Quarrell betwixt the Princes of Castile and the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna, with his Infolencies.
9. D. Iohn of Pacheco mignon to Prince Henry of Castile comes to bee the greatest man of the Realme.
10. Marriage of Prince Henry and the Infanta of Nauarre: the Princes disthabilitie to consummate the marriage. New troubles against the King.
11. D. Alphonso the fifth of that name and 12. King of Portugal, gouerned by his mother, and the troubles which ensued.
12. Continuance of the quarrels and factions in the court of Castile.
13. Success of the warre of Naples, made by D. Alphonso the fifth King of Naples.
14. Second marriage of D. Iohn King of Nauarre, with D. Ioane Henriques. Continuance of the troubles.
15. Proceedings against the King of Nauarre, and them of his faction: Seazure of their goods in Castile. Battaille of Omedo, lost by the King of Nauarre. Condemnation of his confederats.
16. The Constable D. Aluaro de Luna restored to credit: beginning of the Kings hatred against him.
17. The Constables furious enterprises against the Nobility.
18. Moores incited by the King of Nauarre against Castile: warre against Granada.
19. Excesse of D. Bertrand of Guevara.
20. Exploits of warre betwixt the Nauarrois and Castellans.
21. Seditions at Toledo: Concussons and rebellions of D. Pedro Sarmiento.
22. Birth of D. Isabella, who was Queene of Castile and Arragon.

- A 23. Entry of the Castilian army into Nauarre, and their retreat through the modesty of D. Charles Prince of Nauarre; the vertues and disposition of this prince.
24. Hatred betwixt Prince Charles of Nauarre, and his mother in law D. Ioane.
25. Enterprises against the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna: his imprisonment, and miserable end.
26. Last acts of D. Iohn of Castile and his death.
27. Troubles, emulations, and death of Princes in the house of Portugal: alliance of the Emperor Frederic in that familie by marriage. Descovery of the country in Affrike by the Portugals.

The Kings mentioned in this nineteenth Booke, are of PORTUGAL.

11. D. Edward. 1.
12. D. Alphonso. 5.

He affaires of Castile being some-what pacified, with the Christian Princes of Spaine, made way for the warre which King Iohn had resolved against the Moores of Granada, notwithstanding that according to the discipline brought in of late, hee had alwaies a spleene against them which had presumed to resist him by armes: and therefore vpon euery occasion he fell into new troubles within his realme: for he had mignons by whom hee was wholly gouerned, who made him iecalous of many great men, and by their importune reports did estrange them, and in the end made them ill affected to their Prince. For besides that which we haue related in the precedent Booke, of the Earle of Castro Xeris, D. Iohn of Soto Major, maister of Alcantara, being sent for by the King, he neuer durst with assurance present himselfe before him, nor come to court, what promise soeuer he made him, neither could Don Guttiere Gomes of Toledo, Bishop of Palence, his great friend perswade him: Yet did he performe whatsoeuer they commanded him, that did concerne the Kings seruice, and the obedience which hee ought him, excepting alwaies that he would not be bound to come to court against his will. And moreouer, notwithstanding any peace concluded betwixt Castile and Nauarre and Arragon, the King D. Iohn did still entertaine occasions of quarrels, and maintained the Earle of Armaignac, a great enemy to the King of Nauarre, furnishing him with money, to be ready he might be as a thorne in his foote, to annoy him towards France, so as hee might not attempt any thing against Castile. And for a greater prooffe of his hatred against this Prince, not satisfied to haue taken his lands from him in Castile, he caused his castle of Pegnafil to be razed.

The country of Galicia being in a manner all in armes through the quarrels of Nuẽno Freire of Andrada, and his subjects, the King sent and pacified them then leaving D. Pedro Manriques for Gouernor general in Castile, he went in person towards Cordoba: for Roderigo of Pereira Gouernor of Gaporla having entered rashly with three hundred Hatred betwixt Courtiers cannot be reconciled, but by the ruine of one party.

Castilians defeated by the Moors.

red horse, and one thousand foot into the country of Granado, had beene defeated and A most of his men cut in peeces by the Moores: but this losse was at the same instant recou-penced by the taking of the towne and castile of Ximena by scaldou, through the diligence of the Marshal Garcia of Herrera: wherefore the King hearing that the warre began to grow hot, he made halt to approach nere vnto that frontier: being vpon the way, & passing by Ciudad Real, there was a great earthquake, ouer a great part of the country; for enen the city of Granado was shaken therewith. The King being come to Cordoua, he sent the constable D. Aluaro de Luna with three thousand horse, who foraged the territories of Illora, Trajara, Loxa, Archidona and other places in the champion country of Granado, and then he returned towards Eccia. B

Moore.

In the meane time a knight, called Gilaire, who was by birth a christian, and had beene taken being twueight yeers old, and instructed in the law of Mahumet, came to the King at Cordoua, letting him vnderstand that there was a Knight of the Moores, descended from King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, called the Vermeil, the ninth King of Granado, hee who had beene slaine by D. Pedro King of Castile, called Ioseph Aben Almas, who was in no good termes with Mahumet Aben Azar then reigning, and desired some fit occasion to reuolt from him; wherefore if the King would enter into the plaine of Granado, hee did assure him, that this Moore would come and ioine presently with his army and reuolt the whole realme in his fauor. This businesse being propounded in council, they were of opinion, that King John should aduance with his forces, which were 80000, C fighting men. On the other side Mahumet Aben Azar assembled all his forces of Granado, which amounted to two hundred thousand foote, and fise thousand horse, with the which hee came to make head against King Johns army, with whom Ioseph Aben Almas the Moore, had ioined, with some troupes of horse. The armies being neere, about the mountaine of Eluira, there were many skirmishes: so as on a Sunday the first day of Iuly, both the armies were drawne forth to battaile, in the which the Christians had the victory. This was called the battaile of Figure, for that it was fought in a country full of figs, and is very famous in Spaine; for there died about ten thousand Moores, King
John remaying so maister of the field, as he spoiled and burnt all round about the city of Granado, and yet the Moores durst neuer come without their walles to defend their D houles and fields. The King of Castile had greater enterprises, but by the counsell and importunity of the Constable, he retired: they say the King of Granado had corrupted him with good store of gold, which he sent him in a present of figs & dried rayfins, which made him so presse the Kings retreat: who being returned to Cordoua, and hauing gi-uen order for the safety of the frontier, he came to Toledo, and from thence to Escalona, where he was wonderfully feasted by the constable. After which the Estates were called at Medina del Campo, at the which the peace with Portugal was confirmed, and there was granted to the King of Castile by the deputies of the Prouinces, 45 millions of Marauidis, for the charge and continuance of the warre against the Moores of Granado whereof Ioseph Aben Almas intriplot himselfe King, by the aduice of D. John King of Cas- E tile, who did assist and fauor him all hee could to dispossesse Mahumet Aben Azar: and therefore he sent commandement to the captaines and Gouernors of the frontier, to assist him in any thing hee should vndertake. This Moore was so well followed in a short time by a good number of Knights of his sect which hated King Mahumet, as hauing sur-prized Montefrio, he made it his residence and storehouse for the warre, the which he did manage with wisdom, vsour and iudgement: and being aided and fauored by Don Lewis of Guzman, maister of Calarraua, D. Diego of Riuera, and other Noblemen and Christian captaines, within few daies hee rooke the townes of Cambil, Alicum, Illora, Ronda, Ilnajar, Archidona, Caparobonella, Setenil, Turon, Hardales, Castellar and Loxa, all which yielded willingly, except the castile of Loxa, which held for King Mahumet, into F the which the Algazil Ioseph Aben Sarraz had put a good garrison: but loone after he being dead, it was yielded to Ioseph Aben Almas, through the fauour of a route the which hee gaue to Mahumets troupes: which victorie was of such consequence, as the citie of Granado opened her gates: so as King Mahumet being out of hope to bee able to resist, going out of Alhambra, with that which was most deere and precious,

Battaile of Figure
where the Moors were defeated.

Defeat of King Aben Almas and the taking of Granado, by Ioseph Aben Almas.

A precious, heeled with him the two sonnes of Mahumet the little, who had beene vanquished and slaine by him, with a Sister to Captaine Coxo his Neece, and so fled to Malaga.
By this euent Ioseph Aben Almas remained King of Granado, in the beginning of the yeare 1432. Mahumet hauing reigned since his returne three yeares, and it was in the 815. yeare of the Arabians raigne.

1432.

Ioseph Aben Almas, the sixteenth King of Granado.

B

THIS new King Ioseph being receiued of the whole realme without contradiction, the Crowne of Granado returned by him into the family of Mahumet Aben Alha- mar, or the Vermeil, who presently made himselfe vassall to the King of Castile, by whose fauour hee had gotten the realme, promising a certaine tribute of money and other things, whereof there were letters past, sealed with his seale of Gold. He did aduertise King John of the successe of this warre, and did attribute all the happinesse thereof to God and him: informing him moreouer of the siege which hee went to lay before Malaga, wherein the King did assist him, as he had done before, commanding D. Diego of Ribera, Gouernor of that frontier, to furnish him with men, victuals, and all sorts of aide in that enterprife. Whilest these things were acting, there came a Geneuois to Court, an Arn-bassador from Muley Aben Ferriz, King of Tunes, who had charge to intreate King John to spare King Mahumet Aben Azar, and to finde some expedient for peace: but finding the realme already posselt by Ioseph, hee complained in the name of the King of Tunes his maister, of the misfortune of Mahumet his Kinsman: to whom the King of Castile answered pertinently, saying, that he had made warre against him for good and iust reasons, for that hee had beene dayly informed that hee had secret Intelligence with the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon his enemies. This Ambassador staid some dayes in the Court of Castile, being then at Vaileddolit. The raigne of Ioseph Aben Almas lasted not about fixe moneths: for being old and broken, hee dyed that same yeare 1432. whereby D Mahumet Aben Azar came to raigne againe the third time, who being aduertised of the death of his Competitor, tooke all fit courses to make the Granadins obey him againe, wherein the King of Castile did not oppose himselfe, it may be moued at the request of the King of Tunes, by his Ambassador, who returned well satisfied into Affrick, being accompanied by Lope Alphonso of Lorca, sent by the King of Castile, that hee might take with the King of Tunes some friendly expedient for peace, betwixt Castile and Granado: and in the meane time there was a short truce granted to Mahumet, who made a Knight called Audilbar, who had beene faithfull vnto him, his Alguzail Maior, in the place of the deceased Ioseph Aben Sarraz.

Mahumet Ab-ben Azar re-couers the realme of Granado.

E The warre of Granado being ended after this manner: there fell out new occasions of trouble in the Court of Castile by the Kings credulitie, who willingly gaue eare to reports, giuing him to vnderstanding that the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon had secret Intelligences with D. Pedro Fernandes of Velasco, Earle of Haro, Gutierre Gomes of Toledo, Bishop of Palence, and his Nephew D. Fernando Aluarez of Toledo, with other great men of Castile: wherevpon he staid some, imprisoned others, and many seeking to escape, were brought back to Court, being then at Zamorra, and others escaped: so as it was full of amazement and tumult. Of the number of the prisoners were the aboue-named D. Fernando Aluarez of Toledo, Bishop of Palenza, and the Earle of Haro, who had the Court giuen him for prison, putting in caution. The Bishop was committed to F the castile of Muzientes, and D. Fernando his Nephew to that of Vruengna. D. Ferdinand of Velasco the Earles brother fled away, and being come into his brothers country, hee assured himselfe of the towne and places of strength there. Don Inigo Lopes of Mendeça, Lord of Hita and Buitrago, hearing what had beene done in Court, and how his friends and kinsmen were persecuted, he fortified himselfe in Hita. There was no matter found to charge and conuict these Noblemen, so as they were deliuered one after

2
Castile.
Troubles in Castile by false reports.

after an other, but the Bishop and his Nephew were the last of all. Don Iohn of Soto. A Maior, Maister of Alcantara remained, who being in disgrace with the King, and afterwards reconciled, yet he fell againe into dislike, so as Don Henry Infant of Portugal was enforced to imploy himselfe to restore him to grace. The King gaue charge to Doctor Franc to end all differences with him, who conferring with Diego of Manjares Treasurer of Alcantara, they ended all matters, so as the Maister had reason to be contented: but hee shewed himselfe so indiscreet, as hee reiected all that they had concluded: and notwithstanding that the Doctor sought to satisfie him in all his demands, yet he was so transported with his passions, as contemning the King, and all them that treated in his name, he called D. Henry and D. Pedro Infant of Arragon, remaining at Albuquerque to deliuer them Alcantara, and the sorts which depended. The Maister going from Alcantara to Valencia, before he had gone two leagues, he had a conceit that hee should not be safe in that towne; wherefore he returned to Albuquerque, to the Infant D. Henry: And for that he feared to be surprized in the towne, he desired to lodge in the castle, whether also Doctor Franc was led prisoner. Whereupon it was given out, that the Infant Don Henry kept the Maister of Alcantara prisoner in the castle of Albuquerque: wherewith Gustiere of Soto Maior, great Commander of Alcantara, nephew to the Maister, being much discontented, he staid the Infant Don Pedro prisoner at Alcantara, the whole people consenting thereunto. Don Frederic Admirall of Castile being aduertised of these things, hee went post to Alcantara, with all his horsemen, C to the end this prisoner might be deliuered vnto him, to conduct him vnto the King, but the Commander would not yeeld him: The Admirall with him to keepe him in safe guard, promising him a great recompence in the Kings name, and from thence hee went and spoiled the country about Albuquerque.

The detention of the Infant Don Pedro, did much trouble Don Henry his brother, who caused the Maister to goe to field, to let the world know that hee was no prisoner: but for all this the Commander would not release Don Pedro: for the King tempting the couetousnesse and ambition of this man, promised to make him master of Alcantara in his Vncles place: so as it appeared to all men, that in retaining Don Pedro, hee had more hope to aduance him selfe, then charitie to his Vncle, who indeed was deprivied of his Maistership, the Commander aduanced vnto it, and the Inhabitants of Alcantara, for their forwardnesse in the taking of the Infant, were endowed with great priuiledges. Don Henry seeing his affaires in very bad estate, fearing they should vie his brother vnworthily, he had recourse vnto the King of Portugal, to mediate his peace with the King, and his brothers deliuey: by whose meanes an accord was made with this condition, that the fort of Albuquerque, & all others that the Infants did hold, should be deliuered into the Kings hands, and they deprivied of all their lands in Castile.

These things happened in the yeare 1432. when as King Iohn gaue the title of a City to the towne of Victoria, the chief in the prouince of Alaua. About the end of this yeare there fell such abundance of Snow in Nauarre and Arragon, as the townes and boroughs were in a manner besieged, the Snow continuing forty dayes together, so as they could not go from one place to another: and the long continuance thereof made many beasts, yea the most sauage, and birds of all sorts, to come familiarly into their houses, being prest with hunger, and suffer themselves to be taken, as if they had put off their natural wildnesse, and were become tame, a preface of future miseries.

The truce betwixt the King of Castile, and Mahumet Aben Azar King of Granado being expired, in the yeare 1433. there were new supplies of men sent vnto the frontiers of Andalusia, vnder the command of Don Fernand Aluares of Toledo, Lord of Valdecomeja, who tooke Benamaruel and Bencalema from the Moores: and the Estates of Castile were held at Madrid, where they treated to continue this holy warre.

This yeare D. Iohn King of Portugal, dyed in the Castell of Lisbone, a Prince full of yeares, leaving his realme in peace, and a happy memory of his gouernment, hee was sequenty seauen yeares old when hee dyed, and had reigned forty nine yeares. His body was layed in the Cathedrall Church at Lisbone, and afterwards buried in the royall Nephew betrays his vncle through ambition.

Infants of Arragon loose all their lands in castile.

Admirable Snow in Nauarre & Arragon.

An. 1433.

Portugal. Death of Don Iohn King of Portugal.

A royal Monasterie of S. Mary of the battell. Before he left this world, he saw a son borne of D. Edward his sonne and successor of the Realme, and of Donna Leonora of Arragon his wife, who was named Don Alphonso, and reigned after the father.

D. Edward the first of that name, and II. King of Portugal.

B On Edward was presently after proclaymed king in the pallace of Alcaçaua, in the presence of his breethren D. Henry Master of the Order of Christ, and duke of Visco, the Infant Don Iohn, Master of Saint Iames of Portugal, and Constable of the realm, Don Pedro of Meneses Earle of Viana, the bishop of Eborra and many other Prelates and Knights: whereas the bishop of Eborra did celebrate the ceremonie. They say, that the Noblemen being assembled to celebrate this act, a Lew. Phisitian to the new king, and verily learned in astrologie, came and presented himself vnto the assembly, beseeching them to deferre it vntill noone, with assurance that he had obserued some bad constellation, threatening that Kings raigne, that should be receiued at that houre. The king (who was better instructed, touching these prognostications) would haue them proceed without delay, wherefore the Iew replied, that the king should raigne little, and with great trouble. He was one and forty yeares old when he began to raigne, and had bene married fye yeares before, too late for a Prince that was heire to a great Estate. His wife Donna Leonora was daughter to King Fernand, who of Duke of Pegnafiel had bene made king of Arragon, by election of the arbitrators deputed by the Estates of the countrie, borne of Donna Leonora of Albuquerque, who was issued of the bloud royall of Castile and Portugal: for Donna Beatrice her mother was daughter to the king Don Pedro, and sister to Don Iohn king of Portugal, borne of the faire and happie Agnes of Castro, and the father was Don Sancho sonne to Don Alphonso king of Castile, the last. Of this Princeesse of Arragon king Edward had Don Alphonso, his eldest, and successor to the Crowne of Portugal, borne in the pallace of Sintra, in the yeare 1432. then D. Fernand his second sonne this yeare 1433, who was Duke of Visco, and married Donna Beatrice his cousin germaine, daughter to D. Iohn, Master of S. Iames, and the third Constable of Portugal: of which marriage was borne Donna Leonora Queene of Portugal, wife to Don Iohn the second: and also D. Isabella Dutchesse of Bragance, and Don Dominicke Duke of Visco, and Don Mannuel who came to raigne in Portugal, from whome is descended the last King Don Sebastian by the masculine line. Besides these two sonnes, Donna Leonora brought King Edward, her husband, foure daughters, D. Philip who dyed being but eleuen yeares old, stricken with the plague at Lisbon, D. Leonora married to the Emperour Fredericke the third, father and mother to the Emperour Maximilian of Aultria, the first of that name, the third was D. Catherina, who was betrothed to Don Charles Prince of Viana, heire of Nauar, and afterwards to Edward the fourth King of England, and yet married neither of them, but dyed a mayd: the fourth was D. Isabelle, a very faire Princeesse, who married with Don Henry the fourth, king of Castile. This was the issue of King Edward, who is numbred for the eleuenth king of Portugal, vnfornate at the least in this, that during his raigne the plague neuer ceased to consume his people: yet he was a louer of iustice, for the administration wherof he deputed euery three moneths one of his breethren, an Earle and a Bishop, commanding them to do Iustice to euery man, and to suppress all excessse: he was sober in speech, and in his manner of liuing, as much as any Prince of his time: he did limit the expences of his Wardrobe to fye hundred doubloons of gold by the yere, he caused both gold and silver to be coyned of a good Standard. His residence at his first comming to the crowne was at Belin: there his brother the Infant D. Pedro the Traueller, duke of Coimbra, came and kist his hands, and sware vnto him fealty and homage.

The first yeare of his raigne, and the second of the age of his sonne Don Alphonso, hee caused Genealogie of Portugal.

Title of Prince
first usurped by the eldest sonne of Portu-gall.

Statly summate of King John of Portugal.

Modesty of the Infant D. Pedro, and his other vertues.

caused him to be sworne the lawfull heire of the Crowne, by the assembled at Sintra, and A would haue him called Prince, a title first vsurped by him in Portugall, following the example of the eldest of other Christian kings, his neighbors in Spaine. After this solemnity, he caused the bodie of the king his father to be transported, whose obsequies were the most royall and statly that euer were made for any king of Portugall. For two monthes space that lay in the cathedrall Church, there were thirtie Masses sayd every day, and an aniuersarie once a weeke, the bodie being accompanied, and watched euery night by a great number of clerkes and religious men, singing diuers suffrages for the soule of the deceased. The bodie being to be transported, it was layed vpon an high bed, garnished with many banners and trophees, and it was watched in the night by the Infant Don Pedro, being accompanied by a great number of gentlemen, Don Fernand Arch-bishop of Braga the kings nephew, doing the seruice, who the next day slung Masse in his pontificall habit, with great state & ceremonie, after which and the Sermon made by Friar Giles Lobo the kings Confessor, the bodie was layed vpon a chariot, and conducted by the new street, where there was another Sermon made, & a third in S. Domingo: after which it was accompanied with a great procession out of the towne, and conducted by the king and the Princes to the Monasterie of S. Denis of Odiuella, distant a league and an halfe from Lisbon, where it rested that night, where as the Infant Don Henry, Master of the Order of Christ, with his commanders watched: from thence it was carried to Villafraanca, where they made another pause: the Infant Don John Master of Saint Iames, with his Commanders, watching that night: Passing on the next day with the like pompe, they came to Arcoentre; where it rested againe, and the bodie was watched by the Infant D. Fernand Master of Auiz, with his comandars. Continuing the next day, they came to Alcouaga, where they made the fourth pause, and there watched D. Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, brother to the Infants aboue-named, accompanied by his two sonnes, Don Diego Earle of Oren, and Marquis of Valencia, and Don Fernand Earle of Arroyolos, and Marquis of Villavitiola, in all which places there was Euen-song and virgils sayd at night when it arrived, and in the morning before it parted Masse being sung pontifically by the abbot of Alcouaga, and the Bishops of Ebora and la Garde, in all places: in the end they came to the Hermitage of Saint George in the place of battell, with the like procession, pompe and ceremonie, as they came out of Lisbon. The Hermitage came forth to meet it, and did accompanie it to the royall Monasterie of the battell, where it was receiued, and layd in a royall sepulchre, with great and sollemne Masses, and other ceremonies, and very rich offerings, where as aboue all others the pietie and filiall duty of the Infant D. Pedro, was remarkable, in which good and kind offices hee continued towards king Edward his brother, in the gouernment of the affaires of the realm committed vnto him.

This Prince is much commended by the Portugals for his modestie, affirming that he would neuer suffer any one to kisse his hand, nor to speake to him kneeling, nor to vie any other tearmes of submission accustomed to great men: Hee loued learning and learned men greatly, and himselfe did write some Treaties of the gouernment of Princes, and made some traductions out of the Latine tongue into the vulgar Portugall, not without learning and iudgement: He had a particular deuotion to Michael the arch-angell, as he was instructed by the Diuines of that age, wherefore he carried a ballance for his deuice, and was a great builder of Temples and holy places: He caused Saint Michael of Penela, and Auero to be built: and in the same towne he was the founder of the Monasterie of Piety of the preaching Friars, and of the church of Tentubel: and of the hospitall of Saint Eloy: he made a collegiall Monasterie, as it is at this present. Besides which buildings, hee caused the Estates to be built in the city of Lisbon, to lodge Courtiers, to ease the inhabitants of that troublesome, and many times preiudiciall subiection. This Prince was husband to Donna Izabella of Arragon, daughter to Don James Earle of Virgel, and of D. Izabella Infanta of Arragon, daughter to Don Pedro the fourth of that name. Of D. James, I say, who thinking to raigne in Arragon after the decess of D. Martin, rebelled against the determination of the arbitrators, who had chosen Don Fernand of Castile for King, the which cost him his libertie, and estates, goods, and dignities, whereof being deprived

A deprived, he dyed a prisoner. The Infant Don Pedro had by this Ladie Donna Izabella, Don Pedro who was third Constable of Portugall, who in the warres which the Catelans had against Don John king of Nauarre, heire to his brother Don Alphonso King of Arragon, he was chosen King of Arragon, and dyed in that warre, with that title. More-ouer he had Don John future king of Cypres, husband to Donna Izabella, whome Don Alphonso the fifth of that name, her coulin germaine married: a princesse hauing her deu-otion and hope directed to Saint Iohn the Euangelist, in whose honor shee caused the Monasterie at Lisbon to be built, dedicated to him on the toppe of Euxobregas. With these two sonnes he had D. Philippe, who liued a religious woman in the Monasterie of Odiuella, and was so giuen to studie, as she translated into the Portugall tongue, a worke
B of Laurence Iustinians Patriarke of Venice and of Aquileia, founder of the Order of S. George of Alaga, moreouer, Don James and Donna Beatrice, who were retired after their fathers decess, by Donna Izabella, Dutchesse of Bourgondie, their aunt. Don James was advanced to spirituall liuings, afterwards made a Cardinall, and Arch-bishop of Lisbon, and Donna Beatrice was married to the Lord of Rauestein, nephew to the Duke of Bourgondie. This Cardinall dyed a Virgin, as they say, at Florence, where he was buried, in the time of Pius the second.

Cardinall dyed
a virgin.

In the beginning of the yeare 1431. there had beene a generall councill called, the which was continued by Pope Eugenius Successor to Martin the fifth, in the citie of Bas-
C fill, this yeare 1433. but afterwards the fathers were diuided, and the Pope himselfe, finding the councill not pleyable to his affections, transferred it to Ferrara, and from thence to Florence. In this councill of Basfill, the Fathers being assembled, they were spectatours of a combat betwixt a gentleman of a Portugall race, but borne in Castile, called John de Merle, and Henry of Ruestan a knight of Bourgondie, who fought on foot, and the Bourgondian was vanquished. The same de Merle had a little before fought a combat on horsebacke, with the like happinesse, in the citie of Arras against Peter of Brece-mont, Lord of Charny, in the presence of D. Philip.

King Edward hauing finished his fathers funerals, and all solemnities, oaths, reception of fealtie and homage, and other accustomed duties, at the first comming of Kings, hee D assembled the Estates of his Realme at S. Iren, in the yeare 1434. to consult concerning the gouernment thereof: from thence there was an ambassador sent to the councill of Basfill, which was D. Diego Earle of Oren, being accompanied with many learned men and Prelates of Portugall: and then the warre against the Moores was propounded, after the example of Kings his Predecessors: It was also held conuenient to continue that which King John had begun in Affricke: for the execution whereof he obtained a Croisado from the apostolike Sea of Rome, by the meanes of the Earle of Oren, who brought the Bull into Portugall.

An. 1434.

The King of Castile also sent many of his Prelates and Diuines to the Councill, during the which Don Alphonso Carrillo, Bishop of Siguença and Cardinall, dyed, whose E Bishopricke was giuen to his Nephew, carrying the same name, who in time came to be Arch-bishop of Toledo. The ambassadors for the king of Castile at this councill were D. Aluaro of Osorno, Bishop of Cuenca, D. John de Sylua Lord of Cyfuentes, Standard-bearer to the king, and Doctor Alphonso of Carthagea, Deane of S. James and Segobia, sonne to D. Pablo Bishop of Burgos, which Bishopricke Don Alphonso obtayned in his life time, he being preferred to be Patriarke of Aquileia. There falling out a great question in the councill betwixt the ambassadors of England and Castile for the precedence, this Doctor Don Alphonso of Carthagea did so well defend the preheminnence of the croune of Castile, and gaue such pertinent reasons for the dignity and prerogatiue ther-of, as the fathers gaue the precedence to the ambassador of Castile, wherein the Doctor F was held to haue done great seruice to his countrie of Spaine, whereof he himselfe hath made a treatise: notwithstanding Raphael Polateran, in his third booke, and last chapter, sayth, That in the time of D. Fernand the 5. this cause was pleaded againe at Rome, and ended in fauor of the king of England, who had giuen sentence by prouision, without any great examination of the cause.

Returning to the politike affaires of Castile, the King D. John being aduertised that Don

Controuersi betwixt England and Castile for precedencie.

D. Frederick of Arragon Earle of Luna & Prior of Calile.
 Don Fredrick of Arragon, Earle of Luna, would haue seized vpon the city of Seuille, A he caused him to be apprehended at Medina del campo, and to be carried to the Castle of Bracuelos, which is neere vnto Olmedo, where he ended his dayes, and many of his confederates were put to death, who for that cause were brought to Medina del campo. The warre begun in Granada, continued with variable successe, for after the taking of Benamaruel, by Don Diego of Ribera, Lord of Val de Corneja, Gouernor of the frontier of Andalusia, attempting the towne of Alora, hee had bene slaine by the Inhabitants, and them that defended it: after whose death, the King gaue the gouernement to D. Pedro Alfan his sonne, a young man but fiftene yeares old. Don Roderigo Manriquez somwhat to ease this losse, tooke the towne of Huescar by scalado, and the castle afterwards by fight: for the recouerie of which place, there were enterprises and encounters betwix the Christians and the Moores, all that yeare, 1434. in the which dyed D. Iohn of Contreras, Arch-bishop of Toledo, and Primat of Spaine: and to him succceeded D. Iohn of Cerezuela, brother by the mothers side to the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna.

About that time the king of Castile gaue vnto the Earle of Armagnac (who had alwaies shewed himself his great friend and partizan in the wars against Nauar) the towns of Cangas and Tinco, with the title of an Earle: and there arriued at Madrid ambassadors from Charles the 7. the French king, to renew the league betwixt France and Castile, to whom the king gaue audience in great state, and sitting on a high throne he gaue them a good and friendly answer, who after much feasting, were sent home well satisfied: there they did see a tame lyon lying at the kings feet, a thing which is not ordinarie.

Death of Don Henry of Villena.

Defeat of the Master of Alcantara by the Moors.

The same yeare dyed D. Henry of Villena, the kings vnkle, son to D. Pedro, and nephew or grand-child to D. Alphonso of Arragon, who had bene Marquis of Villena, and first Constable of Castile: a Prince abusing learning, wherein he had bene bred, giuing himselfe to infamous Magicke arts, whereof he had written many treatises, the which by the kings commandement, and by the censure of Friar Lopes of Barientos, then Schoole-master to D. Henry Prince of the Asturias, were for the most part burnt. The king being in pilgrimage at Guadalupe, D. Gutierrez of Soto maior, the new Master of Alcantara, being entred into the Moores countrie with 800. horse and 400. foot, was surprized and compassed in by the Moores in a streight passage, so as there hardly escaped an hundred of his whole troupe. This crosse shold haue admonished him of the bad office he had done his vnkle, and the Infant D. Pedro: the which although they would couer with a colour of the kings seruice, yet was it a plotted treason: D. Fernand Aluarez of Toledo, Lord of Val de Corneja, had bin also in danger, if he had not speedily retired from Huelma, which hee sought to force, hauing failed to take it by scalado: for a great number of Moores marched to fight with him, and hee had not sufficient forces to resist them. Hauing retrayed with his men to Iacn, he entred by Guadix, scoured the country, and was sharply encountered by the Moores, who notwithstanding were vanquished: D. Fernand Aluarez spoiling two leagues round about Guadix.

4
Arragon.

The truce betwixt Castile, Nauarre and Arragon beeing expired in the yeare 1435. E there came ambassadors to the court of Castile, from the Queenes of Arragon and Nauar, to beseech the king for a propagation of the truce, in the absence of their husbands, which the king granted them for some moneths: the which was the sooner obtained by their sending of D. Iohn de Luna, the Constables cousin, who gouerned the king his Master. These two kings, brethren, were gone into Italy, to pursue the realme of Naples, where matters succeeded as followeth: After that king D. Alphonso (being called back into Spaine, for matters which concerned him nere, namely, for the imprisonment of his brother D. Henry) had left Naples, Queen Ioane and her adopted sonne Lewis of Anjou, had some time of breathing, and means to recouer the city of Naples, and other places of the realme: there only remained Iohn Anthony of Vrsins, Prince of Tarentum, a partizan to D. Alphonso, who made head against Lewis duke of Anjou: the duke making war in Calabria, was surprized with a burning fever, whereof he died at Cosenza, in the yere 1434 not leauing any children: and the same yeare dyed Queen Ioane also, leauing by her will (whether it were true or counterfeit) Rene of Anjou, duke of Lorraine and Bar, brother to Lewis deceased, heire of the realme of Naples, who was at that time a prisoner in the hands

Death of Ioane Queen of Nauar, and her will.

A hands of Philip Duke of Bourgondie, by reason of the warre betwixt the French and the English: for whose libertie the Gouernors of the Realm, chosen after the Queenes death, sent ambassadors into France: but on the other side those that were affected to the house of Arragon, as the Prince of Tarentum, Iohn Anthony of Marzan Duke of Sella, Christopher Gasetan, Earle of Fondy, and Roger his brother, with other Noblemen and knights which held Capua, called backe King Alphonso, who a little before was come into Sicily, hauing led the Queene D. Maria his wife, Regent in Arragon, and had led his brethren with him. D. Iohn king of Nauarre, who had left the gouernement to D. Blanche his wife, Queene proprietarie of the Realme, D. Henry and D. Pedro, who being dispossessed of all they held in Castile, had retired themselves vnder the fauor of the kings their brethren, with them, and many Noblemen and Knights, as well Spaniards, as Sicilians. King Alphonso past into the Realme of Naples, and came and landed at Gayete, in which place were besides the Inhabitants, and other souldiers of the countie 300. Geneuois, vnder the command of Francis Spinola of Genoua, sent by Philippe Maria Angelo, Duke of Milan, vnder whose protection the common-weale of Genoua was at that time, and who held the partie of René Duke of Anjou. The besieged seeing themselves preft, aduertised the Duke of their extremity, and what need they had of succors: whereupon he presently gaue order to prepare an armie at Genoua, of the which Blaise Araxero was General, beeing accompanied by Elisa Spinola, James Lustinian, Galis Lomelin, and other famous Captaines & expert at sea, who directed their course towards the Iland of Ponce, whereof King Alphonso, who was before Gayete, beeing aduertised, hauing nineteen great ships, and eleuen galleies, he left onely few to continue the seage, and resolved to go in person with the rest to encounter the enemy: but he must first pacifie a question which was growne betwixt the King of Nauar, for the generall conduct of the armie, with his brother D. Henry, either of them aspiring to haue it, moued with zeale to ayde their brother.

Army sent to Genoua for Gayete.

Hauing set sayle, Don Pedro hauing charge of the galleies, the Kings and the Infants eury one apart, well appointed, came to encounter the Geneuois armie, the which did consist of twelue great ships, three galleies, one galeasse, and a foist. Being in fight, and within a league and a halfe one of another, the Geneuois seemed as if they would not fight: the kings army kept it selfe together till noone, striving to get the wind, that they might fight with more aduantage: In the meane time the galleies of Arragon discovered the enemies armie, which approached neere vnto them, finding that they had left three great ships behind, as it were for a reward. Before they came to ioyn the Generall of the Geneuois armie, sent a trumpet in a boate to let the king of Arragon vnderstand, that their intent was not to hurt him, but they had onely put to sea to draw out of Gayete, their souldiers, citizens, and merchants of Genoua, with their goods and merchandize, and to transport them to Genoua. The trumpet was detained a good time, during their consultation, but the conclusion was, that they must charge them: for it was likely, that the Geneuois had sent this trumpet, for that they fainted, and feared the Arragonois army. The captaines and souldiers, with great demonstrations of courage, cryed out for battell, and presently discharged their artillerie, which the Geneuois did presently answer, so as grappling ship to ship, and galley to galley, the fight was furious and cruell, and continued long doubtfull, vntill that the three great ships left by the Geneuois in the rearward, hauing gotten a full wind, came with great violence vpon the ships of Arragon, and among others giuing the stemme to that in which King Alphonso was, they made it lye on the one side, and had so shaken and shattered it, as it tooke in an abundance of water, and put the king and all them that were in it in great danger, so as he was forced to yeeld to James Lustinian, Gouernor of the Iland of Scio, who took him into Spinola's ship.

The shippe wherein King Iohn did fight, hauing lost her maine-yard, yeelded, and was taken by Galis Lomelin. Don Henry was prisoner to Cyprian de Mart. With these Princes there were taken D. Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Castro Xeris, and two of his sons, D. Iohn of Sotomajor, who had bene Master of Alcantara, Ruy Diaz of Mendoça the bald, Fernando Aualos Chamberlaine to D. Henry, and another Sonne of Don Ruy Lopes.

Prisoners taken in a battell at sea.

Lopes d'Auolos, who had bene constable of Castile, with many other Noblemen and A Knights of Arragon, Nauarre, Cattelogne and Valencia, and about 600. souldiers and mariners slaine. The Infant D. Pedro, leaping with the helpe of a cable from one galley to another, escaped: there were 13. ships taken, and most of the galleies were burnt, or sunke, after they had spoiled them. To conclude, the Geneuois victorie was great & memorable, as well in regard of the prisoners, as of the rich spoyles who shewed all curtesie and humanity, for after the end of the fight, they did set at liberty about 400. souldiers, that were prisoners, besides mariners, retaying only the chiefe men: wherein they did wisely, and like souldiers, for a multitude of prisoners of meane qualitie, are but an incumber: and it is an vnprofitable charge, and doth many times make the vanquished take courage to rebell, and to become Masters of them that hold them. Among the multitude that were set at liberty, there were many Knights of great worth escaped vnknowne. That which gaue the aduantage to the Geneuois army, was the 3. ships left in the rereward, the abundance of scalding lime, and wild-fire which they cast, and finally, that they were better sea-men then the Arragonois.

In agnanimity of king of Arragon.

The victorious army approaching neere to the Iland of Ischia, King Don Alphonso being a prisoner was prest to make it yeeld vnto the Geneuois, wherunto although he was a captive, he would not yeeld. By this defeat the feege was raynted at Gayete, and the prisoners carried to Sauona, from whence they were afterwards, by the Duke of Milans commandement, distributed into diuers prisons: King Don Alphonso to Pauiia, with Don Henry and others: King John, the Earle of Castro, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza were led to Milan.

Reuolunt of the duke of Milan

These lamentable newes did wonderfully trouble the Queene of Arragon and Nauarre, and all the people of these two Kingdomes, especially Donna Leonora the widow-queene of Arragon, who liued in her Monasterie of Saint John de las Duegnas, without the walles of Medina del campo, very simply and modestly, who conceived so great a griefe as shee dyed soone after: This did much afflicte the King and Queene of Portugall, and all the Noblemen of that Realme. The imprisonment of these Princes and Noblemen was short, for Don Philip Maria being courteous, and visiting his prisoners often, hee was so perswaded by king Alphonso, that both he and his Estates should reape more profit in maintaining the partie of Arragon, then that of France, as vanquished with his reasons, hee not onely let them all go free without ranfome, but gaue them many rich presents, after that he had enterrayned them royally many dayes, suffering them to go and come with all libertie, where they pleased. Hee caused Don John, King of Nauarre, and Don Henry his brother, to bee conducted to Porto Venero with fixe hundred horse for their guard, where they were receiued by Don Pedro their brother, and moreover he would that the Neapolitane Knights which were then at Milan, and the ambassadors of townes should take an oath of fealtie to King Alphonso, acknowledging him for their king, making so great a change of all things, as of an enemy he became a partisan and friend to the Arragonois: by reason whereof the Geneuois being incensed, rebelled against the Duke.

If the newes of the defeat and taking of these Princes, caused great heauinesse in Arragon and Nauarre, the ioy was so much the greater, when as they vnderstood of their deliuerie, the which was carried into Castile, where as the king of Nauarre was much desired of many, to whom the greatnesse of the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna, was offensive and hurtfull, Don Fredericke Admirall of Castile, who was one of them, sent a messenger to Queene Blanche, aduertising her that her husbands absence was very preiudiciall to himselfe and all his friends, for that his aduersaries grew great according to their owne desires, and therefore the should do well to hasten his returne as soone as might be: The like aduertisements were giuen her by many other knights of Castile, wherefore she sent three knights of her houshold into Italy, to the king her husband: which were John Henriquez of Lacarra, Sancho Ramirez of Aualos her caruer, and the Seigneur of Yentiz, to hasten his returne.

Castile.

D. John king of Castile at the request of his sister Queen Mary of Arragon, continued the truce five moneths longer, vpon the newes of the defeat of the two kings brethren. Being

A Being at Segobia, there was a Germain knight called Robert presented himself vnto him, who would make triall of armes, with D. John Pimentel Earle of Majorca, by whom he was vanquished. The like proofe being made by other twenty Germain knights, which came in the company of Robert, had in a manner the like issue, to the dishonour of strangers, and great commendation of the Spanish nation: D. Fernand of Gneura, a knight of great valour, being at Vienna, the chiefe towne of Austria, he fought within a lift on foot, with a Germain knight called Purapach, in the presence of Duke Albert sonne-in-law to the Emperor Sigismund, who casting his staffe, caused the combat to cease, and put them out of the lifts, to the great honour of the Spanish knight. Don John of Pimentel Earle of Majorca, desirous to trie his valour with strange Knights out of Castile, as he practised to play with a battell-axe with a seruant of his called Lope de la Torre, hee was strucke by him inconsiderately on the face, so as he dyed soone after; a due reward for this quarrelling exercise, which was then in so great estimation, to go seeking honor, (without cause or quarrell) in the force and dexterity of the body, more then in the gifts of the mind, humanity and iustice.

Whilest that King John was busie at Alcala of Henares to celebrate the funerals of his deceased aunt Queene Leonora, there was hot warre made vpon the frontier of Granada, where as D. Alphonso Ianes Pajardo, receiued the townes of Velez the white, and Velez the red, which yielded voluntarily to the king of Castile, the Inhabitants Moores promising to pay him the same tribute which they payed to king Mahumet, wherewith the King was satisfied: but he would not heare the ambassadours of Baqa and Guadix, who came to beseech him to giue them another king a Moore, then Mahumet, for that he did intreat him ill: but k. John knowing that this was but a deuce to free themselves from the spoile which he intended against them, he sent them away, and commanded his captaines to forrage and spoile their countrie, the which was executed by D. Fernand Aluarez of Toledo. The Moores of Galea and Castilegia yielded to D. Roderigo Manriquez, vpon the same conditions like vnto them of Velez. It fell out vnfortunatly for D. Henry of Guzman, the feege which he pretended to lay to Gibraltar for being come by sea with some barks before the towne, whether his sonne John of Guzman should come by land D with the rest of his forces to beseege it, he had no patience to attend, but landed, & began to skirmish on the shoare, neere vnto the walles, with the Moores which sallied out against him, but the sea flowing, it forced him to retire to his barke, leauing many of his Knights on land, in prey to the enemy, who began to cry out and to complaine, that he had left them there to the slaughter, with such vehement words, as moued to pittie, hee caused his barke to approach to land to receiue them: but it was so ouer-laden as it sunke, and there the Earle Don Henry, with about forty Knights were drowned, whose losse was great. The bodies being cast vpon the shoare, were drawne to land by the Moores, and the Earles was put into a coffer, and set vpon an high tower, to be a terror to the Christians, where it continued some yeares. By this pittifull successe, the sonne retired from Gibraltar, and out of all Andalusia with teares and mourning: the bones of this Earle are at this present in a most auncient Tower made of Bricke, in the highest part of the castell of Gibraltar, which the common people beleuee was built and erected by Hercules.

D. Henry of Guzman draw and neere Gibraltar.

Whilest that these things past in Spaine, in the yeare 1436. the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre were deeply ingaged in the warre of Naples, whither the Dutchesse Isabell of Lorraine, wife to Rene of Anjou a prisoner was come, and with the helpe of Pope Eugenius defended her husbands right courageously. The two breethren kings being aduertised of the affaires of Spaine, by their friends and seruants, they resolu'd to send a ioynt ambassage to the king of Castile, to treat a peace with him vpon some good conditions. The ambassadors found the Court at Toledo, where hauing deliuered their charge vnto the king, it pleased God that after many conferences and debates, a peace was concluded vpon a promise of marriage betwixt D. Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, and Don Henry of Castile, Prince of the Asturias, with these conditions:

That the solemnization of this marriage should be accomplished within the limite of a certaine time, betwixt Henry heire of the Realmes of Castile, and Donna Blanche, eldest

Conditions of
peace betwixt
Castile, Navarre
and Arragon.

eldest daughter to D. John King of Navarre, to whom should be assigned the Marquisat A of Villena, the townes of Medina del campo, Olmedo, Coca, Roa, and Aranda: the reuenues of which lands, D. John King of Navarre should receiue the foure next following yeares. That if there were no children borne of this marriage, the king of Navarre should haue ten thousand florins of gold of yearly rent assigned vpon the reuenues of Castile. That to D. Blanche, Queene of Navarre, and to her sonne D. Charles, should in like manner be given an assignation of ten thousand florins of gold yearly, during their liues. That all knights should be pardoned, which during the warres, and fore-past quarels, had followed either partie, and they restored to their goods and dignities, except on the part of Castile, D. John of Soto-major, who had bene Master of Alcantara, and the B Earle of Castro Xeris: and on the behalfe of Navar, D. Godfrey of Navar, Earle of Cortes: Item, that to the Infant D. Henry brother to the kings of Arragon and Navar, should be assigned 5000. florins of gold of yearly hereditarie rent: and to the Infanta D. Catherine his wife should be given 5000. florins of gold in ready money for her dowrie. These articles being accorded, a peace was proclaimed in the Realmes of Castile, Arragon, and Navar, and D. Pedro of Acugna, son to Lopes Basknes of Acugna, Lord of Buendia, was sent to Azagna, with sufficient authority, to make the first promise in the name of Prince Henry, and it was concluded the sollempne betrothing should be at Alfaro, whether came at the time assigned, the Prince D. Henry accompanied by D. Aluaro de Luna, constable of Castile, and many other Noblemen, Knights, and Prelates, who arriving C two dayes before the Infanta: being aduertised that she was at Corella, he went to meete her with all his traine. The Queen of Navarre, mother to the Infanta, Prince Charles her brother, the Bishop of Pamplone, with many other Prelates, Peter of Peralta, Lord Steward of the kings house, Leon of Garro, and other knights, many Ladies and Gentlewomen of Navarre attended her, all in equipage worthy of such a solemnitie, the which was celebrated in Alfaro, in the yeare 1437. D. Pedro of Castile, Bishop of Osma stipulating and receiuing the promises, either of them being but 12. yeares old. The Prince D. Henry gaue many goodly and rich Jewels to the Infanta, and vied the like bountie to the Ladies and Knights of her traine. Then having spent foure dayes at Alfaro in great feasting and joy, the parties separated themselves, euery one retiring into his country. By this peace D there was also restored vnto the king of Navar, the town & castle of la Garde, and the castles of Asaturuguen and Burandon: and towards Guipulcoa, there were yielded the castles and places of Gorriti, Cobono, Toro, Araciell, and Saragana, which the Guipulcoans had taken during the wars. Moreover, the towne of Briones was yielded to the king of Navar, touching the Seigneurie and the reuenue, but the Soueraignty remayned to the king of Castile. This peace was promised and sworne, vpon a penalty of 300000. florins of gold, payable by him that should breake it: and it was confirmed by the chiefe officers of either realme, both clergy and secular, and by the deputies of the chiefe townes. For Navar, there signed D. Martin of Peralta bishop of Pamplona, the archb. of Tyre, the Queens confessor, the Prior of S. John, & the Deane of Tudele, clergy-men: D. Lewis of Beaumont, Tristan Lord of Luçe, Peter of Peralta, Lord Steward, Philip Marshall of Navar, & Vicont of Ro, with other knights: moreover, the deputies of the cities of Pamplona, Estella, and Tudela, and of the townes of Sanguette, Olite, Arcos, Biane, S. Vincent and others. For Castile, besides the great officers of court, there did sweare all the Noblemen of the frontier of Guipulcoa, Rioja, and others, yea they of the families of Lazcano, Beraltequi and Amezueta: and these accords were written by Bartholomew of Renes, Secretarie to D. John King of Navar, and of Queen Blanche his wife, and by Alphonso Perez of Bivera, high Treasurer and Secretary to the king of Castile.

Imprisonment
of D. Pedro
Manrique.

This ioy was croit according to the custom of humane things, with great griefe in the court of Castile, the king having caused D. Pedro Manrique Gouvernour of Leon to be committed to prison, where at euery man did shew himselfe discontented, so as the king caused 2000. lances to come for his gard, which remayned continually about the court. He sent the prisoner to the castle of Fuente Dueña, commanding that hee should haue the liberty of the prison, & that sometimes they should suffer him to go on hunting, which liberty was procured by the Admirall of Castile, who was discontented for his detention. This

A This yeare which was 1438. there were brought vnto the King stones, which they said, were fallen from heauen in great abundance, at Maderuelo, a house belonging to the Constable, very light: the which although they were reasonably big, yet were they to light as they did not hurt any one they fell vpon, a strange thing, and which was held prodigious. The Articles of the peace being brought into Italy, were allowed and confirmed by King Don Alphonso, in the presence of Doctor Ferdinand Lopez of Burgos, one of the Kings Councill.

The warre of Granado was managed with variable successe: many Knights among the Moores disliking the government of King Mahumet, revolted, taking the party of Castile, of the which one Aven Amar was Capitaine, who soone after went with his men to the King of Tunes, with leaue from the King of Castile, having receiued both pay and presents from him: and moreover 6000. pounds sterling for the charge of their voyage. Don Inigo Lopez of Mendoza Gouvernour of the Fronter, Lord of Hyta and Buytrago, who was afterwards Marquis of Sentillana, tooke the towne of Huelsma from the Moores, and had the castle afterwards by composition, causing the garrison of Moores to be conducted in safety to Cambil and Halabar. But Roderigo of Perca, Gouvernour of Caçortia, being entred rashly into the Moores countrie, was surprized by a great number of horse and foote, lead by Aben Sarraz, a wife and valiant man, among all them of his nation, by whom he was cut in peeces, scarce twenty of his men escaping, being in all foure hundred horse, and a thousand foote: yet this victory was not without losse of blood to the Moores, for their Capitaine Aben Sarraz was slaine, and many Knights of note.

The sacred warre of Affrick, which was led by D. Ferdinand Maister of Auis, and Don Henry Maister of the Order of Christ, Infants of Portugal, had answerable successe, who having obtained, by great importunity from the King their brother, leaue to passe the sea, had besieged the towne of Tanger, having brought but 6000. fighting men out of Portugal. The siege having continued thirte seven dayes, being well assailed and well defended, there came an infinite multitude of Moores, both horse and foote, to succour the besieged, being lead by the Kings of Fez, Maroc, Velez, and other Princes in person. Wherefore the Portugals fought to retire themselves, but being in a manner inuelted D by this great armie, they were forced to fortifie themselves in their trenches, and changing their condition of besiegers, they found themselves besieged, so as hauing no means to escape, they must capitulate with the Moores for their liues and liberties, promising to yeeld vp vnto them the towne of Ceuta, and all the captiue Moores that were in Portugal. Vpon this accord D. Henry and his men were sent back, and came naked and stript to Ceuta, the Infant D. Ferdinand remaining for hostage in the hands of the King of Fez, vntill the accord were performed: But D. Henry being returned with this disarmed armie into Portugall, when as King Edward had assembled the Estates of the realme at Ebor, being much grieved at this unhappy successe, to take some course for the deliuey of D. Ferdinand, they would neuer yeeld that the towne of Ceuta should be deliuered E vnto the Moores: but they consented to all other means to free D. Ferdinand: the difficulties and delays were such, together with the death of King Edward which happened, as for want of execution of that which had bene promised vnto the Moores, the Infant D. Ferdinand past the rest of his dayes in prison in the hands of Infidels, with great constancie, and a rare example of patience and religion, comforting the other captiue Christians, not onely for that they saw a Prince participare of their miseries, but he did also encourage them by godly exhortations to continue constant in the faith of our Sauour. King Edward being very pensive for this dishonorable losse, but especially for the captiuitie of his brother, going out of Ebor, where as the plague was violent, hee retired to Auis: and to ease the court, and to spare charges, hee commanded the Infants his brethren to retire to their houses. Hee came in person to Pont du Soleil, where hee caused a strong wall to be made, to assure that place from theues, then going to the Monasterie of Tomar, hee felt himselfe toucht with a sharpe and pestilent Ague, whereof hee died in September this yeare 1438. being fortie seauen yeares old, and having reigned onely fise: his body was interred in the royall Monasterie of the Battaille.

By his will he left all his moueables to the Queene Don Leonora, and made her Gouver- A neste of their children, and Regent of the Realme.

Castile.
D. Pedro de Man-rique stays
out of prison.

About that time Don Pedro Manrique a prisoner in Castile at Fuente Duegnas, slipping downe with cordes from the castle wall, he fled to Enzinas, a fort belonging to his sonne in lawe D. Aluaro of Estuniga sonne to D. Pedro Earle of Ledesma, whether presently came the Admirall Don Frederic, his brother, Don Henry and his friends, with great company. The King at one instant receiued this newes, and that of the death of the Infant Don Pedro of Arragon, who had bene slaine with a great shot, assaying the citie of Naples, whereto he was equally grieued, but with diuerse passions: the Infants body was buried in the castle of de l'Oso. This fort de l'Oso, and the new castle at Naples, B had alwaies held good for the Arragonois. King René was come a little before to Naples, with twelue galleys of Genoua, and was there receiued with royall pompe and state: after which hauing sent back his galleys, hee filled the citie and all places thereabouts with his soldiars, hauing gathered together a great armie, he began to assaile the neighbour places, but with small effect. There came a Herald in his name to King Don Alphonso being at Castellucci in Abruzzo, with a gantlet dipt in blood, challenging him to a single combat: Don Alphonso receiued the gantlet, and demanded of the Herald, C if King René meant they should encounter in single fight, one against another, or with all their forces: the Herald answered, that the King his Maister would present himselfe with his armie. Wherevpon King Don Alphonso replied, that seeing hee was the challenger, it was in him to make choise of the place, and day of battaile; and therefore he did choise the fields which are betwixt Nola and la Cerra, whether hee would come within eight dayes, with his whole armie, to fight as his aduersary would. At the day assigned, Don Alphonso presented himselfe vpon the place, and attended René, who appeared not, for that he had bene disswayed by his friends and seruants, who came to lodge with his armie at that place, from whence Don Alphonso was parted, and tooke Castelluccio. Alphonso on the other side tooke Arpaio in the valley of Gardano, and so taking places, and ruining the country hee marcht to Naples, hauing about 15000.
men in his armie, with which forces and ten galleys he held the towne besieged, where happened the death of the Infant Don Pedro, as wee haue said. But soone after, René D comming with the like, or greater forces, hee not onely preferred the citie, but he forced the garnisons of the new castle, and of the fort de l'Oso, to yeeld for want of victuals.
About which time the King of Nauarre returned into Spaine, to ouerthrow those good accords which had bene made betwixt him and the King of Castile, and to trouble all Spaine, being of an inconstant and turbulent disposition.

Returne of D.
John King of Nauarre into Spaine.

8
Castile.

The enemies of Don Aluaro de Luna the Constable, relying much vpon the King of Nauarre, and his forces, had banded themselves openly against him: the chiefe whereof were the Admirall Don Frederic, Don Pedro Manriques Governour of Leon, Don John Ramir of Ariellan, Lord of Los Cameros, Don Pedro of Quingones Merin Maior of the Asturia, Don Diego of Estuniga sonne to the Earle of Ledesma. Don Roderigo of Castagneda Lord of Fuente Duegna, and Don Pedro Mendoza, Lord of Almacan, E who drew many others vnto their league, namely the Earle of Ledesma, who had his lands fronting vpon Ecia. The King called soldiars from all parts to suppress this tumult (among the rest hee was speedily serued by the Nobility of Andalusia) to whom the confederates did write very dutifull and respectiue letters, intreating him to cause the Constable to dislodge from Court, before that hee grew so powerfull, as hee might be prejudiciall both to him and his realme. There was in truth some reason to sup-presse the boldnesse and greatnesse of this man, who was insolent, covetous, and not very faithfull to his Prince, the which was well knowne to the King, and to many of his Councell: but hee had them all so tyed vnto him, as not any one could attempt against him, nor consent willingly to that which should please him: wherefore an answer was made vnto the letter, quite contrary to that which the Noblemen of the league demanded, with whom there newly ioynted Don Lewis de la Cerda Earle of Medina Celi, and Don Pedro of Castile Bishop of Oms, who had seized vpon many places, as Don Pedro of Quingones had done of the City of Leon, so as the whole realme was full of

D. Aluaro de Luna the Constable insolent, covetous and treacherous.

A of seditions and tumults, all in generall imputing the fault vnto the constable, partly with reason, and partly without. The King being at Roa, vied all diligence to assemble forces, to be the stronger, writing letters to Toledo and other great townes, admonishing them of their duties, and to be faithfull vnto him.

In the meane time the Marshall D. Inigo Ortiz of Estuniga, brother to the Earle of Ledesma, entered into Vaileddolit, with five hundred men at armes, and seized on the towne in the name of the confederate Lords. On the other side the King was aduer-sified that the King of Nauarre, and D. Henry his brother, were entered into Castile with five hundred men at armes, and not knowing vpon what pretext, considering the accord lately concluded betwixt them, he sent vnto them, intreating them to ioyne with him and to come to court: the King of Nauarre consented, and came to the king to Cuellar, with fixe horse onely, whereto the whole court did much reioyce. They came at the instance of the confederate Lords, and also incited with a desire to recouer that which they had lost in Castile, by means of the present troubles, in whose company was the Earle of Castro. The King of Nauarre being seperated from the rest, and come vnto the king, receiued great honour and good vsage: but the Infant D. Henry aduanced not, but staid with the troups, the which hee led to Pegnassiel, where they opened him the gates, the King hauing so commanded, and soone after hee had conference with the king of Nauarre his brother at Minquela, neere to Cuellar, there being good corre-spondency betwixt them, although they made no shew of it: for the King of Nauarre continued with the King of Castile, and hee retired to Vaileddolit, to the Lords of the League: there was much trouble, and many enterviewes of Noblemen of either part, with great leaues of souldiars to the oppression of the people, and yet there was no meanes to make an accord: the confederats insisting still that the constable should be banished from court, the which was a hard matter to effect. The Admirall and the Infant D. Henry sent to challenge the constable, and he accepted the combat, but yet they did not fight. The King did sollicit D. Henry, promising him that if he would bee of his party he would make him maister of Saint James, and would giue him other things, for the which the Infant gaue him thanks, letting him vnderstand, that whatsoeuer he did, was for his seruice.

D In these treaties of pacification the greatest difficulty was in the restitution of lands forfeited, the which had bene distributed to many: yea to some of the confederats, who would not restore them, at the least without recompence. Being in these garboiles and out of hope of any accord, they had newes, that D. Roderigo of Villandrado, first Earle of Ribadeo, who had some yeeres before serued Charles the seventh, the French King, with great reputation and honour, was come into Castile, bringing with him three thousand souldiars to serue and succor King John his naturall Lord: wherefore all treaties of accord ceasing, the Kings of Castile and Nauarre went as farre as Pegnassiel to meet him with some troups, to assure him from the surprises of the confederats, who sent the Earle of Ledesma with fifteene hundred horse, to attend him at a passage. This Lands of confession given away vnder

the peace.

E supply, and other occasions, together with the diligence of certaine religious men, who sought to reconcile these Noblemen, made the parties more tractable, so as in October 1439. a peace was concluded, vpon these conditions. That the constable D.
Aluaro de Luna should absent himselfe from court for fixe monethes, and that the king, of Castile should recompence the king of Nauarre and D. Henry his brother, for the lands he had taken from them: and the proceesse and proceedings made against them that were in armes disannulled: that the townes and forts held by the confederats should be restored. These things being concluded at Castro Nugno, the constable to fulfill the Article which concerned him, parted from court, leaving most of the kings counsell which faoured him, discontented: The Noblemen dismiss their souldiars, and the king parted from Castro Nugno to goe vnto Toro. In the meane time the Infanta D. Catherrina, wife to D. Henry, died in child-bed.

An. 1439.

F There was no peace firmly settled by this accord, for the king being possessed by a counsell made by the constable, was held in distrust, and the courtiers in continuall ialousie. He caused some of them, which had followed the confederate Lords, to be imprisoned at Salamanca,

Insolencies of the Constable of Castile made knowne unto the King.

lamanca, and to take Segobia from Ruy Diaz of Mendoza, who held it, he gave it to the Prince of the Asturias his sonne. The King of Nauarre and his brother D. Henry seeing these proceedings, they went from Madrigal, towards the court, whereupon the King sent to forbid them to come there: and to the end they should not finde him at Salamanca, he dislodged and went to Bonilla de la Serra, from whence hee sent to demand a fauourable conduit of the Noblemen for Don Gutiere Gomes of Toledo Archbishop of Seuille, whom hee ment to send to treat with them, the which beeing willingly granted, the Archbishop came to Madrigal, with some of the Kings council, but they returned without any conclusion: wherefore the King of Nauarre and the Infant his brother led some troupes towards Auila, where by the meanes of Aluaro of Bracamont, and Fernando of Aualos, who had taken vpon them to defend it, they became maisters, from thence the King of Nauarre did write a letter vnto the King of Castile full of good counsel, accusing the constable of auarice, cruelty, tyrannie, insolency, and contempt of the Princes and Noblemen, yea of the King himselfe, hauing presumed to kil a squier in Arcualo; and a groom, to flie his fury, hauing cast himselfe at the Kings feet, as in a most assured Sanctuary, he had beaten him almost in his bosome, stretching his armes ouer the Kings shoulders, without any respect to his dignity, whom euery man (to the great dishonor of his royal person) said he had incanted: and to conclude, if he did not chafe him away and punish him, he could not be honored nor serued by the Princes, and Noblemen of Castile, who could not endure such indignities from an vpstart, whose beginning was scarce knowne. The King knew well that many things contained in these letters were true, yet being gouerned by such as faoured the constable, he made no answer: whereupon the confederats sent the Earles of Haro and Benauent vnto him, who after many Negotiations, concluded with the Kings council, that they should make an assembly of the Estates at Vaileadolid, whereas the deputies of the townes and Prouinces of Castile and Leon should meet, and determine of that which should be held expedient for the quiet of the realme, so as the Archbishop of Seuille, and his Nephew the Earle of Alba did remaine at their houses. Before the execution of that which had bene concluded, the Infant D. Henry entred Toledo with three hundred and fifty knights, through the fauor of D. Pedro Lopes of Ayala the Gouernor, and made himselfe maister thereof, hauing good correspondence with the King of Nauarre his brother, whose faction was very strong at that time in Castile, his friends and confederats holding the chiefe townes of the realme: for besides that he had vnder his command the towne of Auila, and his brother that of Toledo, the Earle of Ledesma held Burgos and the castle: Pedro of Quignones was maister of Leon: Ruy Diaz of Mendoza commanded Segobia, with the fort: D. Henry Henriquez the Admirals brother had Zamora, and the castle: Salamanca was in the hands of John Gomes of Anaya: Guadalajara of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita: Plaisance of the Earle of Ledesma: Vaileadolid of the Earle Pedro Nugnes: other places were held by other Knights of that party, the which did much trouble the King, and his constable. To make the assembly of Vaileadolid more easie, the Earles of Haro and Benauent returned to Bonille, where it was againe concluded that the Kings and the Noblemen should retire their troupes; and there was a general passport giuen to all them that should come to Vaileadolid, with assurance of their goods; yea to the constable, who remained in his house at Escalano, where by an ill preface, the greatest part of the castle had some few daies before bene burnt with lightning; notwithstanding the King would haue the passport serue also for the constables person. In this assembly it was decreed that the cities and townes held by the confederats, should bee left free at the King of Castiles dispose, but there was not any thing effected, and the more to trouble the realme, D. Henry Prince of the Asturias, perswaded by his spouse, and the confederat noblemen, began to ioyne with the King of Nauarre, his future father in law, retrying himselfe vnto the Admiral D. Frederic lodging, wherewith the court was much troubled; and the King sent the Earle of Castro, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza to the King of Nauarre, to vnderstand the cause of this alteration; who answered that he knew it not: and wishal went with them to the Admirals lodging, to vnderstand the reason. The Prince answered, that he had required himselfe thither, by reason of Doctor Perjueros, Alphonso Perez of Biutero and

Nicholas

A Nicholas Fernandes of Villanar, of the Kings council, being vnworthy of that ranke, and beseeching the King that he would chafe them away, else he would retire himselfe. The King promised to dismiss them, whereupon the Prince was pacified, and came to the Kings palace, after midnight, the King of Nauarre accompanying him. The Prince D. Henry was gouerned by a yong gentleman called D. Iohn de Pacheco, sonne to Alphonso Telles Giron, Lord of Beaumont, who was preferred to his seruice by the constable, and was afterwards made Marquis of Villena, and maister of the Order of Saint Iames. The King at the Estates of Vaileadolid, settled some order for Iustice, which was but badly executed in Castile, and some thing to pacifie the Princes and Noblemen that were muted, and to diuert their armes, hee thought it now time to celebrate the marriage of D. Henry and the Infanta of Nauarre, being three yeeres since they were made sure, and either of them being fifteene yeeres old: the bond of consanguinity, which might hinder it, was dissolved by Pope Eugenius the fourth. The Infanta being sent for, she entred into Castile, in the yeere 1440. beeing accompanied by Queene Blanch her mother, the Prince of Viana her brother, and many noblemen, prelates and knights of Nauarre. Shee was receiued in the towne of Logroño, by D. Alphonso of Carthagena, Bishop of Burgos D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza Lord of Hita, and by D. Pedro of Velasco, Earle of Haro. From thence the Prince D. Charles returned into Nauarre with his Gouernor. D. Iohn de Beaumont, who in the Princes name gouerned the realme, the Queene mother being absent.

The Princeesse with all her traine being come to Vilhorado, a house belonging to the Earle of Haro, she was entertained with sumptuous feasts, great sports and rare inventions; and much more at Birbiesca, by the Earle himselfe. D. Pedro of Acugna did the like at Duegnas, whether the Prince D. Henry came to meet his spouse, whereas he presented her with many rich iewels, and shee him: who hauing bene some foure and twenty howers with the Ladies, he returned to Vaileadolid, whether they went. There went forth to meet them, the Kings, and all the principall Noblemen of the court, who made a stately entry into the towne, and the Queene and Princeesse went to the King of Nauarres lodging, whose brother D. Henry came from Toledo to assist at the marriage, the which was celebrated with a royall pompe, D. Pedro of Ceruantes Bishop of Auila, performing the ceremony. But the vnfortunate hap of this Princeesse was such, as the Prince D. Henry proued vnable to consummate the marriage, the which she did veruously conceale for many yeeres. To honor the marriage, the noblemen ran at tile with sharpe pointed lances, but the sport was so dangerous, as the King was forced to forbid it, for Pedro Porto Carrero a Knight of Torroy, and Iohn of Salezar lost their liues, and others were fore hurt in these encounters. This royall feast (which had continued many daies) being ended, the Princes and Noblemen of the court being dispersed, the Prince D. Henry was conducted to Segobia by D. Iohn de Pacheco his great mignon, who through a courtiers Ingratitude, forfeited the King of Nauarres party, and that of the Noblemen confederated to ruine the constable, by whom hee had bene aduanced working so, as the Prince his maister ioynd with them, who reuiuing their old quarrels, sent to beseech the King, that without any more delay he would cause the constables proceesse to be made, degrading him of the honour and dignity which he held, and of the gouernment of the realme. The King was much troubled to see new seditions which he thought had bene suppressed, and wonderfully incensed against his sonne, would not make any direct answer to this demand: besides he had still some of his counsell which defended the constables cause: wherefore in the yeere 1441. the troubles began more violent then before. Mary Queene of Castile sister to the King of Nauarre tooke then his part, which she had not done before.

F The Infant D. Henry, brother to the King of Nauarre, being after the marriage returned to Toledo, hee fortified himselfe there, and receiued Pedro Lopes of Ayala, contrary to the Kings commandment: where continuing in his accustomed rebellions, hee staid the Ambassadors which the King had sent vnto him, to perswade him to take a better course, yea the King being in person to Saint Lazzaro, without the walles of the city, vpon the way to Madrid, onely with thirty horses of his household and traine, the Infant

D. Iohn de Pacheco gouerns Prince Henry.

An. 1440.

40

Cardinal of Saint Peter.

Marriage of the Prince of Castile and the Infanta of Nauarre.

Infant fallied forth, and presented himselfe in battaile, vsing threats and proud speeches, A so as the King was forced to returne speedely. There was in his company D. Roderigo of Villandrado Earle of Ribadeo, who in this voiage obtained a goodly preuiledge for him and his family, which was, that the robe which the Kings of Castile put on the first day of the new yeere, should belong to him, and that hee should that day eate at the Kings table, leauing this preuiledge to his posterity in the King of Castiles court. As soone as the King came to Torrijos from Saint Lazaro, he beganne to proceed against the Infant D. Henry, for the detention of his Ambassadors, and so he retired to Auila. The constable and his brother D. John of Crezuela Archbishop of Toledo (against whom all this warre was intended) sent to beseech the King to send some of his counsell vnto them, to the end their might be some order taken for so many inconueniences, the which being done, they concluded that the King should send vnto the confederate Lords, to ad-uise them to obserue the accord made at Bonille de la Serra, and the more to ease the country, they should dismisse their souldiers.

That to determine all quarrels betwixt them and the constable, they should choise Iudges, who should examine where the fault was, and should appoint punishment for them that were found culpable: and that if they thought it fit, there should be a generall assembly of the Estates called to that end. The Kings offered all these things to the confederats, who were for the most part in Arevalo: but they answered, that there was no meanes of pacification, if the constable who was newly come to Auila, did not dislodge from court. The King hearing this answer, sought to retire his sonne D. Henry, who being counselled by the King of Nauarre, and the Queenes of Castile and Na-uarre, went to Auila, where he protested to the King his father, that he desired nothing more, then to mediate a good peace: where after some small stay, he returned to Sego-bia, promising that from thence he would write vnto the Queenes, touching their meeting at Santa Maria de Nieua, there to treat with them of the meanes of an accord.

In the meane time the King receiued letters from Diego de Valera, a wife Knight and of great experience, who had sene and frequented the courts of forraigne Princes, seeking (according to the custome of Noblemen of that age) honour by armes, at Tournayes and combats, beginning for pleasure, and ending many times with death, or some other misfortune; yet he had alwaies bene fortunate, and had wonne much honour and reputation, both in Spaine and else where. These letters contained many graue considerations, and profitabie counsell, both for the King and his Estate. Being read in open counsell, D. Gutierrez Gomes of Toledo Archbishop of Toledo, without any great consideration, stept forward to answer for all the rest. Bid D. Diego said he, send vs men and money, for wee haue not any need of counsell. The King to gratifie the Prince his sonne, gaue vnto him the towne of Guadaluara, the which by this meanes he thought to wrett out of the hands of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita and Buytrago: but they made resistance in the taking of possession. This hapened at such time as he came to visit the King at Auila, or a little before. The Queenes and the Prince, according vnto that which had bene promised to the King his father, met together at Santa Maria de Nieua, where D. John de Pacheco was also present: they conferred long together about the pacification of the troubles, without any great conclusion.

From thence there was sent vnto Auila, Alphonso Telles Giron Lord of Beaumont, father to John Pacheco, and Doctour Valdenebro, a prior, that to make matters more easie, he should approach to Arevalo, wherunto the King would not yeeld, wherein he was ill counselled by some, who feared they should loose their credit and authority, by the accords which might be made there.

Matters being broken off the confederats sent the Admirall Don Frederike, the Earle of Benauent, Don Pedro of Quignones and Roderigo Manriquez, with good numbers of men, beyonde the mountaines, into the Countrie of Toledo, who ranne as farre as Escalona, and presented battaile vnto the constable, and to the Archbishop his brother, who came from Illesca to ioyne with him, when as their enemies were retired: these Lords of the league returned to Toledo without any blowes, whether came some men of authoritie from the King, to stay them from fighting. At that time the Infant

Preuiledge of the Earle of Ribadeo.

D. Diego of Valera giues
good aduice
vnto the King.

A fant Don Henry, at the Earle of Benauents, and the Admirals request, deliuered the Ambassadors: but he did not ferbeare to spoile the Constables and the Archbishops countries, putting all to fire and sword. The Archbishop abandoned Illesca in the night, going towards Madrid, whereof the Infant Don Henry being aduertised, he followed him with all speed, and hauing onely ouer-taken and spoiled his baggage, hee returned and seized vpon Illesca: The Archbishop saued himselfe in Madrid, where hee was receiued by the Kings commandement: the Admiral and the Earle of Benauent after these light exploits, returned to Arevalo. About that time Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, one of the Lords of the league, hauing surprized the towne of Alcalá de Henares, John de Ca-rillo Gouvernor of Casorla, a Captaine of the Archbishop of Toledos and the Constables faction, approached neere vnto the place with fure hundred horse, and one thousand two hundred foote, which he laid in ambush in certaine valleys, and sent some to runne in view of the towne, to draw Don Inigo forth, who failed not, yet not with such order and strength as he ought, wherefore he heind him in, in such sort, as hauing lost most of his men, himselfe being soare hurt, hee could hardly recouer Alcalá. To recompence this losse, the Infant Don Henries men, did cut some of the Constables troups in pec-ces, in Grismonda, where notwithstanding he lost Lawrence d'Aualos his Chamberlaine, nephew to the Constable Don Ruy Lopes d'Aualos.

The Infant hearing this, went presently to field, marching towards Toledo with fixe hundred horse, ouer-running the country of Escalona, thinking that the Constable would fight with him, but hee stirred not, finding himselfe too weak: wherevpon hee sent to haue the Archbishop his brother to come, and being ioyned together, they went to charge the Infant at Torrijos, who then kept himselfe within his fort, and whilest that they spoiled the Country, euen vnto the gates of Toledo, killing men, and carrying away the prey, he aduertised the King of Nauarre, and the other confederate Lords of his estate, who parted presently from Arevalo and Ontiueros, with one thousand two hundred men at armes, and light horse to succour him. The King of Castile being much incensed against the confederates, resolved to seaze vpon the lands, rents, and reuenues of the King of Nauarre, beginning by Medina del Campo, neither did the protestations and threats of the King of Nauarre and his confederates, preuaile any thing, to whom D the King of Castile made no other answer, but that they were all in armes contrary to his commandements, and carried themselves as rebels.

Don Alphonso the fift of that name, and twelfth King of Portugal.

Dying these tumults in Castile, the realme of Portugal was not without some cofles. After the death of King Edward, his sonne Don Alphonso succeeded him, at the age of six yeares, vnder the government of the Queene Donna Leonor, according to the Fathers testament: but many townes of the realme reiecting the government of a woman, especially a stranger, they intreated the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra, that, as the eldest brother among the Infants of Portugal, hee would take vpon him the sole government of the realme. Many others, more modest, who would not altogether breake the will of the deceased King, were of opinion that hee should gouerne with the Queene. Of the first opinion, were the Infants Don Henrie Master of Christus, and Don
John Maister of Saint Ieames, Don Pedro excusing himselfe of this charge, he perswaded Don John to gouerne with the Queene Mother, wherewith he should bee well satisfied:
but Don John answered him freely, that it was not for him, who was the yongest amongst the brethren, to gouerne: but that hee Don Pedro and Don Henrie, should aduise to take the government of the realme vpon them, as Princes of Portugal, and worthy of such a charge, and that they should not suffer a strange woman to rule ouer them, being an infamous thing, vnworthy of the house of Portugal, and preiudiciall to the realme:
and that they must not regard that which the deceased King had ordained if it were found

11
Portugal.

Government of a woman
cause of contention.

Priviledges of the Earle of Ribadeo.

Infant sallied forth, and presented himselfe in battaile, vsing threats and proud speeches, A so as the King was forced to returne speedely. There was in his company D. Roderigo of Villandrado Earle of Ribadeo, who in this voyage obtained a goodly preuiledge for him and his family, which was, that the roabe which the Kings of Castile put on the first day of the new yeere, should belong to him, and that hee should that day eate at the Kings table, leaving this preuiledge to his posterity in the King of Castiles court. As soone as the King came to Torijos from Saint Lazaro, he beganne to proceed against the Infant D. Henry, for the detention of his Ambassadors, and so he retired to Auila. The constable and his brother D. John of Crezuela Archbishop of Toledo (against whom all this warre was intended) sent to beseech the King to send some of his counsell vnto B them, to the end their might be some order taken for so many inconueniences, the which being done, they concluded that the King should send vnto the confederate Lords, to aduise them to obserue the accord made at Bonille de la Serra, and the more to ease the country, they should dismisse their souldiars.

That to determine all quarrels betwixt them and the constable, they should choise Iudges, who should examine where the fault was, and should appoint punishment for them that were found culpable: and that if they thought it fit, there should be a generall assembly of the Estates called to that end. The Kings offered all these things to the confederates, who were for the most part in Arealo: but they answered, that there was no meanes of pacification, if the constable who was newly come to Auila, did not dislodge from court. The King hearing this answer, sought to retire his sonne D. Henry, who being counselled by the King of Nauarre, and the Queenes of Castile and Nauarre, went to Auila, where he protested to the King his father, that he desired nothing more, then to mediate a good peace: where after some small stay, he returned to Segobia, promising that from thence he would write vnto the Queenes, touching their meeting at Santa Maria de Nieua, there to treat with them of the meanes of an accord.

D. Diego of
Valera giues
good aduice
vnto the King.

In the meane time the King receiued letters from Diego de Valera, a wife Knight and of great experience, who had sene and frequented the courts of forraigne Princes, seeking (according to the custome of Noblemen of that age) honour by armes, at Tournais and combats, beginning for pleasure, and ending many times with death, or some other misfortune; yet he had alwaies beene fortunate, and had wonne much honour and reputation, both in Spaine and else where. These letters contained many graue admonitions, and profittable counsell, both for the King and his Estate. Being read in open counsell, D. Gutierrez Comes of Toledo Archbishop of Toledo, without any great consideration, stept forward to answer for all the rest. Bid D. Diego laide he, send vs men and money, for wee haue not any need of counsell. The King to gratifie the Prince his sonne, gaue vnto him the towne of Guadaluja, the which by this meanes he thought to wrest out of the hands of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita and Buytrago: but they made resistance in the taking of possession. This hapened at such time as he came to visit the King at Auila, or a little before. The Queenes and the Prince, according vnto that which had beene promised to the King his father, met together at Santa Maria de Nieua, where D. John de Pacheco was also present: they conferred long together about the pacification of the troubles, without any great conclusion.

From thence there was sent vnto Auila, Alphonso Telles Giron Lord of Beaumont, father to John Pacheco, and Doctor Valdenubro, a prior, that to make matters more easie, he should approach to Arealo, where vnto the King would not yeeld, wherein hee was ill counselled by some, who feared they should loose their credit and authority, by the accords which might be made there.

Matters being broken off the confederats sent the Admirall Don Federike, the Earle of Benauent, Don Pedro of Quignones and Roderigo Manrique: with good numbers of men, beyonde the mountains, into the Countrie of Toledo, who ranne as farre as Escalona, and presented battaile vnto the constable, and to the Archbishop his brother, who came from Illesca to ioine with him, when as their enemies were retired: these Lords of the league returned to Toledo without any blowes, whether came some men of authoritie from the King, to stay them from fighting. At that time the Infant

A fant Don Henry, at the Earle of Benauents, and the Admirals request, deliuered the Ambassadors: but he did not serbeare to spoile the Constables and the Archbishops countries, putting all to fire and sword. The Archbishop abandoned Illesca in the night, going towards Madrid, whereof the Infant Don Henry being aduertised, he followed him with all speed, and hauing onely ouer-taken and spoiled his baggage, hee returned and seized vpon Illesca: The Archbishop saued himselfe in Madrid, where hee was receiued by the Kings commandement: the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent after these light exploits, returned to Arealo. About that time Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, one of the Lords of the league, hauing surprized the towne of Alcalá de Henares; John de Carrillo Gouvernor of Casoria, a Cap taine of the Archbishop of Toledos and the Constable faction, approached neere vnto the place with fise hundred horse, and one thousand two hundred foote, which he laid in ambush in certaine valleys, and sent some to runne in view of the towne, to draw Don Inigo forth, who failed not, yet not with such order and strength as he ought, wherefore he hemd him in, in such sort, as hauing lost most of his men, himselfe being soare hurt, hee could hardly recouer Alcalá. To recompence this losse, the Infant Don Henries men, did cut some of the Constables troupes in peeces, in Grifmonda, where notwithstanding he lost Laurence d'Aualos his Chamberlaine, nephew to the Constable Don Ruy Lopes d'Aualos.

The Infant hearing this, went presently to field, marching towards Toledo with fixe hundred horse, ouer-running the country of Escalona, thinking that the Constable would fight with him, but hee stirred not, finding himselfe too weak: wherevpon hee sent to haue the Archbishop his brother to come, and being ioyned together, they went to charge the Infant at Torrijo, who then kept himselfe within his fort, and whilst that they spoiled the Country, euen vnto the gates of Toledo, killing men, and carrying away the prey, he aduertised the King of Nauarre, and the other confederat Lords of his estate, who parted presently from Arealo and Ontiueros, with one thousand two hundred men at armes, and light horse to succour him. The King of Castile being much incensed against the confederates, resolved to seaze vpon the lands, rents, and reuenues of the King of Nauarre, beginning by Medina del Campo, neither did the protestations and threats of the King of Nauarre and his confederates, preuaile any thing, to whom D the King of Castile made no other answer, but that they were all in armes contrary to his commandements, and carried themselves as rebels.

Don Alphonso the sif of that name, and twelfth King of Portugal.

D Vring these tumules in Castile, the realme of Portugal was not without some troubles. After the death of King Edward, his sonne Don Alphonso succeeded him, at the age of six yeares, vnder the gouernment of the Queene Donna Leonor, according to the Fathers testament: but many townes of the realme reiecting the gouernment of a woman, especially a stranger, they intreated the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra, that, as the eldest brother among the Infants of Portugal, hee would take vpon him the sole gouernment of the realme. Many others, more modest, who would not altogether breake the will of the deceased King, were of opinion that hee should gouerne with the Queene. Of the first opinion, were the Infants Don Henry Master of Christus, and Don John Maister of Saint Ieames, Don Pedro excusing himselfe of this charge, he perswaded Don John to gouerne with the Queene Mother, wherewith he should bee well satisfied: but Don John answered him freely, that it was not for him, who was the yongest amongst the brethren, to gouerne: but that hee Don Pedro and Don Henry, should aduise to take the gouernment of the realme vpon them, as Princes of Portugal, and worthy of such a charge, and that they should not suffer a strange woman to rule ouer them, being an infamous thing, vnworthy of the house of Portugal, and preiudiciall to the realme: and that they must not regard that which the deceased King had ordained if it were found

11
Portugal.

Gouernment
of a woman
cause of contention.

found vnrasonable and vnjust. They that held the party of the widow Queene Donna A Leonor, were D. Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, with his sonnes D. Diego Earle of Oren and Marquis of Valencia, and D. Fernand Earle of Arrojolos, and Marquis of Villanucoia, and with them the Archbishop of Lisbon, whose sister D. Constance, the Earle D. Alphonso had taken to his second wife; D. Nugno de Goyz prior of Saint Iohn, and D. Alphonso Lord of Calcais: who with many others their adherents, who aduised the Queene not to giue ouer the government in the which the King her husband had placed her:
 vpon which quarrell the Estates of the realme were called, by the Princes and Noblemen, holding the chiefe dignities, where by the diligence of the Infant D. Henry, there was this order taken. That the Queene mother should be gouernesse of her childrens persons, and of their reuenues and patrimonies, estates and Offices of the Kings house:
 and that the Infant D. Pedro should haue care of the defence of the realme, and of armes, and D. Fernand Earle of Arrojolos, of matters belonging vnto Iustice: This did nothing please the Queene, being desirous to command alone: wherefore the contention being greater then before, they made many new assemblies of the Estates: so as the last conclusion was, that the Infant D. Pedro should gouerne alone: the which was instantly required of all men in general: so as the Queene was wholly dispossessed of the authority, whereof she might haue retained a good part: Being thus frustrate, with extreme griefe, she had recourse to womanish practices, complaints and accusations, as well to the Noblemen of the Realme, as to the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon her brethren: and in the end she came sorrowfull and discontented to the King of Castile, her cousin and brother in law, this yeere 1441. to complaine of the Infant D. Pedro, and to craue aide against him. She found the king at Gomes Naharra, a Borrough of Medina del Campo, troubled with the quarrels of the King of Nauarre, and other Noblemen, against the constable, so as she could not obtayne any thing.

Castile.

It was at such time when as the King of Nauarre, and the confederat Lords were gone into the Realme of Toledo to succor the Infant D. Henry, who hearing that the King proceeded against them with rigour, repaist the mountaines, and came towards Medina del Campo, and Olmedo, townes belonging to the King of Nauarre, whereof he of Castile had seized. Approching neere to Medina, and waiting the time in demands and answers, they of Olmedo receiued the King of Nauarres men, whose army encreasing daily, he came to lodge within two bow shootes of Medina, into the which the constable, the Archbishop of Toledo his brother, and D. Iohn of Soto Major Maister of Alcantara, entered the night following with 1600. horse, so as for many daies there were diuers skirmishes amongst them, in the which many good men were slaine and hurt.
 The Queenes of Castile and Portugall, sisters, and the Prince D. Henry propounded certain conditions of peace, whereon there was long debate, without any frute. But whilst they were busie intreating and debating of these Articles, the King of Nauarre (who had Aluaro of Bracamont and Fernando Rejan, Knights well affected to his seruice in Medina, ) delt so with them, as one night the constable and his brother beeing in gard and not caring to goe the round themselves, but relying vpon an other, they gaue him entry by a place called Our Lady of Antigua.

Medina del Campo surprised by the confederat Lords and the Constable a most sacke.

The confederats army was then growne to be aboue fise thousand men at armes and light horse, and a great number of foote: wherefore the King of Nauarre and the confederate Lords, entred furiously into the towne with these forces, against the which there was no offer to make defence, for the King knowing well that they had no quarrell to the constable, he commanded him, his brother, the maister of Alcantara, and others of his faction, to saue themselves by an other port, opposite to that where their enemies entred, wherein they shewed themselves nothing obliuate. These being gon, the King retired himselfe to the place of Saint Antolin, without any care or trouble for them that entred, who came presently to kisse his hands, first the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, and other Noblemen and captaines then the King of Nauarre, who as a King, made onely a reuerence, but did not kisse his hand, at which time there was no signe of discontentment, but the King did looke of them all with a cheerefull countenance. The constables lodging and of the rest of his faction were sacked: and the Queenes of Castile
 and

A and Portugall; sisters, did aduertise Don Gomes Gattiere of Toledo Archbishop of Se-uile, and his Nephew Don Fernando Aluarez of Toledo, Earle of Alba, the first of that house which carried that title, and Don Lopes of Bariento Bishop of Segobia, that they should retire from Court, for that they were too much affected to the Constables party, the which they did the next day, and all the Officers which had beene preferred vnto the King by the Constable were dismist. And to make a good end of these troubles, the Kings of Castile and Nauarre, and the other Princes and Noblemen which were at Medina, made a compromise in the hands of Mary Queene of Castile, Don Henry Prince of the Asturia, the Admirall, and of Don Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, who concluded as followeth. That the Constable Don Aluaro de Luna Earle of Saint Stephens, should absent himselfe from Court for the space of fixe yeeres next ensuing, appointing him for his abode, his houses of Saint Martin of Val d'Eglise, or Riaca: That he should not write any letters to the King, but concerning his owne businesse, whereof hee should send a coppie vnto the Queene of Castile and to the Prince her sonne.
 That during the said time, hee should not make any league nor confederacie: That all Knights which had followed him should retire to their houses, and none to remaine about him but his household seruants: Notwithstanding the Constable, and the Archbishop of Toledo his brother, might retaine for the space of thirty daies after the notice giuen them of this sentence, either of them fifty men at armes: And for the execution thereof, the Constable should leaue in deposito the castles of St. Stephen, Aillon, Maderuelo, Ganga, Rojas, Maqueda, Montalban, Castle of Bayuela and Escalona, which places should remaine during the said fixe yeeres in the custody of certain Knights. And for a greater caution, the Constable should deliuer Don Iohn de Luna his sonne and heire in hostage to the Earle of Benauent, during the said time: That after the Constable should haue accomplished the aboue mentioned conditions, the townes and places which the confederats held, belonging vnto the King, should be yeelded vp, and the garrisons depart: That the King should restore priuate men to their goods, honours, and dignities, whereof hee had deprived them, by reason of these troubles.
 All gifts and grants made by the King, since the first of September, in the yeere D 1438. vnto this present yeere 1441. should be reuoked and held for void, except to certain persons of respect: That all that were partisans to the Constable, should be put out of the Kings counsell, who should be named by the King, of Nauarre, the Earles of Ledesma and Beneuent, Inigo Lopez of Mendoza, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza: That all souldiars should presently retire, and no longer hold the field: That the King of Castile should recompence him of Nauarre, for the losses he had sustained in his hands in Castile, during the seditions and that he, should pay the souldiars which the King of Nauarre and his partisans had brought by reason thereof. These with some other Articles were concluded the third of Iuly, this yeere 1441. and were confirmed by the king of Castile, thinking thereby to end the confusions, whereinto he like a yong Prince, had plung-E ged his Estate, by fauoring and supporting his mignon to much, who was both indiscreet and insolent, to the contempt of the Princes of his blood, and the chiefe Noblemen of the Kingdome, who notwithstanding vnder colour of providing for the public good, tended all to their priuate. Soone after the King beeing at Castro Xeris, the Licentiate Alphonso Ruiz of Villena came vnto him, with procuration from the Constable, who allowed and accepted of the sentence; requiring to haue men sent to receiue the hostages. After all this the Kings went to Burgos, where they spent sometime in feasts and sports, and to auoide all ialousie which might cause troubles and diuidions amongst the Noblemen they made an accord amongst them that not any one should affect to be more familiar with the King then an other: notwithstanding the Admirall F D. Fredric began to be very gracious with the King of Castile, not without ialousie of the King of Nauarre, who would willingly haue raised some stir, after the accustomed manner, but his impaciency was restrained by the Earle of Castro, his ancient and faith-full seruant, who gaue him to vnderstand, that it must needs redound to his profit, and of other Noblemen of the league.

And to make a stricter bonde, hee aduised him, seeing that Queene Blanche his wife Q 99 was after received the forts of Capuana and Saint Herno by composition; And that Renz A finding that he had need of new forces, leauing a good garrison in Castle Nouo, and a Geneuois called Anthony Caluo to command there, had gone to the Florentines, and to Pope Eugenius, his confederats in Italy, from whom not being able to draw any sufficient aide, he sent word vnto capitaine Caluo, that if he could not hold the fort, he should yeeld it with the best conditions he could, the which was done, and by that meanes the King their maister remained absolute Lord of the chiefe city of the realme, and of the castles, where he had bene received and acknowledged by the Neapolitans for their King, with great pompe and triumph, his aduersary being retired to Marseilles, after that he and his wife had held that realme in suspence and troubles by the space of sixe yeeres. B These newes were pleasing to the King of Castile, who with milde and friendly words seemed to take in good part the admonitions and counsell which the Ambassadors had giuen him in the King of Arragons name. Thus King D. Alphonso remained peaceable possessor of the realme of Naples, in the yeere 1442. after that he had contented for it one and twenty whole yeeres, from the time that he was called from Conscience Queene Isabe. And soone after this conquest, making his peace with Pope Eugenius who had need of his assistance and aide, for the recovery of the Marquise of Ancona, and the which Cont Francis Sforza held, by the meanes of Cardinal Lewis of Padoua, and of the Patriarke of Aquileia, the Pope granted the inuestiture of the realme to him and his, making D. Fernand of Arragon, base sonne to King Alphonso Legitimate to that. C he, hoping to succede in the realme of Naples, and disannulling all other Inuestitures which had bene made by him or his predecessors Popes, to all other Princes whatsoever. In regard whereof, the King did aide the Pope with his forces, against such as opposed themselves in the Marquise, and made him to enjoy it quietly. The King of Arragons Ambassadors did admonish the King of Nauarre priuately, to keepe friendship with the King of Castile, and to doe him seruice: the like admonitions they gaue to the Infant D. Henry, hauing such charge from their maister.

Alphonso king of Arragon murdered in the realme of Naples.

The Noblemen of Castile hauing with such contention plunged the Constable and them of his party in a gulph of miſeres, and the Courtiers hell, which is the disgrace of their Prince, and decay of their authority, they gaue him meanes by their negligence and basenesse, to resolute and to returne to that dignity, from which he was fallne: for every one respecting more his priuate profit, then the publike good, or the maintenance of their league, followed that which he held to be most profitable for himselfe, beginning to iarre, and to haue factions amongst themselves, whereof the Constables friends that were in disgrace, could make vse; wherefore Doctor Pero Ianes, and Alphonso Peres of Buiero, very much affected to the Constable, had meanes to returne to Court. D. Lopes of Barrientos, Bishop of Segobia, besides that he was a very deere friend to the Constable, hauing or fearing to haue some quarrell with D. Iohn de Pacheco, fauorite to Prince Henry, hee exchanged his Bishopricke for that of Auila, with the Cardinal D. Pedro of Cerbantes, for that the Prince did ordinarily remaine at Segobia, it may bee hee would haue this exchange seruice for a colour for that which he politickly pretended, making shew to hate and flie the Prince D. Henry, when as he had most desire to bee in fauour with him, to restore the Constable, and to retire him from the King of Nauarre and the confederats league. Soone after D. Pedro Suarez of Toledo, sonne to D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo Lord of Oropeſa, being fauored by D. Henry Prince of Castile, who was but of a turbulent spirit, fortified himselfe like an enemy in Talauera, the which being made knowne to the King of Castile, who was then at Santa Maria of Nieua, with the King of Nauarre, to celebrate the Annuiuersary of D. Blanch Queene of Nauarre deceased; D. Henry to two Kings marched thither with some troups, and hauing caused the Infant D. Henry to come vnto them, they forced them that held Talauera to yeeld, which place they gaue in regard to D. Fernand of Cerezuela, Archdeacon of Toledo. From thence they went all together to Toledo, where by the way they did visit the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna, at Elcaſtor to Toledo, where by the way they did visit the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna, at Elcaſtor where the King and Queene were his Gossips to a daughter, who was called Isabe, the which did wonderfully discontent the Admirall D. Frederic, and the other confederate Lords. The Commonalties of the Province of Alaua, who had taken armes against the Earle

Polluxy of the Bishop D. Lopes
of Barrientos.

Kings of Ca-
stile and Na- uarre visit the ghele.

A Earle of Castagneda, and D. Anigo Lopes of Mendoza; did much harme vnto the gentlemen of the country, and others, ruining their houses and committing many insolencies, as a brutish people is accustomed to doe, being a meere folly to arme them, how iust so euer the cause be: yea they proceeded so farre, as they did beseege D. Pero Lopes of Ayala, Lieutenant and Gouvernor of Guipuscoa in the towne of Salatierra of Alaua, which did belong vnto him, who seeing himselfe pressed, sent to intreat his Neighbour and kinsman, D. Pero Fernandes of Valasco, Lord of Haro, being then at a village of his, to come and succor him, who hauing sente D. Pero of Ayalas letter, hee endeoured with all speed to releue him, gathering together in lesse then foure daies aboute foure thousand foote and five hundred Lances, with which forces hee marche towards Salatierra: The Commandons being aduertised of his coming, dislodged, yet not so speedily, but hee tooke many, whom he either slue or carried away prisoners, hauing chaled the rest home vnto their townes, and burnt many of their houses.

Dangerous
counsell to arm
a multitude.

Influence of the command
to their passage.

In the yeere 1443, D. Lewis of Guzman, maister of the Knights of the Calatrava died so as the King of Nauarre obtained that place of the King of Castile, for a base sonne of his called D. Alphonso of Arragon: whereof the King hauing written to the Commandons (to whom the election did belong) D. Fernando of Padilla treasurer of the Order (who had great credit among them, and the greater, for that he held D. Iohn Ramires of Guzman great Commander of that Order prisoner euer since the ciuill warre, and would neuer deliuer him, neither by the Kings commandement, nor for the threats of the Princes and Noblemen) wrought so, as without respect to the Kings letters, or to anything else, hee caused himselfe to be chosen maister of the Calatrava, disappointing D. Alphonso of Arragon, and the King of Nauarre his father, of their poulture, who for that cause made great Instance vnto the King, and obtained many letters and commandments to the Commanders, to disannull this election which was fraudulent, violent and against their Orders: for this new maister being chosen, had freed the great Commander, but hee had first made him to allow of his election, and to sweare fealty and homage vnto him, as to his Superior, and maister of the Order. All this preuailing nothing, the King caused the rents and reuenues of Calatrava to be seized on, forbidding all their subiects and vassals, to obey or acknowledge D. Fernando of Padilla, who notwithstanding was fauored and supported by D. Henry Prince of Castile, and other Noblemen, who were somewhat ialous of the King of Nauars greatness. Moreover the King sent the Infant D. Henry of Arragon, with an army, who did beseege this usurper in the fort of the Conuent of Calatrava, where he spent some daies, being defended by a good garrison. At the last the war ended, by an accident which happened to D. Fernando of Padilla, who died, being shot vnadvisedly by one of his Squires, who aymed at the enemy. They that defended the place, hauing lost their maister yeelded vpon composition. The Infant aduertised the King of Castile what had happened, who at the request of the King of Nauarre, did write againe vnto the Commanders to choose D. Alphonso of Arragon, the which was done, but hee enjoyed it little.

1434.

Election pre- posed
forcibly
made.

Usurper en-
joyes his ma- giship.

D. Alphonso
of Arragon
best some to
the King of Nauarre, ma- ster of Calat- raua.

The Court removing from Toledo, to come to Madrigal, the King being at Ramaga, the Prince D. Henry his son did solicit him to imprison Alphonso Peres of Buiero, Fernand de Xeris, Iohn Manuel of Lando, and Pedro of Luxan Grome of the Chamber, for crimes whereof hee accused them, and the King of Nauarre did the like, which was an occasion to chafe againe from Court all the Constables friends, fauorers and dependants, and to change many of the Kings household seruants, yea to giue him so many guards, as he was discontented, yet he had no wil to redresse it, for he was faint-hearted, and had no royall resolution, yea hee endured that D. Henry Henriquez the Admirals brother, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza were continually in his Chamber, to obserue what hee did, and to aduertise the King of Nauarre, and his sonne in law the Prince Don Henry. It is credible that this was the practise of Don Lopes of Barriento, lately Bishop of Segobia, and now of Auila, who sought to giue the confederats some occasion to vse the King rigorously, whereby it should appeare that they held him in vnworthy seruitude, wherewith the King, his sonne the Prince of Asturias, and others whom hee would make friends to the Constable, might bee discontented, as it happened, for this Bishop, being a very polletike man, yf such meanes, as he wonne D. Iohn de Pa. A checo, who was the heart of Prince Henry, procuring him to let the Prince his maister vnderstand, how vnworthy a thing it was for him to continue in their league, who in-treated his father so vnworthely, who hauing chased from court by their seditious armes, the constable, and other most faithfull seruants to the crowne of Castile, ynder collour of some youth, but in effect it was for that they opposed themselves against their tyrannie, which they did build vnder a shew of the publike good, they held the King's person as it were in captiuitie, to whom it was not lawfull to speake, see, nor heare, but by their Organes, no not to conuerse priuately with the Queene his wife, nor with him his sonne, without witness and gards, who went and reported all to them that he did and said: a shamefull thing, and full of contempt, the which he should not suffer, who should be the support of his father, and the hope of all faithfull subjects, nor the greatnesse of the crowne of Castile, and the honour and reputation of their louing the greatnesse of the crowne of Castile, and the honour and reputation of their King: with such perswasions hee induced the Prince D. Henry to leaue the league, the which he did cunningly, as he was counselled by the Bishop, who vied the happy endeuors of Iohn de Pacheco, and by other diuises and meanes, hee drew vnto the constables friendship (who was almost in despair, and resolute, seeing himselfe so pursued, to passe into Portugall) the new Archbishop of Toledo, the Earle of Haro, Alba, Castagneda and Ledesma, who now intituled himselfe Earle of Plaisance, Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, and Pera Aluarez Osorio and other great Noblemen. The better to coher this practise, becing also necessary for the Archbishop of Toledo to dissemble, hauing not yet receiued his Bulls from Rome for his Archbishoprike, hee and his Nephew, the Earle of Alba made a new league, with the King of Nauarre: but the Bulles receiued, and being in quiet possession of the Archbishoprike, they left the league, and ioyned with the constable.

The effects of the Bishops of Auila practises beganne now to appeere, the Earle of Haro hauing complained of the subiection wherein they held the King, vying some word of threatening that he would remedy it: going to Curial to the Earle of Plaisance to conferre with him about it: whereupon the King of Nauarre sent after him to take him, and he had beene taken, notwithstanding that he went by vnknowne waies, it hee had not beene very well mounted, and escaped by the swiftnesse of his horse, into his owne country, where hee leauied men, and invited all his friends to ioine with him in so honourable an enterprize, to free the King from the oppression wherein they held him, so as within few daies hee had gathered together one thousand horse, there being ioyned with him the Earle of Castagneda, and D. Pedro Sarmiento: against whom Don Iohn King of Nauarre sent fiftene hundred Launces, led by the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent, who led Prince Henry with them, who did not yet descouer himselfe, but onely kept these two parties from fighting, making them in some sort friends, and satisfied at that time one of an other, and then hee returned to Segobia. Whilst that the Admirall and Earle of Benauent were absent in this voiage, hauing left the Kings in Tordeillas, Pera Aluarez Osorio of the Bishop of Auila faction, came and presented himselfe before the towne, being accompanied with many souldiars, and did endeavour to enter, but he could not, whereupon he retired.

These things made the King of Nauarre, and the confederates very ielous, that there was some great conspiracy against them, and not able yet to discouer who were the conspirators, to bee the better certified, they sent to intreat the Prince D. Henry to come to Tordeillas, that they might aduise what was to bee done for the totall ruine of the Constable, as they had concluded together.

The Prince hauing therein the Bishops aduice, who demanded nothing more, came with an intent to make knowne vnto the King his father the league which hee had newly made, to free him from Government, and to comfort him. Arriuing at Tordeillas with the Bishop of Auila, Iohn de Pacheco and many other Noblemen, they were receiued by the King of Nauarre, with great demonstration of ioy. At that time there was no meanes for to conferre together, nor to treat of any affaires, for they were readie to celebrate a marriage betwixt the King of Nauarre,

Prince Henry,
 won by the Constables faction.

A Nauarre, and the Admirall Henriques daughter, which were preparing with great state, at the tower of Lobaron, whither all men went.

This marriage was accomplished to the great grieve of Don Charles Prince of Viana, to whose preiudice the king D. Iohn his father, dayned the Realme of Nauar, and wold not leaue it, although it were his inheritance by his mother, which was the cause of great troubles. This Princess D. Isabe was of the bloud royall of Castile, for the Admirall Don Fredrick her father, was sonne to Don Alphonso Henriques, and grand-child to Don Fredrick Master of Saint James, who by the commandement of Don Pedro the cruell his brother, was slaine at Seuille. At the same time Don Fernand of Auila, Chamber-laine to the Infant D. Henry, was sent to bring Donna Beatriz, sister to Don Alphonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, to Cordoua, being promised to the Infant his master: in which citie that marriage was celebrated, of whom came D. Henry of Arragon, called the Infant of Fortune, or the Fortunate, who came to be Duke of Segorbe.

The Court being returned to Tordeillas, they began to treat of matters against the Constable, whereupon the Prince told the king of Nauarre, that it were good all they of the league were together, to determine of matters of so great importance, the which pleased the king of Nauarre, whereupon there were letters and messengers sent to them that were absent to draw them to Court: and for that Tordeillas would not serue to lodge so great an assembly, the towne of Areualo was appointed. The Bishop of Auila was very desirous, that the king and the Prince, father and sonne, might conferre freely together, the which was very difficult: for there were spies set by the king of Nauarre about the kings person in his chamber, and in all other places, who did obserue what hee sayd or did, and yet the king could not helpe it: yet the bishop found meanes to aduise him, that he should faime himselfe to be somewhat sicke, and that vpon this occasion, the Prince, ynder colour to visit him, and to do his duty, might deliuer many things vnto him which might please him. The king kept his bed for a time, whereby the Prince had opportunity to discouer the new league vnto him, and to assure him, that the Constable whom he had chased away, should yet deliuer him from the captiuitie wherein they held him: wherewith the king was so ioyed, as he could not containe himselfe, but hee did outwardly shew the hope which he had conceiued, which made the gards suspect, that the father and the sonne had had some discourse of great consequence, whereof they did aduertise the King of Nauarre, who was very ielous of the bishop. They caused the Ad-mirall to aske the king, what good discourse the Prince his sonne had vied, wherewith he was so ioyed. The king wisely concealing what he knew, answered, that they were tales of the follies of youth.

This busines hauing succeeded wishfully for the Bishop, the Prince tooke his leaue of the two kings, his father and father-in-law, and so returned to Segobia, to attend (sayd
 he) the time of the assembly at Areualo: but it was the least of his thoughts, for he had a speciall desire to breake it if he could: whereof hauing conferred by the way with the bishop of Auila his Councillor, he (who was a cunning polittike man) found this expedient: he went to Areualo, being a towne of his Diocesse of Auila, with a great trayne, and finding the lodgings already marked, for the Noblemen that should come thither, he caused some to quarrell with the harbingers, and with such of the traine as were already come, so as he put the towne into a great confusion. Many of those which were already lodged, were forced to depart, and to giue place to my Lord Bishop and his men, and then seeking for other lodging, there grew other contentions among them of the Court, so as the king of Nauarre being aduertised thereof, hee was much discontented, and growing more suspitious, he would not go to that assembly, fearing some practise against him. The Prince hauing what he demanded, he wrote vnto the king of Nauarre, complaining much that he was not come to the assembly at Areualo: wherefore they sent the Admirall Don Fredrick vnto him to Saint Mary de Nyeua to draw him to another assembly, whereunto the Prince pretending some excuses, the Admirall told him, that if he came not, it would seeme, that he meant to withdraw himselfe from the vnion of the king of Nauarre and the confederate Lords.

The Prince pretended many reasons hee had for it, but he dissembled his intent: the Admirall

14
 Nauarre.
 Marriage of the king of Nauar
 with D. Isabe
 Henriques.

Admirall intreated him for an interview with his father in-law at Olmedo, whereof hee excused himselfe as honestly as he could, and sent backe the Admirall very much discontented: for he spake not but as he was aduised by the Bishop of Auila, who wished him not to enter into Olmedo, nor into any place belonging to the king of Nauarre. The Bishop being vigilant and aduise to do any thing that might giue forme and effect to his enterprise, for the restoring of the Constable to his first fauour and authoritie, posted to Alba de Tormes, whereas he made the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and the Earle of Alba his Nephew good friends and seruants to the Prince Don Henry, aduertising them of all that had bene done, and he gaue order in Alba, that the like aduise should be giuen vnto Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita and Buyrago, and being returned to Segobia, he caused the Prince to write vnto him, and to promise to fauour him in the question he had with the king of Castile for the Asturias of Santillana. During these practises in Castile, the Infant Don Henry hauing seized vpon the citie of Cordoua, he sought to draw the townes of Andalusia into the Confederates power, and had attempted to seaze vpon Seuille; where finding resistance, he layed siege vnto it, and did greatly press it, at such time as the Prince D. Henry did publish his resolution openly in the citie of Auila, which was, to continue vnder the obedience of the king his father, and to secke to free him from them that did oppress him: wherefore they of Seuille, vpon this newes, tooke courage, and did valiantly repulse the Infant. The Earles of Castagneda and Haro, with many other Knights, hearing of this resolution, sent instantly to present their seruice vnto the Prince.

The king of Nauarre seeing this storme approach, fought by all meanes to pacifie the Prince, promising him all that he had formerly demanded, and not obtayned, but it was too late. He that carried this message vnto the Prince for the king of Nauarre, was a wife man, called Aluaz Garcia of Saint Mary, who hath written part of the Chronicle of this King of Castile. The king of Nauarre and his confederates seeing the Princes desires, and that they must come to force, they assembled men from all parts, and so did the Prince: for the Constable, the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and the Earle of Alba came presently to him to Auila, whereas they might haue some fiftene hundred horse, not sufficient to beseege Tordesillas where the king was: wherefore they resolved to go towards Burgos, to ioyne with the Earles of Haro, Castagneda, and Plaisance, and with Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza: whereof the King of Nauarre being aduertised, hauing already leued about two thousand horse, he led the king to Portillo, and hauing there left him in the guard of the Earle of Castro, he marched with his troups towards Burgos, being resolved to fight with the Prince and his men, and he came and camped at Pampliega in the territorie of Burgos. The Prince who was within the citie, and had already about three thousand horse and foure thousand foote, sallied forth, and came and lodged within view of his father in-lawes armie. They expected nothing but a bloudie battell betwixt these two factions: but they retired without any blowes, but only a light skirmish, the which happened, whilest they did capitulate, at the solicitation of some good religious men: at which treatie the king of Nauarre did in a manner yeeld to all that the Prince required, leauing the king of Castile in full libertie to restore his Officers, and to do what he pleased. The king of Nauarre finding no meanes to make an accord being the weaker, he dislodged in the night, without sound of trumpet, and retired to Palenzuela. The king of Castile being ill guarded in Portillo, vnder colour of going a hunting escaped from the Earle of Castro, and came to Villedalir, whither the Bishop of Auila came presently vnto the Princes and the Confederates campe, which was neere vnto Palenzuela. The king shewed the best countenance he could vnto the Bishop, and acknowledging the good seruice he had done him in his deliuerie, he made him infinit promises. The King of Nauarre, the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, D. Pedro of Quignones, and other heads of their faction, seeing themselves low, and at their enemies mercy, they resolved to retire themselves, euery one to his house, and there to attend the euent: wherefore the King of Nauarre, who for some years had not seen Nauar, went thither to provide men and meanes, to enter speedily with great forces into Castile, against his aduersaries.

Being come into his Realme, he first of all furnished his frontier places, with all things necessary

King of Castile deliuered.

King of Nauarres league dispersed.

15.
Nauarre.

A necessarie, to resist the king of Castiles attempts: who had no great desire to pursue him into Nauarre, but onely to spoyle him and his, of that which they held in Castile, and first of all he tooke Medina del campo, and Olmedo: then the towne of Pegnassiel was taken by force and sacked, and the castle yeilded by composition, Roa and Aranda of Duero opened their gates vnto the Prince, who with the Constable (hauing nothing that made head in Castile the old) past into Andalusia, against the Infant Don Henry, and forced him to flee into the country of Murcia, where he fortified himselfe in Lorca, vntill that the Prince was retired into Castile, and then he passed into Arragon, and so ioynd with the king of Nauarres brother, who leued men to returne into Castile. In the yeare 1445. dyed the Queenes Leonsa of Portugal, and Mary of Castile, sisters to the king of Nauarre, not without suspition of poyson: the Queene of Portugal was carried from Toledo, where she dyed, to the Monasterie of S. Mary of the battell: and Queene Mary dying at Villacastin a burrough of Segobia, was interred in the Monasterie of Guadalupe. Almost at the same time dyed Lope of Mendoza, Arch-bishop of Seuille, whose place was giuen to Don Aluaz of Osorno, Bishop of Cuenca, and his Bishopricke was conferred to Don Lopes of Barriento bishop of Auila, the which was giuen to Alphonso of Fonseca, such changes made the Pastors of Spaine, seeking the best reuenues. In the spring-time the king of Nauar entered into Castile by Aiença, with foure hundred horse, and five hundred foot: where at his first entry, he tooke Torrija, Alcala of Henares, Alcala the old, and Saint Torquar, whither the Infant D. Henry his brother came with 500 men at armes.

These newes made the king go from Medina into the Realme of Toledo, where hauing gathered together all the souldiers he could, hee marched that way, where as hee thought to find the King of Nauarre, and comming neere to Alcala of Henares the towne was yeilded to him. There the King of Nauarre presented himselfe to fight, but he of Castile would not accept the battell: wherefore the King of Nauarre, and Don Henry past the port or mount of Tablada, and led their army to Olmedo, where as the gates being shut, and resistance made, they entered by force, and hauing caused informations to be made against them that were culpable, Doctor Fuente, and two other Gentlemen were condemned to dye, and were executed. The King of Castile following the king of Nauarre, came and camped at the milles of the Abbey, within a little league of Olmedo, hauing in his army the Prince his sonne, the Constable, the Earle of Alba, D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Don Lope of Barrientos, newly made Bishop of Cuenca, and then the Earle of Haro came and ioynd with him. On the other side the Admirall, the Earles of Benauent and Castro, Don Pedro of Quignones, D. John of Tobar, being sent by the King of Nauarre, entered into Olmedo with a thousand horse, the which being ioynd to them which the king of Nauarre and the Infant had brought, and gathered together, made about fise and twenty hundred horse.

Matters being readie to be decided by an ineuitable battell, the king of Nauarre hauing no will to hazard himselfe, hee demanded a parle of the king of Castile, of some Knights of either part, the which being granted, the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent of the one side, and the Bishop of Cuenca, and the Constable on the other, conferred together many times, the King of Nauarre in a manner demanding no other thing, but that they should restore to him the Infant D. Henry, the Earle of Castro, and others of the league, their lands and estates: but as for the gouernement of the Realme, and quarrels with the Constable, hee made not any mention. The Bishop vying his accustomed policy, prolonged this treaty all he could, knowing that D. Gustierre of Soto-major master of Alcantara, should come within few daies to the campe with sixe hundred horse, by which supply the king of Castile being euery way the stronger, he did hope to see his enemies wholly defeated, and forced to yeeld to his and the Constables mercie. The conference being ended without any conclusion, the king of Nauarre, and the confederates, sent Lope of Angulo, and the Licentiat Caellar his Chancellor, to the campe, to acquaint the king of Castile with the miseries and losses which do follow a battell, whereunto the Constable, respecting only his priuate interest, aspired tyrannously, for the fruits which hee gaped after by the death of the best Knights of Castile: wherefore hee should do

An. 1445.
D also of two Queens
sister-in-lawes.

EA. 1445.
B. 1445.

confederates sisters in lawes.

Demand of the confederates of
the King of
Castile.

do a thing worthe of himselfe, to chafe away this man, arrogant of the authoritie which A he held vnworthily, and decree that they might bee heard in iustice, in some citie or o- ther place of the Realme, whither they shold come like men of peace, not bringing with them aboue ten men vpon moyles: else they protested, that they would make their com- plaints vnto the Pope, and that the miseries which should follow, should be by his fault. The king answered, that he would take order, requiring to haue this demand in writing.

Prince Henry made to vnto- come away.

Two dayes after Prince Henry going to view Olmedo, with certaine light horse, hee was charged by the enemies who fallyed out of the towne, who made him to flee shamefully to the campe, the which did so much displease the king his father, as instantly refusing to heare any more speech of an accord, he caused his Standard to be displayed, and his men to be put into battell: the Constable leading the foreward with eight hundred men at armes: the Prince the battell with foure hundred men at armes, and the king the reere- ward with sixe hundred men at armes, besides the light horsemen, which were very many and diuided into these ordonances, the which hee made to stand firme aboue an hower, in view of Olmedo, to see if the king of Nauarre would come forth: who being won- derfully incensed at this brauado, although he had not equal forces to his aduersarie, yet like a courageous Prince, he would needs go forth to fight, contrarie to the aduice of many, it being late, opposing his squadron, and that which the Earle of Castro led against Prince Henry, and the Infant his brother, the Admirall, the Earle of Benaunt, Pe- dro of Quignones, and Fernand Lopes of Saldaigne, with the rest of the forces against the

Battel of Ol- medo lost by the king of Nauarre

Constable of Castile: and so began the battell about two houres before Sunne-setting, whereas the king of Nauarre and the confederates, notwithstanding their endeauours, were vanquished: and it was happie for them that approaching night parted them, and kept the victors from pursuing of their enemies: so as notwithstanding that they did fight with great resolution and oblinacie, yet there were but feuen and thirtie slaine vpon the place, and about two hundred dyed after, of such as had bene wounded in the batel. The King of Nauarre and his brother D. Henry (who was fore hurt in the left hand) re- tired to Olmedo: the Earle of Benaunt fled as farre as Pedraza: the Admirall was taken by a Squire called Peter of Carera, who notwithstanding brought him to his owne house, at the tower of Lobaton: many Noblemen and others, in number aboue two hundred were taken. Among which the chiefe were, the Earle of Castro, and a sonne of his called Don Pedro of Sandouall, Alphonso of Alarcon, D. Henry Henriquez, the Admirall brother, Fernand of Quignones, Diego of Londogno sonne to Sancho Roarigo of Aualos, nephew to Don Ray Lopes of Aualos, sometimes Constable of Castile, and Don Pedro of Quignones, but he found meanes to escape. The rest of the confederates armie fled to diuers parts, and was not pursued by reason of the night.

Deaths of Don Henry Infant of Arragon.

The King of Castile much pleased with this victorie, sent commandement through- out his whole Realme, that they should make bon fires in signe of ioy, and hee caused a chappell to be built vpon the place of fight, which he named the holy Ghost of the bat- tell, and hauing the day after sent Gutierrez Sanchez of Aluarado prisoner to Villedor, he caused his head to be cut off. Before midnight the king of Nauarre, and the Infant his brother going out of Olmedo, with such forces as they had, they tooke the way of Por- tillo, and by Fonte Duegna they came to Daroca, and from thence to Calatayub, where as the Infant Don Henry dyed of the wound which he had receiued in the hand, it being inflamed: his bodie was at that time layed in the chappell of D. Iohn de Luna, in that city, and afterwards transported to Poblete, whereas the king Don Fernand his father lyes. He left his wife Donna Beatrice with child, who was afterwards deliuered of a son, who was called Don Henry of Arragon, and by surname the Fortunate Infant. His death was the more grievous to the King of Nauarre, for that it happened in an vnreasonable time, af- ter the losse of a battell: besides, seeing himselfe deuiued of such a brother, it did but in- crease his griefe for the late death of his two sisters, the Queenes of Castile and Pogu- gall, there remaying not any of so many children which the deceased King Fernand his father had left, but onely he and Don Alphonso king of Arragon, who was in a manner continually resident at Naples, and had no lawfull children. By this losse the king of Na- uarre was wholly abandoned by the confederate Lords of Castile, who retired home to their

League of the king of Nauarre wholly dissolued.

A their houles to settle their affaires: but the King of Castile, pursued them with all rigour of iustice, causing them to be proclaymed Rebels, and forfeiting their lands to the crown, without respect of any: yet the Prince D. Henry laboured so, as the Admirall was put out of the route of them that were condemned, but not without difficultie. In the castell of Medina of Rio-secco was Donna Theresa of Quignones, with Donna Joane wife to the King of Nauarre. The king being come thither, he receiued the place, and vied the La- dies graciously. By the Princes intercession, who preferred the Admiralls goods, estates, and family, vpon condition that he should returne to the kings seruice, within foure mo- neths: notwithstanding Queene Joane remayned in the king of Castiles power: and the League against the Constable was so disperfed, as there was not any towne or castle, but was yielded vp into the kings power, nor any man of name that durst oppose himselfe: but some retired into Nauarre, and others into remote places, and little frequented by the Court: The Admirall, the Earle of Benaunt, Don Diego Manrique, Gouvernour of Leon, Don Pedro of Quignones, and Iohn Tobar, went towards Nauarre: by reason wher- of the King fearing some enterprise of that side, came to Burgos. Don Aluaro de Luna, the Constable being freed from so great enemies, grew to be in greater credite then e- uer, and whereas he had bene but administrator of Saint James, he was made Master of that Order, which honours were but baytes of misfortune which did follow him, to plunge him in extreme miserie.

Condemna- tions against the confederates.

Constable resto- red to fauour & made Master of S. James.

C He entertained friendship with the Princes of Portugall as his last refuge: and in the time of this warre had procured for the king of Castile a succour of 1600. horse and two thousand foote, the which Don Pedro the third Constable of Portugal, sonne to the Infant Don Pedro, Regent of the Realme, a young Prince but seuentee years old, brought to Majorga after the battell, where they were receiued and feasted with great ioy: but for that there was no vse for them, they were sent backe payed and well satisfied. In this voyage, the Constable treated with the Portugals, to haue the King his master, (whose Queene was dead five moneths before) to marrie with Donna Isabella daughter to the Infant D. Iohn deceased, who had bene Master of Saint James in Portugall, where- with he had not made the king in any sort acquainted, so much hee presumed of the po- wer he had ouer him. This marriage with some other things, were afterwards the cause that the King did hate him mortally.

Beginning of the kings hatred against the constable.

This Prince D. Henry, and many other knights considering how great a losse it would be, if so many great Lords and worthe men should be estranged from Castile, they delt so with the king (who of himselfe was patient and tractable) as they obtained a general pardon for all such as had carried armes with the King of Nauarre: vnto the which these Articles following were annexed:

That a pardon was granted to the Admirall, who should returne into Castile, when he had leaue from the king, and should retire vnto the tower of Lobaton, in the which, and the limits thereof, he should remaine confined two yeares: The Earle of Benaunt had the sentence to remaine in his house at Benaunt two yeares: and that he should take into his charge and guard Donna Joane Queene of Nauarre, and not suffer her after the two yeares expired, to depart without the kings commandement, and the consent of Prince Henry, and after that the Earle himselfe, and that the Admirall had taken an oath of fealty vnto the king, to serue him against all men, according to the lawes of Castile. These things being thus concluded, the King being at Burgos, he gaue the title of Mar- quis of Santillana, to Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, for his good and acceptable seruice: to Don Iohn de Pacheco in fauour of the Prince, the title of Marquis of Villena: the gou- ernement of the citie of Burgos, held till that time by the Earle of Plasencia, was gi- uen to Iohn of Luxan. Not onely the king of Nauarre, but his sonne the Prince Don Charles, yea Don Alphonso of Arragon, Master of Calatrava, lost at this time all they had in Castile. Don Pedro Giron, brother to Don Iohn de Pacheco, was made Master of Calatrava by the king, being at Auila, and Don Alphonso, who was retired into Nauarre with his father, deuiued thereof: yet D. Iohn Ramirez of Guzman great Commander of the Order, tooke vpon him the title of Master, against D. Pedro Giron: which contention was afterwards reconciled by the Princes authority and others.

Pardon gran- ted to the con- federates: fled into Nauarre, and into other places.

and fūe moneths, the rest of his dayes hee passed with the title of Cardinall of Santa A Sabina.

1448.

The reason which drew the king of Castile in such hast to Vailledolit, was, for that hee had bene aduertised there were some knights would stirre vp new troubles: thither came Ambassadors againe to him from Arragon, in the beginning of the yeare, 1448, who hauing treated of many things, in the end they concluded a truce for seuen moneths, betwixt Castile and Nauarre: whereof the garrisons of Nauarre, being not aduertised in time, they continuing their hostility in Castile, they surprized the towne of S. Cruz of Campezo by scalado, it belonging to Lope of Rojas, whom they carried away, with his wife and many others. And moreouer, the Gouvernour of Albarazin seized vpon the castell of Huclamo, in the Bishoppricke of Cuenca, the which hauing bene ill guarded by the Castilians, was well worke by these, so as Iohn Hurtado of Mendoza, recovered it by the meanes of a Castilian souldier, who was there in gouernement among the Nauarrois.

A combat.

The king of Castile sent into Nauarre to summon Prince Charles in consequence of the truce, to deliuer Don Lope de Rojas, and the towne of Santa Cruz, the which was done. At that time a knight of Bourgondie called Lames of Lalain, did fight a combat, without any cause of quarrell, but onely to make triall of his valour, as it was the manner in those times, against Don Diego de Guzman, brother to the Lord of Torrija, at Vailledolit. Don Diego was fore wounded in the fore-head with a battell-axe, after which they closed, but the King calling his staffe, parted the combat, and did great honour to the Bourguignon.

Traffikes of the Constable Don Aluaro de Luna.

Ambition and couetousnesse, as they say, haue neither bounds nor bottome: the which shewes it selfe chiefly in such as haue the gouernement of great Estates, whereof at that time Don Aluaro de Luna, Constable of Castile was a notable president, who not content with the happinesse to haue scene a dangerous League, conspired to his ruine, by so many Princes, and great Noblemen broken, himselfe restored to the Princes fauour, and to triumph ouer his enemies, but hee would plunge them into the like miserie, as hee had escaped, and wholly gouerne the king and Realme with Don Iohn de Pacheco the Princes Minion, and so diuide all the honours, fauours, and greatnesse of Spaine betwixt them. Don Alphonso of Fonseca, newly made Bishop of Auila, was an apt Councillor for their desaigne, who was of opinion, that they should cause some of the great ones, who were offensive vnto them, to be committed to prison. Hauing therefore mediated an interview of the king and Prince betwixt Tordeillas and Villaverd, the Court being very great and stately, there were apprehended the Earles of Benauent and Alba, Don Pedro and Suero of Quignones, and Don Henry brother to the Admirall Don Frederick (who was also vpon the rowle, but being ill disposed, he came not to this enteruiew) so as hee escaped, and so did Don Diego Gomes of Sandoval, Earle of Castro Xeris, who being either aduertised, or doubting of some practise, stayed at home: and afterwards hauing aduice, that the king came to Aguilar del campo, and the Prince to Lerma, to take the Admirall and him, they both left their houses, and retired to Nauarrette, and from thence passed to Tudele, where the King of Nauarre was, whose faction was the accusation and colour of these imprisonments: the Constable saying moreouer, that they had conspired to kill him.

The Admirall and Earle of Castro, were very kindly entertayned by the King of Nauarre, who led them with him to Sarragossa, where it was resolved, that the Admirall should go to Naples to the King of Arragon, to acquaint him with the gouernement of Castile, and to sollicite him to come into Spayne, to ayde them to recouer their ranks, dignities and lands, or else that he would giue them leaue to vse his forces of Arragon. According to this Councill the Admirall embarked at Barcelona, and went to Naples. The king of Castile hauing no great confidence in Don Diego Manrique, who had the guard of the frontier of Nauarre, he forced him to leaue the forts of Ocon, Naureret, and Treuigno, and gaue them himselfe in guard to the Earle of Haro his Brother-in-law for one yeare. These things thus done, all the lands of them that were absent were seized on, and put into the kings hands, many Noblemen in Court being much offen-

A offended at these violences: but about all others they found the Earle of Albas imprisonment very strange, who had alwaies shewed himselfe a faithfull seruant to the king, and a partizan to the Constable: and euery man examined his conscience: many being terrified, remembring that they had offended the King, or the Prince in some light matters: so as there were retreates made daily from Court without leaue, with other confusions, which made the king to see from whence the mischief came: besides, throughout all Spaine they spake plainly and boldly, that the Constables ambitious desire to raigne in Spain, had caused this tumult in Court, and so wronged the Noblemen that were prisoners. Don Alphonso King of Portugall, sonne to Donna, Leonora sister to the king of Nauarre, being dead in Castile, as it was thought, of payson, beganne to apprehend by the Constable: wherewith the king of Castile being moued, hee had a desire to seize vpon the Constable: yet distrusting the inconstancie of the Prince his sonne, he durst not do it.

There were some troupes of horse and foote sent to the frontiers of Nauarre and Granado, especially against the Moores, who spoyle the Countrie of Murcia, King Mahomet Aben-Ozman being solicited by the King of Nauarre, to do the worst hee could to thie of a Christian Prince, yet vsuall among the Princes of this world, that are at warre, who oftentimes make religion a vaile to couer their couetous, and inordinate passions and affections.

18. Moores of Granada incited by the king of Nauarre against Castile.

Mahomet Coxo, the 17. king of Granado.

D His Mahomet called Coxo, being come to the Crowne of Granado, by the violence hee vsed against his vnkle Mahomet, maintained himselfe with the like art, wheremany of the Knights of Granado being incontent, they retired themselves to Montefrio, a place which onely reiected the command of this tyrant, being held by Andaluz, who had bene high Marshall to King Mahomet the left-handed, who enterrayned anemie to King Coxo, to dispossesse him of the Crowne, as hee had done his vnkle.

It was the Infant Aben Ismael, who hauing followed the warre in the seruice of the King of Castile, had retired himselfe, with his leaue and fauour, to Montefrio, to this Marshall, and there had bene saluted for King, yet weak, and ill provided to make any attempt against Granado, and the Alhambra, the seate royall, which was held by Coxo: but God prepared him the meanes, and stirred vp occasions in time. King Coxo embracing the confusions and quarrels of Castile, which made them neglect the guard of the frontiers, and animated by the factions of Nauarre, entering into Andalusia, had taken the towne of Banamaruel by force, and carried away Lahn de Herrera, who commanded in the place, with many other Christian prisoners, after that hee had slaine many: hee then besieged Bancalema, which was defended by Aluaro of Pecellin, the which he forced in like manner, putting all hee found in it to the sword: for which losses the Capitaines were not to bee blamed, for wanting pay they could not keepe the Garrisons of those forts full and compleat: and moreouer, hauing demanded succours from them of Ilaen, Vbeda, and Baeza, they could not obtaine it, by reason of the dissensions and quarrels betwixt the King and the Prince, father and sonne, which could not be so well and conveniently compounded, but vpon euery occasion they brake: so as the time being fauourable for the Moorish King, hee made daily and ordinarie roades into Castile, carrying away infinite spoyles of men, and innumerable multitudes of cattell and other goods, besides the taking and sacking of the Townes of Arcnes, Huescar, Velaz

Exploits of the Moores in Andalusia.

Accord betwixt the King of Ca-stille and Na-
uarre.

Howes of strength resists or therevained
in Guispucoa.

22
Birth of the Infanta D.
Isabella who was Queen of Castile and Arragon.

23
Nauarre.

some (who was light and inconstant) vniued vnto him, cutting off all occasions of A factions and leagues, which might distract him, attending a fit opportunity to make the Constable feele his iust indignation: whilst this was working, D. Henry Henriquez, the Admirals brother, escaped from his prison of Langa, slipping down by a rope tied with many knots. The Ambassadors of the two Kings being met, it was concluded that the Admirall and the Earle of Castro should returne into Castile, to whom and to D.
Henry their goods should be restored; John of Tabor de Luna should bee restored, and D. Alphonsus of Arragon put againe in possession of the Maistership of the Calatrava, which D. Pedro Giron held, against whom the King and all others would aide and support D. Alphonsus, if he would not leaue it. These matters agreed vpon, were partly effected, for D. Pedro Giron, being in possession of the places which belonged to the maistership, and well assisted and followed, was the stronger.

In Guispucoa, they of the towne of Montdragon, being not yet well pleased with D.
Bertrand of Gueuara, did ruine, by a Conuocation of the Commons, and the Kings permission, the tower and strong house of this Knight, which was in a meadow called Cal-diyar, which is to say, the valley of horses, whether many theues and bandoliers retired themselves, whereby the towne was much damnified, and D. Bertrand was condemned in a thousand florins of gold, for their paines that were there assembled. The like was done vnto another house belonging vnto the said Bertrand, neere vnto the towne of Salinas, two leagues from Montdragon. Many of Pedro Sarmientos soldiars being laid hold on, in diuers parts of Castile, they were executed, yea a Gonner who had shot at the herauld, which the King had sent to summon the city of Toledo, who was drawne and quartered.

In the yeere 1451. Queene Isabella was deliuered of a daughter at Madrigal, who was also named Isabel, shee was Queene by inheritance of Castile and Leon, and wife to D.
Fernand King of Arragon, a Princeesse indowed with great vertues. The accord made betwixt the King of Castile and the Noblemen did not hold long, for the Prince D.
Henry had his private opinions, supporting D. Pedro Giron, Maister of the Calatrava, against D. Alphonsus of Arragon, which made his attempts to returne into the Maistership vaine. D. Pedro at the instigation of the Toledans, seized vpon Torrijos and Orgas, places belonging to D. Alphonsus of Guzman, chiefe Marshal of Seule. The Admirall and the Earle of Castro, finding no safety for their persons in Castile, returned into Na-uarre, and the rather for that they performed little, of many things which they had promised them. The Prince D. Henry caused the Earle of Alba and D. Pedro of Quignones to be conducted to the castle of Toledo, commanding they should bee well kept for whole deliuey the people of Toledo, being turbulent, made great stirres, but without effect, yet within few daies hee deliuered D. Pedro of Quignones, making him to swear that he would follow him, and serue him well and faithfully: for they prepared to make warre against Nauarre, causing him to promise to imploy himselfe, to draw the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent to his seruice, who had either of them married a sister of D. Pedros. The Court being at Zamora, the King propounded to his Councell, in the presence of the great men of Castile, an accusation against Pedro Sarmiento, who was, by the aduice of them all, condemned as a rebell and guilty of high treason: which sentence being confirmed by the Pope, they did confiscate all his goods, and they did seize to the Kings vse vpon Salinas of Agnana, Ocio, Pont Lara, and other places of his in Guispucoa, Alaua, Biscay and elsewhere in Castile. From Zamora the King came to Toledo (being at it seemed in good termes with the Prince his sonne) to goe and make warre against the King of Nauarre, giuing the Government of that city to the Constable, who at his departure left D. Lewis de la Cerde, one of his breeding vp there, and did accompany the Prince, who marched towards the frontiers of Nauarre.

The Castilian army entred into Nauarre by Viana which they could not force; the King of Nauarre hauing well furnished and fortified the places of the frontier, and therefore they past to Torralba, where the garrison making a furious fallie vpon the Casti-lans, had almost put them in disorder, and to flight, D. John of Beaumont prior of Saint Iohn in the realme of Nauarre, being Gouvernor in Torralba. Finally he defended it so well,

A well as they left it, and going through the territory of Berrueca, they went and besieged Estella, whereas Lope de Baquedan was Gouverneur for the King of Nauarre. There the King of Castile came and ioyned with the Prince his sonne, bringing a great power with him.

It is likely that the castle of Buradon was taken and razed at this voyage: whereas the Prince D. Charles, who with the royall counsell gouerned the realme in the absence of the King his father, was so greued, being the best fort of Nauarre, as hee held the whole realme to be lost: and they say, that as one out of hope, hee tooke a deuice of two grey-hounds gnawing of a bone, signifying, that the realme of Nauarre, figured by the bone, is situated betwixt Castile and France, and that the Kings of these realmes, which were the two grey-hounds did either of them deuour of his side. The city of Estella being furiously batted and assaulted, the Prince D. Charles was of opinion to goe and speake with the King and Prince, in their campe; hauing therefore obtained a passport, he was courteously receiued by them, and his well-spoken reasons so fauourably heard, as they were in a manner forced by his modesty and good behaviour to raise the siege, the which a great army could hardly haue done: so great force hath vertue, which is fashioned by good education, in a Noble disposition; and in truth, there was not to bee found (according to the report of Authors) in that age, a more generous Prince nor better taught, then D. Charles of Nauar: for besides the naturall gifts of beauty, mildnesse, affability to all men, and greatnesse of courage at need, he was learned in the Scriptures, which gouerned his manners, hauing also the knowledge of many good & commendable sciences, by the which he was admirable in his life time, and famous after his death: Hee loued poesie, hee was well read in Histories, and a subtil Philosopher for his young yeeres: so as he translated Aristotles Ethikes into the Castilian tongue, turned into Latin by Leonard Aretin, who flourished at that time: wherein hee shewed great dexteritee and iudgement, treating of that subiect in such fit termes, as without all doubt Aristotle hath not written better in Greeke, nor Aretin so well in his traduction in Latin: this book was dedicated by him to his vnclie D. Alphonsus of King of Arragon. Moreouer hee did write a breuif Chronicle of the Kings of Nauarre his Progenitors, beginning with the D most ancient time, vnto King D. Inigo Arista, and from thence hath continued the History vnto the reigne of King Charles his Grandfather, which Chronicle is to bee found at this day in written hand, but full of errors, made by them that haue copied it, for it was neuer printed. He did also write some verses, imploying the time which he could spare in the government of the realme, in these honest exercises: so as this Prince was cherished, beloued and blest of euery man, but of his own father, of whom he demanded the realme of Nauarre, being his mothers Inheritance, which bred him great troubles, and aduersity, wherein he made proofe of his courage and singular patience, the which was better knowne and lamented after his death.

The King of Castile and the Prince his sonne hauing raised his siege from before Estella, left Nauarre, without doing any other harme, and returned to Burgos, from whence soone after they led an army against Palenquela, whereas D. Alphonsus Henriquez, the Constables sonne, had fortified himselfe, and committed infinite spoiles round about. The siege being before this place, the Constable going neere the walles, to view the situation thereof, a servant of the Admirals, called Fernand Tremigno, sallied out of the towne, with thirty men well armed, who came and charged the Constable and them that were with him (being vnarmed) so suddenly, as they put them all in danger of their liues. It behoued the Constable to shew his resolution, who like a valiant and hardy Knight (as in deed hee was) with his rapier and cloake, made head against this troupe, and the rest by his example putting themselves also in defence endured the charge, vntill that succors came vnto them from the next lodging of the army; which made the enemies to turne head; and retire towards the towne with some losse, the which yielded afterwards vpon composition. From thence the King went vnto Madrigal, where hee had newes that the affaires vpon the Moores frontier succeeded venie well.

King Mahomet Aben Ozmen, called Coxo, that is to say, the Halting, had made offer to
the Deuice of two grey-hounds gnawing of a bone carried by the Prince

of Nauarre.

Vertues of D.
Charles Prince
of Nauarre.

VPrintings of Prince Charles.

The Constable
charged and in danger so bee saue.

Moores,

Moors defeated here unto Arcos.

An. 1452.

Another defeat of the Moors.

24 Nauarre.

An. 1453.

25 Castile.

the King of Nauarre, to fauour his quarrels, promising that when he should inuelt Castile by Nauarre and Arragon he would enter by Andalusia, and assaile the city of Cordoua with all the power of his realme. This Moore hearing afterwards that there had bene some accord made betwixt the Christian Princes, did not forbear to make waie on his part withall violence, sending troupes of horse and foot diuers waies to spoile, whereof a band of six hundred horse and eight hundred foot were encountered nere vnto Arcos, by D. John Ponce de Leon, Earle of Arcos, who made a notable slaughter. This Nobleman being somewhat sickly in Marchena, had bene aduertised of the disorder which these spoilers caused by a Christian renegado, sometimes called Benedict of Chinchilla, and then he was named Manfarres: wherevpon drawing together about 300. horse and 600. foot, he went that way, being led by his spy, where hauing marcht foureteen leagues that day and night, he came the next day where the Moors were, who expected him not, who hauing put their foot-men before, to recover some place of safety, the horsemen made head against the Christians, and fought long, whilst that their foot-reited: but in the end the Earle of Arcos had the victory, there being aboue four hundred horsemen slaine vpon the place, and five and fifty taken prisoners, with a hundred good horses offeruice. The Moors fainted not for this route, but within a while after, and the same yeere 1452. they entred by Murcia, hoping to haue better successe in that country, being six hundred horse and fiftene hundred foote, who hauing ruined a great part of the country, using all kinds of cruelty, they draue away aboue 40000. head of cattail great and small, and about fifty prisoners: whereof D. Alphonso Fajardo being aduertised, hee wrote speedily to D. Diego of Ribera, Governour of Murcia, Marshall of the Kings lodging, that he should come forth of the city with all that were fit to beare armes, the which he did presently, and came to Lorca with seuentie horse and fuch hundred foote, whereas D. Alphonso Fajardo met him with two hundred horse and 1500. foote, with these forces they went to affront the Moors, and charged them, breaking them three times, but they rallied themselves twice againe together, yet at the third they were victors, with the slaughter of aboue eight hundred of their men, and twelve captaines; and of Christians there were forty slaine vpon the place, and aboue two hundred wounded: by which victory, the booy was rescued. There is no other mention made in our Histories of the deeds of this King Mahomet Aben Ozmeh the Lame, but that hee was depriued of his Realme by the Infant Aben-Ismael, who kept at Malaga, being assisted and fauored by the King of Castile, but the yeere is not certaine.

D. Frederic Henriques Admirall of Castile, being retired againe to his sonne in law the King of Nauarre for that they kept not the promises made in the aboue mentioned accord, did also thinke that it was lawfull for him to say, that for his part hee would not be bound to performe to the King of Castile that which he had sworne and promised: wherefore he led with him Queene Isabel his daughter, and deliuered her to the King her husband. This married couple being together, it was not long before the Queene was with child, the remainyng at a place called Fresne in Arragon: where King John being exceeding glad of these newes, he caused her to goe into Nauarre, there to be deliuered. She made her residence in the towne of Sanguette, the remainder of the yeere 1453. and there she applied her selfe, with the Prince Don Charles, and the Councell of the Realme, to the government of the State, the King her husband consenting thereto, but it was not very pleasing to many Knights of Nauarre, who were affectionate seruants to the Prince, namely to the family and faction of Beaumont: holding that the authority of a mother in law could neither be good nor profitable for the Prince nor Realme.

The time of the Constables punishment did now approach, the measure of his villanies being full, whereof he himselfe did seeke Iustice, by his impudencie, and vnlimited desire of reuenge. He hated D. Pedro of Estuniga Earle of Plaisance deadly, and was in like manner hated by him. The Constable laied an ambush for this Earle, to take him prisoner, which was the greatest matter he could doe to be reuenged his mighty enemies; for being once taken, it was easie for him who had the authority and force of the Realme in his power, to finde them guilty.

The

A The Earle being aduertised of this practise, he did impart his designe to the Prince, the Marquis of Santillana, and to the Earles of Benauent and Haro, with others: which was, to loose his life, or to make the Constable loose his. The Prince Don Henry made him no answer, as the rest did, who by the negotiation of Diego de Valera, laied a plot amongst them, that the Earle of Plaisance and the Marquis of Santillana, should send their eldest sonnes with five hundred Launces, vnder pretext of a quarrell which was betwixt the Earle of Benauent, and D. Pedro Aluarez Osorio; and that passing nere vnto Vailledolit, whereas the King and the Constable were, they should finde means to seize vpon a gate, & drawing their men into the town, they should take or kil the Constable, publishing, that it was done by the commandement of Prince Henry. But it succeeded not, for the Constable being aduertised hee caused the King to dislodge and led him to Burgos. These things being imparted by the King of Castile to Queene Isabel, who was no friend to the Constable, she embraced this occasion, and induced the King to let these Noblemen doe what they had resolved, the which was easie to effect for that the King was already distast of his Constable.

The Queene did not only this good office, but she did sollicit the confederates to make halt, whilst the time was fit; sending the Countesse of Ribadeo vnto them, vnder colour to visit the Earle of Plaisance her vncler, who had forfeited himselfe in Bejar, carrying letters of credit, who did informe them, as shee was commanded, of the time, place, and means they should hold, to seize vpon the Constable, or to dispatch him. This C Ambassage deliuered vnto the Earle, reioycied him much: and for that he was lame himselfe, he presently sent D. Aluaro of Estuniga his eldest sonne, with Diego of Valera, a Secretary and a Page, to leauy men in Curiel, where they could not for the shortnesse of time assemble aboue seauenty Launces, with the which D. Aluaro went towards Burgos; and going before vpon a Mule, with one man that did attend him, hee entred into the Caste of Burgos, commanding his men to follow after, giuing it out in the Country, that they did belong vnto the Constable, but aboue all, that they should so oblerue the time, as their comming into Burgos should bee by night, and that they should not offer to come into the castle, vntill they had newes from him; the which was duly executed, and these seauenty Knights entred into the castle on Monday at night, the first of May in the yeere 1453. whereas D. Aluaro had already drawne in the same night two hundred of his friends of the towne well armed.

The day following there was an vncertaine brute, that the Constable should bee apprehended, who had many other prefaces of his ruine, if hee could haue fore-seene it. The King being priuy to all these matters, had a conceit that this apprehension could not be made without great scandale, and therefore he sent commandement to D. Aluaro, that hee should returne to Curiel, for that he could not execute that, for the which hee was come, but D. Aluaro, a valiant and hardy Knight, made answer, that vpon his life hee would seize vpon the Constable, and deliuer him vnto him, so he would be pleased to giue him a decree, or warrant to apprehend him, the which the King caused to be made in this forme. D. Aluaro of Estuniga, my Alguazil Mayor, or Marshall, I command you to apprehend the body of D. Aluaro de Luna, Master of Saint James, and if hee offer to defend himselfe, that you kill him. And moreover the King commanded the Reclors and Aldermen of the city to put the people in armes, according to their regiments and bands, and to keepe them in battaile in the Bishops place, at the breake of day. At which time D. Aluaro going out of the castle, to inuelt the Constables lodging, and to take him, hee received diuers commandments from the King, that he should not fight, but only belesege him, and fer guards about his lodging, that he might not escape, which did much discontent him. Comming nere the place, his men beganne to cry, Castile, Castile, for the Kings liberty: At which noyse the Constable came to the windoe, and his men put themselves in defence, many shot, both with bowes and harguebuses, wherewith there were some slaine, and others hurt. D. Aluaro of Estuniga sent often to intreat the King, that hee would giue him leaue to fight, for they flue his men from the windoes of the Constables lodging, but he would neuer grant it. Therevpon arriued D. Alphonso of Carthagea Bishop of Burgos, and Ray Diaz de Mendoça Lord Steward, to whom the Constable, Queene Isabel fauours the Lords against the Constable.

Preface of the Constables and.

Warrant to apprehend the Constable.

Death of D.
John King of Castle.

where the Queene his wife was, leauing the whole government of his Realmes, to the above named Bishop and Prior. His sicknesse increasing, he made his testament, and left to Queene Isabel the city of Soria, with the townes of Madrigal and Aurelano, and to his sonne D. Alonso the administration of the Maistership of Saint Iames, whom he would willingly haue made heire of his crowne, and King of Castile and Leon; if it had bene lawfull, so much he did mislike Prince Henry his eldest son, for his disobedience and lightnesse. To his daughter D. Isabella, he gaue the towne of Cuellar, with a great quantity of gold for her dowry. He did not long surriue his Constable, but died of the violence of his quartan ague, at Vailledol, in Iuly the same yeere 1454, hauing held the Realm 47 yeeres, being 49 yeeres old and five months: his body was for that time lied in the Monastery of S. Pablo of Vailledol, to be transported to the Carthusians of Miraflores at Burgas, as he had ordained by his testament. The Constables death had reconciled the King of Nauarre vnto him, and restored all the other Noblemen to fauour, yea the Admiral D. Frederic, who was then tied into Arragon; notwithstanding hauing made to much hast to re-enter into Castile, without an ample licence from the King, hee had by commandment to goe backe, and not to returne into Castile, yelless he were sent for, vpon great penalties. This King had refused to make warre against D. Alonso King of Portugal, for the deuoureries which he made vpon the Westerne coast of Affrike, beyond Cap Verd, towards Guinee, saying these conquests did belong to the crowne of Castile, but drew brake of this desaigne, and continued the peace of Portugal.

27
Portugal.

The Estate of which Realme after the death of King Edward had bene gouerned by the Infant D. Pedro, in quality of a Regent, chosen by the Estates, by reason of King D. Alphonso young yeeres. D. Pedro had for his greatest Aduersary his brother D. Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, and his sonnes, the Earles of Oren and Arroyolos, notwithstanding which contention, King D. Alphonso beeing come to the age of fixteene yeeres, married at Saint Iren, with Donna Isabella, daughter to the Infant D. Pedro, receiving the nuptial blessing from the hand of D. Fernand Archbishop of Braga. D. Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, sonneto King Iohn, had obtained in the yeere, 1448. of his brother D. Pedro Regent of the realme, although they were in quarrell, the Estate of Brangance, in title of a Duchie, and the castle of Lotero, by the decease of Don Goncalo, who heldall those places.

This good turne was ill requited by the new Duke : for he seeing him make no shew to give over his Regency, notwithstanding that the King had bene declared captable to governe his realme himselfe, and being married, he put a conceit into the Kings head, that the Infant D. Pedro had doe the like to him, that he might seize upon the crowne. For this cause the king did persecute D. Pedro his vncke : so as he forced him to retire to Coimbra, of which hee was Duke. Being much incensed at this injury, hee had certaine practises with them of Lisbon, to give him entry and support in that city, with his partisans and friends, whereof he had many, meaning to rebel against the king his Nephew. These practises being discovered, the king gathered together all the men he could with great secrecy, to surpris D. Pedro upon the point of the execution of his enterprize: and came and encountered him as he was comming to Lisbon, at a place called Aforobeira, where hauing fought with him, vanquished, and flaine him, hee ended those troubles. It may be the Infant was innocent of the death of Queene Leonora: but if it be true that he caused payson to be giuen her, hee was paid with the like money, for hee was flaine with a poisoned arrow. There died many good knights in this battaile, and amongst others D. Alvaro of Almada, Earle of Abranches. Infante Ferdinand in the royall Monastery

They did for a long time refuse to burie the Infants bodie in the royall Monastery of the battraile, an argument of the kings great hatred, and of the Duke of Bragança's against him: yet they had cause to lament him, for they wanted him in the Government; The duke of Bragança loone after demanded the City of Porto, and the towne of Guimaraes of the king, the which hee gaue him: Guimaraes received him, but Porto would not in any sort: for they would maintaine themselves for the king, and so did Portalegre, which the king had giuen vnto the Earle Don

A Sancho of Logrogno, brother to D. Constance, the Duke of Bragança's second wife, being sister also to D. Pedro Archbishop of Lisbon.

In the yeere 1451. Donna Leonora the Kings sister was married to the Emperour Fredrick the third duke of Austria, and the betrothing was in the city of Lisbon, by the Noblemen that were deputed by him, having full power and authority, who afterwards conducted their Emperesse by sea to Pisa, being accompanied by the Marquis of Valencia, by D. Lewis Cortes, Bishop of Coimbra, D. Lope of Almada Earle of Abrantes, and other Noblemen of Portugal: whose marriage was celebrated at Siena, the yeere following 1452. In the which King Alphonso had a sonne by his wife, called D. Iohn, which lived little. That yeere the body of the Infant D. Pedro, yncle and father in law to the King, was taken from Alberca where it had been interred, and transported to the castle of Abrantes, or at the least his bones.

The coasts of Affrike, towards the Westerne and South seas, were at that time discovered by the Portugals, who brought gold from Guinny, whereof King D. Alphonso caused a certaine coyne to be made, which he called Croissats, by reason of the Croissadoe granted by Pope Nicholas the fifth to make warre against the Infidels. D. Aluar Gonsalves Bishop of Lamego, was the bringer of this Croissadoe into Portugal. D. Iohn the second King of Castile, being growne ieaalous of these nauigations and conquests, as I haue said, sought to hinder them, sending word vnto the King Alphonso that they did belong vnto the crowne of Castile, and therefore he did forbid the Portugals to goe thither: any more, else he would make violent warre against him. King Alphonso answered his Ambassadors (who were D. Iohn de Guzman, and Doct<sup>r</sup> Fernand Lopez of Burgos) very mildly, that he had alwaies held that the conquests and decoueries of those coasts did belong vnto the Realme of Portugal: yet he would alwaies, if need were, submit himselfe to iudgement, and would desist, if it were said, that it did belong to any other: and therefore he intreated him that, without good information, hee would not breake the peace betwixt the two realmes: Hereupon the King of Castile died, in the yeere 1454. at which time King Alphonso had a daughter borne, called D. Isaone, which was a very vertuous and religious Princeffe.

D In the end, the body or bones of the Infant D. Pedro, having remained some time in the castle of Arantes, and removed from thence to Saint Eloy at Lisbon, they were buried, at the intercession of the Pope, the Duke of Burgundy, of the Ducheſſe his wife, and of the Queene D. Iſabella, and of many Noblemen and Prelats, in the Monaſtery of the battaile : ſo great account they made of a ſmall matter in theſe ceremonies, as the whole world muſt of force bee therein employed. The funeralls were celebrated with great pompe and ſolemnity.

The end of the nineteenth Booke.

 $Sff_2$

THE

Defeat and
death of the Infant D.<sup>o</sup> Pedro Duke of Coimbr.

Marriage of the Emperor Frederic the 3 and D. Leonora of Portugal

Descouerie, of the coast of Affrik, by the Portugals
which discontented the Castilians,

THE TWENTETH BOOKE of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 Don Henry the fourth of that name, & nineteenth King of Castile, and fortieth of Leon: his disposition and qualities.
- 2 Forgetting of offences, rebellions, and riots past: repealing of the Lords absent from Castile.
- 3 The Government of Castile at this Kings coming to the Crowne.
- 4 Warres against the Moores.
- 5 The divorce of D. Henry the vnhabile King of Castile, with his second marriage.
- 6 Quarrels betwene the Prince D. Charles of Nauarre, and Queene Ioane his mother in law. Partialities of Beaumont and Grammont in Nauarre: warre betwene the father and the sonne.
- 7 Last deeds of the King of Arragon, D. Alphonso the fifth, his royall disposition and qualities.
- 8 Commotions in Biscay.
- 9 Continuance of the warres against the Moores.
- 10 Advancement of diuers of meane condition in the Court of Castile.
- 11 Infidelities of D. Iohn of Pacheco Marguis of Villena.
- 12 Domestickall affaires of D. Henry the vnhabile King of Castile, his loues, and vanities.
- 13 D. Iohn the second of that name, the eighteenth King of Arragon: troubles betwene him, and the Prince D. Charles his sonne.
- 14 Affaires of Castile: hatred and enuies of Court.
- 15 Enterprises of the Prince D. Charles against the King Don Iohn his father: his overthrow and imprisonment: and of that which followed afterward, euē untill his deliuey and death.
- 16 The warres of Granada.
- 17 Government of Castile, and of the affaires of Court.
- 18 Warre betwene Castile and Arragon.
- 19 Behaniours of King Henry the vnhabile, and of Queene Ioane his wife: the birth of D. Ioane the supposed Infants.
- 20 Sedition and ciuill warre in Catallogna, with the rebellion of the Barcelonnois: and pawning of the Earldome of Rossillon to the French King.
- 21 Galton de Foix sonne in law to the King of Arragon and Nauarre his behaniour towards his sister in law. Lady Blanche the heire of Nauarre: Continuance of the warre of Catallogna.

22 Arbitr-

- A 22 Arbitrement of King Lewis the eleuenth, for the composing of the differences and disagreements betwene the Kings of Castile and Arragon; and those of Barcelona with their Prince. Enter view of the kings, Lewis of France and Henry of Castile, on the frontiers.
- 23 Murther of a lew collector of the subsidies in Guipuscoa.
- 24 Deceits betwene the Kings of Castile, Nauarre and Arragon.
- 25 D. Pedro of Portugal chosen King by those of Barcelona.
- 26 Slanders and false accusations of bloody Monkes. Quarrels betwene the prelates in Castile.
- 27 Carelesnesse and iniustice of King Henry the fourth of Castile.
- B 28 The house of Bragança: vnclucky enterprise of the King of Portugall D. Alphonso the fifth in Affrica.
- 29 Lady Ioane borne in adultery: promotion of D. Bertrand de la Cueva to the dignity of Master of Saint Iames. Matters of quarrell in Castile: Conspiracies and ciuill warre in that kingdome.
- 30 Dangerous enterprises and treasons of the rebels against Don Henry King of Castile, the King degraded by them, and his brother the prince Don Alphonso lifted up to the regall egiuity.
- 31 Donna Leonora Countesse of Foix, her cruell appetite and desire of gouernment: her behaniour towards her elder sister.
- C 32 Continuance of the warre against the rebels of Catallogna. D. Pedro of Portugal a tumultuous King in Barcelona, his exploits, and death: The taking of Tortosa by the king Don Iohn of Arragon.
- 33 The raising up againe of the king D. Henry of Castile: stirres in Andalusia by D. Pedro Giron. Agreements, recompences and gifts made and giuen by the king to his faithfull friends, and others.

Here follow the names of the Princes raigninge in Spaine in this twentieth Booke.

CASTIL, and LEON. ARRAGON and NAVARRE.

19. D. Henry the 4. and XL.

18. D. Iohn 2. himselfe.

King Iohn the second being dead, his sonne Henry the fourth of that name succeeded him in the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon: who by diuers was surnamed the liberrall: for he was not onely bountifull, but a great water and prodigall, the which he did inherit from the King his father. The surname of vnhabile was giuen vnto him, by reason of his naturall weakenesse, being in the company of women, the which his Queenes had experience of: and yet those which haue written of his stature and proportion, say, that he was strong and bigge, of a manly aspect, fierce and hairy.

This Prince was light-headed, variable & inconsistent: yet for all that offraie demeanure, curteous and affable to his familiar friends, in so much as he neuer said thou to any one

Surnames of liberrall and vnhabile.

Qualities and manners of the King D. Henry
the fourth.

he did euer maintaine his gravity with Princes: he was a louer of peace and did natural-ly put off from himselfe the managing of matters of State. Hee would at one time be bold and confident, without suspicion, and within a while after contrary to himselfe, solitary, and an enemy of company; most of which qualities he had by inheritance from his father. He did take great pleasure in hunting, in musick, and in buildings of houses of pleasure, and he did likewise erect monasteries with other religious houses: he would oftentimes sit and sing in Churches with singing men: he was a great eater, but he did neuer tast any wine. By his bounty and liberality he raised diuers to great honors and riches who were issued from base and obscure families. Thus King Henry, at the age of one and thirty yeeres was proclaimed King at Valodolite in the presence of D. John of Pacheco Marques of Villena (his most priuate and familiar friend) and his brother D. Pedro Giron Maister of Calatrava, D. Ruy Diaz of Mendoza, great Maister of the houlde to the late King D. John, D. Pedro d' Aguilar, Lord of Priego and of Cagnette, the Marthal D. Diego Fernandes of Cordoua Lord of Baena, and other Noblemen which were then at the Court.

The beginning of his reigne was very plausible, by reason that he did enlarge of his owne accord, without being thereto solicited by any one, D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo Earle of Alua, and D. Diego Manriques Earle of Treuigno, restoring them to all their former riches honours, and dignities; and hauing made a certaine speech to the Lords that were then about him, they gaue him great and humble thanks, reputing that demonstration of his clemency as an high fauour, and so with all reuerence kissed his hands. He displaced none of all those which were in any office or place of dignity during the life of his father, but receiued them into his seruice in the selfe same quality that they were in before. In regard whereof all men thought the Kingdome happy being fallne into the hands of so good, so courteous and liberall a Prince, and they did yeeld infinite thanks vnto God, the only giuer of so desired and necessary a fauour for the Realmes of Castile and Leon.

Diuers great Lords so soone as they heard of the death of King John, came in all hast to moune with him for the same, to do him reuerence and to take the oth of allegiance due to the new King. The Ecclesiasticall persons were, D. Alphonso Carrillo d' Acuna, Archbishop of Toledo, D. Rodrigo de Luna Archbishop of Saint James, D. Alphonso Fonseca Archbishop of Seuil, D. Alphonso de Cartagena Bishop of Burgos, Friar Lopes de Barriento Bishop of Cuenca, D. Alphonso de Madrigall, called Tostado the most renowned Bishop of Auila, D. Pedro Baca Bishop of Leon, D. Pedro of Castile Bishop of Palenca, D. Goncalo of Illeca Bishop of Cordoua, D. Lewis d' Acuna Bishop of Segobia, D. Inigo Manrique Bishop of Ouidio with diuers other prelates. The secular Lords were D. Fernand de Velasco Earle of Haro, D. Alphonso Pimentell Earle of Benauent, D. Gaston de la Cerde Earle of Medina Celi, D. Diego Manrique Earle of Treuigno, D. John Manrique Earle of Castagneda, D. Rodrigo Manrique Earle of Paredes, D. Gil yuell Manrique Earle of Oforno, D. Aluaro of Estuniga Earle of Plaisance, whose father was newly dead, much about the time of the Conitables decease, another D. Pedro d' Acuna Earle of Transfamar, D. Pedro d' Acuna Earle of Valencia, another D. Pedro d' Acuna Lord of Duegnas and Tariego, brother to the Archbishop D. Alphonso Carrillo, D. John de Sylas Standard-bearer to the King, and many others, who with the deputies of townes and Provinces there assembled, sware to the Kings fealty and homage after the accustomed manner.

Now the King being desirous to suppress all fore-passed quarrels, and to settle a firme peace in his dominions, did at his coming to the crowne send Ambassadors to the King of Nauarre, who greatly complained because of the confiscation of all his goods in Castile, whereupon it was concluded that in recompence of all the wrongs that hee could pretend, he should haue certaine yearly pensions assigned him out of the ordinary revenue of the Kingdome of Castile, in regard of which assignation he should deliver vp into the King of Castiles hands, the townes of Atienca, La Pegna de Alcazar: it was likewise agreed vpon that the Admiral D. Frederic, D. John of Tovar Lord of Berlanga, likewise agreed vpon that the Admiral D. Frederic, D. John of Tovar Lord of Berlanga, likewise agreed vpon that the children of the Earle of Castro lately dead, and all the Knights and others which

The King of Nauarre and other lords perished, recompensed & respected by the new king
D. Henry.

A were fled out of the Kingdome by reason of the late warres, should be repealed and restored to all their goods and lands. These things were soone effected, and the Admirall with the rest returned to Valodolite to kiss the Kings hands, who receiued them very graciously, and yet for all that did put them in minde of the faith and obedience due to Kings, to the end they might the better remember it afterward, and so with his free pardon dismissed them. And besides all this, the better to confirme his peace on all sides with Christian Princes, he sent Ambassadors into Italy to Alphonso King of Arragon, to the end to renew the leagues and ancient alliances betwixt the crownes of Castile and Arragon, who were receiued and entertained with great honour; a notable argument whereof was, that as the Ambassadors of Castile and the Commissioners of Arragon stood vpon termes who should be first named in the instruments and writings, the King D. Alphonso decreed that the precedence should be giuen to Castile, in regard that he himselfe reigning ouer the Arragonois was a Prince issued from the stocke of Castile, an ancient race of the Kings of Gothes: so that in all the writings which did concerne the league and alliance, the King of Castile was first named, the which his Ambassadors at their returne certified to him and his counsell to their exceeding ioy and contentment.

But notwithstanding these good beginnings, if the reigne of the late King John was turbulent and troublesome, and if euer Spaine was seene to be shaken with furious tempests, it was now most of all by the miserable government of his sonne King Henry, whose clemency and careless gentleness was the onely cause thereof, making him to forget the other part of the duty of a Prince which is iustice, by means whereof he fell into the contempt of the great ones of his Court, and namely of his most priuate ministers, so that both hee and his Kingdome fell into very dangerous streights. At the beginning he and his affaires were gouerned by D. John de Pacheco Marques of Villena, a wise, rich, and discrete person, and one well seene in the managing of state-affaires, likewise by the Archbishop of Seuil, D. Alphonso de Fonseca, a prelate of an excellent wit, but lesse graue then belcomed the place and ranke he held; by whom for certaine yeeres space the Kingdome was well gouerned to the contentment of all men.

D The first martiall enterprife attempted in the reigne of King Henry was against the Moores of Granado, ouer whom reigned Ismael, the same who had taken the crowne from Mahumet the Lame: for the execution whereof King Henry assembled the Estates of his kingdome in the city of Cuellar, vnto whom hauing propounded what he ment to doe, D. Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, Marques of Santillana in the name of them all, answered him in such eloquent and discrete termes, as did highly please and content him. The warre being resolued and decreed in that assembly, eury man went home to his houlde to make preparation, and in the beginning of the yere 1455. they began to march towards the frontiers of Andalusia. The King parting from Segobia ordained viceroys in Castile and Leon for matters of iustice, D. Alphonso Carrillo Archbishop of Toledo and D. Pedro Fernandes de Velasco Earle of Haro, who should keepe their residence at Valodolite. The army being in a redinesse entred into the Moores country, being in number fife thousand horsemen, and a great company of footmen making great spoile euen to the wallles of the city of Granado, notwithstanding that Ismael had bene established King by the helpe and fauour of the King of Castile D. John deceased. On the fourth day the Christian army returned to Eccia, and some few daies after went towards Malaga, burning and spoiling as before, albeit that a great company of Moorish horsemen did oftentimes present them the combate, which the King by the wife and discrete counsell of his captaines did euer more refuse, and brought backe his army in safety to Cordoua laden with all manner of spoiles.

F This yere the sute (begunne many moneths past betwene King Henry of Castile and Ladie Blanche of Nauarre his wife) was ended before Pope Nicholas the fift, of whom he entreated to be diuorced from her, and to take another wife, because, as he said, she was barren. The Pope granting his request, separated them, albeit it was very well knowne that the fault was in himselfe, and not in the Ladie, who with great griefe returned home into Nauarre, hauing lost the title and dignity of Queene of Castile: but King Henry, not

Castile put to before Arra-
gon.

3
The gentleness of a Prince, not accompanied with iustice & authority, is but a weakish talism stone, and his ruine.

4 Matters and Castile.

5
Castile.

Second marriage of the King of Castile.

not being contented with the experience which he had made of himselfe with this Ladie, would needs make proofe of anothe, and by D. Fernand his great Chaplaine caused a marriage to be treated of betwene him and the Infanta Donna Leone of Portugall, sister to king Don Alphonso, and daughter to the late king Don Edward, a Prince of great beauty, who was betrothed vnto him, notwithstanding she had sufficient notice of the kings infidelity, yet she consented thereunto, being tickled with a desire to bee Queene of Castile. The king Don Henry without receiuing any thing with her, didendow her with an hundred and twenty thousand florens, to be leuyed vpon cite Real, Olmedo, and their lands, and for her ordinarie expences, a million, and 500000. marauedis then current. It was also agreed, that the Infanta his next wife might bring with her 8 douzin Ladies of noble parentage, vnto whom the King would giue husbands fitting their degrees, and of these the Ladie Beatrice de Noroño should be gouernesse, who for her part had leaue to bring with her foure yong Gentlewomen, with like hope. All these things promised and confirmed by the king, Don John de Guzman the first Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Earle of Niebla, was sent to meet the Infanta, who brought her to Cordoua where the marriage was solemnized with great magnificence: the Arch-bishop of Tours being then Ambassadour in the Court of Spaine for the French king Charles the 7. performed the ceremony. All manner of pompes, shewes, and pastimes accustomed at such feasts were there performed, saving that in the opinion of all men, the Bride remained the next day as pure a virgin as she was borne of her mother. Both King Henries Queenes were his cousin germanes once removed, daughters, the one to the king of Nauarre, the other of Lady Leonor of Arragon his sister, cousin-germaines to his father.

About this time Pope Nicholas, by his death, gaue place to a Spaniard borne in Xativa, a towne in the kingdome of Valencia, called Don Alphonso Borgia, Cardinal of the title of S. Sixtus, who was named Calixtus the 3. a man of 77. yeares of age, who had bene a Counsellor to Alphonso K. of Arragon. By him was made Cardinall a nephew of his named Rodrigo Borgia, yet he was not of the family of Borgia, but of the Lançoles, a noble family in the kingdome of Valencia, sonne to Don Jeffrey Lançol, Lord of Canales, and to a sister of Pope Calixtus, he did intitle him Cardinall of S. Nicholas in carceri italiano, who afterward attayned the Papacie.

Anticipation of the Town of Portugall.

Whilest that the marriage lasted at Cordoua, great numbers of souldiers were drawne from all parts of Castile into Andalusia, the number of them amounting to about fourteene thousand horse, and therefore thousand foot, whose chiefe Commanders were the Admirall Frederic, the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Marquis of Santillana, hee of Villena, the Earles of Alba de Tormes, Benauent, Arcos, S. Estephan, Alba de Lista, Valence, Cabra, Castagneda, Oforno and Paredes, and the Arch-bishop of Seuille, besides others of lesser note: with these forces the king entred into the Moores country, and with out dis-banding his army, or giuing aduantage, or hope to the enemy to come to battell, hee made roades vp and downe for 20. dayes space, so as it was thought, that the Moores would not be able in many yeates to gather any profit or fruit in their country, the which the king thought to be the surest and easiest way vtterly to ruine & ouercome them. Hauing brought backe his army to Eccia laden with spoiles, not long after, he discharged the greatest number of them, and dismissed the Marquis of Santillana, the Earles of Benauent, Alba, Plaisance and others home to their houses, he himselfe remaining in Andalusia with the people of the country, and the town garriisons did make continuall roades vpon the Moores all that Sommer, at the latter end whereof he returned to Auila and Segobia, to giue order for the war of the yeare following.

War against the Moors.

Alphonso king of Portugall hauing by the marriage of his sister confirmed the peace and ancient alliances with the Crowne of Castile, determined with himselfe to vex the Moores in Africa: the same yeare in the city of Lisbon was born vnto him a sonne, who at his christening was named Don John: the baptisme was solemnized by Don Fernand Arch-bishop of Braga, the Infant was carried by Don Fernand his vnckle, his Godfathers were the Earles of Arroyolos, of Don Vasco of Atzaydo, Prior of S. Johns, and D. Payo Correa: the godmothers, the Infanta D. Catherine the Kings sister, and the Ladie Beatrice de Meneses one of the Queenes chiefe Ladies.

In

A In these times began the troubles and calamities in Nauarre, occasioned by the factions in that kingdome, after this manner. The Prince of Viana Don Charles was in his flourishing age, and in the absence of his father had very virtuously, with great iustice, and to the liking of all men, gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, by the good counsell of the Lords of the countrey: and namely by the Lord Lewis of Beaumont: now the king his father hauing married to his second wife the Ladie Joane Henriques, daughter to the Admirall of Castile, would haue made her a partaker in the gouernment, the which was distast by many, who did stirre vp the Prince, being lawfull heire of the Kingdome, not to suffer his mother-in-law to thrust her selfe into the command of his possessions. The desire of rule which tickled all great and magnanimous natures: did so farre possesse the Prince Don Charles, hitherto obedient to his father, as hee declared vnto him the purpose that he had to enioy alone the right of his mothers inheritance, in which his mother-in-law had no part, and thereupon made preparation to send her forth of the countrey, and to resist the king his father, if he opposed himselfe against his determination, and in conclusion to haue by way of armes that which he purposed. From this pernicious quarrell, which proved so successeles to the sonne against the father, did spring the two factions of those of Beaumont and Grammont, which for many yeares did infect the kingdome of Nauarre, names taken from two mighty families, to wit, that of Beaumont beyond the Pirenean hills, and that of Grammont on the hither side neere vnto France, albeit that the house of Beaumont had his original from Normandy, and was first of all called Lufa; neuertheless both of them of old issued from the bloud royall of Nauarre, the which the armies of both those houses do witness, and namely, the chiefe of the faction of Grammont, who are the Marshalls of the kingdome, the Marques of Cortes, do not intitle themselves of Grammont but of Nauarre. Now the Lord Lewis of Beaumont Constable of Nauarre, being chiefe of his house, he and all his followed the Princes: on the contrarye, the house of Grammont and their adherents, did maintain the Kings quarrell against his sonne, and of this house were chiefe, the Lord Peter of Peralta, who by reason of these tumults was made Constable, and the Marshall Don Pedro of Nauarre. The sonnes reasons were, that being sonne and lawfull heire to Lady Blanche the right Queene and heire of Nauarre, he ought to gouerne; seeing that the king his father had made a second marriage, which barred him from any pretence of right or claime. On the contrarye the king sayd, that by agreement of his first marriage, it was concluded, that whether he had any children or no by his wife Queene Blanche, that he should raigne during his life: to the which article the Lords and States of the kingdome were sworn, and therefore it ought to take place.

The Prince disputed against this poynt, as being made to his prejudice, not good in law, and therefore of no force: for as by the lawes of the Realme, two being married, the suruiuer enioyeth the goods of the partie deceased, so long as they continue in widow-hood, but so soone as they marrie againe, they lose that right. Now the question was, whether the condition agreed vpon in the contract of marriage, in the behalfe of K. John, made against the lawes of Nauarre, and to the prejudice of the Prince his sonne, were good or no: but how iust so euer it was, they fell to armes. Queene Joane remaining in Elcella, being aduertised of Prince Charles his conspiracie, gaue forth with notice thereof to the king her husband, who came out of Arragon into Nauarre with a great company of men at armes, vnto whom those of Grammont ioynded themselves. First of all he tryed by messages and ambassadors, if hee could diuert the Prince his sonne from this dishonorable pursuit, whereby (as he sayd) he did blemish the shining luster of the races of Nauarre, Castile, Arragon, and France, from whence he was descended: the question betwixt the father and sonne was brought to very good termes, by the reasons alleged by King Johns Ambassadors, had not the counsell of the chiefe of the part of Beaumont hindered it, who kept the Prince in his first resolution, to haue the absolute rule of his kingdome without any exception: and those of Grammont did incite the king against his sonne, both parts thinking (as it is very likely) to increase their honours, riches, and dignities rather by these troubles, then by the peace of the kingdome.

All treaties and negotiations of peace ceasing, the Prince assembled his forces, as well Knights Nauarre. Don Charles cannot endure his mother-in-law partaker with him in the regencie.

The desire of rule, an effect of a magnanimous nature.

Factions of Beaumont and Grammont in Nauarre.

The house of Beaumont called of old, Lufa.

An. 1456. Knights as the common people of his partie, and carried himself as king the year 1456, A giuing gifts, priuiledges, and liberties, with other royall acts, the letters and writings whereof were found in these times in the citie of Toralba, and other places of the country: he called also from Castile diuers of his friends, of whom certain troupes entering by Logroño into Nauarre were ouerthrowne neere to Viana, by the King Don John, who like a wife and a discrete Captaine went and met them, not suffering all his forces to ioyne together, before that he had fought with them: after which exploit these were diuers encounters betwixt them with doubtfull victorie, neere to Estella, Pampelona, Oñate, and Lombier: so as the last battell of this first ciuill warre, was fought neere to the citie of Ayuar, in the which, by the prowess and valour of Peter of Peralta, and Lopes of Castillo, and others of the faction of Grammont, those of Beaumont were vanquished, and Prince Charles taken prisoner, who was carried to Tafalla by the commandement of the king, who came thither soone after, and did labour to bring him to some agreement of peace, the which the sonne (being ill aduised) did contemne: and that which was worse, he going about to incite his neighbour kings to take in hand the defence of his cause, a packet of letters was taken which he sent to king Alphonso of Portugal, wherein diuers matters were discovered, by reason whereof hee was shut vp in the castle of Mont Roy. Hereupon the factions were so flied one against the other, as through all the cities of the kingdom, betwixt neighbors and townsmen, whole families did so bandie themselves, that infinite cruelties, murders, burning of houses, and other insolencies and impieties of ciuill warres were committed. The imprisonment of the Prince was so irksome to the Lord Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, as he did not cease by all means, and assurances that he offered, till that he had obtained his deliuerie of the King, for the which he himselfe (so dearly did he loue him) gaue his owne person in hostage, hee ranne to armes, and entered the field the second time, and then the factions of Beaumont and Grammont, returned euery one to his side, and made more cruell and barbarous warre then before, which the Earle did seele many yeares after. The end D was, the Prince was againe defeated neere to Estella, and his people dispersed, but hee escaped by the swiftnesse of his horse, and hauing resolved neuer more to pursue this warre, he went to Naples to the king Alphonso his Vnkle, leauing his friends in Nauarre in great trouble and danger, where the seede of discord betwixt the two factions did encrease and spring vp diuers times afterward.

The Prince Don Charles passing thorow France and Italy, was euery where receiued with great honor, and namely at Rome by Pope Calixtus a Spaniard: but chiefly his vnkle D. Alphonso did feast and welome him, admiring his graue wisdom and kingly qualities, answerable in euery point to the report that had beene made of him: and being desirous to see him reconciled to the King Don John his father, hee laboured very much E therein, performing thereby all the Offices of a louing kinsman and Christian Prince: for he did daily put him in mind of the duty of children towards their fathers, wherunto Princes are more bound than other men, in regard that their subjects do commonly fashion themselves after their examples: and on the other side, hee did write to the King D. John, alledging all reasons that might be auaylable to induce him to loue and desire the presence of his sonne: but this good and vertuous king had not the meanes to accomplish so holy and laudable a work, being preuented by death, which seized on him in the new castle of Naples, the year 1458. hauing reigned two and fortie yeares and two moneths in Arragon, and foure and twenty yeares in Naples, in the 65. year of his age.

This Prince, after that Renee of Aniou had retired himself into France the yere 1443, finding himselfe master of the whole kingdom of Naples, had contention with the Venetians, in the behalfe of Philip Maria Duke of Milan, then against his sonne in lawe Francis Sforza, who was duke of Milan, and last of all against the Venetians, Geneuois, and Florentines in league together, in which wars he alwaies maintained the reputation of

The great loue
of the Earle of Lerin to the Prince Don
Charles.

Arragon.

A of a great and excellent Captaine. And againe, in the year 1453, he had some likelihood of a future warre about his kingdom of Naples, against Renee of Aniou, who had repassed the mountaines, and was come downe into Lombardy accompanied with Lewis the Dauphin of France, with two thousand men at armes, hoping by the fauour of the duke Francis Sforza, and the Florentines to be able to re-enter into his lost kingdom, and to driue Alphonso out of it, but that iourney proued vaine: then the King D. Alphonso being at king in peace, purchased the friendship of the Duke Francis Sforza, and contracting alliance with him, he caused D. Alphonso, sonne to his son D. Fernand of Arragon, duke of Calabria, to marry with Hippolita Maria daughter to the Duke Sforza: and hee did betroth D. Leonora, daughter to his son Fernand, to Sforza Maria son to the same Duke Sforza, notwithstanding that his second marriage took no effect, for D. Leonora was afterwards married to Hercules de Este, the second Duke of Ferrara. The king D. Alphonso being in league and friendship with the most part of the Potentates of Italy, Pope Calixtus a Spaniard borne in Xatua, his subiect, and one that had bene of his counsell, did euer carry a particular hatred against him, the which hee declared by the answer which hee made to the kings Ambassadors at Rome, at such time as they came to congratulate his assumption to the papall dignity: for they asking him in their masters name, how they should carry themselves one toward another: the Pope sayd; Let him gouerne his kingdom, and let me alone with my Popedom. And he did more openly manifest it after the death of D. Alphonso: for he did as much as in him lay, to minister all hinderances to D. Fernand his son and successor in the kingdom of Naples, disputing with him about his right therein, saying, that D. Alphonso his father could not appoint a king in the kingdom of Naples, which held of the Church, and that it was in the Popes power to inuest therein whome he pleased: and the king D. Fernand could neuer haue other remedie of him, who afterward was confirmed and established by Pope Pius his successor. Now D. Alphonso had bene absent halfe the time of his reigne out of his kingdom of Arragon, leauing his wife D. Maria of Castile Gouernor in his Realmes and Dominions in Spain, a vertuous and chaste Princess, assisted by his brother D. John of Nauarre. By this Lady hee had no children, and he parted from her the second time in great anger, by reason of her heauy heart wherewith she was greatly possessed, the which made her to commit an act inhumane, cruell, and in no sort royall: for shee vnderstanding that the king her husband made loue to one of her Ladies, named D. Margaret of Xar, she caused her one night to be strangled in her bed, being with child in the citie of Valencia, the king being at that time for his pleasure abroad on hunting, which was a speciall cause that hee cared neuer after to liue with her. By other wives he had D. Fernand, who succeeded him in the kingdom of Naples, D. Maria of Arragon married to the Marquis of Ferrara, D. Leonora of Arragon, Princessse of Rossano wife to Martin Marzan. At his death hee left for heire in his kingdoms of Arragon, Valencia, Sardynia, Majorca, Minorca, and Sicill, his brother the King D. John of Nauarre.

E The gifts and qualities of this Prince comprehended in few words, although they deserue a great volume, were these: concerning the bodie, he was of meane stature, active and well proportioned, of colour somewhat pale, quick-fighted, and gracious, he had a hawk nose, a signe of an haughtie nature: hee was briefe and succinct in his speech, but neate and eloquent, sweet and amiable in his answers, and oftentimes quick and pleasant: few kings had their minds more disposed to goodnesse then he: the Religion according to those times, and the ceremonies belonging thereunto hee had in singular recommendation, so that it is reported of him, that being on a time at Masse, by meanes of a great Earth-quake the church wherein he was, was so shaken, as the people fearing to be slaine by the fall thereof, fledde out at the doores, hee onely remayned vnmooued and fearelesse. And seeing the priest which sung Masse readie to runne away for compaignie, hee stayed him and enforced him to make an end of his seruice. He was liberal to all men, and magnificent in gifts, especially to Princes and their Ambassadors: Hee was a louer of iustice, and yet neuertheless mercifull, full of commiseration, and slow to condemne any man to death, the which he could temper so well, as his clemencie profited, and redounded to the benefite of diuers: yet offenders were punished and corrected, in such a cruell act.

Ingratitude of Pope Calixtus.

Genealogie of
Arragon.

Disposition of King D. Alphonso of Arragon the 5.

such sort, as his Realmes were neuer since his time so well governed, and cleasned from A all manner of violence and outrage. When hee had overcome his enemies, hee did al- waies shew himselfe meeke and gentle, hee tooke delight in all excellent things, vsing alwaies great modestie therein: hee was sumptuous in moueables, in gold and silver plate, iewels, and other ornaments of rare esteeme, except about his owne royall person, which was euer apparelled according to the common vse and fashion of his Gentlemen, not delighting in rich and costly stufes, nor new fashions: hee was stately and magnifi- cent in martiall playes and shewes, which were frequent in his Court, and no lesse in bul- dings, whereof the royall pallas, the bridge, and great Hospitall of Sarragossa doe make mention.

The new castle at Naples, brought into the forme which now it is, is a worke of hishe made the fortresse of the Egge habitable and commodious: hee caused the marshes a- bout the cittie to be dried vp: hee builded shippes of no meane greatnesse, which see- bout like castles vpon the sea, hee enterdayned a great number of huntmen: but his chief delight and pleasure was in hawking. And being a warlike Prince, hee made two enter- prises into Barbarie, the one to Zerba, anciently called the Isle of the Lotophages, the which hee tooke, and defeated in battell Butifer king of Tunis, who came to drue him thence with about an hundred thousand Moores: the other against the towne properly called Affrica, the situation whereof hee very well viewed, hauing a purpose to retume thither, where he burned all the shippes and vessels that he found in the haue: when hee C was at peace in the kingdome of Naples, he gaue ayde and succour to the Despotto of Acarnania assailed by the Turkes, and to Seanderbeg Prince of Albania warring vpon the same nation, where his souldiers gaue sufficient proofe of braue warriors, which did greatly redound to the Kings honour. A man would scarce beleue what honour and respect hee did beare to learning and learned men, being oftentimes wont to say, Thus a King without learning, was like a crowned Ass, the which sentence hee had read in the pre- face before the Spanish Translation of Saint Austens booke Of the Cittie of God, and therefore hee employed part of his time in the study of letters, although hee were of good yeares before hee beganne: and hee did neuer neglect the reading of Bookes, nor his con- ference and disputations with learned men, how great affaires of State or warre soeuer hee had.

Being well stricken in yeares, hee euer had in his company an old Grammarian cal- led Master Martin, with whome hee delighted greatly to discourse both abroad and at home, and hee did so profit at his studie, that hee did translate Seneca's Epistles, a worke very hard, intreating of morall Philosophie, into the Spanish tongue: hee tooke such pleasure in reading the holy Scriptures, as hee would often vaunt, that hee had read the old and new Testament fourteene times ouer. To shew the singular affection hee did beare to learning and learned men, hee gaue for his Deuice in armorie an open booke, and hee would say, that Bookes were Princes best Councillors, with protestation, that hee had receiued best counsell of the dead, meaning of his bookes.

In the deuastations and spoyles of Citties during his warres, hee reserved for his part of the spoyle, bookes, which were carefully sought for and brought vnto him, hee would reade with great delight Titus Linius, and Cassars Commentaries, so that besides the sundry reparations of Schooles and Auditories, where hee assigned pensions to the Doctours, Regents, and Schoollers, his Court was daily frequented with the learnedst men of his time, so wit, Bartholomew Facio, George of Trebiçonde, Laurentius Valla, John Aris- to, Antonio of Palermo, and others. Hee did honour the great Captaines and worthie men in the Art militarie, of what nation soeuer they were, likewise Grauers, Architects, excellent Engineers, skillfull Mariners, and generally any man of worth and desert in what art or science soeuer: so that hee left behind him the eternall and euer-during me- morie of a Prince truly vertuous, valiant, bountifull, and esteeming vertue as it rightly deserued.

Now King Don Alphonso being dead, and his sonne Don Fernand being in trou- ble at his first comming to the Crowne, diuers cities, and some great Lords of the king- dome of Naples, did moue and stirre vp the Prince Don Charles of Nauarre to take to

Learning and learned men
beloued of King
Don Alphonso.
Sentence of D.
Alphonso.

Learned men
beloued to King
Alphonso.

A to himselfe the same Crowne which they offered vnto him: but he made them such an answer, as they perceiued thereby, that hee had learned to be modest, to follow equity and right, and not rashly to cast himselfe into another mans possession. And for that hee would not giue any euill suspicion of himselfe, hee went into Sicillia Kingdome fallen by the death of Don Alphonso to the King his father, with those of Arragon, Sardinia, Ma- jorca, Minorca, Valencia, and the Principalltie of Cattelogne, in the which by right be- longing to the eldest sonnes of the Kings of Arragon, hee obtrayned in esse the principa- lities of Girona, and the right of succession in all these Kingdomes afterwards: He remai- ned and continued a while in Sicill, greatly honoured and beloued of the Sicillians, dur- ing which time hee was amorously familiar with a very fayre and beautifull Gentlewo- man of a meane of spring and parentage, named Capa, on whome hee begate two chil- dren, the one named Don Philp of Nauarre and Arragon, who was Master of the Order of Monteca, and dyed in the warre of Granada in the seruice of the King Don Fernand his Vncle: the other was called Don John, who was Bishoppe of Huelca. Hee had also a daughter named Donna Isabele of Nauarre and Arragon, who was Dutchesse of Medina Celi, and wife to Don Lewis de la Cerda: but it is vn certaine whether these was borne of this mother.

As the aboue-named tumults and dissentions continued in Nauarre, the Prouinces of Guipulcoia and Biscay being neere-bordering neighbours, and wrapped vp in one selfe same ayre, entred into ciuill or rather vnciuill dissentions, hauing likewise their fa- ctions of the Gamboines and Ognazines, who could not bee repressed by any forme of iustice. Therefore the King Don Henry was aduised to goe thither in person, the which hee did, and there by the aduice of his Councell, and vpon information made of those tro- bles and outrages, he razed and ouerthrew diuers towers, and strong houses belonging to the chiefs of the Façions, which serued for places of retreat and harbour for murine- rers and euill-disposed persons, who committed infinite insolencies and outrages in the Countrey. In which number were the tower of Ollopo in the iurisdiction and confines of Elgoiuar, the house of Lelcano, the house of Inigo de Saldibia in the Cktie of Tholosa, that of Fernand D'Alagarrivia in the towne of Guetaria, and others in the Countrey of Anduayn, in the towne of Vergara, and else-where, as well in Guipulcoia, as in Biscay, in which journey hee tooke into his seruice in the Cittie of Durango, the sonne of an Inne-keeper, named Perucho of Munfara, who afterward became a man of great re- pute and estimation.

So soone as hee came to Victoria, hee called before him out of every towne of Biscay and Guipulcoia, two or three men deputed, with whome hee inreated about the gouernement and iurisdiction of the same countrey, hee confirmed diuers and fundrie Liberties and Priuiledges graunted by the Kings his Predecessours, and left there for Gouernour and Commander John Hurtado of Mendoza, one of his priuie Councill. Notwithstanding all these demolishments, with that of the strong and inexpugnable Castle of Montdragon, the murders, thefts, deuastations, façions, and rebellions in Biscay and Guipulcoia did continue, countries in all times infamous, because of these matters, vntill the raigne of the King Don Fernand the sixth, and Queene Isabel, who rooted out the façions of Gamboines and Ognazines by means whereof iustice began to take place there.

At the Kings departure from Victoria, hee came by great journeyes to Cordoua, ha- uing a great desire to the warres of Granada, into the which Kingdome he made a sur- ious entrie, finding often resistance by the Moores who kept his armie close, nor suffe- ring them to straggle, who vpon a day did surprize certaine Castilian troupses, where a- mongst other of note, Garcilaso de la Pega, a valiant Knight, and welbeloued of the king, was slaine: by reason whereof he commanded, that all the vines, olive trees, and all o- ther kind of trees bearing fruite throughout the whole territorie of Granada should bee cutdorne. Hee beleaged and tooke the towne and strong castle of Ximena, and did such hurt, that King Ismael was constrained, not being able to resist, to begge a truce, and to submit himselfe to such tribute, taxation, and other conditions as should best please him.

Genealogie of Nauarre and
Arragon.

8.
Castile.

Strong houses in Biscay and Guipulcoia ouerthrowed.

9
Moores.

Truce between Granada and
Castile.

It was then agreed vpon that the Moore King should pay to King Henry twelve thousand A doubions of gold for tribute, and should become his vassall: that hee should giue him yearly during the time of the truce sixe hundred Christian prisoners, and where they were wanting as many slave-Moores to be deliuered at Cordoua at a day appointed: And that the waire should continue open on the side of Iacn: In regard of which things, and the present payment of the first yeares tribute, the Christian army dilloged out of the territories of Granada. The King returned to Cordoua leaving the discharged the residew of his army. Albeit he vsed great diligence in these warres against the Moores, yet it was not of so great importance as the wars made by his predecessors, or whether it were through the Kings negligence, who was soone weary of businesse, or through any other occasion, so as he began to fall into the contempt of his owne people, The Earle of Castagneda left vpon the frontiers, to repress the inuasion of the Moores, was a Lord as catelasse, and negligent as his maister, and there-withall couetous, by the reason whereof, within a while he found himselfe very meanely accompanied which they craftily Moores vnderstanding they laid a strong ambush for him, into the which they craftily drew him, hauing sent some to forrage the fields, who being pursued by the Earle, hee perceaued himselfe, to be heere'd in on euery side, and so with great losse of his people he himselfe was taken prisoner, whereof the King being aduertised sent in his place another Captayne called Michel Lucas de Franch, with commission and charge to change the truce made with King Jsmell, into a peace, prouided the payment of the tribute-mony agreed vpon by the truce, the which did greatly please the Moore King: and so ended the warres of Granada, the Earle of Castagneda being redeemed with a great summe of mony.

A sword blessed by the Pope on Christmas, Euen.

The King commended by his subjects.

Gifts giuen by King Henry the first.

Pope Calixtus taking pleasure in these warres against the Moores, did about that time send to the King Don Henry a Hatte and a Sword, which they vse to blesse vpon Christmas, at night, laying them vpon the Altar where they say Masse, which they terme Mass of the Cocke: and hee did write vnto him, exhorting and animating him to pursue holly a waire. About this time died Don Alonso of Castagena, Bishoppe of Burgos a Prelar highly esteemed of the Spaniards, who wrote an History of Spaine D intitled Anacephaleosis with other workes.

Now the small estimation of the King was manifest ouer all Spaine and came vnto his owne eares, which made him become suspitious, and hee began against his nature to distrust the great ones, to counterpoise whome, hee advanced diuers of his seruants to base and meane degree to great honours, and authority. Hee made Gomes de Caeres and Solis, Maister of Alcantara, and gaue the City of Cordia to a brother of his: he made Berrand de la Cueva, Sonne to Diego de la Cueva of Vbeda, great Maister of his house and Viscount of Huelma, who hauing bene his page, and carried his lance, became one to so ready in his fauour, as no man so much. The office of Constable was giuen to Michael Lucas of Franch borne in Beaumont, a meane gentleman, and with that the towne of Agreda, the Castles of Verato and Volmedian, with the Captainehip of Iacn, the towne of Andujar, with other rents and possessions: and to one of his brothers the commandery of Montizon, and that of Orjia to another; which are the best places belonging to the order of Saint James: he gaue the Priory of Saint John, to John de Valencuela, the Bishoppe-ricke of Iacn to Alonso de Peleas, and that of Auala to Martin de Vilches, euery one of these places to bee surrendered so soone as they should be voyde.

The Marques of Santillana Don Inigo lopes de Mendoza being dead, who was also Count de Real de Mançanares, his Sonne Don Diego Hurtado was confirmed by the King in his Fathers dignities, but hee was compelled to come and stay at the Court, and to bring thither his brethren, Don Pedro Gonzales de Mendoza, Bishoppe of Calaoira, who was since the Arch-Bishoppe of Toledo, and Cardinal. Don Inigo Lopez de Mendoza, Don Lorenzo Suarez, Don John Hurtado, who hauing kissed the kings hand, were with the Marquis commaunded not to flirre from the Court.

Being

A Being at Madrid the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, fifty eight, where hee celebrated with great cost and royall magnificence, the Funerals of the King Don Alphonso of Aragon, dead at Naples, hee committed an act in the behalfe of the Marquis of Villena, scarce well digested. This Marquis in regard of the affaires and gouernement of the kingdom had the same power, and almost equall boldnesse which the Constable Aluaro de Luna had in the time of the King Don John, and hee would let nothing fall to ground which was profitable or commodious for him or his: Now hee had a great desire to make a marriage betwene his eldest sonne Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco with the Countesse of Saint Stephen de Gormas, daughter and heire to Don John de Luna, and Grand-child to the Constable Don Aluaro, who at that time was in the gouernement of an vncle of his named also Don John de Luna, Nephew to the Constable, who was Captaine of Soria, and the Marquis did not onely practise the marriage of his eldest sonne with his Neece, but also to dispossesse him of his Captainehip of Soria, with other lands which he held: For the obtaining whereof, hee caused the King to haue him in suspicion, saying, That hee was one of the conspirators which were ioyned in league and confederacie against his seruice.

The King did easily and willingly beleue this report made by the Marquis, and feigning to ride on hunting, hee came to Aillon where Don John de Luna kept his residence, who did receiue and feast both him and his traine very sumptuously, and with great magnificence, who riding amongst the rest of the companie, hee was no sooner entred into the fields, but hee was arrested as prisoner, without knowing any cause or reason thereof. In the end hee was enioyned to dispossesse himselfe of Soria, and other fortresses and places of strength, and to receiue into them such garisons as should please the king: whereunto hee must needs obey, on paine of losing his head, so as hee did not onely yield vp Soria, but all that which did belong to the Countesse his Neece, and her person also: and so the Marquis had that which he desired.

The contempt of this Prince encreasing daily, Don Alphonso Fajardo, the chiefeft Knight of Murcia, holding a long time Carthagena, Lorca, and other places against the Kings will, and the chiefe that ruled and gouerned him, had likewise in a manner taken D himselfe by force, the Master-shippe of Saint James, and the Marquisate of Villena, committing many outrages and insolencies vpon the lands and reuenues belonging to the King and Marquis, being ayded and releued sometimes by the Moores of Granada. Against him Gonzalo de Sabañedra was sent with sixe hundred horse, by whose care and diligence, Don Alphonso lost all that which he held of his owne and other mens, and so became a poore and miserable Knight, hauing nothing left him but onely his sword and his cloake, accounting and esteeming it for a great fauour and extraordinarie kindnesse to haue his life saued.

This man had his deserts, and the King continued in his carelesnesse, so as he was no more feared. About all the townes of his Kingdome, the abode at Segobia and Madrid pleated him best, because hee louing hunting better then affaires of consequence, this Countrey being woody was very fit for it, as also abounding in victuals and provision for his Court, which was very great: for he did daily carrie about with him, a guard of horse-mento the number of three thousand and sixe hundred Lances, with an incredible expence, wherewith his reuenues was charged to the vttermost: the which his chiefe Treasurer Don Diego Arias, like an honest and faithfull seruant, put him in mind of on a time, beseeching him to cut off so superfluous an expence: you speake (quoth he) like Diego Arias, but I will line like a King, and that was all the answer hee could receiue. By his bounty and liberalitie hee was well serued and attended on by diuers, and in those dayes thofe of his Councell, Chancerie, and Iudges, did discharge their duties very faithfully. In Arcualo one of his Secretaries named Pedro de Tieda was put to death, and others of his complices, for counterfeiting the Kings letters, and selling them for great summes of money. Being in the citie of Leon, hee caused certaine Gentlemen to bee brought out of Galicia which had dispossessed a Knight of his house, hauing commanded their proceesse to be made, they were there for the same put to death. Such iust executions were sometimes done, but hee did greatly fail in other matters.

T t t 2

The

An. 1458.

Violent marriage of the Countesse of S. Stephen de Gormas, and Don Diego Lopes Pacheco.

Don Alphonso Fajardo, a countess rebel chieffly.

The Kings Guard borne stentime and superfluous, an answer of K. Henry the first judgement.

At the end of the yeare 1458. Queene Joane made hir magnificent and royall entrie into A the Citie of Leon: then they came to keepe Christmasse at Eſcalona, where the Kings the chiefe delight and recreation was in hunting, and ſinging in the Church, where he himſelfe in his owne chappell would beare a part, which in thoſe dayes was the beſt ſun- ſhed with cunning and experienced Muſicians of any one particular place in the whole world.

Portugal.

The ſame yeare Don Alphonſo King of Portugal led his armie into Affricke, where he tooke the towne of Alcaſar, diſtant fixe miles from Ceura, his Vncle Don Henry, and his brother Don Fernand Duke of Viſco accompanying him in that expedition. Alcaſar was taken by meanes of certaine honeſt conditions, and Don Edward de Menefes baſtard ſonne to Don Pedro de Menefes, Earle of Viana, who ſucceeded his father in the Earle- dome, was left there as Gouvernour. After the kings returne into Portugal, the Moores did indeavour, but in vaine, to recover the place: for the repaying and fortifying where- of, the King cauſed a great quantitie of ground, betweene the towne and the ſea, to be enclowed with a great and ſtrong wall, defended and guarded with towers, the ſtone, lime, and other prouitions neceſſarie for ſuch a worke of worth, was by him brought from Portugal.

Caſtile.

An. 1459.

The yeare 1459. the King Don Henry of Caſtile, ſent Don Inigo Lopes de Mendez, ſonne to Don Inigo, and brother to the Marquis of Santillana, Ambaſſadour to the Councell held at Mantua by Pope Pius the ſecond, before times called Aeneas Syluſtus C Piscolomini, who had newly ſucceeded Calixtus the third. There with great deliberation and hope, the warres againſt the Turkes was debated, which in the end came to nothing, and Don Inigo returned into Caſtile, carrying home onely a Iubile of full remiſſion of finnes, the collections whereof were ſo great and inſtimable, as hee therewith builded and erected the Monafterie of Saint Anne de la Pegna, in his towne of Tendilla, of the Order of Saint Ierome. The King being returned to Madrid, entertayned himſelfe there a long time with feaſts, playes, and ſhewes, where the Arch-biſhop of Seuille Don Al- phonſo de Foſſeſ, hauing feaſted the King, Queene, and the Ladies, among other ſing- larities, there was ſerued in after dinner for the banquet, two plates filled with rings of gold, ſet with rich and pretious ſtones for the Ladies, amongſt whom Donna Guiomar D gold, ſet with rich and pretious ſtones for the Ladies, amongſt whom Donna Guiomar was held, next the Queene, to be the fayreſt and moſt beautifull Ladie of Spaine with- out compare: to her the king ſhewed many amorous fauours at this feaſt, which the Queene perceiving, grew very iealous, and euer after viſed the Ladie vnkindly and rigo- rously, by reaſon whereof the King ſhewed himſelfe ſtrange to her, and appoynted her a Court and trayne aparr, not ſuffering her to come neere his Court by two leagues: Whereunto the Arch-biſhop of Seuille, who was well ſeene and experienced in ſuch bu- ſineſſes, did willingly employ his beſt endeauours in the behaile of Guiomar: for what- ſoeuer the king did, was but fayned and imaginarie ſhewes, who was ſo farre from be- coming offended and diſpleaſed with his friends in ſuch affaires, as hee was content to ſpare them his owne wife: for the common rumor was, that not being able to endure that E men ſhould eſteeme him vnapt for venereall acts, which hee reputed a great and ignomi- nious diſgrace, hee dealt with the Queene his wife to receiue Don Bertrand de la Cueva into her bed, (his baſe and degenerate mind deſiring and conſenting that this Knight ſhould lye with her, to the end hee might prouee with child by him, and ſo by that means ſuppoſe an heire to the kingdom in his owne name, though vnlawfully bego- ten by another.)

12.
The laſt and vanities of D.
Henry the vnable king of Caſtile.

It was credibly reported, that at the firſt the Queene would by no poſſible meanes bee drawne to agree and giue her conſent to ſo vile, deteſtable, and diſhonorable a deede, but yet afterwards, ſhee had more neede to haue beene curbed in with raines and bridle, then of ſpurres. Now Don Bertrand de la Cueva, was a gallant and moſt accompliſhed Knight in all points belonging to an excellent Courtier, and ſo eſteemed and beloued of the King, as for his ſake, becauſe he ſo valiantly, and with ſuch an vndaunted cou- rage, defended a paſſage at the arriual of an Ambaſſadour of Brittain: hee builded a Monafterie on the high way from Madrid to Pard, which for him was named, the Mona- ſterie of Paſ.

The

A The King the better to couer. his owne naturall weakneſſe, made ſhew of loue to di- uers Gentlewomen in ſundry places: for before he made loue to Ladie Guiomar, he had profeſſed himſelfe ſeruant to another Ladie, named Catherina de San dauall, whom he had oftentimes entertained priuately, but the moſt contented with his vaine embraces, and being deſirous to ſuſtaine her ſelfe with a more able Knight, ſhee grew familiarly ac- quainted with a young Gentleman named Alphonſo de Cordova, whom ſhe kept compa- nie with a long time ſecretly, which turned to his deſtruction: for the King hauing notice thereof, commanded Alphonſo to be beheaded at Medina del campo. In this ſort did this King behaue himſelfe in his moſt priuate affaires, giuing occaſion to all men to ſpeake euill and vncharitably of him, which being reported vnto him, hee entred into diſtruit and hatred againſt the great perſons of his realme, and oftentimes for ſlight occaſions he would rayſe great troubles.

And not being pleaſed, that Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana ſhould hold the citie of Guadabajara, where hee did not onely command the towne and caſtle, as Gouvernour both in matters of State and warre; but alſo had authoritie and preheminance to beſtow publike Offices, hee cauſed him to bee taken by the Com- mander John Fernandes Galindo, who entred into the towne with fixe hundred men at armes, by meanes of intelligence that he had with one of the Marquis his Captaines, called Alphonſo de Guano, who was corrupted with money, and the Marquis was com- pelled to leaue that Governement to the Kings diſpoſe, hauing giuen him no juſt nor lawfull cauſe of offence or iniurie, and ſo hee retired and with-drew himſelfe to Hita. Soone after, the King and the Queene came thither, and left Alphonſo de Guano Gouer- nour there.

Don Iohn the ſecond of that name, and the eighteenth King of Arragon.

D W Hileſt theſe affaires continued in Caſtile, the King Don Iohn of Nauarre took quiet poſſeſſion of the kingdom of Arragon, fallen vnto him by the death of his brother: vnto whom came Ambaſſadours from the Prince Don Charles his ſonne, to beſeech him that all faults paſt might be forgotten, and that it might pleaſe him to receiue him into grace and fauour: the which requeſt the father eaſily graunted, for he was very kind and gentle to his children, but eſpecially to the Prince Don Charles, who being daily ſollicited by thoſe of the faction of Beaumont, who continued and maintayned the warres in certaine forts and ſtrong holds in Nauarre, not being able without him to bring their buſineſſe to effect, hee deſired to returne into Spayne, either to helpe them to make their peace, or to defend them by force of armes.

13
Nauarre,
and
Arragon.

E Hauing then had a pleaſing anſwer from the King his father, hee departed that yeare 1459. from Sicill, being accompanied with a great number of Sicillian Lords and Gentle- men, and landed at Barcelona, where being welcommed and receiued with great pompe, magnificence, and honour, by the Barcelonies, hee dealt ſo wiſely, that for his like the King pardoned thoſe of Beaumont, and declared that his pleaſure was, that all former matters of what kind ſoeuer, ſhould be buried in perpetual obliuion: thoſe of Catalogna being ſureties for the ſonnes faith and obedience to his father, and for the fathers loue and good-will to his ſonne.

Agreement
betwene the King D. Iohn
of Arragon, &
his ſonne D.
Charles.

This reconciliation being made to the great ioy and contentment of the whole kingdom, the King D. Iohn knowing himſelfe to be a mightie Prince, thought vpon fir and conuenient meanes how to recover his lands which were conſiſcate in Caſtile: for the effecting whereof, hee entred into league and confederacie with Don Alphonſo King of Portugal, and agreed vpon a marriage betwene the Prince his ſonne, and the Ladie Catherine of Portugal, ſiſter to King Alphonſo, and to Donna Joane Queene of Caſtile: into the which league entred Don Alphonſo Carrillo, Arch-biſhop of Toledo,

New deſignes to ſubdue Caſtile.

the Admirall Don Frederic father-in-law to King John, Don Pedro Giron Master of Calatrava, and all the Manriques of Castile; with others, whereof when the King of Castile Don Henry had notice, by the advertisement of Dionysio de Fonseca, Arch-bishop of Seville, he was advised by his counsell; to send the bishop of Cité Rodrigo, and Diego de Ribera Ambassadors into Arragon, vnder pretence of congratulating in his name the welcome home of Prince Charles, and his reconciliation with the king his father: but they had commission to deale vnder-hand secretly with Prince Charles, to offer him all friendship, and to treat of a marriage betweene him, and Donna Isabella of Castile, the Kings sister.

The Ambassadors hauing cunningly executed their commission, possessed the mind of Prince Charles with new thoughts, and made him hope to bee able by meanes of his marriage with Castile, and friendship that he should gaine thereby, to obtaine his kingdom of Nauarre. Therefore hee did forsake the Infanta of Portugall, who for griefe thereof retired her selfe into the Nunneerie of S. Clare at Lisbent, where shee spent her time in Virginitie, dying soone after, when as shee was betrothed to Edward the fourth, King of England. Altho this other marriage came to no effect, by reason of the thornes of Prince Charles his life, God hauing ordaind that Princesse to be wife to his younger brother.

The desire of rule an vniuersal lord.

14. Castille.

Prince Charles vpon hope of ayde from Castile, began againe to encourage those of the faction of Beaumont, and to sollicite certaine of Catallogna to begin new troubles in Nauarre and Arragon: for the mind of man being once bewitched with the desire of rule, cannot be contained in any bounds. In these times the Cardinall Besforius learned man, a Greeke by nation, was perpetuall administrator of the church of Pampelona, by the death of the Bishop of D. Martin of Peralta.

The King Don Henry of Castile, hauing with wife counsell and discretion broken the league of Portugall, determined to persecute those of his kingdom which had any hand therein. And because hee was assured, that the Master of Calatrava was of the number, hee shewed very bad countenance to his brother the Marquis of Villena, but hee was so wife and cunning, as he soone excused himselfe to the King, and wiped out of his mind all suspicion conceived against him. That was the occasion why the two brethren, the Marquis, and the Master of Calatrava did conceiue such mortal hatred against the Arch-bishop of Seuille, who about that time obtained for a nephew of his named also Alphonso Fonseca, Deane of Seuille, the Arch-bishoppricke of Saint Iames: but vnderstanding that Don Lewis Osorio, sonne to the Earle of Translamara, had intruded himselfe into the same, with the fauour and support of the whole Countreie of Galicia, he made a feigned bargain with his Nephew, and resigned to him the Arch-bishoppricke of Seuille, taking that of Saint Iames for himselfe, with this condition, that matters beeing pacified, they would each of them returne to their former dignities: for the vnkle thought that by meanes of his great credite and authoritie hee should be best able to deale with Don Lewis Osorio.

1460. An importunate manner of reforming Nunnes in Castille.

15 Nauarre, and Arragon. The K. of Nauarre & Arragon desired of all the enterprizes of Prince Charles.

The yeare 1460. the King Don Henry did expell the Abbess of Saint Peter de Las Dueñas out of Toledo, named Donna Marquesada de Guzman, a Ladie of a religious and holy life, saying, That he did it to reforme the Nunnes of that place, who had the report to liue dissolutely, and he gaue them for their Abbess and Gouernesse, the Ladie Catherine de Samdual his quondam Mistress, wherewith the Arch-bishop and the whole Clergie beeing offended, the house was interdicted, and diuers of the Clergie degraded and banished, but the King made an end of the matter.

This yeare running on, King John of Nauarre and Arragon did assemble the Estates of the principalltie of Catallogna at Lerida, and assigned those of Arragon to meete at Fraga. At the assembly at Lerida, the Prince Don Charles arrived, where whilst they consulted of the affaires, a Gentleman named John Carrillo, presented letters of credit to the King, from the Admirall of Castile Don Frederic his father-in-law, and he was by him aduertised of all that which had passed betweene the Prince his sonne, and the King Don Henry: adding thereunto, that those of the faction of Beaumont, incited and stirred vp by the Prince Don Charles, did prepare to armes, and addresse themselves for

A for the warres, vnto whom the Castellans ioyned themselves, the which did greatly trouble the King who hauing had therevpon the aduice of his most priuate and faithfull counsellors, he caused the Prince to be called into a Chamber a part, and there hauing declared vnto him what he knew of his dealings and practices, he did sharply reprehend him, saying, that he thought that he had begotten a fury, who did torment and trouble his Kingdomes, falling so often into rebellion, and abusing his fatherly pittie and meeknesse, but that now the time was come, wherein it behooued him to vie fit remedies to repress his madnesse, and to punish him in such sort, as the vnhappy example of a father, liuing in continuall feare and suspicion of his sonnes treacheries, should now cease in his family: wherevnto the Prince would haue replied, but he could not bee heard; and by the appointment of the King his father, being arrested, he was condemned to close prison in the castle of Mirauet: Neuertheless at the earnest request of diuers great Lords, vnto whom it seemed ouer rigorous, hee was committed vnder sure keeping to a more easie prison in the Aljaferia of the city of Saragossa, to the great discontentment of the Realmes of Nauarre and Arragon, and likewise of the King of Castile, who being in the towne of Madrid was soone after aduertised of the durance of Prince Charles. With him was likewise imprisoned Don John of Beaumont, brother to the Constable Don Lewis.

Imprisonment of Prince Charles.

The Castellans who were sureties for the reconciliation made betweene the father and the sonne at Barcelona, hearing those newes, sent speedily fiftene men of great authority in Ambassage to the King, to know of him the reason of the Princes captivity, because it seemed to them that the King therein had infringed the assurance which they had giuen for him, and that his promise was to intreat him lovingly like a father. Hauing heard by the King that it was for conspiracy and intelligences with his enemies, against his Estate and person, being the third time that he had fallen into open rebellion, they vsed many prayers and intreaties for the behoofe and deliuerie of the Prince: but seeing it to be in vaine, they returned with the Kings answer to them that sent them. Then the Castellans being very much moued, added to these fiftene Ambassadors, three score more, and sent them backe to Lerida to the King, vnto whom the Abbot of Agen (being chiefe) hauing shewed with great liberty how grievously the Castellans did take the imprisonment of his sonne the Prince of Viana and Girona, who expected to haue bene well and kindly intreated by him, vpon the promises and surety which they had giuen for him, and did hope thereby to haue bene sufficiently defended against the slanderous and malicious attempts of his Adversaries, chiefly of the Admirall D. Frederic, who openly and by all meanes did labour to extirpe the eldest sonne and lawfull heire of the Realmes of Nauarre, Arragon and other Dominions annexed to the same crowne, to the end to raise and aduance to those dignities his daughters children against all right and piety, and he protested that the whole state of the principalltie of Catallogna would employ their goods, liues, meanes, and friends (which he knew to be very great in that Prouince) to defend Prince Charles from wrong, and to deliuer him from so vniuult a captivity: wherefore he besought him to consider thereof with a fatherly affection, and at their requests to set him at liberty, and to heare how he could iustifie himselfe, and not to trust so much to his owne opinion in affaires of so great importance onely to please the Queene his wife and her father, and to prevent by wife and good counsell the great troubles and miseries which might thereby ensue. To this rough discourse, full of threats, the King answered with great grauity and moderation, concluding, that hee knew how to doe Iustice, and that hee was not determined to giue over his purpose in punishing his rebellious sonne, who had so often abused his clemency, for any passionate or importunate soliciting of his subiects.

The Castellans intercede in vaine for the Prince.

A free remembrance of the Castellans to their King.

The King of Nauarre and Arragon his answer to his subiects of Catallogna.

F The Ambassadors hauing written and sent backe this answer, there followed forth with a manifest revolt of the Castellans, who hauing leaued a great company of men of warre, and obtained by their Ambassadors, sent to Segobia, aide from King Henry of Castile, of fiftene hundred horse, vnder the conduct of the Commander Gonsalo de Saucedra, they aduanced their forces towards Lerida, with intent to seaze vpon the kings person, and to put to death all those of his priuy counsell. And for the more easie execution execution of their enterprife, they had fecret intelligence with diuerfe courtiers, the A chiefe of whom were Francis de Elpla, Gerard Ceruillon, and Iohn Agullen : but God pre-feru'd the King and his from fo iurious a confpiracy, difcouer'd at the inftant when he fhould haue bene executed, and yet fo happily as the King leaue'd to get away through the gate of the preaching friers, notwithstanding that D. Pedro d' Yrrea Arch-bifhop of Tarragona, one of the Ambaffadors of Catalogna had counsell'd him not to leau'e the towne of Lerida, but there to make head againft his enemies, whole aduife was approved by all the other Lords: there afsembled. The King was no fooner gon, but the confpirators entred the pallace with intent to haue committed their purpofed mafacre, but to their great difcontent they found it empty. The King retir'd himfelf to B Fraga, whether the Ambaffadors determin'd to haue follow'd him, and to try once againe if they could induce him to forgiue his fonne, hoping that the taft and new beginning of the troubles, which he had feene, would make him more mild : but they altering their purpofe return'd home into Catalogna. The rebels forces march'd towards Fraga where the King was, who from thence went to Saragoſſa, and left them the fpoile of that place.

in that place.

In the meane time thofe of Barcelona tooke their Gouvernor D. Lewis de Requesens prifoner, thofe of Valencia, Arragon, Sicill and Majorca, affilting them, and ioyning with them for the Princes deliuey. But aboue the reft, the faction of Beaumont in Nauarre fhewed themfelves violent in the pufure of their enemies of Grammont which held the Kings party, caufing fuch ruines and calamities in the Kingdome as can hardly be expreffed, the mindes of the multitude of each fide being fo inflamed againft their contrary faction, as they knew not vpon what termes, nor for what occafion, they had taken arms: for if one fhould haue demanded of thofe of Beaumont or Grammont, wherefore they were fo animated one againft the other: they could make no other anfwer, but that they did it becaufe their neighbours, friends and kinf-folkes did the fame. The ruines and defolations increasing on euery fide King Iohn feeling himfelfe touched in confcience, as if fuch troubles had falne vpon him by the iudgement of God, who would haue him to rafte and free in his owne Kingdomes, that which he the yceeres before had caufed the Realme of Caftile to endure, he did thereforearken, to the admonitions which were newly made to him by diuerfe wifemen, namely by a Charterhouse Monke of the Monaftery of Scala Dei in Catalogna, held at that time for a Prophet, whose name is fuppreft or forgotten by the Authors, and through their perfauation he difrefolue to fet the Prince at liberty, and to giue him to the Catalans who did fo earnestly defire it: He was then taken from the Aljferia of Saragoſſa by his mother in law Queene Iane, who by the commandement of the King went with him into Catalogna, and in the City of Villa-franca deliuered him vnto them: The common and conſtant report was, that from the time the Prince came forth of priſon, he neuer had one daies health, but his life did daily confume and decay, and diuerſe did impure the cauſe thereof to Queene Iane, who (as they ſay) poiſoned him, to the end to aduance and raiſe her ſonne D. Fernand Duke of Mombianche, to the ſucceſſion of the Kingdome of France and dependences of the ſame, a certaine ſtranger phyſitian being actor of ſo impious a deed, and the ſickenſſe wherewith the Queene was looſe after afflited, being an vncleuous canker ouer her whole body was attributed to the iuſt iudgement of God, who did puniſh her for committing ſo execrable an act: others, reiect this accuſation as falſe, and counterfeited by thofe of the faction of Beaumont, who notwithſtanding the Princes deliuey, continued in armes againſt thofe of Grammont, namely in the towne of Lombier, which by Charles d'Artieda, in the name of Prince Charles, was taken: againſt whom this King ſent his ſonne D. Alphonſo of Arragon Duke of Villa Hermola with a great number of ſouldiers, who beſieged the towne, and loone after the King came thither in perſon, with thofe of Sanqueſſa and other townes of the faction of Grammont. Charles of Artieda perceiving himſelfe to be ouerlaid with numbers, demanded aide of the Caſtilians, who forthwith marched thither, to meet the troups of the Commander Gonzalo de Sahuacura, and thofe of Rodrigo de Marchena, who raiſed the ſiege. The King D. Iohn hauing put garriſons into Pampelona, Lerin, and other places belonging

Don Charles
Prince of Vina, delivered
out of prison,
but poisoned
by his stepmother.

Queen Iane punished by the hand of God.

A to them which he distrusted, came to the Estates at Catalajub; leaving the government of Navarre to his children D. John, and Alphonso of Arragon, fearing and foreseeing the warre against Castile.

During theſe ſtirres in Nauatie and Arragon, the country of Andeluzia was aſſailed by Mulei Abbeſcan, or as ſome others termed him Hali Muley Haſen eldeſt ſonne to Iſmael King of Granada, contrary to the peace betwixt the Realmes of Caſtile and Granada, which his father King Iſmael deſired ſincerely and inuolubly to obſerue and keepe. This young Prince impatient of reſt, with fifteene thouſand footemen, and two thouſand five hundred horſemen came into Caſtile ouer-running and burning the country of Eſtepa, from whence he led away many Chriſtian priſoners, and a great number of cattale: to reſtreſſe whoſe ſpoile and robberies D. Roderigo Ponce of Leon, eldeſt ſonne to the Earle of Arcos, and Lenis de PERA captaine of Oliſno, came in all haſte to Eſtepa, with about two hundred and threeſcore horſe, and fix hundred choſen footmen onely; drogno, who hauing diſcouered this ſmal Chriſtian troupe, they ſent out two thouſand three hundred horſe in three Squadrons to make head againſt the commanding the reſt of their people to goe on their iourney with the priſoners and ſpoile: the Chriſtians at the fiſt were amazed at their enemies forces; but being incouraged by the captaines, they marched brauely againſt them, and charged them ſo valiantly as they brake them and put them to a ſhamefull flight, with an incredible ſlaughter: for the dead bodies being viewed, there was found ſlaine on the Moores part fourteene hundred, and of the Chriſtians onely thirty horſemen and a hundred and fifty footmen. The little victorious army of the Chriſtians hauing reſted and rallied their troups, at the fontaine of ſtone, perceiued the herds of cattale as they returned toward the places of their accuſtomed pature, being forſaken by the flying Moores; the which they tooke and brought backe, with their booties and ſpoiles, which were great and rich: and ſo they returned home to their garriſons and houſes, bearing along with them in great ioy and triumph, the colours, trumpets, and drums of the Moores: for the which victory, publiſh & general proceſſions were made ouerall Spaine: King Iſmael on the other ſide was much grieved for the great loſſe of his raſh and vneſperienſed ſonne: but moſt of all for the breach of the peace betwixt him and the King of Caſtile, which was the occaſion of the total ruine of the ſtate of the Moores in Granada, as ſhalbe hereafter declared.

D. Henry King of Castile did graunt this yeere to diuers vallicies and places of Guipuzcoa, the rights and customes of the towne of Saint Sebastian of the same Province, correcting and reforming those which they had of olde times, as the royall privilege of the yeere 1461. dated at Segobia doth testifie, signed by Garcia Mendez, secretary to the King. I from Segovia the Court remoued to Sepulueda, where the King restored D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, to the rights which he claimed in Guadaluara, as he had enioyed them in times past, with this condition, that his brother D. Pedro Gonsales de Mendoza Bishop of Calaaror, with the eldest sonne of the Marquis D. Iohn de Mendoza, should follow the court: which things were prazitized and brought to passe by the Archbishop of Siuil, D. Alphonso de Fonseca, and by D. Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena. These two were the principal persons about the King, by whose counsell the whole Kingdome was ruled; and yet for all that they were enemies, and extremely zealous of the name of the other, as it is ordinary among great men in courtinas also for the reasons, which we haue heretofore mentioned. Now the Marquis being desirous to driue the Archbishop, his coriall from the Court, the better to manage his affaires alone, he solicited the king his maiesty to make warre vpon King Iohn of Nauarre and Arragon, seeming therein to agree with the Archbishop, who had counselled the same euer since the imprisonment of Prince Charles, which was by reason of the league which hee had with Castile. For the effecting whereof, it behoued him to take some assistance of the Admirall D. Frederic, and the Archbishop of Toledo, D. Alphonso Carrillo de Acuna, who remained together at Yefes, making shew to fauour the King of Nauarre and to be of other party.

*The Mobres
defeated at Madrigue.*

17
Castille

D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza restored to his right in Guadaluara.

The Infanta
D. Juana, being borne, sworne
and declared heir of the kingdome.

all men: and being a noble and bountifull Knight, he kept open Court for certaine daies A with great feasting and pompous shewes. The Infanta being scarce two moneths old, the Kings pleasure was that he should be sworne and declared Princeesse, and inheritrix of his Realmes in the assembly of the generall states assembled at Madrid for the same purpose; the Infants D. Alphonso and Donna Isabella his sister, being the first that did swear in this solemnity: there grew a contention at this parliament about the precedence of the cities, who should first swear: but the Kings pleasure was that Segobia should swear first before any of the rest, without prejudice to their rights and pre-rogatives. The Court remained certaine months at Madrid and Segobia, the King taking great delight to hunt in those woody countries: from thence he went to Alfaro, to treat of the affaires of Navarre and Arragon, and hee left the Queene at Segobia three moneths gone with child, but she miscarried soone after the Kings departure, being B flighted with a strange fire kindled in her haire by a beame of the Sunne, as the late in her chamber, which burnt part of her lockes, a rare thing, but yet proceeding from certaine ointments apt to kindle, wherewith she used to die and colour her haire, a thing odious amongst amorous Ladies, whose only care and study is, to correct and amend the natural forme of their bodies, with artificiall receipts, so make them seeme the more lovely: this abortive child was a sonne.

Fire kindled in Queene Isabells
haire by the Sunne beames.

Navarre,
and Arragon.

Peace betweene Castile
and Arragon.

20 Sedition in Catallogna.

Queene Isabell
besieged in Girona.

King Henry being at Alfaro, the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Admirall D. Frederic began to mediate a peace betweene the two Kings of Castile and Arragon: and for that purpose King John came to Tudela, vnto whom the Marquis of Villena was sent, the King of Castile having first taken D. John of Arragon as ostage for him. At Tudela di- versie meanes were propounded for this conclusion of the peace, which taking no effect, it was thought fit that the Marquis should goe with King John and the Queene his wife to Saragossa to consult more amply of those affaires. The Marquis made lumme stay there, but King John had occasion to goe in all hast into Catallogna: in the meantime the Queene did entertaime him very sumptuously, and among other favours, she caused him to eate at her owne table, which as then was served onely with Ladies and gentle- women without any men at all. At the Kings returne to Saragossa, the peace was con- cluded, vpon the deliuey of ostages and certaine places for assurance on each side, to wit La Gardo, Saint Vincent, Arcos and Larraga by the King of Arragon, and on the part of Castile, Lorca in the Kingdome of Murcia, and Comago in the territory of Sorja. The Nauarrois were discontented that King John should give any places of the Realme of Navarre in pawne, rather then those of the Kingdome of Arragon: but of necessity it behoued them to bee content therewith. The Cattelans also were reconciled to the King, and they did acknowledge by oth the Infant D. Fernand being then nine yeeres old, for heire and lawfull successor to the crowne of Arragon, who from thenceforth was intituled Prince of Girona.

This peace, betwene King John and his subiects lasted not long, whether it were be- cause they were certified of the Princes vntimely death whom their did so deereely love, and which they desired to reuenge, or for any other occasion: but it fell so out that in the country of Rosillon, Ampurdan and other places of Catallogna, there arose great tumults and mutinies, the Earle of Pallars being chiefe of that rebellion: there was a rumor spread abroad, that Prince Charles his ghost did nightly complain in the streets of Barcelona, craving vengeance on Queene Isabell his step-mother, who by poison had par- ted his soule from his body.

The Queene to resist those disorders came to Girona, where she was forthwith be- sieged by the Earle of Pallars, and constrained, with the Prince D. Fernand her sonne, to fortifie her selfe with great danger of their liues in the tower of the Cathedral Church of the same city. At the same time the Barcelonois did drue al the Kings officers forth of their city, and as many as did loue and affect him, resolving neuer more to obey him, but to become subiects to the King of Castile. The Inhabitants of Girona did greatly fauour the beleaged Queene, who vnder the conduct of Du Puy master of the order of Monaca made great resistance, but the Earle of Pallars entred the city by force, and did furiously assault and batter the strong tower, desirous to take the Queene and the Prince her sonne: but

A but they one her side vsed such diligence as the Earle was beaten out of the towne with great losse of his people.

The King being much troubled with the reuolt of the Cattelans, and other places also of his Kingdomes, sent into France, to intreate of King Lewis aide of men and mo- ney, vnto whom he engaged, for the summe of three hundred thousand crownes of gold for the payment of his souldiars, the Earldome of Rosillon and Cerdagne. He ob- launces furnished, of which forces, Gaston Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearn, sonne in law to King John was Generall. In this warre, which was long and troublefome, diuers B Knights of the faction of Grammont did good seruice to the King, the chiefe of whom were Don Peter de Peralta, Constable of Navarre, Sanches of Londogno sonne to the Marshall of Navarre, Fernand of Angulo Stephen of Garro, Roerigo of Puellas, the Vic- count Bertrand of Armendaris, John Henriques of Lacarra, and Gyles de Aualos, James Dias of Armendaris Lord of Cadreira, Pedro of Ansa, John de Aquerra, and Sanche of Er- bini furnished the obstinate, who did beare for his motto or deuile, Sequitur no: glorying in that he was contentious: by reason whereof, this Knight had in his time many quar- rels to maintaine. The comming of the French, caused the Earle of Pallars to raise his siege from before Girona. So the Queene being freed, ioyned with the army of the Earle of Foix, and pursued the Rebelles, causing diuerse of them to craue pardon.

The King hauing leauied men at armes, sent them vnder the command of his sonne C Don Alphonso of Arragon to ioine likewise with the Earle of Foix his forces: hee him- selfe following after, staid a while in the City of Bellaguer to appease the tumultuary Inhabitants, into the which towne he entred in armes, and there receiued newes of the yeelding vp of Tarraga, whether he forthwith went, but soone after he was constrained to dislodge from thence, being aduertized that Don John de Agullon with certaine Re- giments came thitherward to surpris him, and so he returned to Bellaguer. Those of Barcelona, moued with extreame hatred against their King, did by publike proclama- D tion declare him enemy of their country, saying that they did iustly withdraw themselves from his obedience, he being the murderer of his own son, an oppressor of his subiects, breaker of his faith and promise, and one that did violate their rights, priuiledges, and ancient liberties: and they sent the acts and formal proceedings thereof to Rome to the Pope then reigning, who was called Pius the second, a Siennois of the family of Picolo- mini. And by a decree of the three Estates of the country, they sent an Ambassage to the King of Castile, to the end they might be receiued, maintained and defended, by him against the power of King John.

The Ambassador was a Gentleman very learned, named Copus, who in disguised ha- bit past into Castile, and found the King Don Henry at Atienza, who came thither to re- create himselfe, after the marriage made by him of the youngest daughter of the Mar- quis of Santillana, with his Minion. Bertrand de la Cueva Earle of Ledesma and one of his priuy councill. The Ambassador spake with the King, and declared vnto him the cause of his comming, which was to give him notice of the title which hee had to the principallity of Catallogna as also to the crowne of Arragon, the which was much bet- ter then King Johns, because hee was issued from the eldest sonne of Donns Leonora of Arragon, Queene of Castile, whereas King John and his brother King Alphonso, came of the younger sonne, and that he had now a fit occasion offered him for the recovery there- of, by the meanes of the Cattelans, iustly prouoked by the wrongs and tyrannies of the King D. John. The King hauing heard these things, referred the Ambassador to his coun- sel at Segobia, whither he shortly came, and propounding there in the open assembly of the great Lords, and of his counsell, that which the Ambassador of Catallogna had decla- F red vnto him, their opinions were diuers. In the end the Ambassador was called, and being asked wherefore he came, hee told them that hee was sent to request two things, to wit, that it might please the King of Castile to receiue the Cattelans for his subiects, and to aide them with certaine number of souldiars to defend them from their enemies, shewing the charge and commandment which he had from the three Estates to take the oth of obedience to him in their names.

John de Aragon pawns Rosillon to Lewis the seuenth.

D. John declared enemy by the Castel-lans and declared his right in that principality.

Castile.

Gallies, then with very easie conditions they yielded to the King, who left Roderigo of A Rebollo for their Gouvernor, he himselfe going backe to Ballaguer.

The Catalans thus distressed, sent new Ambassadors into Castile, one of them was the Archdeacon of Girona, who being ioynted to the Ambassador resident with King Henry, made new offers of submission and full obedience vnto him, beseeching him to intitule himselfe King of Arragon and Earle of Barcelona, seeing that hee was assured that those dominions did by all diuine and humane right belong vnto him, and that now the voluntary consent of the people did inuite him thereto, requesting moreouer aide of fouldiars. The King of Castile, beside this publique Ambassage, was solicited thereto by sundry Lords, and other cities of Valencia and Arragon; and to speake truly, hee did greatly incline to their demands: but the Archbishop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena, the Kings chiefe counsellors, after whose appetite the whole affaires of the Kingdome were governed, were of a contrary opinion, and peraduenture they had intelligence with King John of Arragon, but it was not certainly knowne whether it were so or no; wherefore the businesse being debated on by the counsell, the Ambassadors receiued this answer, that if they ment to haue any aide of fouldiars, it did then behoue them to bring store of money with them, and as for the title to the crowne of Arragon, and countie of Barcelona, King Henry would consider thereon with more mature deliberation.

The Ambassadors replied, that if it would please the King to take their cause in hand, and to shew himselfe openly in their defence as his subiects, they would venture their heads, if within the nexte daies after, they did not bring into the Kings coffers the summe of seuen hundred thousand florins of gold. This seemed a dreame to the Archbishop and the Marquis, for the summe was exceeding great for those times; and they two hauing an other purpose, wrought so well, as King Henry not onely refused their offers, but withdrew himselfe wholly from the warre of Arragon: giuing them to vnderstand, that he had rather with the helpe of the French King, mediate a good peace for them.

Now the Marquis and the Archbishop did purpose, and hope to deale in such sort, as the Realme of Nauarre, or a great part thereof, should by the treaty of peace fall to the crowne of Castile: To giue a certaine forme wherevnto, they sent word to King John and to the Earle of Foix, to send vnto them certaine French captaines, of those which were in Catalogna, to conferre about meanes of agreement with the King of Castile; and they vied other practizes to giue the French a distast of that warre, seeking their owne profit, vnder colour of making an agreement betweene the King of Arragon and his subiects: whilst the broiles continued in Catalogna, the Earle of Pallars, and the Lord of Cruillas, with a great number of fouldiars, hauing againe besetted Girona, were ouerthrowne and put to flight by Peter of Roquabertin Gouvernor of the City, and they lost many of their people with their baggage. The French marching towards Morella, brought diuers places on the coast of Virgel vnder the Kings obedience, but meeting neere Ixar with the Castilians, hauing good meanes to charge them, it is said that they gaue them to vnderstand, that in regard of the friendship and perpetuall confederacy betweene the Kings of France and Castile, they would couch their Launces against the Castilian standard, and thereof they excused themselves to the King of Arragon, saying that they were so commaunded to doe, and therefore besought him to take in good part, if they went about to appease the differences betwixt them.

The King of Arragon fashioning himselfe to their aduice, and hauing great hope in the good iudgement of the French king in those busineses, hee did consent that one of the French captaines should passe into Castile to the towne of Mountagu, where King Henry should meete to conferre with him about fit meanes to compose all those differences: the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena brought the king thither vnder colour of hunting; and it was agreed vpon, that the French king should be entreated, to send an Ambassador into Castile, to cause the warre to cease. The captaine being returned, related to the king of Arragon and to his sonne in law the

The King of Castile attempts to decrease the Barcellona, and King John himselfe.

The French refused to fight with the castilians

A Earle of Foix, what hee had concluded with the King of Castile; and at their entreaty the French King Lewis the eleuenth, sent an Ambassadour to the King of Castile, who found the Court at Almagar; and hauing had audience, a day was taken for the enterview of the three Kings of France, Castile, and Arragon, vpon the frontiers betweene Fontarabie, and Saint Iohn de Luz: and in the meane time there was a cessation from armes on all sides; the Cattellans were excluded from this accord remaying doubtfull betwixt hope and feare, attending the issue of that enterview.

The King Don John allowing all these things, came to Saragossa, with intent to meet at the day appointed for the Kings enterview. The Earle of Foix, the presumptiue heire of Nauarre in the right of his wife went thither, being very honourably receiued, especially of the Beaumonts faction.

Now the time of the enterview being come, the King of Arragon, for diuers reasons, could not, or would not appeare, relying in the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, with the King of Castile, and vpon his sonne in law Gaston of Foix, who knew very well how to maintaine his honour and to increase his profit with the French King. About the end of March in the yeere 1463, the King Don Henry arrived at Saint Sebastians in the Prouince of Guipuscoa, and King Lewis came the same time to Bayonne, vnto whom were sent as Ambassadors from the king of Castile, the Archbishop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena, with Aluar Gomes of Ciudad-reall, his principall secretary (they hauing so counselled him) to the end to treat with him about the agreement and pacification of the troubles betweene the kings of Castile and Arragon, the vncle and Nephew, and betweene the king of Arragon and the Catalans his subiects. It is reported, that the Marquis of Villena made an agreement with the French king, being by him recompensed with a yeerely pension of twelue thousand crownes.

Matters being then thus handled by them, King Lewis as Iudge and arbitrator betweene both parties, set downe his sentence in this manner: That King Henry of Castile should wholly abstaine from meddling in the businesse of the Cattellans; that within twenty daies hee should call all his fouldiars out of Catalogna and that for the expences which hee had bene at in the same warre the King of Arragon should giue vnto him the towne of Estella with all the demaines belonging thereto, which is one of the five members of the Kingdome of Nauarre, with a certaine summe of doubloons of gold, all which he should be bound to performe within fixe monthes, in which meane time, Queene Iane of Arragon should be held as ostage in the towne of Larraga vnder the safe keeping of the Archbishop of Toledo: That the Cattellans should become obedient to their King, vnto whom a generall pardon should be graunted of all that was past; for assurance whereof King John should giue them sufficient ostages. This sentence, hurtfull to the Kingdome of Nauarre, odious to the Cattellans, and little to the King of Castiles honour, was allowed of and receiued by the three Ambassadors aboue named, who wrote to King Henry, aduising him to set forward with his Court and traine to Fontaraby, and at that instant the Marquis of Villena arrived, bringing along with him the Earle of Comminges Admirall of France, who came from the King his Maister to entreate the King of Castile that they might keepe one another vpon French ground; the which they had before concluded vpon at Bayonne.

King Lewis being come to Saint Iohn de Luz, the two Kings met at the tiuer of Vidado, which in that place parteth both the Kingdomes: the which tiuer (as the Spaniards say) which all that which the flowing of the sea couers, belongs to Spaine. King Henry with diuerse great Lords and Knights being in diuerse boates did passe the tiuer, amongst whom were Don Pedro Gonfalez of Mendoza Bishop of Caloorra, Don Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, Don Gomes of Caceres Maister of Alcantara, Don Iohn de Valençuela Prior of Saint Iohns, Don Lewis de Acugna Bishop of Burgos, Don Bertrand de la Cueva Earle of Ledesma, with others verie brauely and richlie appointed; The French King and his Courtiers being meanly clothed, were by the Spaniards derided and scorned. These two great Princes hauing

The Marquis of Villena, being somewhat pertinacious to the King.

Enterview of King Lewis the eleventh and King Henry the fourth of Castile, at Bayonne.

27
An outrage of a Moore committed in Sevil against the King.

the vulgar sort in generall held with the Nephew, and had seized vpon the great church A and other strong places of the citie, holding it against the Gentlemen, and the Clergie, who fauoured the old Arch-bishoppe, and the rascall multitude had well-neere gained the haue with the Gallies that lay there, intending to fight both by sea and land, had not the King speedily prevented it, who hauing made inquirie of the matter, apprehended sundry of the Rebels, who were seuerely punished: the Nephew Arch-bishop was committed to prison in his owne house, and within fixe dayes after, the old Arch-bishop was restored to his former Sea, and diuers of the offenders were hanged out at the windowes of their owne houses, and some others sent to receiue punishment at Madrid. An other outrage was there committed at the same time, which did incite and stirre vp di-uers against the king: for his Court being greatly frequented with Noblemen Moores, whome he did highly fauour, one of them named Mosarras, (who did lodge in the house of an honourable Citizen called Diego Sanchez of Oriuela) was so farre transported with a libidinous appetite, as his host and hostesse being absent, hee rauished and carried away with him into Granada a very beautifull daughter of theirs, keeping her with him so long as he pleased. The sorrowfull father and mother at their returne home finding their house disurnished of their best ornament, accompanied with diuers of the best Citizens, went to make their complaint to the king, who told them that the fault was their owne, in leauing their daughter behind them, and so put them off with this impertinent answer: whereunto the parties grieved did reply, crauing iustice, but the King being displeased with their importunate exclamations, commaunded that they should be thrust out of his gates, set vpon asses, and publicly whipped vpp and downe the Citie: this vniust sentence should haue beene executed, had not the Earle D. Gonsal of Guzman, gone to the King and asked him, what reason the Officer should giue to the multitude for the whipping of those innocent people: then the King finding his owne error, was ashamed thereof, and went into his chamber, making him no answer at all, the Moores fault remayning unpunished, to the great scandall not onely of that Citie, but of the whole kingdom.

Not long after, the King made a journey to Gibraltar, newly conquered and sacked, where he gaue another prooffe and testimonie of a mind little fauouring of equitie, for he tooke away the gouernement thereof from Pedro de Porras, whome hee had placed there at the request of the Duke of Medina Sidonia, who had taken the same citie, and did giue and appropriate it to Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Earle of Ledesma, who placed there for Gouernour Stephano de Villareyes, who had married an Aunt of his: the which the Duke tooke very impatiently, and so it continued all the time of the troubles of the kingdom, vntill he had brought it againe vnder his owne power and iurisdiction, and ioyned it to the other possessions belonging to the house of Medina Sidonia, who hath alwaies enjoyed it, till the entire conquest of the kingdom of Granada: at which time it was for euer annexed to the Crowne.

The same time the King Don Alphonso of Portugall making warre vpon the Moores E of Affricke, came from Ceuta to Gibraltar at the intreatie and perswasion of King Henry, where these two Princes remayned and continued together the space of eight dayes, eating at one table, and shewing great tokens of loue and brotherly friendshippe one to the other.

28
Portugal.

This yeare 1463, the Infant Don Henry of the house of Portugall, the kings Vnde, Master of the Order commonly called of Christ, of the age of three-score and seven yeares, dyed in the citie of Sagres in Algarbe, who was buried in the Church of Battayle, and afterwards translated and carried away from thence to the Abbey of Battayle, built by his father king Iohn the first, and they report in Portugall, that this Prince dyed a virgin: he out-liued all his breethren that were legitimate, to wit, Don Iohn Master of Saint James, Don Fernand Master of Auiz, and Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra: their elder bastard-brother Don Alphonso Duke of Bragança dyed also not long before, leauing behind him for his successours in the Dutchie, his sonnes Don Fernand, Earle of Arrojos, and the Marquis of Villa-viciosa, who was (by lawfull succession, and by the right of inheritance) the second Duke of Bragança, begotten on Donna Beatrice, daughter

House of Bra-gança.

A daughter to Don Nugno Aluares Pereyra Earle of Barcellos, and first Constable of Portugall: Now the losse of these great personages was very grievous to the King Don Alphonso, who at that time by reason of his warres against the Moores, had great need of their helpe and Councell: hee had conducted a great army into Affricke against the city of Tanger, being followed by all the Nobility of Portugall, namely, by his brother the Infant Don Fernand Duke of Visco, his brother-in-law Don Pedro the third Constable of Portugall, sonne to the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra aboue-mentioned, D.
Edward de Meneses Earle of Viana, Don Gonçal the first Earle of Marialua, the Earle of Villa-reall, and other great Lords: but Don Pedro the third, Constable of Portugall, was at that time solicited by the Caballeros to name himselfe King of Arragon, for the reasons heretofore declared, who consented thereunto, and went with the Ambassadors of Cattalonia to the citie of Barcelona, where he was proclaymed King of Arra-gon, and Earle of Barcelona, vnto whom the Estates were sworne: but hee had to deale with a boylerous aduersarie, passing ouer his dayes in difficult warres, and finishing them by payson (as it was thought) as shall be hereafter more at large declared. After the departure of the Constable Don Pedro, the King Don Alphonso came to Gibraltar, and in his absence his people receiued an ouerthrow as they went about to scale the towne of Tanger, where diuers men of worth were slaine and taken. Among the prisoners were the Earle of Marialua, and Gomes Freyra, who were afterward redeemed for great ranfomes.

C After his returne from Gibraltar into Affricke, hee entred in person into Penaea, a mountainous and woddie countrey, from whence hee was constrained to retire to his great losse, where he left behind him D. Edward de Meneses Earle of Viana, who to saue the kings life being in great danger, lost his own. The Earle of Villa-reall did at that time, by his valour, saue the army, fighting brauely in the re-re-ward, defending it against an infinite multitude of Moores: in so much as the king being desirous to acknowledge his prowesse, did publicly prayse him, and gaue him the honor of being the shield and defender of the faith the same day: or to speake more properly, Gods instrument for the deliuerie and helpe of the Portugals. These aduerser fortunes caused King Alphonso to returne into Portugall with small honor, where he applied himselfe to vowes and pilgrimages, thinking hereby to appeale the Saints, patrons and conductors (as he thought) of his vnhappy and disastrous enterprises.

D King Henry of Castile at his departure from Gibraltar, came to Eccia, where he gathered together all the cauallerie of the garrisons and countrey neere about, ioyning them to his great armie, which he commonly carried about with him, wherewith he entred into the territories of Granada, where the Ambassadors of king Ismael the Moore met with him, and presented vnto him the tribute, with sundrie other gifts, so that he passed on no further, but dismissed his forces, and came to Iacn, whose Gouernor was the Constable Don Michael Lucas d'Irangu. At Iacn remayned Don Pedro Giron, Master of Calatrava, who being desirous to offend the Earle of Ledesma, and to set him at variance E with the Constable Don Michel Lucas, he told the King that he heard say, that he meant to bestow the Mastership of S. James, (which the Infant Don Alphonso held onely in name) vpon the Earle of Ledesma: and thereupon shewed him diuers reasons to persuade him to giue that dignitie rather to the Constable, who was a valiant Knight, and one greatly affected to his seruice: but the King seemed to giue no eare to his speech, knowing very well whereunto it tended. Don Pedro perceiued by many other reasons, that he was not very welcome to the King, who (as he supposed) did suspect him to bee of the league with the Marquis of Villena his brother, and the Arch-bishop of Toledo:
wherefore he returned thence, and then began they to treat of great leagues and confederacies, to the preiudice of the estate of Castile, prefiged by great tempests of wind, F which at Seville did ouerthrow a great quantitie of the city walls, and did blow away a great bell out of the Church of S. Angustine, aboue a bowes shot from the place where it did hang, tooke vp into the ayre a payre of Oxen yoked together at the plough, and plucked vppe by the rootes diuers sorts of trees, scattering them here and there in very fearefull manner: In the ayre was scene the proportion of armed men fighting, and three Eagles

Expedition into Affricke against the city of Tanger.

King Alphonso
for misfortunes in his expedition into Affricke.

29
Castile.

Prodigious
winds and other tokens of future calamities.

Eagles striuing together, with great furie fell downe dead to the ground. Matters standing in these termes, the King returned to Madrid, where he continued still carelesse of that which concerned the good of the Realme: there was no audience nor admittance for petitioners, nor any administration of iustice: he permitted his porters, and those of his guard to offer indignities to such as he did not loue and to those that did sue vnto him, and he would winke at them when as many times they would shut the gates against the Arch-bishoppe, and the Marquis of Villena, who were oftentimes sent from thence with many iniurious speeches. These things with other of greater importance would he giue ayne to, so as he willingly made a readie way to the greatest miseries and calamities that could be imagined. And hearing that the king Don Alphonso of Portugall was entered into Castile to visit, for deuotion sake, the Monasterie of Guadalupe, he departed from Madrid with the Queene his wife, and the Infants his brother and sister, and went to meet him at a place called the Arch-bishoppes bridge, not making the Marquis of Villena, nor the Arch-bishop of Toledo acquainted with any thing to bee treated of in that interview.

Interview of the king of Castile and Portugall at Gua-dalupa.

There were newly strengthened and confirmed the auncient leagues and allyances betwene the two kingdomes, by the agreement of future marriages with the king Don Alphonso who was a widower, and Donna Isabella sister to the king of Castile, and betwene the Infant Don Iohn of Portugall, eldest sonne and heire to that Crowne, of the age of eight yeares, and the Queene of Castiles daughter, who was tearmed the Princess Isane. These things promised and agreed vpon, the king of Portugall returned to Guadalupe to finish and performe his vow, and from thence into his owne country. In the meane time the Arch-bishop and the Marquis being forewarned by the tokens of disgrace, which they well perceyued, and by their own consciences, absented themselves from the Court, fearing to bee taken and punished, and with drew themselves to Alcalá de Henares, where they solicited their friends, and strengthened their league into the which, by the meanes of the Arch-bishop, entred very secretly the Admirall Don Fredrick, the Earle of Benauent, Don Alphonso Pimentell sonne-in-law to the Marquis, Don Roderigo Manrique Earle of Paredes, Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of Coria, with all his breethren: on the other side the Marquis of Villena went in person to draw into their league Don Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, Earle of Alua de Tormes, and Don Aluaro of Estuniga, Earle of Plaisance, whom he drew into the number. In like manner the Master of Calatraua played his part thorough the whole countrie of Andalusia, with great secrecie: for their desseigne was to get the Infants, Don Alphonso, and Donna Isabella from the Court into their power, to serue for a colour to their proceedings, not caring at all for Donna Isane, who was tearmed the Princess of Castile, whom they all held to be begotten in adulterie by Don Bertrand de la Cueva of the Queene. The king wanted no aduertisement and information of the progression of these matters, but he was negligent and carelesse.

D. Isane borne in adulterie,
the subject of all the stirrs in
Castile.

At his returne to Madrid hearing of the Arch-bishoppes and the Marqueses retreat, hee beganne to thinke vpon their dangerous practises, and sent to command them to come to the Court, to vnderstand what hee had agreed vpon and concluded with the king of Portugall, but they excused themselves, and desired to talke with the king in a place and companie not suspected. The King and the Marquis did see one another, and talked and conferred together betwene Madrid and Alcalá de Henares, without any conclusion.

Soone after it was decreed, that the Marquis of Santillana, and the Earle of Haros shoulde be giuen as hostages to the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo for the Marquis of Villena his safe-comming to the Court, who gaue the king to vnderstand, that he would not come, vnlesse hee would commit the Arch-bishop of Seuille Don Alphonso of Fonseca to prison, for the reasons which hee had shewed vnto him: endeavoring by his persecution, to keepe the rest of the kings seruants in suspition, the which came to passe: for the King who did already distrust the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, sent Iohn Fernandes Galindo, Gouvernour to the Queene to take him, who being aduertised thereof by the Marquis himselfe, who played with both hands, escaped, wherewith all the Lords of the

Councill,

A Councill, and others which were employed and negotiated in matters of State, were greatly offended: and then the violences and tyrannies which did afflicke the kingdome during this kings life, began to appeare.

After this trick the Marquis came to Court, and with him the Earles of Benauent and Paredes, and Don Alphonso Henriques, eldest sonne to the Admirall, euery one of them well accompanied with their acquaintance, friends, and seruants, with intent and purpose to seize vpon the persons of the King, the Earle of Ledesma, and the Infants. The King, as ill aduised as he was, did distrust them, and therefore caused the Infants to be shut vp in the tower of homage, with sufficient guard: and as hee was doing hereof, the confederates, who shoulde execute that enterprise, came hastily to the Pallace, and violently breaking open the gates, entred into the hall: then the King fearing and distrustful what might happen, withdrew himselfe by a priue way, with the Earle of Ledesma, hauing made the Infants safe. The Marquis who was wife and subtil, perceiuing their proiect and purpose to faile, with a stedfast and assured countenance, as though he had had no hand therein, presented himselfe to the King, and was one of those that did sollicite him rigorously to punish such an offence, which the King might easily haue done in himselfe, if he had bene possessed with an heroicke spirit: but all that hee sayd vnto him, was: How now Marquis, do you thinke that this which is attempted in my house, is well done? assure your selfe that I will be now no longer patient. The Marquis who was thoroughly acquainted with his humour, found meanes to appease him, and so returned to his lodging. But this senselesse King thought that he shoulde be sufficiently reuenged if hee shoulde giue sharper spurs to those who were already to much gauledd with enuie and emulation to see the Earle of Ledesma so honored, aduanced, and enriched.

His determination then was, in deliight of all his enemies, to honour him with the Mastership of Saint Iames, which was kept, since the death of the Constable Don Aluaro de Luna, by the King Don Iohn, and by this King Don Henry his sonne, as an appendix to the Crowne, with the dispensation of the Popes Nicholas the fifth, and Calixtus the third, vntill that time. And for to obtaine the consent and Bull of Pope Pius the second, he dispatched one of his Chaplaynes called Suero de Solis to Rome, who caried with him foureene thousand golden Henryes, to get expedition. Before this Chaplayne returned, the Secretarie Aluar Gomez, who had written the Kings letters to the Pope, went and revealed it to the Marquis, whose familiar friend and partisan he was, the which did the more enflame the confederates to the ruine of the King, his Minion, and the whole kingdome.

The Marquis who was very expert in all points belonging to a cunning Courtier, perswaded the King to remooue to Segobia, saying, that there the affaires in hand might bee better managed then at Madrid: but the truth was, hee did it of purpose to haue him neerer vnto the countreies of the Confederates; if the matter shoulde happen to come to strokes. And he dealt in such sort, making fo great a shew of distrust, as the Bishoppe of Palencia, brother to the Earle of Ledesma, was giuen in hostage to the Master of Calatraua, and kept in the towne of Pegnasel. When they were all come to Segobia, the Marquis failed to beare a great grudge to the Earles of Plaisance, Alua, and others: in which meane space arriued the messenger from Rome, bringing with him the Popes Bull for the Master-shippe of Saint Iames for the Earle of Ledesma, wherewith the king greatly reioyced, and told the Marquis that now he must needs allow and tolerate the Popes graunt to the Earle: who answered, that hee was well contented so to do: neuertheless hee shewed vnto him diuers reasons of the manifest and apparent wrong done therein to the Infant Don Alphonso, the which the King slightly passed ouer, and did not regard: and the day following hee did inuest the Earle in that place and dignitie, giuing and willingly surrendering vnto him the Ensignes and Ornaments thereunto belonging.

This deed did so highly displease the Marquis, as from thenceforth hee did sollicite the Confederates to arme themselves, and to practise how they might take the king, Queene, her daughter, together with the Infants Don Alphonso, and Donna Isabella, and conspiracie

against the K.
Queene, her daughter, and
D. Bertrand, de la Cueva.

Ar-istels agreed upon for the pacification of the troubles.

who should be acknowledged for Prince and heire of the kingdome of Castile, and oath A made vnto him in that nature at the same instant according to the custome of Spaine, by the Lords and Deputies of the townes and Prouinces that should be there present: and that the Lords and Knights should promise, that the Infant Don Alphonso, who was then eleven years old, should marrie Donna Joane the Queenes daughter, so soone as shee should come to age: againe, that the Earle of Ledesma should giue over the Mastership of Saint Iames, the which should be restored to the Infant Don Alphonso: That for the gouernment of the affaires of State, and other great busineses of the kingdome, two Knights of each side should be chosen, Don Alphonso of Oropeça Generall of the Ieronimites should be as vmpire betweene the two parties: on the Kings part for the assistance of the deliuerie of the Infant, should be giuen in hostage for the kings fidelity, the Master of Saint Iames, and the Earle of Benauent for that of the confederates.

These things being agreed vpon, the King came to Segobia, in the castle of which citie, the Queene and the Infants lay, and he caused the Infant Don Alphonso to depart thence to be deliuered to the Lords of the League, albeit it was fore-told him, that the Infant should be declared King of Castile: but the Secretarie Aluar Gomes, who was wholly at the Marquis his deuotion, assured him of the contrarie: vnto whome the charge to conduct the Infant to Segulueda was committed, where he deliuered him into the hands of the confederate Lords. The King returned to Valiodolite, from whence the next day, he returned to Cabeçon. The confederates on the other side, brought the Infant into the fields, where he was sworne vpon, and acknowledged Prince and heire of those kingdomes, being eleven yeares of age.

The Prelates and Knights of the league which were present at this ceremony, were D. Alphonso Carrillo of Acuña, Arch-bishop of Toledo, Don Alphonso of Fonseca Arch-bishop of Seule, Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of Coria, Don Frederick Henriquez great Admirall of Castile, Don Aluaro of Estuniga Earle of Plaisance, Don Garcia Aluaro of Toledo Earle of Alua, Don Rodrigo Manriquez Earle of Paredes, the Earles of Saint Marta and Ribadeo with others, who promised that the marriage betweene the Infant, and Donna Joane should be accomplished. And on the Kings side to consult vpon the administration of the affaires was chosen, Don Pedro of Velasco, eldest son to the Earle D of Haro, Don Pedro Fernandes of Velasco, and Gonsal of Sahauedra: the Confederates appointed the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Plaisance: and for a third person Friar Alphonso of Oropeça was named.

The King being come backe to Valiodolite, did handle the matter so with the Earle Don Bertrand de la Cuenca, as he for quietnesse sake renounced the Master-shippe of Saint Iames, and yeelded it vp into the Popes hands: For which deed of his, the King vsing his accustomed bountie, gaue him in recompence the towne of Albuquerque, with the title of Duke, with the townes of Cuellar, Roa, Molina, Atienza, la Pegna d'Alcaçar, and besides all this, three millions and five hundred thousand Marauidis of yearly rent, to be leuied vpon Vbeda, Baega, and other places of Andalusia: we will therefore hereafter call him Duke of Albuquerque, and Earle of Ledesma.

Those things being accomplished, the king went to Olmeda, and the Iudges or arbitrators which were chosen to Medina del campo, where whilst they conferred and disputed about the affaires, the Confederates had inuented new meanes to continue the troubles. The Arch-bishop of Toledo, and the Admirall Don Frederick made shew to be displeased with the Marquis, and made a craftie reconciliation with the King, making him beleue, that they had both will and meanes to ruine the Marquis: the King receyued them very fauourably, and for ioy thereof sent to Don Gomes of Caceres, Master of Alcantara, and to Don Pedro Puerto Carrero Earle of Medellin, whom hee very much trusted, to come to him with as many souldiers as they could leaue. Thereupon hee was aduertised, that the arbitrators had giuen vp their sentence, by the which there remayned nothing to him but the name of King onely: for the Marquis being a main very wife, eloquent, and well experienced, did so handle the other Deputies, as he made them to consend to whatsoever he pleased, hauing the Secretarie Aluar Gomes wholly at his deuotion, by whose meanes he drew Gonsal of Sahauedra to his party.

The

A The King being greatly troubled therewith, sent for Aluaro and Gonsal to come and speake with him: but they being kept backe with shame, and their owne euil conscience, durst not appeare in his presence, but secretly tooke an other way, where by chance they met with the maister of Alcantara and the Earle of Medellin who were going to the King with a thousand horse, whom these two run-aways made beleue, that the King had giuen charge to take them, and that he did greatly distrust them; and therefore aduised them not to shew them-selues vp in a place from whence they could not escape at their pleasures.

The King betrayed on all sides.

B They knowing the king, by many like examples, to be apt enough to do such a matter, did easily beleue what the Secretary and Gonsal had told them, and at their intreaty they went altogether and ioyned them-selues with their confederates, the which did wonderfully trouble the King, who had great cause to complaine of the ingratitude of Aluar Gomes de Cité Reall about the rest, because hee had trusted him with his greatest secrets, and had highly aduanced him, hauing giuen him the Lordshippe of Maqueda, and enabled him, by meanes of his fauour, honours and offices, to purchase Saint Sinclair and Torrejón de Velasco, and other waies aduanced him: although hee were of no Noble parentage: Apprehending then this treason of Aluaro, hee confiscated all his goods, and gaue the towne of Torrejon de Velasco, to Pedro Arfado de Auija, sonne to Diego of Segobia, his high treasurer. And afterward made an edict, whereby hee declared the deputies and arbitrators, assembled at Medina del Campo, suspect, and enemies to his crowne; reuoking, and declaring their sentence to be of no force. After that, hee came to Segouia; and the confederates went to Playfantia, carrying with them the Prince Don Alfonso.

Aluar Gomes
perfidious and disloyall to his King.

The King dis-trusts the arbitrators, sentence for the peace.

Matters being broken of, the Maister of Calatrava went into Andaloza to drawe the Lords of that country into the league. In the meane time the Arch-Bishoppe of Toledo and the Admirall, the better to assure the king of their fidelity, remayned in their houses, making no shew of cleauing to any side in those latter troubles, and they sayd, that they stayd there expecting when the King would fend for them: Now the King, the better to oblige them to his seruice, had promised to giue vnto the D Arch-bishop la mora of Medina del campo, and the City of Auila, and to the Admirall the Captenship of Valiodolite, and of Val de nebro, with a certaine summe of Henries of gold to pay their souldiers, to weete the Arch-Bishoppe fourteene hundred Launces, and the Admirall eight hundred, the which they obtained within few daies after: The king hauing left in Segobia, with a good and sure guard, the Queene his wife, with her daughter, and the Infanta Donna Isabell, hee went to Madrid whether the Arch-Bishop came as it were flying, because, (as hee sayd) the Marchiones of Villena had caused him to be pursued by the commandement of her husband, and the other confederates: being receaued and welcommed by the whole Courte, the King, the day following, held a counsell, wherein hee complained of the disobedience and rebellion of the Marquis and his confederates, who had made fundry attempts against his person, & the welfare & quiet of his realmes, which was wholly diuided in armes, & was so troubled, that without a fit and speedy remedy, both he himselfe, who was King, & the Lords, Citties, and other estates, should be exposed to the appetite of such as gaped after their liuings, places, and dignities: wherefore hee craued aduice what was to be done in a time so troublesome, wherein hee himselfe, with his faithfull friends, and counsellors, were ready to fall into extreame daunger.

King Henry ill advised guests his enemies meanes to war upon him.

E The Arch-Bishop as a Prelate of greatest authority, & who was the mouth of the rest, answered, and gaue the King counsell to demand the Prince Don Alfonso of the confederate Lords, saying that hee should liue better according to his dignity, being with him than in their company, seeing that the troubles were encreased by meanes of his deliuey vnto them, were as peace and quietnesse was expected: and if that they should refuse to fend him, that then the King should proceed against them by rigor of armes, as rebels and guilty of treason.

This counsell was receyued and allowed of them all: and therefore the King went towards

XXX

as much as his short stay would giue him leaue: from thence he went into Soria, and leaued souldiers there, for the defence of the same place. Alfaro being beseege and sinuously battered by the Earle, did hold out, notwithstanding that it is situated betwene Calaoorra and Tudela, wherein were great garrisons of French-men and Nauarrois, so as within the space of twelue daies, the succors of Castile appeared, consisting of one thousand three hundred horse, and five thousand footmen, conducted by Alphonso de Arellano Lord de los Cameros: by reason whereof the Earle raised his seige, and brought backe his people to Tudela: and soone after he receiued newes that the Inhabitants of Calaoorra had massacred the French Garrison there, and returned to the obedience of their Prince King Henry. These disorders did greatly displease the Earle, the Constable Lord Peter of Peralta, and others, who laide the whole fault vpon the Bishop of Pampelona who was the cause that the townes of La Garda, Saint Vincent and Arcos, which of old times belonged to Nauarre, haue euer since remained in the power of Castile.

King John after the victory, which his sonne had obtained at Poblín, receiued diuerse Inhabitants of the Province of Ampurdan, which yielded to him, some willingly, others for feare. And desiring straightly to beseege Ceruera, a strong place by nature, hee sent thither the troupes of D. Alphonso, and those which the Queene held before Valde-cona, a towne seated within a mile of Tortosa: but D. Alphonso, before he marched to the campe, vnderstanding that the Inhabitants of Igualada were at dissention among themselves, some of them cleauing to the new King D. Pedro, the others to King John: hee drew nere to it, and found meanes to take it whilst they were at variance: Having gotten in, he shed them kindly that held with King John, the others hee seuerely punished:
then he went to Ceruera, which was so speedily battered and assailed, as in the end it yel-ded vpon composition to haue their liues and goods saued, and their priuileges entirely maintained: the which was graunted. The government of that place was giuen to John de Carraxona, then they went to Pratas, where the new King D. Pedro had left a garrison, he himselfe being retired to Barcelona: Pratas was yielded, and Rodona likewise vpon conditions, and the army passed on to Tortosa, the Prince D. Fernando conducting the formost troupes, who beganne to encampe before Amposta, hauing with great difficulty passed the riuer Ebro, which was greatly swelled and risen. The seige of Ampo-sta was long and difficult, winter drawing neere, which proued that yere so exceeding cold, beyond the custome of the country, as it is reported that wolues came into the sol-diars tents and cabanes as though they had beene tame: and great numbers of sundry sorts of snakes were found in the fields, which did no hurt at all, which did greatly amaze the souldiers who held those things for strang prognostications: so as King John was constrained to comfort and animate his people with orations and friendly speeches, wherein a Sicillian Gentleman named Scipio Patello, who was wise and eloquent, did him good seruice. By the great labour of the souldiers, and extreme diligence of the captaines, Amposta was taken by force, where the King executed some of the principall Inhabitants, and pardoned others, as namely the Gouvernor who with diuers others had taken the castle.

After this they beseege Tortosa which the King greatly desired, who sent thither D.
Alphonso his son, to shut in the Inhabitants, and to prepare things in readinesse to batter it. The townes-men perceiving it was in good earnest, sent forty of their Citizens to the King, to perswade him to desist from that enterprize, and to assure him that Tortosa would not rebel against him, if the other townes of Catalonia would compound and yield: therefore they entreated him to go to some other place, and to leaue them in peace; other-wise, he should thinke, that if the taking of Amposta cost him so deere, that Tortosa, which was much stronger, and greater, would stand him in no lesse. The King knowing that the Tortosans were none of the valiantest, answered them, that if they did not submit themselves to his obedience, he would seuerely punish them: which they refusing, the warre beganne to be very sharpe in euery place about the City, with the day-ly losse of many on either side: the towne was battered with great fury on all parts, and the beseege made diuerse braue sallies vpon the enemies. D. Pedro who named himselfe

The Bishop of Pampelona
causeth the townes of La Garda, Saint
Vincent and Arcos, to re-maine vnder
the power of Castile.

Igualada fur-rised by meanes of the discord of the Inhabitants.

A cold winter.

Snakes among the army in the dead of winter.

Amposta taken by King John.

A himselfe King, did desire to succor Tortosa; but being with his forces on the way, he died by poison (as it is reported) in the City of Granol, five miles distant from Barcelona. King John being aduertized of the death of his enemy, did not dissemble the ioy that he felt, nor the Barcelonois their griefe and sorrow: but those of Tortosa were especially grieved for the hope of succor which they expected from him: so as being out of hope of helpe, and extremely beaten euery day, they yielded vpon reasonable termes.

These things were done in Catalonia, at the same time that the Prince Alphonso was proclaimed King of Castile at Auila, and King Henry degraded by the confederate Lords, vnto whose seruice and readuancement, from sundry parts of the Realme diuers Noblemen resorted: but Don Garcia Aluarez de Toledo Earle of Alua de Torres was hethat shewed the greatest loue and affection towards him, for he brought to his aide one thousand footmen, three hundred men at armes, and two hundred light horse or genets: he dwelt nere to Salamanca. The King sent the Earle of Alua and his troupes to Zamora with John Bermudes Galindo, who had command of the residew of the army:
he himselfe with the Queene, and the Infanta Isabella, went to Ledesma; where he was sumptuously entertained and feasted by the Duke of Albuquerque for the space of eight daies: from whence hauing assembled three hundred men at armes and two hundred genets, they accompanied the King to Zamora. The Queene and the Infanta Isabel went into Portugall to request aide of the King, whereof there was great need, but their labour was in vaine. At Zamora daily arriued great numbers of souldiers for the Kings seruice. The Earle of Trantamara brought thither two hundred men at armes, and two hundred genets, the Earle of Valencia, a hundred men at armes; and two hundred genets, others brought more or lesse according to their abilities. The King sent three hundred Launces to Segobia, to accompany the Lady Joane his supposed daughter to Zamora, where with great pompe hee entred the City vnder a canopy and in a Kingly habit.

In the meane time the Maister of Calatraua, stirred vp all Andalusia for the contrary part, and drew some by perfections, guifts and promises, & others by threatnings, force and violence. Hauing done his best (but in vaine) to enduce D. John de Valencuela to ioyne himselfe with the confederate Lords, he tooke him prisoner and would not release him, till he had snatched diuers fortresses from him, with the which not being satisfied, he tooke from him all the places belonging to the priory of Saint John, and gaue them to D. Aluaro de Estuniga third sonne to the Earle of Playfance; He dispossessed also the Bishop of Iaca, the Kings faithfull seruant, from all that he held, notwithstanding that he shed his goods and houses, boldly and familiarly as his guest. The Constable of Castile D. Michael Lucas de Franço, D. Pedro de Cordoua Earle of Cabra and his children, the Marshall of Castile D. Diego, the Commandor de Estepa D. Martin, and Martin Alphonso Lord of Alcaudete, did oppose themselves against the Maister of Calataua. The intent of the confederate Lords was to goe and beseege Simancas, and being gone from Valiodolit for the same purpose with great store of men and munition, by the way they tooke Pegnafeur: where whilst they were buied, the King caused John Bermudes Galindo to enter into Simancas with three hundred horse: and not long after the towne beeing inuested by the enemy, it was a hard matter to say, whether the be-seegers or the beseege were in most feare.

In the meane space whilst they lay before that towne, the knauish boies and lackies which were within the same did gather themselves together vpon a day, and in derision of the league, they made an image representing the Archbishop of Toledo, which they named the new D. Opas the Apostata, in the daies of Count Julian, who brought the Moors into Spain against King Rodericke: then they made one amongst them a Iudge, who sitting in a seate, commanded the image should be imprisoned: and afterward pronounced sentence, which was, that Alphonso Carrillo Archbishop of Toledo, following the steps of the old Bishop Opas, the ruine of Spain, for that he had betrayed the King his naturall Lord, rebelling against him, and detayning his money, townes and fortresses which he had committed to him, was condemned to be drawne vp
and

D. Pedro of Portugal, saying.

Tortosa yielded to King
John.

33
Castile.

D. Pedro Gõ-ron, Maister of Calatraua, turns An-dalu against the King.

The Arch-Bishop of Toledo chief of the rebels divided.

and downe the streets, and publike places of Simancas, a trumpet going before, who A should proclaime, that the King did command this iustice to bee done to the traitor O. pas, as a recompence due for his treacheries and treasons, and that then it should be burned. This sentence being pronounced aloud, the image was carried forth of the towne, accompanied with more then three hundred boies and lacquies, and burned nere to the confederats army and in their sight. The Lords of the league perceiving that they could not take Simancas, did raise their seege and brought their forces backe to Valiodelite.

The Kings army which was assembled at Toro did daily encrease, to the which their joyned the Earle of Medina Celi, with five hundred Launces, the Marquis of Santillana B with seven hundred, D. Pedro de Mendoza, Lord of Almazan, with two hundred, and a great number of footmen; diuers others also came thither, so that there were reckoned to be foure score thousand footmen and foure cene thousand horse, as well men at armes as light horse: who were all of them very desirous to fight and to doe the King good service, who by the aduice of the Lords and captaines of his army, caused the campe to dislodge, and to aduance towards the enemies, the Earle of Alua de Tormes leading the vanguard, and the battaile was conducted by D. Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza Bishop of Calaozza.

The army marching nere to Tordesillas, a captaine of the Vanguard, named C Garcia Mendes of Badajoz, disbanding with about two hundred horse, met nere to Valiodelite with John Carillo, a Knight of the Admiralls, leading a band of fifty horse, whom he fought with, vanquished, and tooke John Carillo prisoner, being grievously hurt, who was brought into a Chappel thereby, where hee entreated to speake with the King before he died, for he felt himselfe wounded to the death. The King at the intreaty of his friends came to visit the prisoner, whose end drew nere: he craved pardon of the King for bearing armes against him, and told him that he was come from Valiodelite the same day, by the commandement of those that had power ouer him, to finde means to kill him; and he did moreover reueale to the King sundry other vild practices; the King said, that he pardoned him with all his heart, and prayed God to pardon him likewise, and he enquired further of him, who those were which fought his life, and which D set him a worke; he entreated the King to send away them that stood by, and then in great secrecy he told their names, which could neuer after be knowne, for the King neuer told it to any man liuing: the next day after John Carillo died of his hurts. The King being at Simancas, his great and mighty army stretched it selfe euento the gates of Valiodelite, where the confederats did remaine; neuertheless the affaires were drawne out at length, without any matter of note. Thither came the Queene Donna Isabella, with the Infant Donna Isabella, who were returned from Portugall, where they had obtained nothing at all for the good of Castile: for notwithstanding that they had endeauored for to renew the treatie of marriage mentioned at the enterview of the Kings at the Archbishops bridge, neuertheless the King Don Alphonso did abhorre E to marry his sonne to Donna Isabella, whoe was begotten in adultery, of the Queene of Castile his cosin, by the Duke of Albuquerque Don Bertrand de la Cueva.

These things standing at a stay, the King and the Marquis of Villena did see one an other, and by the aduice of Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, and of Don Aluaro de Estuniga, chiefe Iustice of Castile, called and cholen on both parts, it was concluded, that euery man should lay by his armes and returne to his owne house: and that during the truce, which should continue for the space of some five monthes following, they should treat of a peace, and of the means how to giue content to all men; but chiefly, to cause the Prince Don Alphonso to renounce his royalty. This was proclaimed through the campe, nere to Montejo F in the territory of Arealo, signed and sealed by the King, the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, and vnderneath by the secretrary Garcia de Arcarefo de Montdragon.

The King had small reason to yeeld to these things, having an army of a hundred thousand fighting men; whereas his enemies were very weak in respect of him, and vnprouided

The King
hauing not time to profit himselfe by his great forces,

A vnprouided of money, victuals, munition and other things necessary for such an enterprise, but God would haue it so. The King being come backe to Simancas, dismissed his souldiars with liberall payment; then at Medina del Campo, whether hee came soone after, he recompensed the Lords after this manner: He gaue to D. Pero Gonçales de Mendoza Bishop of Calaozza the thirds of Guadalajara with the reuenue thereof to his brother D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, he gaue the towne of Saint Andrew, leyning to the lands of his Marquisat, with a yeerely pension of seven hundred thousand Marauedis: to the other brother D. Ignacio de Mendoza, and to Don Lorenzo de Suarez Vicont of Torreja, and to D. John Hurtado de Mendoza, pensions according to their degrees, to D. Lewis de la Cerda Earle of Medina Celi, the City of A B greda with the territory: to D. Garcia Aluarez de Toledo Earle of Alua, Carpia, with sundry places nere to Salamanca: to D. Aluaro Peres Osorio Lord of Villalobos and Earle of Trasmara, the City of Astorga with the title of Marquis, to D. John de Acugna Earle of Valencia, the Earldome of Pravia and Gijon, with the title of Duke of Valencia: to D. Pedro de Mendoza, Lord of Almazan, a yeerely pension of 300000. Marauedis, assigned him, on the hill of Mountagu: to D. Aluaro de Mendoza, captaine of his men at armes, the City of Requena, with the reuenue and profit of the port and hauen thereof. Other gifts and recompences did the King make to his Knights, the which, or at least the most part of them, haue euer since remained in their families.

Recompences made by the King to the Lords that followed him

The end of the twentieth Booke.

THE

THE ONE AND TWENTYTH BOOKE OF THE GENERALL HISTORY OF SPAIN.

The Contents.

- 1 Continuance of the troubles in Castile.
- 2 The unworthy marriage of the Infanta Donna Isabella, agreed upon by her brother King Henry, and binured by the sodaine and vnlooked for death of Don Pedro Giron.
- 3 Societies of Castile, union of the Princes and communalities holding together for the administration of iustice.
- 4 Assembly at Madrid: tumult in the same towne: Behaviour of those of Menoça: The D. Marquis of Villena promoted to the Maistrship of Saint Iames. Battaille of Olmedo.
- 5 The Pope vsith all diligence to procure the peace of Castile. Censures, the rebells appeals to a future Counsell. The taking of Segobia. The King D. Henry forsaken.
- 6 Agreement betwixt the King and the confederate Lords. Evil behavior of Donna Ioane Queene of Castile.
- 7 Strife for the Bishoprike of Siguença. Murthers at Burgos.
- 8 Seditions in Toledo: magnanimity, and equity of the Infans Don Alphonso chofen King.
- 9 D. Alphonso de Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, enterpriseth against his father in law Don Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena.
- 10 Praetices of those of Toledo against the Infans Don Alphonso in the behalfe of King Henry: Resoluesse of the Bishop of Badajos, and of Donna Maria de Silva and of that which happened.
- 11 Death of the Infans D. Alphonso: wisdom of the Infanta Donna Isabella: Peace betwixt the King and the confederate Lords.
- 12 Infamous life of Donna Ioane Queene of Castile: the Lords of Menoça praetive against the peace: the Infanta Donna Isabella declared Princeesse of the Asturias, and presumptiue heire of Castile.
- 13 Continuance of the warres of Barcelona: Renee of Aniou chofen King of Arragon by the Barcelonois. Exploits of the French in Castalonia: death of the Duke of Calabria.
- 14 Gaston Earle of Foix desirous to reigne before his time, stirreth up troubles in the Kingdome of Nauarre.
- 15 Queene Ioane of Arragon dies, and confesseth her fault.
- 16 Gaston of Foix the younger dies at Lierna. Beginning, and continuance of the house of Foix.

17 Coue-

- A 17 Couenants betwixt King Iohn of Arragon and his daughter the Countesse of Foix heire of Nauarre.
- 18 Assembly at Ocagna: New designs of King Henry of Castile.
- 19 The King of Castiles iourney into Andalusia.
- 20 Marriage betwixt the Infanta Donna Isabella, and the Prince D. Fernand heire of Arragon, Sicill, Naples &c. Articles and couenants of the same.
- 21 A rash act of D. Alphonso de Aguilar against the Lords of Cabra. The taking of Simancas, with other outrages.
- 22 Spanish superstitions.
- B 23 Praetices, perfutes and quarrels betwixt the Lords of Castile. Alua erected into a Dutchy.
- 24 Muley Alboacen King of Granado, whose posterity remaineth in Spaine till this day.
- 25 Treaty of Marriage betwixt King Henry of Castiles supposed daughter and the Duke of Guyenne, brother to the French King Lewis the eleuenth. Lands of Infanta Isgo giuen to the house of Menoça.
- 26 Donna Isabella Princeesse of Castile disinherited: King Henry forswears himselfe Donna Ioane and the Duke of Guyenne betrothed together by Ambassadors. The duke dies.
- 27 The Archbishop of Toledo raiseth new troubles.
- C 28 Quarrels betwixt the Earles of Haro and Treuigno.
- 29 African expeditions, and other affaires of Portugall.
- 30 Enteruiew of the Kings of Castile and Portugall.
- 31 End of the warre of Barcelona.
- 32 Ral and successefull enterprise of the Princeesse Leonora Countesse of Foix against the city of Pampelona, and those of Beaumont.
- 33 Second marriage of the Marquis of Villena Maistr of Saint Iames.
- 34 Roderigo Borgia Cardinal and legat in Spaine.
- 35 New Christians massacred at Cordoua and Iacn, where the Constable of Castile Don Michael Lucas of France was murdered: The same dignity giuen to the house of Velsco.
- D 36 Enterprise of the Maistr of Saint Iames against D. Andrea de Cabrera: D. Pedro Gonçal de Menoça made Cardinall.
- 37 Parliament at Madrid, determinations thereof. Outrage and insolency of the Maistr of Saint Iames: Enteruiew of King Henry of Castile, and of the Princeesse Donna Isabel his sister, and likewise of Prince Fernando her houseband. Prinitledge of the Earle of Ribadeo. Suspicious banquet.
- 38 Death of Earle Gaston de Foix husband to Princeesse Leonora of Nauarre: her titles: hard suspicions of her chastity: the Bishop of Pampelona murdered.
- 39 King Iohn of Arragon and Lewis the eleuenth the French King, quarrel about the Earle-dome of Rossillon.
- E 40 Quarrels betwixt the houses of Menoça, and Pimentel.
- 41 Death of D. Iohn de Pacheco Maistr of Saint Iames: Three maistrs of the same Order contend together at one time. Last acts of King Henry of Castile.

Yyy

THE

The one and twentieth Booke of the History of Spaine.

Orwithstanding the agreement made at Montejo, the Kingdome of Castile was neuer the more at quiet: for the Infant Don Alphonso called himselfe King neuerthelesse; and in his writings and letters patentes (diuers of which are to be seene in Spaine at this day, as namely at Valiolidit and Arcualo) he named himself King of Castile, Leon, Toledo, Galicia, Siuil, Cordoua, Murcia, Iacn, Algarua, Algezire, and Gibraltar, and Lord of Biscay and Molina: neither did the confederate Lords lay downe their armes, according as they had sworne and promised: perceiuing very well that all King Henries great forces and meanes would come to nothing through his negligence and carelesnesse: by meanes whereof the Realme of Spaine grew infamous though the robberies and oppressions which the fouldiars did daily commit in euery place without any punishment at all.

It happened on a day as the confederates went out of Valiolidit to Alfaro, they were no sooner out of the towne but the Inhabitants shut their gates against them, putting themselves againe vnder King Henries obedience, and did driue all those out of their city which had any correspondence with the league. The King being aduertized thereof, came sodainly thither, where hee was receiued with great ioy. In recompence of the losse of Valiolidit, the confederates made an enterprife vpon Simanca, thinking to haue taken it by escalado, but they themselves were taken, and diuers of them sent backe to Valiolidit, where they were cut in quarters. The King did for all this haiken to the agreement which had bin resolved among them, and did bend his care to whatsoeuer was propounded by the Marquis, whose onely drift was to take him, if hee could haue but drawne him into any place fit for the purpose: but the King hearing thereof, stood still vpon his garde, and when at any time there was any occasion of meeting to conferre, he alwaies sent the Bishop of Calaoarra and John Fernandes Galindo vnto them. They concluded vpon nothing, so that many Lords which followed the Court, tooke their leaues, and returned to their owne houses. There remained continually with the King the Bishop of Calaoarra the Marquis of Santillana and his bretheren; the Earles of Haro, Valence, and Cabra, the new Marquis of Astorga, the Constable D. Michael Lucas de Iranqu, and the Duke of Albuquerque.

The King hauing left a good garrison in Valiolidit, returned to Segobia: at the same time the affaires of the confederates, were in bad termes, and if the King or they which were neere about him had truly vnderstood themselves, he might very easily haue dissolved that league, for the Marquis through want of meanes, was very badly and vnsuilingly followed by those which were about him.

The Prince Don Alphonso distrusting the end of their enterprises, would willingly haue made an attonement with the King his brother: but they held him very short, and threatened him, that if hee made but the least shew to bend that way, to present him with a cuppe of poison: therevpon by meanes of the Archbishop of Siuil, a very vnseemly agreement was made, to the which neuerthelesse the King gaue eare willingly: which was, to marry the Infanta Donna Isabella his sister to Don Pedro Giron Maister of Calatraua vpon condition that hee should promise to cause Prince Alphonso to giue ouer the title of King, and to furnish a certaine summe of money with

The Prince
Don Alphonso
chosen King, in miserable expectation of the kinges of the castles rates.

An other agreement was swept digested.

A with three thousand launces for the Kings seruice: besides this, it was concluded that the Bishop of Calaoarra and the Duke of Albuquerque should leaue the Court, who forthwith without any contradiction did so. The Infanta Donna Isabella was wonderfully afflicted with griefe when she vnderstood these newes, considering the inequality of the marriage, and the indignity offered her by the King her brother, and like a noble and couragious Princeesse, she determined rather to kill her selfe then euer to yeeld vnto it: but first of all, shee thought it fit to trie all possible meanes how to ridde this new husband of his life: shee had a very trusty Gentlewoman named Beatrice of Boadilla, who offered with the help of her husband Andrew de Cabrera, to kill the Maister vpon the wedding night, as soone as hee should offer to lie downe by the Princeesse: this Lady was by the Infanta at her conmiing to the crowne of Castile created Marquesse of Moya.

These things being thus plotted; it happened that as the Maister D. Pedro Giron was on his way to the Court to sollemnize his marriage, bringing with him great numbers of horsemen, he was taken with a greivous sicknesse, whereof hee died at Villa-rubia, hauing held the Maistership of Calatraua one and twenty yeeres: whether this happened accidentally, or otherwaies, it remains doubtfull, but his death was very displeasing to the King, who thought by meanes of this marriage to giue an end to all the miseries and troubles of his Kingdome, and to re-enter into his former authority and quiet. In this place, his sonne Don Roderigo Telles Giron was chosen Maister of Calatraua, by verue of a grant which he obtained from Rome, who was the last Maister of that order sauing one: a brother of his called Don Alphonso Telles Giron succeeded in the Lordship and Earldome of Vruena, both of them remaining vnder the gouernment and protection of their vncl D. John de Pacheca, Marquis of Villena. These things happened in the year 1466. at which time there were seene in Castile such huge numbers of Storks, as they did darken and hinder the light of the Sunne, the which did greatly afright the people, who did interpret it for a signe of misery and mishap to the kingdome.

In these times liued D. Roderigo Sanchez of Arcualo, who was very familiar with Pope Paul the second, and by him made captaine of the castle of Saint Angelo, where he wrote an History of Spaine, which at this day is common with euery man, and is called the Palentine History, because a Bishop of Palencia was author thereof, and it was dedicated to this King Henry. The city of Victoria, for that it had, during all the troubles, remained faithfull to the King, did obtaine this yeere a free market, once euery weeke vpon the Thursday, whose priuiledge was despatched by the Secretary Pedro Arias: it is one of the most frequented markets in the whole country.

After the Maister of Calatraua's death: the troubles were a little calmed, by reason that no man was resolved what to doe: the Earle of Benauent acknowledging the offence which hee had committed against the King, did secretly withdraw himselfe from the league, and returned to his seruice: the King to recompence him, gaue him the towne of Portillo, which hee had taken a little before his reconciliation. About the same time, the Prince Don Alphonso, who was termed King, accompanied with the Archbishop of Toledo, and many other Knights, came to Portillo, where being receiued, hee was lodged in the castle, and the others in the towne: on the morrow as the Archbishop and the other Lords came to waite vpon the Prince at his rising, they found the gates shut against them, and they were willing to get them thence, for that Don Alphonso did no longer regard their company, whereat the Archbishop was greatly troubled, and from that time did conceiue an extreame hatred against the Earle, who had put that trick vpon him, the better thereby to insinuate himselfe into the Kings fauour: yet for all that the Marquis of Villena, who was very wise and subtil, did desire for to maintaine the league vnited, vied diuerse meanes to reconcile them, and to applie a plaister to that wound, which in some sort did heale outwardly.

The Earle in recompence of the good seruice which hee had done to the King, demanded of him the Maistership of Saint Iames, at that time vacant, the which was granted to him: but perswading himselfe to make vse of the Marquis of Villena's fauour,

Y y y 2 who

Magnanimity
of the Infanta D. Isabel.

Death of Don
Pedro Giron Maister of Calatraua.

An. 1466.
A prodige.

who was his father in law, whom he made beleue that he was still of his side, he inwardly found the contrary.

The continual robberies and outrages committed ouer all Spaine by these Lords and their followers, not onely suffred in the country, but euen in townes and houses, by reason the warres did constrain the Inhabitants of the townes and cities to make societies, and fellowships, to oppose themselves against these tyrants and robbers; and the better to bring it to passe, they drew certaine chiefe points and Articles, and chose places to meet at, at daies appointed, the King backing and assisting them therein, notwithstanding that sundry of his followers, as well as of the league, did goe about to hinder so profitable an enterprise, whereby the Realme was defended from many evils; it being Gods pleasure that the King should persist in his determination to maintain his communalities, and to doe Justice, which beganne to be sincerely administrated. The conclusions of these societies was made in the City of Tordeillas, where the Deputies of all the Prouinces were assembled, where that of Guipulcoa, most of all shaken and troubled by the factions of the Gamboins and Ognaxins, did recieue the greatest benefit. They did establish captaines and gouernors ouer each of them: these are the Hermandades or brotherhoods (as they call them) who in some sort may be likened to the Prouincial prouost Marshalls in sundry places of France; but that they execute their duties with greater care.

During the assembly at Tordeillas, the King remained at Coca, a towne belonging to the Archbishop of Siuill, conferring with the confederates vnder the Bishops safe-conduct: but there was nothing of worth concluded on; so as the King returned to Segobia, and the league to Arevalo. An other assembly, at the request of diuers, was assigned at Madrid, the same towne being for sixe monthes giuen to the Archbishop of Siuill, to the end that euery man might come thither in safety and without suspicion: The King Henry, the Marquis of Villena, and the chiefe Lords of either faction did meet: The Prince D. Alphonso remained in the meane time at Ocagna, whether the Archbishop of Toledo (who was reconciled to him) had brought him: his other conference was as fruitlesse as the former. The Lady Leonora Pimentell Countesse of Playfancia came to Madrid, being called thither by both sides to mediate the peace: this Lady was held to be greatly affected to King Henries seruice. The Lords being busied about these affaires, the Marquis being desirous to entertaine the troubles and to extract discord from discord, went about to corrupt Pedro Arias de Auila the Kings good seruant: finding him firme and constant, he handled the matter so, as the Archbishop of Siuill for slanderous and false reports, did excite the credulous King in such sort against him, as he committed him to prison being fore hurt, and caused him to be shut vp in the base court of the castle of Madrid. And not contented therewith, the King went expressly to Segobia, thinking there to surpris the Bishop of the same City, called Don Iohn de Arias, brother to Don Pedro, but the Bishop hauing notice of what was done to his brother, retired himselfe thence: wherefore the King seeing that he was escaped, dissembled his intent; neuertheless all honest people were greatly offended to see the King without discretion to oppress his faithfull seruants, and not dare to lay hand vpon rebels.

The Deputies of the townes, and the captaines of the communalities made meanes for Don Pedro's deliuerance, which the King granted, all men being pleased therewith, except the confederates, who neuer left practicing with the King till they drew him to condescend to goe along with them to Playfance, there to conferre with more ease and better commoditie: which being allowed of by diuers of his counsell, hee would needs depart thence with the Queene his wife, the Infanta Donna Isabell, and Donna Joane his supposed daughter, vpon the safe-conduct of the Earle of Playfance. This Joane his supposed daughter by others of the Kings faithfull seruants, which were not resolution being vnderstood by others of the Kings faithfull seruants, where it was resolved, that seeing that the King would needs goe on to his destruction, the lower Colonells or Captaines of the communalities, with foure other of his owne seruants should bee sent vnto him, to aduertize him of the danger of such a conference, at the place

Hermandades, or brotherhoods of the Prouinces and communalities holding together for the administration of justice.

Assembly at Madrid.

King Henry opposeth his trusty seruants, and dares not touch their belts.

Tumult at Madrid.

A place whether he ment to goe and if he would persist in his determination, then to protest, that they would hinder his journey by armes. The King tooke this message in good part, and feigning to consent thereto, debated againe with those which did allow of that journey: wherefore holding his purpose, there arose such a tumult in the City as the Archbishop of Siuill and the Countesse of Playfance, fearing that the people would fall vpon them, in all hast ranne out of the towne, and waited for the King on the other side of the riuer, right ouer against the castle, accompanied with three hundred horse: the King being ready to come forth, the mutiny did so encrease, as the people and those of the Court who were discontented with that journey, running to arme themselves, went out of the towne, crying out, kill those traitors that lead away the King, whom they compassed about and withheld by force. The Archbishop and the Countesse being in great feare, fled to Illeca, where the Infante Don Alphonso lay, with whom they passed ouer the mountaine, and retired to Arevalo. King Henry being brought backe to his lodging, received a garde to prevent the practices of the confederates. The Court soone after remooued to Segobia, whether Pedro of Montibero was sent, by the league, hauing in charge to trie if hee could draw Pedro Arias de Auila to their party, but he lost his labour: and where force could not preuaile, treasons and deceits were set on foote of all sides, for Pedro de Silua captaine of Olmedo deliuered vp that place to the confederates, who presently lodged therein: by reason whereof the King sent to will the Marquis of Santillana to lie with sixe hundred horse at Saint Christoffers, a Bourrough halfe a mile distant from Segobia. The King at the request of the Marquis, committed Donna Joane, whom he maintained for his daughter, to the keeping of D. Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla his brother, who vnder good garde, placed her in the castle of Buyrago: the Marquis of Santillana, the Earle of Tendilla and the Bishop of Calaoorra brethren, were at that time of the counsell of State and did rule the Kingdome.

Those of Medina del Campo, being continually vexed by the garrisons of the confederats which held La Mote; demanded aide; wherefore the King in their behalfe drew neere to Cuellar. Thither came secretly D. Pedro de Velasco, eldest sonne to the Earle of Haro, by the commandement (as hee said) of his father, who craued pardon of the King for offending him, protesting euer afterwards to become his faithfull seruant, and to bring seuen hundred horse to his seruice, three hundred of which should bee gentlemen; and a certaine number of footmen for the succour of Medina. The King, who of his owne nature was but to milde, and at that time had need of men, did freely pardon him, and sent him backe for those men which hee offered. Other Noblemen were also sent for by the King, namely the Earle of Alua who made no great haste.

Don Pedro de Velasco being returned with the seauen hundred horse, all the forces came to Cuellar. It is reported, that Don Pedro vsed these speeches to the King, Sir, she Earle my father hath commanded mee to present this writing vnto you (it was a gift for the tenets at sea) beseeching you to signe and grant it, and to receaue from him this ayde of horse and foote: and if you shall refuse him this grant, hee hath put it to my choyce to doe as I shall thinke good. The King did very easily yeeld to his request, considering what great need hee had of his seruice. By this time the Kings Armie was very strong, and diuised of the great Lords of the Kings Councell, being tired with such toyles which were to no purpose, and would neuer bee ended, vnlesse some violent proceedings might be vsed, were of opinion to seeke meanes to come to blowes, and therefore they drew neere to Olmedo, prouoking the confederates (who had there assembled their forces) to battaile: the which was resolved and determined, albeit the King withheld.

As the army marched to Olmedo, there arrived in the Kings campe a King at armes, sent by the Archbishop of Siuill to D. Bartrand de la Cueva Duke of Albuquerque, to giue him to vnderstand that there were forty Knights of the confederates of Prince Alphonso's traine, that had vowed vpon the daie of battaile to seeke him out in the middle of the ranks, and to kill him: wherefore hee wished him to fight that day in disguised armor.

The king will be lay by force and left them the more pieces of it to seele whereinto hee heading ran.

The house of Mendoza at this time, as we see the Kingdome of Castile.

deceyued him : for that did belong onely to him, and to the other great Lords of the A same cuntry.

appeale from the Pope to the next generall Councell.

Infolencie as gainst the Le-gates.

At this meeting, nor yet at another which was made nere to Montejo de la Veja, was there any thing concluded on: Wherefore hee beganne to proceed against the Confe-derates by Ecclesiasticall censures; but the Lords of the League did appeale to the first generall Councell, the Licentiate John d'Alcantara, and the Doctor Alphonso of Madrigal throwing in their appeales. The Legate perceiving his labour to bee lost, would have gone backe to Medina, but diuers of the Rebels followed after him, crying out, Wee ap-peale, we appeale, and with great outrages brought him backe to Olmedo: the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, and the Master of Saint Iames seeming to bee discontented there. B With, tooke vpon them to defend him: Whilest the Legate was thus handled, the Confederates practised how to draw to their side Pedro Arias of Auila, and the Bishop Don John of Segobia his brother, who beeing already offended with the wrong, which the King had offered them, (whereof wee haue spoken heretofore) were easily perswaded thereunto: the chiefe doers in this businesse were Lewis de Mesa, Pedro Arias his familiar friend, Perucho of Munfaras Captaine of the Castle of Segobia, Fryar Rodrigo of Mesa Abbot of Parral, and brother to Lewis, with other Monkes and Church-men, who did lay a plotte to deliuer the citie of Segobia to the Confederate Lords.

The city of Segobia deliuered to the confederate Lords.

Queene Joane, Donna Isabella, with other Ladies and Gentlewomen of great place, C were lodged in the pallace of the same Citie, where they had notice of this practise, some of them with great feare beganne to dislodge: the Queene withdrew her selfe into the Cathedrall Church, where thinking her selfe not safe enough, shee entreated to be recey-ued into the Castle, with the Dutchesse of Albuquerque and other Ladies: but the Infanta Donna Isabella had no will to remouee: for beeing incensed against king Henry her brother, shee had intelligence with the Prince Don Alphonso, and did wholly adhere to the Confederates, who entred into the Citie in armes, through a false port of the Bishoppes lodgings, and made themselves master thereof without any resistance, to the great grieue of the Inhabitants.

The King forsaken of his people.

The Lords of the League went directly to the pallace to salute the Infanta, who com- D mitted her selfe wholly into their hands. The king hauing notice hereof, departed very melancholy from Medina, with such troupes as hee could get about him, and marched towards Cuellar, where in the mid way, the Castle of Ilicat was assailed (at the intreatie of the Earle of Treuigno) in which Castle the Earle of Plaisance kept the Earle of Tre-uigno's mother in dishonest manner: the place beeing taken, the Countesse was sent away prisoner by her sonne into his cuntry. The losse of Segobia did much grieue the the King: for his abode there pleased him aboue all other, as well because hee was brought vp there from his infancie, as for the wood of Balsain, and other places thereabouts fitt for hunting, and also in regard of his treasure which lay in the castle thereof:
and the grieue and feeling of his aduersities, did so oppress him, as beeing desperate and almost besides himselfe; he was contented to be drawne by the deuices of the Master of Saint Iames to the towne of Coca, vnder the promise and assurance of the Archbishoppe of Seuille, not telling, or making it knowne to any of the Lords or Knights of his trayne, and taking but a very few of his household seruants with him.

Wherefore all men beeing discontented with these courtes, which did manifestly tend to the ruine of the King, and of those which did him seruice, they with-drew themselves discontented to their owne houses. The Kings Officers and household seruants (seeing themselves forsaken and left in so pitifull and miserable estate, were ashamed to tell vnto whom they did belong, when they came to any place.

Diego Henriques King Henries Chronicler

The Licentiate Diego Henriquez, the Kings Chronicler, hauing obtained a safe con- F duct, came to Segobia, where hee had a house, wherein were diuers goods and papers of great consequence: but neuertheless he was taken, and ilk treated, his goods stolen, and his writings scattered abroad, to the great danger of his person, if God had not drawne him out of their hands: for the Rebels were greatly moued against him, because that in his written memories and chronicles hee had set downe the truth of their proceedings.

The

A The king beeing come to Coca, they changed the place, and their opinion was to conferre at Segobia, in the castle of which citie hee was lodged and entertained by the Earle of Alua, and the Master of Alcantara, albeit that Perucho de Munfaras, Captaine of the place, was not well contented therewith.

Other agreement betwixt
the king and the rebels.

The King and the Master of Saint Iames meeting afterward in the great Church, after diuers reasons on either side, it was agreed, that the king should consent, that the fort of Segobia should remayne vnder the command of the Master of Saint Iames, the kings treasures and moueables to be kept safe and restored to him, who should send them to the castle of Madrid, the Captaine-ship of which, with the keeping of those things, the King should graunt to Perucho de Munfaras: Moreouer, that the Queene should be gi-uen in hostage and left in trust with the Arch-bishop of Seuille for fixe moneths, within which time the King should be restored to all his former honour and dignitie. These articles were afterward performed, the treasures transported to Madrid, and Queene Joane was sent to the castle of Alaejos, where holding on the course of life which the King had taught her, shee fell in loue with a certaine young man, by whom hee had two children, which was the cause of many vnworthie outrages, as shall bee hereafter declared.
After this treatie, the King beeing in as lamentable an estate as before, went vppe and done his kingdome, no otherwise than if hee had beene a poore Gentleman. In this meane equiage, he arriued in the territories of Don Aluaro of Eftuniga, Earle of Plai-fance, who with the Countesse his wife did intertaine him very honorably, according to C his degree, much compassionating his miseries and aduersities, wherewith beeing moo-ued, they comforted him as much as lay in their power: but it stood him in no stead against the power and obstinacie of the Master of Saint Iames.

Will life of Queene Joane
of Castile.

This yeare 1468. died Don Fernand of Buxan, Bishop of Siguenza: the Deane of the same Church, named Don John of Madrid, seized both vpon the goods of the partie deceased, and vpon the Citie likewise, and hauing learned that a good Bishoppricke is a thing worthe to be desired, hee caused himselfe to be chosen Bishoppe by the Chapter, strengthening himselfe with the partie of Don Alphonso, and the Confederates:
but Pope Paul the second reiected this election, and gaue the Bishoppricke to the Cardinall Don John de Mella Bishoppe of Zamorra, who pursuing the possession thereof by armes, (the Deane not obeying, and appealing from the Pope to a Councell) dyed.
Then the Pope bestowed it vpon Don Pero Gonzales of Mendoza, Bishop of Calaoorra, the kings loyall and faithfull seruant, and excommunicated the Deane and his Chanons, granting their benefices and Prebendships to others. For all this the Deane would not yeeld, but made greater resistance than before, notwithstanding that the King offer-red him, if he would leaue the Bishoppricke of Siguenza, to giue him that of Calaoorra with the Abbey of La Huerta to boot.

An. 1468.

7 Concession for the Bishoppricke of Siguenza.

Now seeing that neither right, force, threatnings, nor kind and louing proffers would preuaile with this Deane, a pollicke deuise was thought vpon for they practised with an household seruant of the Deanes named Goncal Brans, who on a night shold E find meanes for Pedro d'Almazan, Captaine of the Castle of Atienza, to scale the fort of Siguenza, where the Deane and his brother were taken and brought to Atienza. The Bishop Don Pero Gonzales hauing notice hereof, posted thither in all hast, and made himselfe Master of the citie and fort: the King confirmed to Pedro of Almazan the Captaine-shippe of Atienza, and the Pope gaue him a good Channorie in the Church of Siguenza in recompence of the good seruice which hee had done to the king and the Apostolike see of Rome.

In the meane space that these Ecclesiasticall busineses were mannged with such violence, the Earle of Plaisance had oftentimes treated with the Marquis and the Confe-F derates in the Kings behalfe, that the matters agreed vpon at Coca and Segobia might be performed, but they had no desire thereunto: Wherefore hee sent vnto them a gentleman of his, named Pedro d'Ontiveros to draw them to some conclusion, beeing then at Arzeuall with the Prince Don Alphonso. This Gentleman brought backe no answer: for after that hee had negotiated with the confederate Lords, as hee returned towards Plaisance, hee was vpon the way assailed and slaine by Gyles of Biuro, the quarrell beeing

Garcia Mendez de Badajoz is slain in Burgos.

being about their wives, and at the same time Garcia Mendez of Badajos, one of the Kings Captaines, was slayne at Burgos by the people, for as he had made warre vpon the inhabitants, who held the part of the League, his friend Pedro de Maguelo drew him into the towne to conferre together about the peace: his death did greatly displease his friends, and other good men, but the rude and tumultuous people could not be contained within any bounds.

Pope Paul hauing notice of the small respect which the Confederates in Castile had made of his Legate Don Antonio de Perier, Bishoppe of Leon, was highly displeased therewith: but hee wrote neuerthelesse to King Henry, aduising him to pardon his rebels if they did acknowledge their faults, and returne to his obedience, comforting him besides, concerning his aduersities, by examples drawne from the holy Scriptures to the same purpose: he sent likewise a briefe to the Confederates, enioyning them, vpon paine of his curie, no longer to call Don Alphonso King, but to acknowledge King Henry for their naturall and lawfull Prince, and to craue his pardon: The Confederates sent the Abbot of Paraces, and the commander Fernand d'Arze, the Infants Secretarie to the Pope, to giue him reason for what they had done, and to informe him of the iudice of their cause: but for certayne dayes space, the Pope would not suffer them to enter into the Cittie of Rome. At the last, vpon their great and earnest intreaties to haue audience, they were permitted to enter, vpon this condition, that they should haue especiall care, in any of their speeches, not once to name Don Alphonso King. Hauing deliuered their message, they were by the Pope sharply reprehended, who threatened them and the Confederates more bitterly than hee had done by his briefe, and it is reported, that in a Prophetical spirit, hee declared the death of the Infant Don Alphonso to be neere, after which hee told them, they would find themselves greatly perplexed: with such like speeches the Ambassadors returned into Spayne.

The Cittie of Toledo taking part with the League, the Secretarie Aluar Gomes of Cité reall commanded therein, who stood excommunicate, by reason that hee was one of the chiefe of the League: it happened vpon a day, that he came into the great Church, at such time as the Priests sang diuine seruice, who perceyuing him, presently left off their singing: but hee sent vnto them, and commanded them to go on, which they refused, sending a certaine Clarke to him, who vied many proud words, wherewith a souldiar of Don Aluars trayne, being moued, drew his sword, and thrust him thorough the bodie, so as hee fell downe dead in the place: whereupon arose such tumults and seditions in the Cittie, as after diuers murders, burnings, and other execrable outrages, the Clergie and their partakers remayned masters of the cittie, chasing away and banishing the opposites. Then they sent the Licenciate Don Fernand Calderon with a message to the Infant Don Alphonso, to intreate him to allow of that which they had done, and to request him to graunt vnto them the goods which they had seized on, and taken from those which were slayne in the tumult.

The Prince hauing heard the demands of those of Toledo, albeit hee was but very young, made them a noble and iust answer: First he shewed the Licenciate, that it did very ill become him, who was a learned man, and therefore ought to be wise, to be employed in such a message: then detesting the outrages of the Toledains, he told him freely, that hee would neuer authorize their wickednesse, nor giue away other mens goods so vauisly: the Licenciate replied, and told him, that hee vnderooke that message with a desire to do him seruice, and for to acquaint him with the good affection which those of Toledo did beare vnto him, who would not fayle to resolue from his obedience to the King his brother, if hee graunted not their request: Whereunto hee answered, that therein they might do as they pleased, for he was resolu'd neuer to commit so vnreasonable and dishonest an act, hauefull to God and man, and that they ought to bee satisfied and contented, that their offences were winked at and not punished, which perchappes time would bring to passe.

Wee haue shewed heretofore, how that Don Alphonso Pimentell Earle of Benauent, had bene disappointed of the Master shippe of Saint James, whereunto he layd claime by his father-in-law Don Iohn de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena: from thence arose deadly

8
Sedition in Toledo.

Magnanimity and iustice of Don Alphonso.

The Infants persecutes in being iust.

9
Desire to be rich, takes away all natural and ciuill respect.

A hatred against them, which prouoked and stirred vp the Earle to lay diuers traynes to take away his life: and this year, the Earle missed very narrowly of his purpose and determination, in the Infant Don Alphonso's house at Areualo, but the Marquis hauing intelligence thereof, did euer after stand vpon his guard, and went abroad secretly, and well accompanied.

The Earle neuerthelesse dissembled, and spake kindly to his father-in-law, as though he had no such intent at all, still wayting for a fit time and place to dispatch him: then departing from Areualo, hee came to Plaisance, where King Henry did lye, and was there well and kindly entertaigned both by the King, the Earle Don Aluaro, together with the Countesse his wife. There the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, the Earles of Plaisance, Benauent and Miranda held a councill: for they had discouered how that the Marquis of Villena, Master of Saint James, sought by all means to deceive the King, and namely, that hee practised with Pernucho of Munfarras, who was Captaine and Keeper of the Kings Treasures in the Castle of Madrid, to deliuer vp the place and treasure into his hands. In this Councill it was concluded, that they would all go thither, and carrie the King along with them, to disappoynt the Marquis of his desseigne. The Captaine who had some doubt, that they meant to bee ridde of him, stood vpon his guard, and would let the King come but feldome, and with a small company attending vpon him into the fortress.

In the meane time, the Clergie of Toledo and their Faction, bearing no affection to Don Alphonso, because he was too iust, and did looke for greater modestie in them, then there was, practised among themselves to deliuer vpp the Cittie to King Henry. Wherefore they gaue order to Don Pedro de Silua, Bishoppe of Badajos, who dwelt amongst them, to trie if hee could winne or induce Don Pero Lopes d'Ayala, Gouverneur of the towne, who had married Donna Maria de Silua his sister, to lend a helping hand to their proceedings.

The Bishop hauing sundrie times, with great policie, conferred with his sister thereupon, and shee being wholly gouerned and ruled by his councill, they two sent Fernand de Riudadeneyra to King Henry (not acquainting Don Pero Lopes of Ayala with any matter) to aduertise him what they had determined for his seruice, and to aduise him for the better effecting of their purpose, to come secretly to Toledo. Now their intent and determination was, to bring the King secretly into the towne into the Bishoppes house, and then vnder colour of other businesse, to send for Don Pero Lopes of Ayala, and to cause him to come suddenly into the Kings presence, thinking by that means to make him easily to graunt whatsoever the King would demand: The King leauing the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, the Earles of Plaisance and Benauent in Madrid to looke vnto his Castle and treasure, came to Toledo, where hee entred by night disguised, by the gate called Cambrom: but as hee went toward the Bishoppe of Badajos house, who dwelt in the Monasterie of Saint Pedro Martyr, of the Order of the Fryars Preachers, a seruant of the Marshall Payo de Ribera, who was greatly affectionate to the seruice of Don Alphonso, knew him, and went and told his master of it. The Marshall went instantly to find out Don Pero of Ayala, and gaue an alarme thorough the towne: the people put on armes, and came running in a confused manner to enuiron the house and Monasterie, where the King did lye, who was in great danger, and without all doubt hee had bene taken by the mutinous people, had not Fernand de Riudadeneyra employed his best inducements for his safetie and deliuerie: Then the Gouverneur sent his two sonnes, Pero of Ayala, and Alphonso de Silua, with Peralfan of Ribera, sonne to the Marshall Payo, to intreat the King to depart the Cittie, and to auoyd the present danger, assuring him that shortly matters would bee brought to better passe, and the Cittie restored vnto him: Whereunto the king yeelding most willingly, they found meanes about mid-night to put him out of the towne; and those three Knights kept him companie awhile vpon the high way to Madrid.

Now before hee came forth of his lodging, the King who had ridden sixteen miles that day vpon his owne horse, intreated Peralfan de Ribera to lend him that which hee rode vpon, and to take his which was wearie, but hee like an vnciuill and discourteous Knight,

A practise against his father of Saint James.

10
The Clergie of Toledo deliver the city to King Henry.

Meanes deuised by the Bishop of Badajoz and his sister, to que the king into Toledo.

Indiscretion of King Henry.

VV'solome of the Gouverneur Don Pero Ayala.

Vnmercifulness of Peralfan de Ribera.

Knight, refused it, which the two breethren of Ayala vnderstanding, lighted on foote, and besought the King to take both their horses, one for his owne person, and the other for his Page, the which he thankfully accepted of: then these two brothers went with him out of the towne on foote, with Fernand de Riadeneyra, who would not go with him to Madrid, but told him that he would tarrie at Toledo, where he would liue and dye for his seruice.

Countesse fully recompensed.

As soone as he was come backe into the citie, the Gouvernour Don Pero Lopez of Ayala, committed him prisoner in the castle, and commanded the Bishop of Badajos to depart out of the citie within an howers space: by these diligent meanes, hee like a wife and discreet person did appeale the tumultuous Toledans. Not long after the king sent a graunt to the two brothers of Ayala, who had giuen him their horses, of a perpetuall pension of three-score thousand Marauidis, in recompence of their loue and loyalty towards him.

The Gouvernour D. Pero of Ayala putteth Toledo in the kings power.

When all men had layd downe their weapons, and the citie at quiet, the Gouvernour returned home to his house, where he found his wife almost besides her selfe with griefe, for that the King, hauing come to Toledo by her perswasion, had bene so vnreuerently vsed and receyued, and constrained to flie away by night: but like a discrete woman shee gathered her spirits together, and did in such sort put her husband in mind of his dutie, as shee perswaded him to inuent some fitter meanes to reduce that Citie vnder the obedience of King Henry, their true and lawfull Prince: which Don Pedro much affecting, after that hee had vnderstood the minds of the Sheriffes and Iurates of the Citie, the first day after the Kings departure, hee commaunded the Marshall Payo de Ribera and his sonne, to get them home to their owne houses: Whereunto they yielded without any delay, and forth-with the whole Citie beganne to cry, God save king Henry, and let the Rebels bee destroyed, so much power hath the presence and authoritie of one onely man to appeale or stirre vp a multitude. The castle gates, bridges, and other strong places, being seized vpon by the Gouvernour, and furnished with people at his deuotion for the Kings seruice, Fernand of Riadeneyra being likewise let at libertie, the morrow after, the king came to Toledo, and was lodged in the Gouvernour Don Pero's house, where he gaue Donna Maria of Silua great thanks for the good seruice which shee had done him, and called backe the Bishop of Badajos, who was principall author of that enterprife. After dinner, sundry mechanically tumultuous fellows, two thousand in number, came before the kings lodging, craving confirmation of the cities priuiledges, and to be freed from the tribute called Alcauales: the king desirous to be ridde of this insolent crew, graunted their petition.

The next day, the selfe same raskally companie returned, asking other confirmations of writings, gifts, graunts, and liberties: wherewith the king being moued, the Gouvernour who had assembled men at armes, by reason of the former dayes tumult, ioyued them with the officers of iustice, and ranne vpon the multitude, who after they had hurt and ouerthrowne diuers of them, and put the rest to flight, certaine of the principall were committed to prison, and afterward vpon enquire of the matter, according to their deserts, some of them were hanged, and the residue lost their eares, and were whipped. This tumult being appeased, there remayned yet in the tower or steeple of the great Church, the Abbot of Medina, and other Channons, who tooke the part of the Arch-bishoppe Don Alphonso Carrillo of Acugna, who were besegged by the Gouvernour, and enforced by famine to yield themselues, their liues being saued.

All troubles being ended, the King confirmed Don Pero Lopez in his gouernement, enioyning the Toledans to obey him as his owne person, and so returned to Madrid, where hee beganne to thinke anew vpon the castle and his treasures, which were in the power of Captaine Perucho of Munfara, whome hee did not greatly trust, and not without cause: for the Master of Saint Iames, and the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, had wonne him to deliuer vp that place into their hands: But the king vpon a time finding meanes to enter into the castle, being well accompanied, Perucho was constrained to giue place, who notwithstanding that he had slayne the Porter, and begunne to raise a mutinie, was neuertheless taken, and forced to begge pardon: the which, the king being

A being mild and gentle, graunted vnto him, and gaue him leaue morouer to carry away what he would, and bestowed summes of money vpon him, sending him home to his owne house. These newes did greatly trouble the Infant Don Alphonso, who was termed King: but about all, the losse of Toledo did amaze the Marquis, and the Arch-bishoppe with their Confederates: Wherefore they departed from Arealo, and tooke the ready way to Auila, giuing out that they went to beseege Toledo. The Infant Alphonso being arrived at Cardenosa, a towne neere to Auila, hee was stricken with the plague which infected the whole country, whereof hee dyed the fifth day after, which was vpon the first of Iuly, in the year 1468. hauing bene declared King three yeares before, hee dyed not without suspicion of poyson, the which was prodigiously published and beleued thorough the whole Realme three dayes before it was true: indeed, by this accident Pope Pavles Prophecie was verified: for the Confederates at that time found themselues in great perplexity, and wonderfully destitute of counsell: his bodie for that time was kept in Arealo in the Monasterie of Saint Francis, and since transported to Burgos to the Abbey of Mireflore, where his father King Iohn was buried.

*II
D. Alphonso
Infant: Don Alphonso*

The confederate Lords consulting vpon what was best to bee done, now that they had lost the Prince Alphonso, all of them in a manner were of opinion, that King Henry was to be resisted, and that Donna Izabella his sister, was to bee proclaimed and crowned Queene of Castile in her dead brothers stead: the Arch bishop of Toledo being deputed in all their names to go vnto her to exhort her, to receiue this honour and dignitie, who in a well-composed Oration, hauing propounded vnto her the aduice of all the Lords of the League: the Infanta, who was endowed with great iudgement and singular pietie, made him this answer, that shee could not entertaine in her heart any desire of rule which might preiudice her brother King Henry, vnto whome both by diuine and humane lawes the Kingdome did appertaine: the which God had manifestly declared, confirming him therein, as well by the victorie of Olmedo, as by the death of the Infant D. Alphonso: neuertheless, shee did greatly thank them for their loues, which shee could feele with more profite, and lesse labour, if it would please them, by agreeing with the King his brother, to procure him to declare her heire to his Kingdome after his decesse, and to commaund, that oath should bee made vnto her to the same effect, according to the custome of Spayne: the which shee propounded vnto them, not so much for any desire that shee had to raigne, as by that meanes to keepe the kingdome of Castile from falling into the hands of strangers, and into any other blood then that of Castile, meaning thereby Donna Ioane, who was borne in adulterie.

*D. Febeilles wifely answer
to the League, and peace of Castile.*

This wise and vertuous answer, was of so great waight and consequence, and so admired by all the Lords of the League, as changing their minds, they resolved to follow the Infantes aduice, and to trye if they could winne the King to condescend thereunto, the Master of Saint Iames taking vpon him the managing of their businesse, and presuming to bring it to passe: for (quoth he) I know the kings nature, who doth easily forget things that are past, and I doubt not but he will accept of this condition, for to liue in peace, and to recouer his former dignitie, and will graunt a generall pardon for all that is past.

Vpon the newes of the Infant Don Alphonso's death, the Arch-bishop of Seuille, the Earles of Plaisance, Benauent, and Miranda, with others which were neere the kings person at Madrid, did make a new oath of allegiance vnto him, and messengers were dispatched to the Lords of the League, to admonish them to desist from their wicked practices, and to submit themselues to the Kings obedience: the confederates answered, that they would send some man of authoritie to the king, and soon after they did write to the Arch-bishop of Seuil, intreating him to come to Auila, to treat vpon the meanes of agreement, who with the Kings good liking went vnto them. In the meane season the citie of Burgos, by the meanes of Pedro of Velasco, returned to the Kings obedience. It was concluded in Arealo, that the Confederates should intreat the king, that the Infanta Izabella might be sworne vnto, and acknowledged Princeesse and heire of his kingdomes, all other oathes made to the contrary notwithstanding: Which being done, euery of them would willingly obey him: these things being related at Madrid by the

*The city of Burgos yields
to the king.*

Arch-bishop of Siuill, the King called a Councell thereupon, where the opinions A were diuers, some affecting Donna Isabelle, whom the King still called his daughter: but the Lord Steward Andreu de Cabrera, could so well ioyne reason to his opinion, as it was refused to graunt what the Confederates requested: then did they set downe these Articles:

That the Infanta Donna Isabella should bee declared Princeesse of the Asturias, and sworne vnto, as eldest heire to the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon: That pardon should bee graunted to the Master of Saint Iames, and to the other Lords his Confederates, for whatsoever they had committed against his royall Maiestie, and free and safe access should be giuen them to come to Court, with restitution of all that had been taken from them: That the King within foure moneths after should send backe his wife Queen Isabel, and Donna Isabel his daughter into Portugall, and to be diuorced from her by the Popes authoritie: and that the cities of Auila, Vbeda, with the townes of Medina del campo, Olmedo, and Escalona, and the Lord-shipp of Molina, should be giuen to the Princeesse Donna Isabella, who might not marrie with any one without the consent of King Henry her brother, whereunto the did swear. Into this councell were not admitted the Marquys of Santillana, nor his brother the Bishoppe of Sigüenza, who were come to court to kisse the Kings hand, vpon the newes of the death of the Infant Don Alphonso, for they fauoured and much respected Donna Isabel, who was resident in the Castle of Buyrago vnder the keeping of the Marquis: therefore they returned male-content to Guadajara.

The Queene remaying in the Castle of Alacios vnder the power of the Arch-bishop of Seuille, (as hath beene sayd before) became enamoured on a young man, who had charge to keepe her, and as some say, hee was the Bishoppes nephew, called Pedro, by whom in time shee had two children, namely, Don Fernand, and Don Alphonso, who were brought vp in the Cittie of Toledo, in the Monasterie of Saint Dominick the royal, by the Abbess of the house, who was Aunt to their father Don Pedro: and it is reported that the King hauing notice thereof, caused Don Pedro to be taken, to the end to punish him as he had deserued, but that the Queene shed so many teares, as shee saued his life, and begged him of the king, who in those matters was the most careless person D liuing.

Now these Lords of the house of Mendoza beeing departed discontented from the Court, thinking themselves to be disgraced, and on the other side, fauouring Donna Isabel, it happened that the Queene, hauing secret intelligence with certaine of her guard within and without, with Don Lewis Hurtado of Mendoza, sonne to Ruy Diaz, escaped from the Castle of Alacios, causing hir selfe to bee let downe in a basket from the Castle walles: but the rope beeing too short, and those which let her downe, thinking that shee had beene neere to the ground, did let her fall a good height, so as shee hurt her face and one of her feete, indangering also her life: neuertheless Don Lewis, who was at the foote of the wall,ooke her vp, and layed her in a litter, standing there readier for the same purpose, and so brought her away, the next day, to the Castle of Buyrago, where her daughter remayned, who was called all ouer Spayne, La Bertrameja, because shee was reputed and supposed to bee the daughter of Bertrand de la Cueva, Duke of Albuquerque.

The Arch-bishoppe of Seuille thought himselfe highly wronged by the violent and fraudulent deliuerie of the Queene, therefore hee hastily perswaded and procured the agreement to the Articles aboue-mentioned, and there was a place appointed and determined, where the parties should meete, betwene Zebreros and Cadahallo, a place called La venta du Tor de Guisando, neere to a Monasterie of Saint Hierome, the Arch-bishoppe beeing much displeased and discontented with the Queene. There met at Cadahallo vpon the day appointed and set downe, the King, the Arch-bishop of Seuille, the Earles of Playfance, Benauent, and Miranda, together with others of the Councell on the one side: and the Infanta Donna Isabella, with the Confederates, mette at Zebreros, the chiefe of whome were, Don Alphonso Carrillo Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, Don Lewis of Acugna Bishoppe of Burgos, Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of

A of Coria, and the Master of Saint Iames, Don Iohn de Pacheco, every one of these, on the nineteenth day of September, the same yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, sixtie eight, in the presence of the Popes Legate Antonio de Veneris, who afterward was Cardinall, with great solemnitie in the place aboue-mentioned, tooke the oath of allegiance and obedience to the King, and then they did swear to, and declare, the Infanta Donna Isabella, Princeesse of the Asturias, and eldest lawfull heire to the kingdomes of Castile and Leon, with all the dependances, reuenues, and lands annexed and ioyned therunto, the Legate Apostolicke dispensing and absolving all contrarie oathes, which had bene made in that nature before, and confirming the present.

B Great numbers and multitudes of people came running ioyfully, and with wonderfull applause, from all parts of the Country to this solemnitie, hoping that peace and quietnesse should be established and planted in Spayne, and that all factions and oppositions of outrageous and ciuill warres ceasing, Iustice should euery where flourish. That beeing done and finished, the king with the Princeesse his sister, and the reconciled Lords came to Cadahallo, the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo excepted, whose mind beeing not at quiet, returned to Zebrero, with the Bishoppes of Burgos and Coria. The King passing on, left his sister the Princeesse, and the whole Court at Casa Rubias, and went with the Master of Saint Iames to Pard, and to Ra'castia; beeing come thither, hee caused Pedro Arrias of Auila, together with the bishoppe his brother, to leaue the cittie of Segouia, which greatly mooued and discontented them, the gouernement whereof was giuen and made ouer to his Steward Andreu de Cabrera, one newly come into Castile, and borne at Barcelona, sonne to Iohn Fernandes, and Grand child to Andreu de Cabrera:

C Neuertheless for that time, hee commaunded no where but in the towne, for the fort remayned in the power of the Master of Saint Iames, and because the plague was very hott within the Cittie of Segouia, the King, nor the Master would not come into the towne, but retired and went backe to Casa Rubias, whither came Don Lewis of Mendoza, with a procuration from Queene Isabel, as Protectresse of her daughter, in whose name hee protested, that the oath made to the Princeesse Isabella was of no force nor efficacy, and appealed to the Pope from the dispensations made by the Legate, but small D account was made thereof.

Now did the Master of Saint Iames consider with himselfe, that the discontentment of the Marquis of Santillana, and the other Lords of the house of Mendoza, with Pedro de Velasco, might produce and bring forth some bad effects: Hee who seemed to bee borne to command,ooke in hand to appease and qualifie them, and did inuite them to meete at Villarejo, belonging to the Order of Saint Iames, there to consult and determine about the affaires of State with the Kings Commissioners. Thither came Don Pera Gonzalez of Mendoza, Bishoppe of Sigüenza, and Don Pedro Velasco on the one side, and the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, the Master of Saint Iames, and the Earle of Playfance on the other: They did conclude, that the Princeesse Isabella should marrie with

E Alphonso King of Portugall who was a widower: and Donna Isabel with his eldest sonne, called Don Iohn heire to the Kingdom, and her cousin-germaine: with condition, that if the Princeesse Isabella by this marriage should haue no children, that then the issue of Donna Isabel should succeed in the Kingdom of Castile: for the conclusion and confirmation of which marriages, there should be an interview of the King and Queene of Castile, and the King of Portugall. This agreement did not please the Ladies: for the Princeesse Isabella had no desire to marrie with a widower, and the Queen feared, that vnder color of this meeting shee should be cast off, and sent home to Portugall, according to the treatie at La Venta du Tor de Guisando: wherefore both of them resisted this determination with all their power, by reason whereof the Lords of Mendoza and Velasco were very angry with the Queene and her daughter. The Master of S. Iames solicited K. Henry to send Ambassadors into Portugal, to request the king to meet, thinking by his coming to win the Princeesse to condescend thereunto. And not long after, the bishop of Sigüenza, and Don Pedro de Velasco beeing with the king, perswaded him, notwithstanding the Queenes obstinacy, vnder hand to fauour D Isabel, not acquainting the Arch-bishop of Seuille, nor the Princeesse Isabella therewith.

Articles of peace agreed vpon

The family of Mendoza was called to the council of peace.

13 Queene Isabella
displeased life.

Donna Isabella
was called Princess and heire
of Castile.

New treaties of marriage
set a foot by the Master of S.
James.

These busineses beeing managed with such inconstancie, there arrived daily messengers at Court, who complained, for that the King had caused this new oath to be made to his sister, which most men thought to be a beginning of greater troubles than before, and also because that diuers other great Lords of the Kingdome were not called to determine vpon a matter of so great consequence. And indeed all those which were discontented therewith, did ioyne themselves in league with the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, who thought himselfe to bee ill dealt with, for that he had not the Princess Izabella in his keeping, as in time before.

In the meane time, disorders were still committed in diuers Prouinces, especially in Andalusia, where this year Don Iohn de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Earle of Niebla dyed, in whose goods, lands, and dignities Don Henry de Guzman his bastard sonne succeeded. It hapned at the same time neere to Toledo, that as an husband-man of the countrie called Pero Moro, did reape a corne-field, at the very first stroke which hee gaue with his sickle, great quantitie of bloud issued forth of the stalkes, the which his sons perceyuing, who were at worke in the same field, came running vnto him, thinking that he had hurt himselfe, but seeing he had no harme, they returned to their labour, and cut downe the corne in the same place where their father wrought, and at euery stroke they fetched, great store of bloud issued, which they signified to the Lord of the place, who caused it to be recorded for a strange prodigie.

13
Arragon,
and Nauarre.

Reue of An-ion made king
of Arragon.

Whilest the affaires of Castile stood vpon these rearmes, King Iohn of Arragon being ridde of his enemy Don Pedro of Portugall, did labour by all means, after the taking of Tortosa, to reduce the Barcelonoi to their duties: but they, like obstinate enemies to their Prince, would not hearken thereunto. Great were the alterations which they had among themselves after the death of this Portugois: Some were of opinion to bring their state into the forme of a Common-wealth, like Genoa, Venice, and other places of Italy, and others counselled to returne to the obedience of King Iohn. Each of these opinions being reiected, they elected for their King Rene of Aniou, Duke of Lorraine, and Earle of Prouence, a Prince of the royall blood of France, who being already old and decrepite, yet neuertheless desirous of the title of King, did accept the offer, and hauing (with the consent of King Lewis the eleuenth) leauied souldiers in France, sent his sonne Iohn Duke of Calabria or Lorraine into Spaine, who at Manreca ioynd with the Cattelans: and hauing drawne diuers of the County of Rossillon to his deuotion, he went and beleegged Girona, where Peter of Rocabertin was Gouvernour, who forthwith aduertised King Iohn thereof, who by reason of his indisposition and blindness, could not come thither in person to ayde them, but sent his son Prince Fernand, accompanied with diuers Lords and Knights, vnto whom, about all other things, hee recommended the Princes person: being on his way from Tortosa towards Girona, Queene Iane his mother, who loued him dearly, followed him the next day after: vpon the newes of the Princes coming, the Duke of Calabria rayfed his seege, and retired himselfe to Denjat, from whence he went to Barcelona, and then returned with succors in great secrecie, and no lesse danger. The Prince D. Fernand, desirous to looke vpon the enemy, being come neere to the place, and prouoking the French-men to battell, they, being fortified with a great number of men at armes which K. Lewis had sent them vnder the conduct of the Earle of Armignac, came forth into the fields, and fought and vanquished the Arragonois, the Prince Don Fernand narrowly escaping from being taken, who had good meanes offered to saue himselfe, thorough the indeauours of Rodrigo of Rebollo, who was taken in his stead, and brought to Barcelona, and afterwards redeemed for tenne thousand Florens. The King Don Iohn hauing notice of this defeat, came by sea with a great army alongst the coast of Ampurias, blind as he was, who no sooner set foote on land, but miraculously he receiued his sight. Having ioynd his forces with those of the Prince his son, he marched courageously against the French which were in the towne of Denjat, who putting no great trust in the place, nor yet to the inhabitants thereof, they dislodged, and withdrew themselves to Perpignan, which by reason of engagement, was at that time in the possession of King Lewis, where the Duke of Calabria hauing left his army, returned into France to make new leauiers.

The Arrago-
nois defeated
by the French.

A The King of Arragon lodged his armie round about Figuera, and there wintered. These things were done in Arragon, at the same time that the battayle of Olmedo was fought betwixt King Henry of Castile, and the Lords of the League aboue-mentioned. The Duke of Calabria being afterward returned to Perpignan with a fresh supply often thousand men, obtaigned from King Lewis the eleuenth, marched forth with his forces to assaile the enemies.

King Iohn on the other side departed from Figuera, and presented himselfe in order of battaille within two miles neere to the French: but it is not knowne vpon what occasion he departed thence, to beseege the towne of Peralta, where hauing begunne a furious batterie, and already made a large and sufficient breach to assaile it, the Duke of Calabria came suddenly, and vnlooked for, vpon him in the night, not being heard nor perceyued by the Sentinels which slept, who cut in peeces the first court of guard that he mette with, and entering furiously into the quarters and lodgings of the beseegers, he did strike such a terrour amongst them, as euery man leauing all that hee had behind him, they all betooke themselves to flight in great disorder. The King escaped bare-headed, galloping apace towards Figuera: neuertheless there were some which put themselves in defence, by whose valour the artilerie and munition was saued, and the French-men being retired, they held a forme of a seege, vntill that the King with greater forces was returned to Peralta, the which in the end he tooke. The Authors do greatly prayse the valour of a certaine Knight of Guipuscoa named Don Iohn de Gamboa in this nightly skirmish, who with his own hand slue three French-men at armes, who hauing his horse slayne vnder him in the presse, did yet notwithstanding saue himselfe, hauing receyued eleven wounds. Lewis of Mudar, a Castilian Knight, is likewise remembered for his valor in this fight, where Scipio Patella the Sicilian, mentioned heretofore, being a wife and valiant Knight, was slayne, fighting courageously. The French being victorious, not caring for Peralta, returned to the seege of Girona, which without any difficulty they tooke. After this, Duke Iohn of Calabria being come to Barcelona to take order for the affaires of the warres, was tormented with a burning pestilentiall feauer, whereof hee dyed this year 1468. to the great griefe of those of Barcelona, and extreame trouble of their affaires.

Arragonis for pressed by the French.

An. 1468.

Castile

Now let vs returne to Castile, where the Princess Izabella being discontented with the marriage which was treated of betwixt her and the King of Portugall, solicited hereunto by the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, shee came to speake with him at Yepes: where by the perswasion of her master-Pantler named Don Gutierre de Cardena, hee contented, that shee should marry Don Fernand, Prince of Girona, the eldest sonne of Arragon, and heire to the same Crowne, who was by the King his father, in fauour of that marriage, entitled King of Sicill, much about the time of the Duke of Calabria's death, whereby the affaires of King Iohn beganne to prosper the better: for the French hauing lost their head, retired themselves to Perpignan, by means whereof the armie of Arragon had leysure to scoure the coast of Ampurias, the Castle of which towne, with other places yielded themselves: so did Girona and Don Iohn Ferrir Bishoppe thereof, with the Vicount of Cabrera, Martorella, and soone after Saint Felix, Palamos, and Vergues, with diuers Lords and Prelates, who demanded and obtaigned pardon for their rebellion. Whilest King Iohn was in the same countrey, Don Alphonso of Arragon, his Bastard sonne, did greatly molest the Barcelonoi, foraging their territorie with a thousand horse, and fise thousand foot-men.

At this time the Estate of Nauarre was not very quiet: for the factions of Grammont and Beaumont raiging in the countrey, the Earle Gaston of Foix, husband to Donna Leonora heire of the kingdome, who did gouerne it, perswaded himselfe, that hee ought to enioy the kingly title, with all other rights and preheminences of the same, wherefore strengthening himselfe with the Beaumontois faction, whilst his father-in-law King Iohn was busied in the wars of Castile, he posselt himselfe of diuers strong places of Nauar, and newly beleegged Tudela, whereof K. Iohn being aduertised, vpon the good hap of his affaires in Castile, he brought his army thither, which was well exercised in the former wars, to succor those which took his part, but before he came thither, Don Lewis

Treaty of marriage betwixt
Donna Isabella
and Don Fernand.

722 3 seized

feized vpon the Cittie of Pampelona, the Inhabitants whereof were for the most part A followers of those of Beaumont.

Diuers histories, of small authoritie, make mention, that this Earle of Lerin made sharp warre not onely vpon the Nauarrais of the other Faction, but also vpon the Arragonois, running on euen to Iaca and Exea belonging to the Knights: hauing for companion in his counsell and enterprises, Charles of Artieda, hee tooke from the Constable Don Pedro of Peralta, the towne of Andosilla, and from Don Jaigo of Estuniga, Earle of Nieuia, that of Mendaui: then hee tooke Artaxona and Olito, with many other places, and did many other great exploits, by reason that hee held the cittie of Pampelona, disposing of it, as if hee had beene Lord and master. At the same time also there was mention made of a famous theefe called Sancho Rota, whose retreat was in a mountaine neere to Tudela, called las verdinas del Rey, who with thirtie horse that hee kept, ranne into the country of Arragon, bringing from thence great store of pillage, vntill all such well as hee tooke prisoners. To suppress the insolencies done as well by him, as by the Earle of Lerin, the people of Iaca, and the Nobility thereabouts, made shew of entring into Nauarre: but the Earle of Lerin sent a great number of souldiers to meete with them, conducted by Charles of Artieda, Machin de Gongorra Lord of Ciordia, Iohn d' Ayane, and Fernand d' Ayane, who meeting with the Arragonois neere to Sanguella, at a certaine bridge vpon the riuier of Arragon, they lighted from their horses, thinking to fight with greater aduantage on foote: and comming to handy-strokes, they did C der the Arragonois passage, and constrayned them to returne into their owne territories. Now King Iohns comming with his army, being knowne in Nauarre, encouraged those of Grammont, and did greatly amaze the Beaumontois, who knew very well that they should not be able to resist such great forces: wherefore taking counsell about the affaires with the Earle of Foix, they aduised him to make an agreement with the King his father-in-law, who had already refused, after his death, to leaue the kingdom to his daughter Donna Leonora, and to permit him to enioy it awhile, who by reason of his extreme age could not hold out long, therefore he should be content to haue patience, and to suffer the King to enioy the title of King of Nauarre, the small time hee should liue. D The Earle was easily drawne thereto, for hee saw no hope of victorie, if hee should haue persisted in his rash enterprise by armes: then they began to capitulate, setting downe articles, which shall bee hereafter mentioned. Before the final conclusion whereof, King Iohn being already returned to Tarragona, to view his forces, and to take order for the warre of Barcelona, his wife Queene Ioane, being a long time tormented with a canker, which consumed her, drew neere her end. It is reported, that when shee knew shee must needs dye, fetching diuers sighs and grones, remembring her son Prince Fernand, shee said, O my son, thou hast cost me deare: and it is constantly affirmed, that shee did confesse to haue procured and hastened the death of Prince Charles: wherewith the king was so highly offended with her, as he would neuer afterward looke vpon her yet neuer thelesse her ambition gaue her this content, to see before her death, her son Prince Fernand made King E of Sicill: her body according to her will, was buried in the Monasterie of Poblet: about this time in the year 1469. hapned the lamentable death of Gaston of Foix the younger, eldest son to the Earle Gaston, and to the Princessse Leonora, who should haue succeeded them in the kingdom of Nauarre. There was a great assembly of Princes & Knights at Liborne neere to Bourdeaux, who there met to honor & accompany Charles of France, brother to Lewis the 11. newly reconciled to him, and promoted to the Duchy of Guyenne after the ciuill war: this young Knight Gaston, running at tilt, which was performed in most costly and sumptuous manner, was run with the splinter of a lance into the brayes, wherof hee dyed, to the great griefe of as many as knew him, but especially of Duke Charles whose sister hee had married, whose name was Magdalen, she being likewise sister to Lewis whose father hee had two children, to wit, Francis Phabus, who was king of Naur, and Earle of Foix, and Catherine his sister, who succeeded her brother dying without heires. Happily, it shall not be amisse to set downe here the succession of the house of Foix, which hath inherited the kingdom of Naur, fetching it as far as Histories make mention thereof, to the which (as we haue sayd) the Segneury of Bearn was vniued, about the year 1286. Wc

Sancho Rota, a famous thief
the death of Iohn of Arra-
gon.

Queen Ioane
her last confession.

Death of the younger Earle of Foix at Li-borne.

An. 1469.

A Wee finde that the countrey of Foix was erected into an Earldome about the year 1462. by Raymond, Earle of Tholoufa, who inuested therewith Bernard, yongest sonne to Roger Earle of Carcaffone, and to Adela his wife: of this Bernard, and of Beatrice, daughter to the Earle of Beziers, was borne Roger, who was second Earle of Foix, who began another Roger his successor in the Countie of Foix, second of that name, father to Roger the third, whom hee had by Eximena his second wife, hauing first of all married a Lady of Prouence called Espinetta. Of Roger the third, and of Cicely, daughter to Earle Raymond of Barcelona, was borne Raymond Roger, who married a Lady called Phillip, by whom hee had a sonne called Roger Bernard, who succeeded him in the Earldome of Foix, and a daughter called Estermonde, married to the King of Majorca. This Raymond Roger caused his lawfull wife to suffer many indignities, at the request of a Concubine, who was of the religion of the Albigeois. Roger Bernard was then Earle of Foix after his father, the sixt in number, about the year 1223. and was furnished the great. Hee married Brunixenda daughter to the Earle of Castellbon, by whom hee had Roger called Rosfer Earle of Foix after him, Estermonde wife to the Vicount of Cardona, and Cicely, wife to the Earle of Virgell. Roger Rosfer seauenth Earle of Foix, and sixt of the name, married Brunixenda, daughter to the Vicount, on whom hee begat Roger Bernard, the sixt of that name, and eight Earle of Foix: of him, and of Manigarda of Narbonne, were borne another Roger Bernard, who succeeded in the Earldome, Agnes who was C wife to Elquibus Earle of Bigorre, and Phillip married to Arnold of Spaine, Vicount of Conserans. Roger Bernard, seauenth of the name, and ninth Earle of Foix, came to the Earldome after the decease of his father, about the year 1262. who married Marguerit, daughter to Gaston de Moncada Lord of Bearne, and of Martha de Foix, by whose meanes he came to vniue the Lordship of Bearne to the Earldome of Foix, by the consent of the estates of Bearne, to the preiudice of the Earle of Armagnac, who had married the elder daughter of Marguerite, whom Gaston disinherited, in disdain that her husband the Earle of Armagnac did not helpe him in certaine warres that hee made, as well as his other sonne in lawe the Earle of Foix. Now Roger Bernard had by his wife Marguerite of Bearne foure children, to wit, Gaston the elder, who was Earle of Foix after his D father, the tenth in number, and the first of that house, who enioyed the Lordship of Bearne, Brunixenda wife to Helie of Perigot, Constance married to Antonie de Lewis, Lord of Mirepoix, and Ioane who married Peter, sonne to King James of Arragon. Gaston then the first of that name, Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearne, married Ioane, daughter to Lewis of France Earle of Eureux, and of Marguerite of Artois, from whom issued Gaston heire to the Earldome, Roger Bernard Vicount of Castellbon, father of Mathew, and of Isabelle of Castellbon, who succeeded one after another in the Earldome of Foix, and Robert Bishop of Vaur. He had also a bastard sonne named the Wolfe, Lord of Aruath, who begat Blanche wife to Iohn de Gaulth, or Grailhij Capdau de Buch. Gaston the second, the eleuenth Earle of Foix, and second Lord of Bearne, of this family, had by his wife Elenor, daughter to the Earle of Comming, Gaston Phabus, who succeeded his father, in the year 1344. the fourth of that name, and hauing married Agnes, daughter to King Philip of Nauarre, had by her one onely sonne, whose mother hee was, hauing found about him a box of poison, which his Vncle King Charles of Nauarre had giuen him to kill the Earle his father, with whom he was offended, the child being in no fault at all, for he knew not what drugges it was: wherfore at his death, hee left behind him no lawfull children, but diuers bastards, as Iobbaun who was one of those which were burnt at the Mummy of King Charles the sixt, at the banquet of Saint Marceau, and Gratian, and possibly that Bernard of Foix, who was married into Spaine to Lady Isabel de la Cerde, a Princessse of the blood royall of Castile, the stem of the house of the Dukes of Medina F Celij, if he were not sonne to Gaston the second, this mans predecessor. Then the succession of the Earldome of Foix and Lordship of Bearne, fel to Mathew of Castellbon about named, who had no children by his wife Ioane, daughter to the King of Arragon, wherfore his sister Isabel inherited his Lordships, who was wife to Archambald de Grailly Capdau de Buch, from which marriage issued Iohn the elder, the fiftene Earle of Foix, Gaston Capdau de Buch, from whom descended the Lords of Capolat and Candale, Arch-

Original and continuance of the house of
Foix.

Rodrigo de Robollo, Gomes Suarez of Figueroa, and Iohn Payes the Kings Vicechancellor. After that, the Princeffe, having ample procuracion from her husband, dated at the Bathes of Caudes Aigues in the valley of Dosán, sworn in his name to the Bishop of Oleron to obferue the aboue named couenants, in the prefence of the captain of the castle of Ampoña, Iohn Payes the Vicechancellor, and D. Fernand of Baquedán vicar general of the Church of Pamplona. All these capitulations were not of force to cease the troubles of Nauarre, which continued all time after.

18
Castile.

As concerning the affaires of Castile, King Henry, after resolution taken about the marriages of the Princeesse his sister, and of Donna Leane in Portugall, being delirious that to set downe some good forme of government in his Kingdome, called a Parliament to the city of Ocagna, where the deputies of the townes and communalities did meete, except thole of Andaluzia, the great Lords of which Province were not well pleased with the dealings of the Maister of Saint Iames, whereat the King was much mouued, but most of al, whē he vnderstood of the marriag which was intended, against his wi, betwixt the Princeesse his sister, and the new King of Sicil, Fernand of Arragon, which made him now more then before desirous to aduance Donna Leane, whom hee fitly aduised for his daughter, notwithstanding he hated the Queene her mother, by reason of her bad life, which he himselfe had taught her: wherefore with his owne hand he wrote a letter to the Pope, intreating him not confirm the succcession of the Kingdome of Castile, to the Pope, intreating him not to grant it to Donna Leane: Hee wrote also to his s, sworne to the Princeesse Isabell, but to grant it to Donna Leane: Hee wrote also to his s, algent at Rome, Doctōr Roderigo de Vergara, borne in Logrona, and likewise to King *D. phan*so of Portugal, to the end that he should make the like request to the Pope: this was not done so secretly, but that the Archbishop of Siuill had notice thereof, who had willingly haue dashed that matter. The King leaving Ocagna came to madrid, where hee found Iohn Fernandes Galindo, capitaine and gouernor of the fort of Madrid, and keeper of his treasures sicke to death, at whose entreaty, hee gaue the charge of the fort, and of that which was in it to Andrew of Cabrera his Steward, whom hee did daily aduance, and made partaker of his greatest secrets. The city of Leon, about that time, had like to haue bene surprisid by Diego Fernand de Quignones, Earle of Luna; but the practise being discouered, Aluaz Garcia, Citizen of the same towne, with whom the Earle had intelligence, was taken and beheaded as a traitor. At the intreaty of the Maister of Saint Iames, the King returned to Ocagna, where hee gaue the title of Marquis of Villena to Diego Lopes Pacheco his eldest sonne, a brave knight, who soone after Married the Countesse of Saint Stephen de Gormas, daughter to Don Iohn de Luna, Earle of Saint Stephen, and grand-child to the Constatible Aluaz de Luna, who was in the keeping of the Maister of Saint Iames, who was at the same time confirmed in his Maistership by the Pope and possessed more riches than any Lord of Spaine. The King of Portugall solicited by King Henry about the marriage of the Princeesse Donna Isabella, sent his Ambassadors, the Archbishop of Lisbonne, and two other Lords, who were at the Court more then twenty daies without concluding any thing by reason that the Princeesse had placced her affection vpon Prince Fernand, and so returned home, leaving the King highly displeased with his sister, who dissolued the Parliament at Ocagna, not suffering the peeres to sweare to his filters succcession in the kingdome.

The affably at Ocagna being broken vppre, the king being very desirous to pacifie the Countrey of Andaluzia, which was full of diffinitions, hee went thither in person, leauing for Viceroyes in Validoitol, the Earle of Benauent and Don Pedro de Velasco, with the President and Chauncery; the Princeesse Donna Isabella remaying at Ocagna, who promised not to dispole of her marriage till the returne of the King and the Councell.

There went with the king, the Mr. of St. James, the Archbishop of Saut, the Bishop of Signuque and others of the council, but the Archbishop remained sick at Ciudad-real: the king came to Iaca, where hee was received & entertained by the Constable Michael Lucas d' Iranquo, who protested to him that he would not suffer any one of the rebels in his train to come into the city: wherefore, the Mr. of St. James (fearing to be accounted one of

A the number, staid at Olina; but Roderigo of Villosa, being more foolish hardy then the rest, received the disgrace to be rudely repulst by the Constable, who couched his lance against his brest sending him thence with many bitter speeches: this Constable was very faithfull to the King his Maister, and was a liberrall and generous Knight. To Pedro Gonzalez de Mendoza Bishop of Sigüenza, and to the whole house of Mendoza, who entered with the king, the Constable gave openly a singular testimony of their fidelity with a loud voice as they passed thorow the gate. The King and the Lords of his traine, were for the space of three daies feasted at Iaca, from whence he went to Castro del Rio, where Don Pedro of Cordova Earle of Cabra met him with a thousand horse, bringing with him his children, and Martin Alphonso Lord of Alcaudete his sonne in law, who were all of them faithfull and good servants to the King: With this company the King went to Cordova, wherein remained Alphonso de Aguilar, one of the faction of the Maister of Saint James, the city gates were opened to him, and Alphonso in recompence receiued certaine pensions: betwixt whom and the Earle of Cabra had bene old grudges, but the King went about to make them friends: the Government of Cordova, which in times past did belong to the Earle of Cabraes predecessors, was given unto him, and the office likewise of Maister. Vpon a seditious petition presented by those of Cordova, mentioning that Peter Earle of Cabra, and Martin Alphonso his sonne-in-law, and Alphonso de Aguilar, should deliuer vp certaine places belonging to the city and community of Cordova held by them during the troubles, it was determined that they should give caution for the deliuey of them by a certaine day: this was a trick of Don Alphonso de Aguilar, who stirred vp the people to constrain the Earle, and his sonne-in-law, to restore that which they had vsurped, hee himselfe perceiving, that he could no longer hold the places, which hee had taken during the trouble, the which did greatly nourish and increase the hatred which the Earle and his sonne-in-law did beare vnto him.

While the King lay at Cordoua, there arrived Ambassadors from the French King Lewis the eleventh, the Cardinal of Albj, being the chiefe : the effect of his meſſage was, to breake the league betwixt the King of Caſtile and the Engliſh, which was very prejudiciall to King Lewis his Maiſter : After audience, he obtained what he demanded, the Maiſter of Saint James working the matter, who perhaps was a faithfuller ſervant to the French King, then to his Maiſter the King of Caſtile. This yeare 1469. died Friar Lopes of Barjentos Biſhop of Cuenca, the Biſhopricke of Leon being likewiſe void, Anthony de Veneris the Popes Legat had that of Cuenca, and that of Leon was giuento Doctor Rodriges de Vergara, the Kings agent at Rome.

The Princeesse Donna Isabella, during the Kings stay in Andalusia was ruled by the advice of the Admirall and the Archbishop of Toledo, and forgetting the promise which shee had made to the King her brother, shee inuented meanes to surprize the towne of Auevalo, held in the name of the Earle of Playfance by Aluaro de Beacamont, with whom shee was praezitized: but shee was disappointed of her purpose, which was discouered by the Earle, who preuented the Princeesse, and committed the captaine to prison. The Earle posselt this place, as a pawne, engaged vnto him for a certaine summe of money, when the Infant Alphonso was chosen King. The Princeesse being deceiued in her hope, came to Madrigall, and from thence to Vallidoluit, vnto whom the King sent the Cardinal of Albi the French Kings Ambassador, and the Archbishop of Siuill, to possesse her with a dowrie of Fernand King of Scill, which marriage did highly displease him, fearing that by reason of the warres of Cartallonia, and former matters betwixt him and King Iohn of Arragon his father, some great losse might happen to Castile by that match.

F The Cardinall, and the Archbishop did their best, and made offer of a marriage between her and Charles Duke of Guyenne, brother to the French King, but shee made no account thereof, persisting in her first resolution, wherefore they returned back without effecting that which they went about: the king journeying thorough Andalusia, was continually solicited by the Maister of Saint James (vnto whom he could deny nothing) to remove and displace the caballines, gouernours & other officers of towns and castles,

Dirge Lopes de Pacheco sonne to the Minister of Saint James, made Marquis of Villaça.

19
The King of Castile's voyage
into Andalusia 1171.

This matter of Saint Iames goes out to displace the captains of the Castiles in such way as Antonio de Narbaez, &c.
were to be deposed.

to the end to place therein such as were of his owne faction, which was granted to him at Eccia, where hee displaced Martin of Cordoua and put in Doctur Garcia Lopes of Madrid, one of his council, and Frederick Manrique, and to recompence Martin, he assigned him certaine pensions hard to be recouered. And thinking to doe the like to Hernandez of Narbaez, the old Gouvernor of Antiquera, he found himselfe deceived, for the Gouvernor would not suffer the King to enter into his Fort with aboue fiftene men, and the rest of his traine were constrained to take vp their lodging in the country villages thereabouts.

These things did not displease the King, who albeit he knew very well, that it was an vnjust thing to displace the captaines that had bene faithfull vnto him, at a traitors motion, yet he had not the courage to reiect the importunities of the Maister, who would haue had his friend Alphonso de Aguilar to haue commanded in Antiquera. The King being come to Archidouna had conference with a Moore of Malaga called Alquizez, an enemy to the King of Granada, who presented him with certaine Barbary hostes and other Moorish presents, vnto whom the King promised fauour and assistance against the King of Granada, as to his vassall. From thence he came to Carmona, where he remained a space: In the same towne there was three castles, two of which were at the commandement of the Maister of Saint Iames, but the third was held by Gomes Mendes Sotomajor, a Knight wholly leagued with those of Siuill, whom the Maister had a great desire to dispossesse, and did greatly importune the King to consent therevnto, and hee did promise Gomes Mendes a large recompence, the which hee refused, saying, that hee could not leaue that place without the consent of the Knights of Siuill, vnto whom hee had declared the wrong that the King would haue done to him (onely to satisfie the Maister of Saint Iames) the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Roderigo Ponce of Leon, Pedro de Estuniga, &c. Alphonso Henriquez Gouvernor of the frontiers, sent to aduertize the King, that they could not consent to so vnreasonable a matter, hurtfull to the crowne, as to alienate from the same, the town of Carmona; which the King at that time tooke in good part, but afterward hee was ouer-ruled by the Maister of Saint Iames, and would haue constrained Gomes Mendes to haue left the same place: wherefore the Duke of Medina, and the other Knights with the Inhabitants of Siuill, armed themselves, and assailed the castle of Triana, from whence hauing driuen Hernandez Arias of Sahaedra, they placed therein an other captaine, then, their power increasinge, they came into the field, giuing the King and the Maister of Saint Iames new matter to thinke on, who with the whole Court left Carmona and came to Aleala of Guadaira, and from thence the King sent to command the Duke to disarme himselfe and to send away his people: who answered, that hee had taken armes for his seruice, as also to defend himselfe from his enemy the Maister of Saint Iames: The Maister fearing that this fire would kinde to his owne hurt, sought meanes to conferre with the Duke, which the other Lords and Knights, with those of Siuill would not agree vnto, saying that the Maister was a crafty wicked man, and that their talke would come to no good effect, and so sent backe to the King, intreating him not to alienat Carmona from the crowne, and to confirme Gomes Mendes in his captainehip. The King, to auoide farther mischiefs, made means himselfe, that the Duke and the Maister might talke together betweene Siuill and Cantillana. At this meeting it was onely determined, that the King should enter into Siuill; and that the Maister should stay at Cantillana, where they should agree vpon those things.

The King being received with great ioy into the city of Siuill, whilest hee remains there, about the appealing of those differences, the Princeesse Isabella his sister, being continually solicited by her Maister Panzer Gutierrez of Cardagna to harken to the marriage of Fernand Prince of Girona, the heire of Arragon, and to reiect that of Portugal, and Duke Charles of France, with the King of Englands brother who was an other tutor, at the last she gaue her full consent therevnto: wherefore the Archbishop of Toledo and the Admirall D. Frederike, wholly addicted to the seruice of this Princeesse, and likewise to Prince Fernand King of Sicill, thinking that this marriage was most contentent and profitable for the affaires of the Kingdome, did consent and conclude thereupon, causing the Bridegroom in a disguised habit to come into Castile, whether hee was

A conducted by D. Pedro Manriques Earle of Treuigno, who afterwards was Duke of Nagera, and others, who brought him to Validolir. Where being presented before the Princeesse amongst others, very few (nor yet she her selfe) did know him: but her faithfull seruant Gutierre de Cardagna shewed her him, saying in his Spanish tongue, Effe es. This is he: to whom the Princeesse readily replied and Effe shall be thine armes: for this cause, the house and posterity of this Knight, beareth yet to this day, amidst there blazons and deuises an SS: The royall aspect and graue countenance of Prince Fernand did soone certifie the Princeesse that it was he, therefore without any more delay, the marriage was solemnized and accomplished at Validolir, the eighteenth of October 1469. B In the house of Iohn de Bizarro, where at this day the Kings Chancery is kept, King Henry not knowing thereof, who would rather haue hindred it then otherwise, for the small good which he wished to King Iohn of Arragon his father.

These newes were presently carried to the Maister of Saint Iames, who wrote to the King that he should forthwith without delay come to Cantillana, the which hee did, not knowing the cause why he was so hastily sent forth, to his great grieue, hee vnderstood of his sisters marriage: wherefore vpon the instant hee departed out of Andalusia, leaving those of Siuill some-what moued, vntill they knew the cause: and taking the ready way to Trugillo, hee was there staied, by the refusal of Garcia de Sese captaine of the fort of that city, who would not yeeld the same place vp vnto him, the which hee ment to haue bestowed vpon the Earle of Playfance, in recompence of the good seruice which hee had done vnto him. This captaine had agreed with the townes-men (who had foreseene the Kings intent) to hold out and not to permit the same to bee alienated from the crowne, and giuen to a priuate Lord. The King perceiving that hee could not gratifie the Earle with Trugillo, confirmed vnto him, and left for Inheritance to him and his heires for euer the towne of Arevalo, which was pawn'd vnto him, with title of Duke, doing thereby manyfold wrong to the widow Queene Isabella, vnto whom that towne did belong.

Being at Trugillo, Gomes de Caceres Maister of Alcantara came vnto him, and craved pardon for his offences, the which hee freely obtained: and besides that hee D was confirmed in the gouernment of Badajos, and Caceres, which hee had vsurped during the reuolts: and at his intreaty, and of the Maister of Saint Iames, hee gaue to his brother Gutierre de Caceres the city of Coria, with the title of Earle. To Alphonso Manroy, who had bene faithfull vnto him, and followed the warres at his owne charges, hee gaue many great gifts: so this King did good both to his friends and enemies. At the same place of Trugillo, hee receiued letters from the Princeesse his sister, by the which shee gaue him reason for her marriage with Prince Fernand, and for her refusal of the others, intreating him to beleuee that it was done, for the good quiet and commodity of the Kingdome of Castile in time to come, and to assure him both of her good will and her husbands, who would for euer remaine his affectionate seruants, without inclining to any thing that should displease him; beseeching him to consider with what hearty affection shee loued and honoured him, seeing that when it was in her power to take vpon her the regall dignitie, which was offered her, by the decease of Prince Don Alphonso, shee had refused it, and exhorted the confederate Lords to serue and honour him as their King: complayning besides of many other greuous wrongs offered as well vnto her selfe, as to the widow Queene Isabella her mother yet liuing. The letter being read before the councill, the messenger receiued this answer, that the King would be shortly at Segobia, where all matters should be debated on with reason and equity, and in deed the Court remooued thither presently after, where the Ambassadors of the Princes Fernand and Donna Isabella did arrive, who were Don Pedro de Baca, and Diego de Ribera, who had brought vp the Infant Don Alphonso deceased: and on the Archbishop of Toledos part, Lewis of Antecana, who besought the King to approue the marriage, and to excuse the Princes, for that they had not acquainted all the great Lords of the Kingdome therewith, who by reason that they were deuised into diuers factions, could not chioose thereby but nourish greater occasions of discord: As for themselves, they wished wished nothing more, then to be obedient vnto him, and for such to be reputed, desiring A to imploy themselves for the maintenance of the peace of the Kingdome, and administration of Iustice, which in a manner was chased away, in steed whereof al manner of outrages, extortions and confusions did reigne. Lastly they entreated him to appoint some place where the Princes might come and visit him, to the end to certifie him in person of their sincere affection and desire to doe him seruice.

A a a a

Besides these demands, they declared vnto the King the Articles and Couenants, wherevpon this marriage was contracted, which were these.

1 First of all, Prince Fernand King of Sicill did promise to be a deuout and obedient sonne to the Sea of Rome, and to honour and well intreat the Ecclesiasticall Persons and B Ministers of the same.

2 That hee should honour and acknowledge King Henry for his King (if it pleased him to accept thereof) and should imploy his person and meanes to cause all his subiects to doe the like.

3 That he should likewise honor the widdow Queene Isabella, mother to the Princeesse.

4 That he should cause Iustice to be established, and should assist the King therein, obseruing the lawes and good customes of the Kingdome.

5 That he should endeavour, with his vttermost power, to maintaine the peace betwixt the King, Himselfe and the Princeesse.

6 That hee should not depart out of the Kingdome of Castile, nor carry away the C Princeesse, nor the children that God should send them, especially the Prince his heire, without expresse deliberation and consent of the counsell.

7 That in the letters and royall charters, the Prince and the Princeesse should bee named both together, as well in those which concerned Castile and Leon, as those in the Kingdomes and Lands which the Prince now possesseth, or may enjoy hereafter.

8 That the naturall borne of the Kingdome should be admitted into the council and offices of either of them, with consent of the Princeesse.

9 That the Princeesse should receiue the othes of homage and fidelity, and should haue power to place officers, capitaines and guards, in the cities, castles and fortresses of the Kingdome, as well by her presently possessed, as in others, which might hereafter fall D vnto her, placing therein persons borne in the Kingdome of Castile, and appurtenances thereof and none others.

10 That all gifts and pensions granted by the Princeesse, should bee approued and confirmed by Prince Fernand.

11 That he should not procure the hurt of any one of the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon for the occasion of the warres, quarrels, and outrages past, betwixt Castile and Arragon.

12 That he should not enterprife, nor make warre, league, nor confederacy, with any neighbour King, Lord or Knight of this Kingdome, without the consent of the Prin-cesse, and her counsell.

13 That for the increase of the Princeesse dowry, he should giue to her Borja and Ma-gallon in the Kingdome of Arragon: and in that of Valencia, Elche and Euillen: and in Sicill, Siracusa and Caranea, according as those places had beene assigned and giuen from time to time to the Queenes of Arragon.

14. Besides, that the Princeesse should euery yeere, during her life, receiue the rents & reuenues of one towne in the said Kingdoms which she should best like of, provided that it were not a capitall or chiefe towne of the Kingdome, or principallity, the gouernors and officers whereof should neuertheless be natives of the same country.

15 And if the Prince should happen to die first, the Princeesse should neuertheless, during her life, enjoy those places; after whose decease they should returne to the crowne, F and to the heires thereof.

16 And if it should be found, that greater dowries, profits, lands, authority & preeminence had bin giuen to Queene Joane of Arragon the Princes mother, or to Queene Mary wife to King Alphonso, daughter to King Henry the Princeesse grand-father, that the Prince should supply that defect within two monthes after.

17 That

Matrimoniall Articles betwixt Fernand of Arragon, and Is-belle of Castile.

A 17 That within the terme of foure monthes he should giue to the Princeesse in ready money a hundred thousand florins of the coyne of Arragon for hir expences, and to bestow as she pleased.

18 That if any warre or strife should arise in the Kingdome, the Prince did oblige himselfe to serue in person with foure thousand Launces til the war were ended, and if he should not furnish so many launces, that he should then pay with his owne money, such forces as should serue vnder him.

King Henry hauing heard the Ambassadors, answered, that the businesse being of great consequence, it was requisite to aduise thereon with mature deliberation, and that B after he had consulted with the great Lords of his Court and counsell, hee would then answer their message, and so sent them backe.

In the meane space a notable Insolency was committed in Andaluzia, which caused great stirres: for albeit that through the Kings meanes and authority it seemed that the Bishop of Siguença, had made an agreement and pacified Alphonso de Aguilar with the Earle of Cabra and his children, neuertheless their hatred slept not in their hearts, so as Alphonso vpon a time hauing invited to a banquet in the towne-houle of Cordoua called Calá del Cabildo, D. Diego the Marshall of Cordoua, eldest sonne to the Earle, who held the place of Alguazil Major of the same city, hee kept him there prisoner, and sent him away with great indignity, with a sure guard, to his fort of Cagnete, he tooke also C his brother Sancho, and kept him prisoner likewise, hauing the Magistrates of the city at his deuotion: whereof complaints being made to the King, he did write in great choller to Alphonso, commanding him without delay to release the brethren, otherwise hee would come in person into Andaluzia and enforce him to doe it, punishing him as a rebellious person: wherefore the Marshall was released and sent to Baena, who resenting this iniury, wrote a letter to the King full of accusations, craving leaue of him to defie his enemy, and to prouoke him to single fight, thereby to constrain him to repaire and satisfie his honour and reputation: The King hauing heard the messenger and read the letter, would by no meanes allow of the combat, because sundry disorders arise thereof; as also for that those matters of Duell or single combat, are contra-D ry both to diuine and humane lawes, especially betwixt subiects belonging to one and the selfe same Prince, who hath hath power and authority, to bring them to reason by way of Iustice: herevpon the Marshall published infamous libels and declarations, against Alphonso, and he obtained free liberty of the King of Granada to enter the combate in his country, assigning Alphonso to meet in the plaine of Granada, and sending him a safe-conduct from the Moore King: The day appointed for the fight being come Alphonso would not appeare: wherefore after that the Marshall had made the acts and protestations which are accustomed in in such cases, about the setting of the Sun, he tooke a picture representing Alphonso de Aguilar, and hauing tied it to his horse taile with the face to the ground, he gallopt vp and downe the plaine, dragging it after him; E crying aloud: This is the traitor Alphonso de Aguilar, who durst not meet me in single fight, nor venture his body against mine: Then the King of Granada aduised him a victor, and condemned Alphonso: diuerse draughts of that picture were afterward sent to sundry Lords and Knights of Spaine to Alphonso's great disgrace.

The city of Simancas, with the castle thereof, were in this meane time surprised against the Kings authority, by the Admirall, wherewith the King was greatly troubled, in regard that the Maister of Saint Lames was very sicke, without whom he was not able to negotiate or resolute vpon any matter of importance: This yeere King Lewis the eleuenth, demanded Donna Joane in marriage for his brother Charles Duke of Guy-enne, whose Ambassadors were put in good hope that it should bee accomplished.

F An other Ambassage was sent to King Henry from the same King Lewis, to induce him to ioyne with him about calling of a counsell against Pope Paul the second: but his counsell was of opinion that the King should not medle in a matter so displeasing to the Pope, by whom, and by the Sea of Rome his progenitors had bene alwaies fauored, wherefore the Ambassadors were answered in this manner, that the King would not harken to their request, and that hee did with King Lewis to desist from his purpose, and to assure

Aaaa 2

Arshest of Alphonso de Aguilar, as gainst the children of the Earl of Cabra.

swello granted by the King of Granada to Diego de Cava-do against Alphonso de
Aguilar.

The Admirall of Castile surprised Siman-cas.

affure him that all the meanes of Spaine should be employed for Gods vickar, vnto whom A King Henry, besides the dignity which hee held, was particularly obliged, for that he had aided and comforted him in his troubles. At the same time the Knights of Alcantara, conducted by the treasurer Alphonso de Mont Roy, rose in mutiny against their Maister D. Gomes de Caceres, and pursued him to death: so as after they had taken from him Baldos, Alcantara, and Valence of Alcantara, they fought with him and ouercame him in battaile, so as hee could neuer after raise himselfe againe: his brother Gutiérrez Earle of Coria, hauing for his succor demanded fouldiars of the Earle of Alua D. Garci Aluarez of Toledo his father in law, engaged to him the city of Coria for money to pay them, who being gathered together in great numbers, their passage was hindered at the riuer of Taio by the diligence of Alphonso de Mont Roy, and the other Knights his aduersaries, who brake all the bridges, and sunke all the boates, so as they could not passe: wherefore they returned without doing any thing, and Coria remained to the Earle of Alua. By this euill hap, the Maister wholly ruined and in dispaire, died soone after in great poeury and misery: the Maistership whereof was begged of the Pope, by Donna Leonora Pimentel, Countesse of Playfance, for her sonne D. John de Estuniga. The King did willingly consent to the pursute of the Countesse, whom he honored aboue all others, and allowed and confirmed the Popes Bul. And albeit that the treasurer, Alphonso of Montroy, and the Knights did oppose themselves against such an irregular election, the Countesse who had more then a womans heart, tooke Alcantara with other places by force, and deli- C in such manner, as her sonne posselt the Maistership: and was the last that had the title of Maister of that Order.

Dona Leonora Pimentel Countesse of Playfance a woman of manly courage.

22
Spanish superstitions.

The people of Ognate superstitious.

Roderigo Bishop of Zamora at that time florished in Spaine for his learning: but whilest the Prelats and Gouernours of the Church gaue themselves ouer to worldly greatnesse, and to nourish and sow discord and diuisions, Religion it selfe was managed according to euery mans deuotion. There is in the Prouince of Guipuscoa in the mountaine of Aloya, in the territory of Ognate a Couent of Friars, the originall, whereof began about this time: for it is reported that a certaine headfman called Roderigo Balatagui who dwelt in Vribarri, keeping his goates vpon that mountaine, went down the lame hil into a rocky place, which was nere to no high-way, where he found by chance an I D mage of the Virgin Mary vpon a green thorn. This seemed vnto him a wonderful matter because of the desertnesse of the place: therefore he fell to saying his Aue Marias, and o- ther such like praiers as he had beene taught: then night drawing on hee couered the I- mage with boughes and other things, and went home to his village, and told this great wonder: The rumor thereof being spread thorow the towne of Ognate, the Ministers of Iustice, the Clergy, and the common people, being guided by the shepheard, went to the same place, where they found in a hedge a very little Image of the Virgin Mary, holding her Sonne in her armes, before which they all kneeled downe and beganne to sing ma- ny songs and hymnes, thanking God that had sent them so pretious a ieuell, thinking it a great miracle to haue found it in so desert and remote a place: wherefore they consul- E ted together about building a Chappell there, and whilest prouision was made for the manner and matter of that building, they resolved to enclose it with boords, notwith- standing it was feared very dicommodiously, they not daring to vndertake to transport it from thence, nor to build an house for it in any other place then where it first ap- peared, and they named it the hermitage of our Lady of Arancapu, which is to say, of the thorne; the which in short time was held for a very religious place, beeing visited, and indowed by diuerse deuour people. Wherefore those of Ognate and Mondragon, which are the neerest places to it, seeing that great numbers of pilgrims came thither, they beganne to make the waies plaine; and to cut the rocke to make the passage thither more easie. Vpon this beginning, grounded vpon the simple credulity of a sort of rude F people, it came to passe that this Image beeing famous and greatly visited, certaine of the religious of La Merced were greatly desirous to build a Couent there, wherein one of them named Frier Peter of Ariaran did greatly imploy himselfe, whose mother was so superstitious, as shee dedicated her whole life to the seruice of this Couent: but these fa- thers being kept there a certaine time, as well by the almes of the good people of the country

A country thereabouts as also by the bounty of the pilgrims, in the end by reason of the extreme cold of the winter, and barrennes of the place, they grew weary and left it: in whole roomes came certaine religious people of the third Order of Saint Francis, or Tercerones (as they call them) who did enlarge the Couent begonne by the Friars of La Merced, who were by the Popes prouided of diuerse pardons and indulgences for those which should visit it, and doe them any good: now, in the reigne of the Catholike King and Queene Fernand and Isabella, vpon the occasion of reforming the religions of Spaine, these Friars Tercerons were admonished by this Obseruantines to turne to their rule: which is, say they, the true rule of Saint Francis, which they refused, and being vrg- B ed therevnto by way of Iustice; these fathers resolved to giue ouer their first religion, and did put on the habit of the Iacobins, or Friars Prechers of Saint Dominike: then there arose an other strife betwixt the Friars of Saint Francis, and the Dominicans, about the possession of this Couent, the Friars saying that it belonged vnto them, and to none others, seeing that the brethren of their Order had held it so long a time without contradiction of those of La Merced: Therefore they beganne by ordinary and extra- ordinary meanes to contend about this possession, and at the last fell to blowes: but the Dominicans being vpheld by the Inhabitants of Ognate, the friars withdrew themselves, not attempting it any more by such meanes, then they beganne their sute about it at Rome, whether they sent for their solicitor, a friar called Martin Garibay, who vied such C diligence, as the right was iudged to the brethren of his order, and the Couent resto- red to the Obseruant friars: So at the returne of frar Martin into Spaine, who brought with him the execution of that sentence, the Dominicans came forth, and left the pos- session to their aduersaries, who at this present doe enioy it, and haue greatly augmented it with building; and it is said, that it is an harbour and retreat for many afflicted people specially of Marriners, who come thither to pay their vows: to the great commodity of the friars: these exerceizes of religion are greatly vied in Spaine: but in the yeere 1552. vpon the sixth of December, the whole Cloister, with the lodgings and other buildings were burnt downe to the ground by casualty: but the fire touched not the Church which they account for a great miracle.

Friars trans- med to Iaco- bins.

Religious deeds of Pedro Fernan- des de Velasco, Earle of Haro.

D This yeere 1469. died Don Pedro Fernandes de Velasco Earle of Haro who was repu- ted to bee a Knight that led the most Christian life of any other of his time, in testi- mony whereof the Spaniards write that hee did build the Monastery of Pomar, where hee made three of his daughters Nunnas, with an hospitall where twelue Gentle- men, false into poeury, should be honorably entertained, and a Chappell for the bu- riall of him and his: liuing afterward very retiredly in Medina de Pomar, eschewing the daungers and troubles of this world: these religious workes are practized in Spaine, by the great Lords that are rich, when they are become old and haue many children. Now his sonne Don Pedro de Velasco, oftentimes named in this History, succeeded in the Earledome.

E But returning to the History of King Henry, who beeing come to Segobia, the ab- sence of the Maister of Saint Iames, who was extremely sicke of a quartan feuer, did greatly trouble him, for without him hee could doe nothing: therefore it was thought fit, that for their better conferring together, the King should come to Madrid, whe- ther the Maister beeing very weake was brought, the King and the whole Court going forth to meet him, not without the wonder of diuerse, which thought it a strange matter to see this Prince, so much to abate himselfe to Iohn de Pacheco, who notwithstanding that hee was sicke, yet all matters passed thorough his hands, and nothing was concluded on without him. About the same time died Don Lewis de la Cerde, who had held Escalona all the time of the troubles, and appointed at his death, F that his people should yeeld it vp to the King: the Maister of Saint Iames, demanded this place and obtained it: and because the fouldiars of the deceased, did say that they would not deliuer it to any other but to the King himselfe, hee came thither in per- son, and receiued the towne, and gaue it forthwith to the maister of Saint Iames: so as all that which had beene taken from Aluar de Luna, Maister of Saint Iames, fell to this man.

23

Contempt of Iustice in these dauidian castles.

the terme of ninety dayes to make his personall appearance at Rome. And hee appoynted that the Lords of the Kings Councell, should cause the Arch-bishop to be summoned and exhorted by foure Channons, according to the forme of law, to returne to the obedience due vnto the king, which if he should refuse to do, they should then thunder out his proceffe, and send it to Rome, that the Pope might see it, to the end to proceede against him, and chastise him as a rebellious Prelate. The Popes Briefe beeing declared in the Chapter-houfe of Toledo, there came to the Court at Madrid, Fernand Peres of Ayala, bastard-brother to Pero Lopes of Ayala, who had beene Earle of Fuenfaldia, Diego del Gaudio, Marco Dias, and Don Francisco of Palencia, Prior of Arrochio, Chanons of the same church, who hauing shewed to the King, how highly their Prelates disobedience did displease not onely them, but the whole Chapter, they offered themselves to performe whatsoever the Kings Councell should thinke fit to be done for his seruice, and for reducing the Arch-bishop to his duty by his royall Maiestie. Now, because the King and his trayne were at that time in the Dioceffe of Toledo, and fearing the Arch-bishops censures and interdictions, they defended themselves with an appeale, putting themselves vnder the protection of the Sea Apostolicke: and then a Knight and a Doctor was sent to giue the Arch-bishop notice of the Briefe, and to commaund him to returne to the Kings seruice, and to abandon the Princes, whom the King desired to chase out of the Realme. The Arch-bishop excused himselfe, and answered, that heretofore by the Kings commaundement he had sworne to the Princeesse Donna Leabella, as to the eldest heire of the Crowne, therefore he could not acknowledge any other but her: and he besought the king to deale no farther in that businesse, because such was his determinate will and purpose. The King vnderstanding this answer, commanded to proceed against the Arch-bishop with all rigour: but the Master of Saint Iames, who managed the affaires with more cunning, was of a contrarie opinion: he aduised the King to send the Licentiate Diego Henriquez vnto him, to offer him, if he would adhere to the Kings partie, and forsake the Princeesse, three thousand tennants, and two forts for his two sons Trilo Carrillo of Acugna, and Lope Pasques of Acugna.

The Arch-bishop reiected these temptations, and would by no means forsake the Princeesse seruice. This notwithstanding, the Master caused all proceedings against her to cease, and the foure Channons were sent backe to Toledo discontented enough, three of them were taken by the way, and brought to Torrejon de Velasco, by Pero Arias of Auila, who by the Arch-bishops commaundement lay in ambush to surprise them. Fernand Peres of Ayala, onely saved himselfe in Canales. The King beeing very much displeased herewith, sent diuers horse-men to field, who tooke diuers friends and seruants of the Arch-bishops, and among others, Don Diego of Gueuara, a Channon of Toledo, in exchange of whome the three Chanons were deliuered. And so the matter passed on betwixt the King and the Arch-bishop for that time.

In the meane time, the Master of Saint Iames intending his owne profite, and being assured of his credit and power, had taken the citie of Alcaraz, which imported him very much, beeing neere to his Marquisat of Villena, and was easily confirmed in the possession and reueneue of the same by the King, which discontented diuers: for by his example, the Earle of Benaunt, seized vpon Villalua, and deposing Pero Nugno from his office of Merin major of the citie of Vallidolit, he gaue it to his brother Don Pedro Pimentel. It was then an ordinarie trick in Spain, for those that were able to seize vpon any place to do it, without caring for robberies, murders, and other hainous crimes, which they by such attempts afforded matter and occasion too, beeing assured that if they had any little fauour in Court, to possesse their booties without controule. It happened euen so to the Earle of Arcos, Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, who hauing taken, during the furies of the League, the citie of Cales, he obayne the same in full proprietie, with title of Marquis therof, by the means and furtherance of the Master of Saint Iames his father-in-law.

If two Lords were at strife, without any respect of the Royall Maiestie, they would strike vp the drumme, and raise forces to ruine one another, as if they had beene Soueraigne Princes, which had held of none but of God and the sword (as they say.) Vpon these

Disorders in the gouernance
mens of castile

A these tearmes stood Don Manuel Ponce of Leon, brother to the Earle of Arcos, and Don Fernand of Velasco, brother to the Earle of Siruela, who were in the field, accompanied with great number of horse-men ready to come to battaile betwixt Madrid and Alcala, neere enough to the Court: wherefore the King to hinder them, sent thither his great Master Andrew Cabrera with sufficient forces. Cabrera vñg great diligence, and gallowing space in a dustie high way, his horse raising a great cloud of dust, hee was not perceived by those which followed him, but was ouerthrowne, and so troden vnder the horsefeete, that beeing well-neere bruised to death, hee was brought backe speechlesse to Madrid, where after he had beene well visited by the Chirurgions and Phisitions, hee recovered at leysure.

There was a quarrell betwixt the Earles of Haro and Treuigno, about certaine words of contempt vttered by the Countesse of Haro, the Earle of Treuigno strengthened himselfe with Pedro Abendago, and Iohn Alphonso of Muxica, chiefe of the Mutins of Biscay and Guipuscoa, who were banished not long before by the Earle of Haro, committed by the King for the ordering and pacifying of those Prouinces. The Earle of Treuigno then hauing giuen them entrance into the countrey, against the Kings leaue, and contrarie to the sentence: and beeing confederated together, they ioyned to their league Don Pedro Lopes of Padilla, Gouernour and Capitaine of the frontiers of Castile, riding vp and downe, and commaunding in the Countrey without any feare at all: wherefore the Earle of Haro, by the Kings commaundement, came to Burgos, and there leauied certaine forces in hast as well hee, as the Earle of Salines Don Lewis, and Don Sancho of Velasco his brethren, and brought them to Biscay, beeing most of them horse-men.

The Earle of Treuigno and the Gouernour, did the like on their parts, vnto whome were ioyned with great numbers of foot-men leuyed in Biscay and Guipuscoa, the heads of the faction aboue named, to encourage whome the Earle of Treuigno vsed a policy. My companions in armes (quoth he) is it possible that you can indure, that this Earle Pedro of Velasco, with his credite and fauour gotten by flatterie, should henceforth command ouer you as your Lord, and separate you from the Crowne of Castile, into the which your Predecessours were incorporated with so great affection? Will you againe subiect your selues to follow those priuate passions, which haue so often troubled the generall state of the Kingdome, and exposed the subiects to extreame miseries, whereof you haue so many recent examples before your eyes? I do not thinke that the ancient valour of the Biscans is so farre degenerate, as euer to consent to submit themselves to any subalterne iurisdiction, especially when at this instant, an occasion presents it selfe to be reuenged vpon him, who is the oppressour of your liberties: For if wee do not fight valiantly, and cut this Earle of Haro in peeces, assure you that hee will become your Lord: For hee hath without all doubt obayne of the King (who respects not the worthinesse or vnworthinesse of those hee doth good vnto) the Lordshippe of Biscay, and hath Letters patentes thereof, the which I haue seene and read: Wherefore it remaines then in your prowes and valour, to set free your selues from this inconuenience.

The Biscains animated by this speech, beeing come to blowes, neere the towne of Magnia, in streight places and aduantageous for foote-men, as they were, against horse-men, did fight so furiously, as they put them to flight, with great slaughter, & taking of diuerse persons of worth, among whom were ledde away the Earle of Salines, and Don Lewis of Velasco. The King hauing notice that these Lords were in armes, was come as farre as Burgos to hinder their fight, but hee came not soone enough. Wherefore hee went to Odugna, and from thence sent commaundement to the two Earles to lay downe their armes, and to retire themselves to their owne houses, enioyning the Earle of Treuigno, vpon paine of his indignation, to deliuer the prisoners: then hee caused them to make truce, the better to reconcile them, and make them friends. In this encounter, the valour of one Iohn de Leyna was noted on the Earle of Treuigno's partie. On the other side Don Pedro Manrique lonne to the Earle of Parades, beeing accompanied with certaine base fellows, surprized the City of Alcarraz, and enforced Iohn de Haro, who was Gouernour

28 Quarrell betwixt the Earles of Haro
and Treuigno,

Gouernour thereof for the Master of Saint Iames, to saue himselfe within the Castle, A where hee beleeged him: but the Gouernour valiantly defended himselfe, and aduertized the Master of his distresse, who vpon this occasion beinge come to Ocagna, and hauing speedily gathered together eight hundred horse, hee with his sonne Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco came to Alcartas, and caused Don Pedro Manriques to dislodge, who at the bare report of his comming did rayse his seige, being not strong enough to attend him.

During these stirres, the Kingdome of Castile was like a Forrest, where freely, and without controule, all sorts of mischiefs were committed, the head that had power to redresse them, not regarding it: Wherefore the townes and communalities were enforced to set downe some remedie for it, to the end they might liue in better safetie, for as they were more assured from the violence of theues in their owne houses, then in the fields: they established in euery corner honest men, who went vp and downe well accompanied, preventing those outrages the best they could, punishing the offenders, as often as they could lay hands on them, leaving the wayes in some sort assured by that meanes: the King beinge contented there-with, and letting them alone, albeit the Facinorians were greatly displeased there-with, and namely, the Master of Saint Iames, who sayd it was not well done, to put base people in authoritie, and to keepe the Nobilitie vnder.

Now the Court beinge returned to Segobia, in the Castle of the which Cittie, the King had caused his Treasures, Jewels, and other rich stuffe to be transported from Madrid, hee determined to leaue an armie, beinge resolu'd to chase the Prince Don Fernand, and Donna Isabel out of the kingdome of Castile, for they were beames in his eyes, which did hinder him (as hee sayd) from providing for the present calamities and miseries of his kingdome. The Master of Saint Iames, who euer held the euent of battell doubtful and suspitious, was of opinion to vse meanes more cunning, and lesse dangerous. The King beinge come to Coca with this purpose and determination, leaving at Segobia the Earle of Vruegna, and Andrew de Cabrera, with the Queene, and Donna Isabel, whom hee called Princesse, and the Master, who made vse of the Arch-bishop of Toledo, whom hee called Princesse, and the Master, who made vse of the Arch-bishop of Toledo, caused him to counsell him not to proceede against the Seulle at his owne pleasure, but to trie other meanes to draw them to his will. The King perswaded thereunto, dissolued his armie. These things passed in the yeare 1470, of which time the Princesse Donna Isabella was deliuered of hir first child, in the Citie of Dueñas, the first day of October, to wit, of a daughter called Elizabeth, or Isabella like the mother.

Then the Moores of Granado, proude, because of their fore-passed prosperities, forraged the Countrey belonging to the Master-shippe of Alcantara, against whom was sent the new Marquis of Cales, Don Rodrigo Ponce de Leon, Earle of Arcos, who reprehended these runnagates, and tooke from them the Cittie of Cardela, the which soone after was taken againe by the Moores: neuertheless hee carried away with him great spoyle, and many Moores prisoners. In the meane space the Duke of Alua came to the Court at Medina del Campo, who was kindly receyued and welcommed by the King.

Now the marriage of Donna Isabel beinge dashed, by reason of the Duke of Guiens death, who departed this life at Bourdeaux, the King by the aduise of the Master of Saint Iames, sent Ambassadors to King Don Alphonso of Portugall, to treat with him about a marriage betwixt him and her. This King had no desire thereunto, because of the common report, which was, that there was borne in adulterie betwixt Don Bertrand de la Cueva, and the Queene of Castile: and therefore he had wholly reiected it, at such time as she should haue bene married to the Prince Don John his sonne, whom hee married about that time to Donna Leonora, daughter to the Infant Don Fernand Duke of Viseo, and of Donna Beatrice, daughter to the Infant Don John, who had bene in the former time Master of Saint Iames, and the second Constable of Portugall: of which Don Fernand, and Beatrice were borne, Don Domingo who was Duke of Viseo after his father, and Don Manuell who reigned in Portugall, after this Don John his brother

Hermendades
of Castile.

An. 1470.
Genealogie of Castile.

Moores.

29
Castile.

Genealogie of
Portugall.

A brother in law. Donna Beatrice had builded the Monastery of Nunnes, called the conception of Veja, where shee with her husband Don Fernand lye buried. Now King Alphonso at such time as this Ambassage was making ready, was busied with good successe about the Affrican expedition: for hauing in person transported beyond the sea a very mighty armie, being followed by the Prince Don John his sonne, and by many great Lords, and experimented Captaines of his kingdome, amongst whom the most renowned were Don John Coutin Earle of Marialua, Don Aluaro de Castro Earle of Montefanto, and his sonne Don John de Castro, Don Henry de Meneses Earle of Valencia, Ruy de Merlo Captaine of his guardes, who afterward was Earle of Oliuencia, and Don Alphonso Vasconcello, who was Earle of Penela, hee tooke by force Arzilla, and did so terrifie them of Tanger, as they forsooke the Cittie, and left it empty to the enemy, so as King Don Alphonso hauing amply enlarged his Empire, beyond the sea, the Kings of Portugall haue since intituled themselves, Kings on this side and beyond the Sea. The Earles of Montefanto and Marialua dyed at the taking of Arzilla.

The gouernment of Tanger was giuen to Ruy de Merlo with a good garrison: and the King and the Armie beinge returned to Lisbon, Don Alphonso Vasconcello was made Earle of Penela, and then was the marriage of the Prince celebrated, beinge seuentene yeares of age, with Donna Leonora his cousin germaine, with dispensation made since by Pope Sixtus the fourth, who succeeded Paul the second in the Sea of Rome. The Ambassadors of Castile agreed vpon an interview of the two Kings, betwixt the townes of Badajos and Yelues: but they departed one from another discontented, without any conclusion of the marriage, the principall impediment was, the small trust which the King of Portugall reposed in the Master of Saint Iames, whose inconstancie hee merueilously suspected; together with the disordered life of the Queene, who was detested of all men. This marriage afterwards was thought vpon to bee renewed, as shall bee hereafter declared.

The King of Castile wanted no troubles and discontents in this Iourney, by meanes of the infolency, wherein the Lords, Prelates, and Knights his subiects were nourished, the one taking euill example from the other. First of all the Bishop of Sigüenza refused to accompany the King, and notwithstanding any entreaty, he would not stirre forth of Guadaluara, whether hee had with-drawne himselfe, being highly displeased that hee had bene disappointed of a Cardinals Hatte, whereunto by the kings fauour hee had earnestly aspyred, the Maister of Saint Iames hauing supplanted him, who procured and obtained it for Don Lewis d'Acugna Bishop of Burgos his nephew, the Bishop of Sigüenza beinge neuer satisfied with speaking euill of Donna Isabel and the Queene her mother. The king with his traine beinge come to Badajos, hee was constrained to lodge in the suburbs, and villages thereabouts: for the Earle of Feria shutteth the gates against him, saying, that hee was certaine that hee would vpon his entry giue the same towne to the Maister of Saint Iames, to whom hee durst deny nothing: for hee went about not long before to snatch the towne of Sepulueda by force as it were from the king, which was neere to the Earledome of Saint Seuens, the which notwithstanding the request, admonishment, and resistance of the inhabitants, who could not endure to bee alienated from the Crowne, the king was constrained to grant vnto him by reason of his importunity: but the townsmen not resolu'd to obey the Maister, gaue themselves ouer to the Princesse, who with Prince Fernand her husband came thither, and remained for a certaine time in those quarters, and in the territories of the Archbishop of Toledo, who was alwayes their faithfull seruant. At Siuill the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales were at great strife, and ioyned battaile the one against the other, by meanes whereof the Marquis was driuen forth of the city, and withdrew himselfe to Xeres, where beinge fauoured by the knights of Saint Iames, and those of Calatrava, and the Duke by those of the City, they made cruell warres one vpon another, the Maister of Saint Iames vpholding the Marquis his sonne in law.

Bbbb

In

Arzilla and Tanger in A.
which taken by
the King of Portugall.

Marriage of the Prince Don
of Portugall
with Donna Leonora of Viseo.

30
Castile.

Infolency of the Maister of Saint Iames.

In an encounter made betwixt Seuille and Alcalá de Guadaira, two bastard sonnes of A the Duke of Medina were slayne, and other disorders followed thereupon: for the redressing whereof, the King sent Don Luís López de Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, to Seuille, who by his diligence and good counsell, caused them to lay downe their armes, and made those two Lords friends, and the Duke had his towne of Medina Sidonia, and the fortresse of the same restored vnto him.

At Toledo Pero López de Ayala newly made Earle of Fuenfaldá, was solicited by the brother of his deceased wife Donna Maria de Silva, to wit, the Bishop of Badajoz, who was desirous to bring againe the Earle of Cifuentes, and his Vncle Don John de Ribera into Toledo, to giue his eldest daughter Donna Leonora in marriage to the Earle of Cifuentes, seeking by that meanes to reconcile and make them friends, which the Master of Saint James did likewise procure, building some desseignes vpon the same city: but the king being aduertized thereof, sent forth with the Licentiate Diego Henriquez to aduertise the Earle of Fuenfaldá by no meanes to make that marriage, and not to suffer the Earle of Cifuentes nor Don John de Ribera to enter into Toledo, because he was assured, that as soone as they should set foot within the citie, they would driue him thence.

The Earle giuing more credit to the Bishoppe, then to the King, was very willing to agree vpon the marriage, by reason whereof the Earle of Cifuentes, and Don John de Ribera, were no sooner entred into the citie, but contrarie to their oath and promise, which was not to attempt any inuolution, nor stirre vp any troubles, they put themselves in armes, and banded themselves in such fort, as there was nothing to bee feared but daily and continuall skirmishes, fights, murders, robberies, and other miseries, vsual in diuided Citties, the common people of this towne being more mutinous and apt to enter into factions and leagues, then any other Citie of Spaine: Wherefore the King, the better to redresse these inconueniences, being at Madrid, sent the Bishoppe of Burgos, together with the Licentiate Diego Henriquez, who for a time caused those insolencies to cease.

The King comming afterwards thither, tooke away, against all reason, the gouernment of the citie from the Earle of Fuenfaldá, and put it against his will, into the hands of Doctor Garcy López of Madrid, with charge of an assistant, and with great authoritie, D only to please and content the Master of Saint James. The dispossessed Earle went home to his owne house, and the Earle of Cifuentes afterward had no desire to accomplish the marriage with Donna Leonora, alleading certaine lets and hinderances, by reason of their neere consanguinitie, and so soone after married else-where. The Earle of Cifuentes, and Don John de Ribera, tooke Doctor Garcy López, committed him to prison, and made themselves masters of the Citie gates, and other strong places, and beleaged the Castle, the which they had taken, with the absolute command ouer the whole Citie, had not certaine Channons resisted them, who fortifying themselves in the great Church, held out till such time as the Marshalls Fernand de Riadenebra, and Perañ de Ribera were come to their ayde, who caused the Earle and his people to withdraw themselves.

The Master of Saint James, who was at that time in the territorie of Leon, making his progresse vp and downe about the ordering of the affaires of that Prouince, being aduertized of that which had befallen Garcy López, came in great hast to Toledo, from whence hauing driuen the Earle of Cifuentes, Don John de Ribera, Lope de Estuñiga, with Arias de Silva, and other of their complices, hee left the Citie in quiet. The King not long after came to the Monasterie of Silla, halfe a league distant from the Citie, but hee did in no sort touch any of the seditious, because all the mischief had bene procured by the Master. As hee thought to returne to Segobia, hee found the Citie in a mutinie, and reuolted from the Corregidor or Gouernour of the same, by the meanes of F certaine Gentlemen, who were taken, and sent with yrons vpon their legges to the Castle of Madrid, where they remayned a long time after.

Now if temporall matters were so ill gouerned, it is to bee supposed, that spirituall affaires were farre worse: for what good could happen to the people, whose Pastors, neglecting their ecclesiasticall functions, had no other care but to heape vp worldly riches and

People of Toledo
do mutinies.

A and honours, making themselves heads of Factions, and by their couetousnesse and ambition, did themselves most of all trouble and disquiet all Kingdomes and Commonwealths.

Whilest these miseries troubled the Realme of Castile, King John of Arragon did still endeavour to reduce the Rebels of Catalonia to his obedience, and after that hee had ended the question betwixt himselfe and his sonne-in-law Alphonso of Foix about the kingdom of Nauarre, hee did send his sonne Don Alphonso of Arragon, with the Earle of Prades, who was returned to his seruice, into the confines of Barcelona, who encamped themselves alongst the riuer of Beson, and made courtesie to the Citie gates, but they went to batter a strong castle seated vpon the riuer, which the Barcelonnois being desirous to succour, James Galliot, Gouernour of the citie, came into the field with a great number of horse-men, and foure thousand foot, bringing with him Don Denis of Portugall, and Gratian of Aguirre, who presenting themselves before the enemy, with intent to fight, were so rudely receyued, as within awhile they were defeated, with many of their people slayne, hurt, and taken prisoners, in the number of whom were James Galliot, and Denis of Portugall: part of those which fled, came backe to the citie, and the rest retired themselves into the woods and mountaines. This losse did so daunt the courage of those of Barcelona, as despayring of their affaires, they all began to hearken vnto peace, whereunto they were the rather incited by the Kings comming, who ioyned himselfe soone after with the forces of his sonne Alphonso, taking the towne of Valdonzella, hee made shew as if he would beseege the Citie both by sea and land, the which being filled with great feare, and yet neuertheless trusting to the Kings clemencie, they sent Commissioners vnto him, to craue his pardon, and to offer him the keyes of the Citie, submitting themselves to his mercie.

These men being come into the kings presence, did by the mouth of Lewis Setentia a Florentine, confesse the Citizens fault, and did implore his mercie, presenting him the keyes, the which the King holding in his hands, redeliuered forth-with to the Commissioners, contrarie to the expectation of all his followers, who thought, that in regard hee had bene so many yeares troubled and disquieted with the obstinate and cruell warres of the Barcelonnois, hee would haue executed seuerer vengeance vpon them: but hee on the contrarie, with a singular mildnesse, did not onely pardon them, and their Confederates, for whatsoever they had committed against him, but confirmed them in their goods, liberties, priuiledges, exemptions, and auncient rights. The next day following the Citizens had prepared a triumphant chariot for him, that he might make his entrie with great pompe and magnificence, the which he would not accept, but was contented to enter into the Citie riding vpon a white Courser, by Saint Anthonies gate of the same citie, which hee found vnprovided of all manner of victuals, where-with hee caused them presently to bee furnished; so as without the aboue-named defeat, E necessity would haue enforced them to haue yielded.

By this peace which happened so opportunely the miseries of Cattalonia were ended, which had troubled the whole State of Arragon for the space of tenne yeares. Hee which shewed most prowesse, and performed the notablest exploits in this warre, was Don Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villahermosa, a Prince worthy of great prayle, and high commendation, who dyed afterwards in the seruice of his brother King Fernand reigning in Castile, at a place called Linares, leauing his sonne Don Alphonso of Arragon, heire to his Durchie of Villa-hermosa, who was Knight of the Order of Saint James, and a Daughter called Donna Maria of Arragon, who was married to the Prince of Salerne. Hee had out of wedlocke Don John of Arragon, Earle of Luna, F Captain of the Castle of Amposta, Don Alphonso of Arragon, who was Bishop of Tortosa, and afterward Arch-bishoppe of Tarragone, Don Fernand of Arragon, Prior of Saint Iohns of Cattalonia, together with Donna Leonora of Arragon, wife to the Earle of Albayda.

This peace was no sooner concluded, but the King had newes of a new rumole, raised in Nauarre, whereinto the Princeesse his daughter voluntarily had runne herselfe with great

31
Arragon.

The Barcelonnois defeated.

The city of Barcelona yielded to the mercie of the King.

King John clemency.

Don Alphonso of Arragon his successor.

32
Nauarre.
great

the Princes Don Ferdinand and Donna Isabella, did not appeare at this assembly, in the number of whom was Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of Coria, who requested the legate to come to Valadolid, saying, that they were to conferre with him about matters touching the succession of the kingdomes; but the King perswaded him to the contrary, accusing the Princes and their followers of many matters. The Legate neuertheless went to Alcala to visit the Princes, who remained there with the Archbishop of Toledo, by whom he was sumptuously receiued and with great pompe, as also in Guadajara, the Marquis of Santillanas house, where hee remained a certaine space, with the Marquis and the Earles his bretheren.

33 Enamoured sine cause those newly conuerted to Iudaisme,

Misfactions of the new Christians.

The Constable
Don Michael
Lucas de trans-sa, murdered by the people.

D. Pedro de
Vilafco made Constable of
Castile.

Bride binders
the Infant Don Henry from his preference in Cathol.

The impieties, superstitions, thefts, rapines, and other insolencies vsed at that time among the Christians in Spaine, namely the Prelates and Church-men, were so scandalous to all men, as diuerse newe Christians, who were conuerted from Iudaisme to the profession of Christianity, being constrained more by the rigor of the lawes, then perswaded by wholesome doctrine, and good examples, began to returne to Iudaisme, not being able to beleuee by humane reason, that the religion professed by such detestable people, could bee the true. The remedy applied to this mischiefe was the same which arrogant men and such as hate correction, and are desirous to liue in their errors and corruptions, doe commonly vse, namely the sword, massacres, and all manner of excesses. For in the City of Cordoua, instead of bringing back these straies by meeknesse, holinesse of life, and such like examples, which is the duty of the ministers of the Church, they did let loose the bridle to the rash mutinous people, who made a cruell slaughter of them, and spoiled their goods.

Those of laen followed this example, against whom the Constable Michaell Lucas de transsa opposing himself, was most inhumanly murdered in the Cathedral Church by the enraged multitude. The like cruelties and robberies were committed in Andujar and other places of Andalusia, wherewith King Henry was extremely discontented, but being faint-hearted and of no courage in these matters, hee did no more punish the murderers, then the Pastors were diligent in seeking out six Christian meanes to bring back these Apostata's into the right way. The office of Constable was giuent to Don Pedro Velasco Earle of Haro the Kings great Chamberlaine, at the intercession of the Maister of Saint James his Sonne in law, the which dignity hath euer since, euen till our time, continued in that family: The King like-wife gaue the seales of his Chancery, to the Bishop of Siguença.

The King finding that Donna Joane his supposed daughter, had very ill successe in her treaties of marriage, resolved to bestow her vpon Don Henry, Sonne to the Infant Don Henry who was Maister of S. James, & brother to Don Ferdinand Infant of Castile, which was King of Arragon, who at the same time, remayned in the City of Barcelona, from whence hee caused him to come secretly into Castile. This Prince, who by the commandement of King John his vnckle, was called in his dominions, the Infant of Arragon, and by some others the fortunate Infant, was very proud, the which hee shewed in Castile before his time, which did greatly hinder his aduancement, in that Kingdome. Hee with his mother Donna Beatrice Pimentell, Aunt to the Earle of Benauent, arrived at Requegna, from whence afterward, (the King hauing furnished them with all things necessary for their calling, and place which they held) the Maister of Saint James caused them to come to the Castle of Garcy Nugnos, sending two of his Gentlemen to accompany them thither. During the time that this Don Henry remayned there, sundry Lords and Knights came to visit him, diuers of whom because they would be reputed ciuill and courteous, offered to kisse his hand, thinking that hee would not haue suffered it, but hee keeping a great grauity presented his hand freely vnto them: but one amongst the rest taking him by the hand, sayd to him in derision, my Lord you haue a very faire hand, and so without kissing it let goe his hold, whereat D. Henry was much offended.

The Maister of Saint James remayned at that time in Madrill, being discontented with an accident hapned at Segobia: Hee had sundry times solicited the king to commit the Castle and gates of the city to his keeping, alledging that in that place Queene

Joane

A Joane and her daughter, might lodge more safely then any where else, and that he should by no means giue the charge thereof to Andrew de Cabrera, because he was assured that Beatrice of Bouadilla his wife, was drawne to the Princeesse party, and besides, that he being a Cattelán, was an affectionate seruant to Prince Fernand, all which was very true. The King yeelded to the Maisters request; But Andrew de Cabrera refused to disposse himselfe of the castle: whereat the Maister being highly offended, praictised his ruine, and thought to effect it by this practise: He caused Diego Tapia and certaine other Gentlemen to come into the city, giuing them charge to stirre vp the people, whom he knew to be desirous to fall vpon the new conuerted Christians, and to spoile them of their goods, as they of Cordoua and other places of Andalusia had lately done; and they appointed that during the tumult, some band of souldiers should force the Kings house and take both him and Andrew de Cabrera, his Steward, to make him deliuer vp the castle: Diego de Tapia needed not to vse much labour to stirre vp the people who were ouermuch addicted to mischiefe: wherefore it was concluded that at the ringing of a larum bell in the Church of Saint Peter de los Picos, they should assaile the city in fure sundry places, on a Sunday after dinner, namely in the quarter of Saint Olalla, in that of Saint Colomba, Saint Martin, Saint John, and that of Saint Michael, appointing a Squadron to goe vp and downe, and to discouer in euery place of the city. But it was the will of God, that this plot came to the knowledge of the Legat, who lay then at Guadaluja

Enterprise of the Maister of Saint James against Andrew de Cabrera
captaine of the castle of Segobia.

C, who forth-with reuealed it to the King, the King sent word thereof to Andrew de Cabrera, captaine of the fort, to the end he should stand vpon his gard, & preuent this danger in the city; Cabrera hauing secretly armed many souldiers, and all the Conuers which were fit to beare arms, did so preuent his enemies, as he slew and defeated most of them, and Diego Tapia was shot through the body with an arrow. The Maister hauing failed in his enterprise, and fearing least some euill might betide him, departed the same night from Segobia, and came to the Monastery of Parral, to goe from thence to Madrid: the King took the paines to come and visit him in the Monastery, and vsed all the entreaties that he could to bring him backe: but the Maister said vnto him, that he had no confidence in Andrew de Cabrera nor his wife, and that hee would neuer set foote in

The Maister of Saint James
failes of his purpose.

D Segobia vntill such time as hee were posselt of the castle: wherefore the King returned to Segobia to pacifie and appeale the tumult. It is most certaine that the enterprises of the Maister, being preiudiciall to an other, were very dangerous to himselfe: for his sonne-in-law the Earle of Benauent, still bearing in minde how hee had preuented him of the Maisterhip of Saint James, did keepe armed men in his house, who were appointed to haue slaine him in that tumult, wherefore hee did wisely to goe to Madrid, whither neuertheless, all matters being appeased, the King and the whole Court came, and namely the Earle of Benauent: and thither were also brought the Queene, and D. Joane her daughter. At Madrid there arrived a messenger from the Pope, who aduertized the King that D. Pero Gonçal de Mendoza, Bishop of Siguença, was created Cardinal of the title of holy Croffe, the which did greatly please the King, who commanded him to be called the Cardinal of Spaine, the which title hee vsed during his life, and received many honors of King Henry.

D. Pero Gonsal de Mendoza Cardinal
of Spaine.

In these times beganne the Order of the Religious of Saint Francis of Paul, who was a Calabrian borne at a place called Paul, who was drawne into France by King Lewis the eleuenth, and died at Tours; his Order called the Minims of Saint Francis, was approved by Pope Sixtus this yeere 1473. and afterwards at the request of King Francis the first, of Queene Claude his wife, and of Donna Louise of Sauoy his mother, the Author was canonized by Pope Leo the tenth, in the yeere 1529. of this Religious Order there are many Monasteries in Spaine, diuided into two Prouinces.

An. 1473.
Order of Saint Francis of Paul.

F King Henry being desirous to consummate the marriage, betwixt Donna Joane and his cousin the Infant Don Henry, tooke counsell therevpon of the Bishop of Siguença chosen Cardinal, and of others of his counsell, and caused the Infant with his mother to come to Xerax, betwixt which place and Madrid, hee did see them, and would willingly haue brought them to Madrid, but the Maister of Saint James, who did not allow of this marriage, delt in such sort as they came not thither: afterward, the king hauing founded

Marriage of D.
Isabel, supposed daughter of Henry of Arragon, broken by the Maister
of S. James.

founded the maister concerning this match, hee did openly diswade him from it, saying, A that he ought not to marry his daughter to any other then to a King or a mighty Prince: and that if he were determined to give her to Don Henry, it behoued him then to leaue men of warre, and to appoint for their pay, more then twenty millions of Marauedis; the King (who had treasures in the Castle of Segobia) said, that hee would not want money; and therefore, hee sent the Maister, and the new elected Cardinall to Segobia, to take out of the Castle such summes as hee appointed: but the Captaine Andrew de Cabrera, delayed them many dayes, saying, that hee would cause the money to be told out, but yet they did it not; for indeed hee was seruant to the Princes, and wholly contrary to the Kings will, as concerning Donna Ioanes marriage; and besides that hee would haue nothing to doe with the Maister, whom hee deadly hated, fearing that all that hee went about tended to no other end but to dispossesse him of his Governement. In the meane time the Earle of Benauent (who was cousin Germaine to Don Henry,) perceiuing that chiefly by the praictises of the Maister, the marriage was delayed, and incensed with an old hatred against him, about the Maister'ship of Saint James, had bitter words with him, telling him that hee should better haue considered of matters, and not to haue procured the Infant Don Henry to haue come into Spaine, in a manner to deride him, and vnder colour of lyes to abuse the King, the Realme, and the great Lords, with many other bitter words, which the Maister endured with patience.

37

The death of Don Alphonso of Fonseca, Archbishoppe of Siuill, did promote Pero Goncales of Mendoza Bishop of Siguença to that dignity, vnto whom almost at the same time that his Bulls were dispatcht from Rome, was the Cardinals Haute presented. And the King being solicited to prouide for the troubles and miseries of his kingdom, hee did the same year one thousand, foure hundreded, seuentie and three, call the Estates to Saint Mary de Nieua, whether came the Deputies of the Communalities and cities of Castile, and Regions annexed to the same. There were sundry exactions abolished, which had beene leuiud vpon the poore people by the Kings officers, and by subalterne Lords following his example, as payments for the Portes, bridges, taxes, watching and warding, and other such like impositions, leuiud vnder any lawfull cause, vpon wayfaring men, passengers, and the inhabitants of places. There was also granted to the King a certaine Subsidie of money: At this parliament the Infant Don Henry, and his mother Donna Beatrice Pimentell were present. And then the Maister of Saint James bethinking himselfe of another policy, by meanes whereof hee might get the city of Segobia into his hands, hee counselled the King to remooue the assembly of the estates to Segobia, where more commodiously the affaires of the kingdom might be managed, and Donna Ioanes marriage concluded vpon: the which assembly should be there in safety, vnder the faith and safeguare of the Marquis of Santillana, whom hee perswaded to demand, for the same purpose, the Keyes of the gates of Saint Iohn and Saint Martin, of the same city, of Andrew de Cabrera: but Cabrera perceiuing very well wherevnto it tended, and being resolu'd courageously to oppose himselfe against the Maister of Saint James, found many probable excuses, and delayed the matter, till some other determination was taken, wherein hee was supported and fauoured by the new Archbishop of Siuill, and Cardinall of Spaine, who had secretly vnited himselfe to the Princes, and was wholly against Donna Ioanes. In this manner the Maister was disappointed of his purposes to his great greefe, who in like manner sought to surpris the castle of Toledo, and raised such a tumult there, as the King was faine to goe thither in person to appease it: but hee caused no enquiretie to be made for the ring-leaders to that mischief, to punish them according to their deserts: by reason whereof euery man almost committed what mischief hee pleased, without any feare of the lawes.

Whilst the king remained at Toledo, the Marquis of Villena, sonne to the Maister of Saint James, came to doe him reuerence, whom hee receiued with extraordinary kindnesse, the Maister being then at Pignasiell with his wife the Dutchesse

Taxes leuiud
by imposition vpon the poore
people abolished.

The Maister of
S. James his cunningly entrued.

Impunity, the cause of all disorders.

A of Escalona. And when the King returned to Segobia, the Marquis of Villena followed him, but he lodged without the city at the Monastery of Parrall, because of the quarrels betwixt his father and Andrew de Cabrera: the King went often to heare mass at this Monastery, and to visit the Marquis.

As these matters passed, the Princeesse D. Isabella hauing intelligence with the Inhabitants of Aranda de Duero, tooke that place which belonged to the Queene, whereat the King mercifully storming, Andrew de Cabrera put him in minde of the great tyrannies of the Maister of Saint James, and of his insatiable couetousnesse in getting of townes and cities; and how hee had continually, without any respect, hurried and tired his royall person, as hee himselfe very well knew: and therefore hee perswaded him to be pleased, that the Princeesse his sister might safely come to the castle of Segobia, where they might see one another, and conferre together, which could not choise but be exceeding profitable for the Kingdome and for all good men. The King, who was tender hearted, and easie to be carried away, was pleased therewith, and after that hee had heard the opinion of the Cardinall of Spaine, and of the Earle of Benauent, hee was more desirous of it; and Donna Beatrice of Bouadilla, wife to Andrew de Cabrera, disguised in the habit of a country-man, and riding vpon an asse, went her selfe to Aranda to cause the Princeesse to come to the castle of Segobia, who being accompanied with the Archbishop of Toledo, and others, came thither, and entred the castle in a morning before day, where she was courteously entertained. Her coming was on the Yodaine, the King being absent at that time from Segobia, hunting in the Forrest of Balsain, who was hastened by Cabrera, who did greatly suspect the stay of the Marquis of Villena at the Monastery of Parrall, fearing that hee remained there to make some practise vpon him. Now as soon as the Marquis of Villena knew that the Princeesse was come to the castle of Segobia, hee dislodged in all hast, and neuer left galloping till hee was arrived at Aillon, fearing to be taken.

The Earle of Benauent, and Cabrera, rode forthwith to the Forrest to give the King notice that his sister was come, who returned to Segobia, and after that hee had dined, he came to the castle to see the Princeesse, to whom hee vied all signes of loue and friendship: and sitting downe, one neere to another, they talked a long while together, and at last the King tooke his leaue of her with many courteous ceremonies, seeming to be highly pleased. The Maister of Saint James hauing intelligence of all these matters, thought to prouide for his owne safety whatsoever should happen, and therefore hee went to Cuellar to talke with D. Bertrand de la Cueva Duke of Albuquerque, whether, at his intreaty, came the new Constable Don Pedro de Velasco Earle of Haro his father in law, and there they made a league and confederacy together: afterward they began to sollicite the King, to put the Princeesse his sister forth of Segobia; wherevnto (being bewitched by the Maister) hee consented, but his counsell therein was diuided. The Princeesse, the better to order her affaires, was of opinion to cause the Prince her husband to come to the castle of Segobia, thinking by his presence the King would be sooner brought to reason, and all matters concluded with more facility. The Prince being come, the King saw him, and receiued him with a cheerefull countenance, and they rode together on horse-backe thorough the city, to the great contentment of the people, and likewise of the Courtiers, though not of all. The great Maister Andrew de Cabrera made them a Royall banquet in the Bishops house, at which the Earle of Ribadeo, by priuiledge from his ancestors, did eate at the King and the Princes table. The feast being ended, with store of musike and other delights, the King grew sicke and complained of his side, and was carried into his lodging, where after a while, hee recovered, but not without hauing certaine reliques of rheume, fluxes of bloud by vrine, with vomittings, and other such like mortall accidents: The Princes did hourly visit him, and caused others to sollicite him to declare the Princeesse his sister heire to the Kingdomes, wherevpon there passed diuerse strang and bitter words betwixt those which managed this businesse on either side: but nothing being concluded, the Princeesse refused not to leaue Segobia. The Maister of Saint James was aduertized of all that passed, by the King himselfe, who went about on a night to put certaine companies of souldiers into the city, who should

Interview of King Henry
and the Prince-esse, Isabella his sister.

Prince Per-
nand comes to Segobia.

Priuiledge of the Earles of Ribadeo.

seize

38 Nauarre,
and
Arragon.
Died of Gaston de Foix.

Titles of D.
Leonora of Na-
uarre.

Suspicion of love between the Princess
D. Leonora,
and the Bishop of Pampelona.

The Bishop of Pampelona
slaine by the Castille.

seize vpon certaine Townes, Churches and Houses, to the end to giue entrance to him A and other greater troupes, with which forces he would take the Princes, and Andreo de Cabrera prisoners. The Maister had as bad successe in this plot as in the former: for God who had predestinated the Princes Fernand and Isabella to reigne in Spaine, suffered this pradize to be discouered, by meanes whereof the daunger was preuented, the Princess stood vpon her gard, and the Prince retired himself in time, and went into Arragon, whether he was called by warres and troubles which there happened.

King Iohn of Arragon, his father, was in his old age oppressed with crosses, as well in Nauarre, by the seditions of his subiects, as on the frontiers of France and Countie of Rossillon. In Nauarre, soone after that the Princess Donna Leonora failed in herenterprise of taking Pampelona, her husband the Earle Gaston of Foix, returning out of France into Nauarre, fell sicke and died at a place called Roncevaux, in the yeere 1472. leauing heire of his Lands and Lordships of Bearn and Foix his sonnes sonne, Francis Phabus a child of the age of five yerres, who remaying vnder the gouernment of his mother Donna Magdalen of France, and of the Princess Donna Leonora his grand-mother, was likewise, after her death, heire to the Kingdome of Nauarre. Donna Leonora was likewise, after her death, heire of Nauarre, Infanta of Arragon and Sicill, and Lieutenant General for the King her Lord and father in the said Kingdome of Nauarre.

After the decease of Gaston Earle of Foix, this Princess making her abode in the C city of Tafalla, called there a Parliament, to the which the great Lords came, and especially the chiefe of the faction of Grammont and Beaumont, who inflamed with enuy were still desirous to ruine one another. It happened (as it is easie amongst those that are of troublefome and enuious dispositions) that diuerse bitter speeches passed betwixt the Earle of Lerin and the Constable of Nauarre Pedro de Peralta, which caused great contention: into the which quarrell Nicholas de Echaurri, Bishop of Pampelona, did so farre enter, as the Constable thinking himselfe greatly injured by him, threatened him that it should cost him his life.

This Bishop was suspected to bee more familiar with the Princess Donna Leonora then honesty required, which caused him to be hated of diuerse men, who were zealous D of their Princess honour, taking it more heinously at his hands, who was a prelat and ought to giue good example, then if it had beene any other. The Bishop, after this threatening, being fearefull, would by no meanes come forth of his house.
The Princess, either desirous to pacifie this quarrell, or else not able to endure him long out of her sight, sent diuerse messengers to him, to bring him vnto her to the Monastery of Saint Sebastian of the Order of Saint Francis at Tafalla, where shee accomplished a nine daies vowes which shee had made, for shee vsed great deuotion to those fathers, and bestowed many benefits vpon them: but the Bishop still fearing to bee met with by the way, prayed her for to excuse him. At the last shee sent vnto him one of her familiar friends called Fernand de Baquedan with an other E Knight named Sir Haghe, who promised to conduct him safely thither, wherevpon hee mounted on his Mule, and rode in their company towards Tafalla, whereon the Constable being aduertized, hee was so farre transported with rage, as leaping on horse-backe, hee met with the Bishop on the way, and slew him hard by the gates of Tafalla, not respecting or regarding the Princesses word, nor yet his Epit-copall dignity, for the which inhumane fact he remained diuerse monthes together excommunicate.

This mans death did greatly offend diuerse both in Nauarre and in King Iohn of Arragons Court, but especially the Princess. Don Alphonso Carrillo a Spaniard, was promoted to that dignity in his stead, being in number the forth Bishop of that Sea.

On the other side, King Iohn being then threescore and tenne yerres of age, was in-gaged in a tedious quarrell with the French, vpon this occasion: The Earledome of Rossillon was engaged vnto King Lewis the eleuenth for the summe of three hundred thousand crownes, who kept therein Gouernors and Officers which did oppresse the people, and committed diuerse insupportable outrages, where the inhabitants daily com-

A complained, requesting their King to protect them, wherewith the Frenchmen were displeased: in regard whereof King Lewis sent Ambassadors to King Iohn, who summoned him to make payment of the three hundred thousand crownes, and to receive his Earle-dome, or else to appropriat it vnto him for the same summe, or if hee were not pleased with these two motions: that then hee should giue him suerties in France, for the payment of the money at a certaine time. This did greatly trouble King Iohn, neuerthelesse, with great modesty hee made answer, that hee would request King Lewis not to vrge him at so vnseasonable a time, after his long and chargeable warres made against his subiects, to repay the said summe, which as then was impossible for him to doe, much-B lesse to sell the Earledome vnto him, and wholly to alienate that which did belong to the crown of Arragon: And as for the suerties which he demanded; hee did not thinke it a reasonable request, nor yet becoming him, who had (God be thanked) wherewith to pay his debts in time: with this answer the Ambassadors were not satisfied, as also by reason that those of Perpignan, impatient of the French yoke, beganne manifestly to rebell against them: wherefore King Lewis sent forces into the countie of Rossillon, to chastise those of Perpignan, who had constrained the Frenchmen dwelling amongst them, to retire themselves into the castle, from whence they shot into the towne with the Canon, doing great harme therevnto. King Iohn came thither in hast to appease this flure, and endeauored by all meanes to perswade the people to obey the French, promi-C sing them shortly to deliuer them from that trouble: but they answered him boldly, that they had rather suffer death then returne to the subiection of such Lords.

During these disputations King Iohn was on a sodaine besieged in the towne by the French army, which the Spanish Authors number to bee forty thousand, who hauing enuironed it on euery side, beganne to batter it without, and within to attaile it from the castle, so as it behooued the besieged to bee courageous, and valiantly to defend themselves, the Kings presence seruing them greatly to that purpose. The sege continued foure monthes: in the end, at the report of Prince *Fernand*s coming, who vpon the newes of the French mens arriual, had leauied souldiars both in Castile, Arragon and Catalonia, they raised their sege and retired themselves into France. King D Iohn and the towne being deliuered from this danger, all men went out to meete the Prince, and the father and the sonne embraced one another with great ioy, who came together into Perpignan. The King did againe entreat the Inhabitants to obey the French for a short time, till he could otherwise dispose of his affaires, assuring them that he would pay the French King his money, and take them againe to himselfe. They being obstinate refused it, and requested him, to giue King Lewis other pledges, or else to suffer them to depart thence, for they would willingly giue ouer their houses, goods, yea and their owne liues, rather then to submit themselves to the vildage of the French.
King Iohn seeing them so resolu'd, left D. Lewis de Requefens for the gouernor, and with the Prince his sonne returned to Barcelona.

E Before the Princes departure out of Castile, there arose a great quarrel betwixt the Marquis of Santillana, and the Earle of Benaunt, because that the Earle (possessing the towne of Carrion, by the Kings permission, the which hee had held during the former troubles, had vildely and iniuriouly intreated certaine Gentlemen which dwelt in the same towne, who were neere in blood and parentage to the Marquis, who hauing notice thereof sent vnto him, and desired him in regard that those Gentlemen did belong vnto him, that hee would for reuerence due to the boanes of his ancestors spare and respect them: the Earle made him a proude answer and said, that hee would cause his ancesters bones to be taken vp, and send them vnto him in baskets, to the end he might be-flow them safer with himselfe at Guadalajara amongst the rest of his progenitors. The F Marquis being iustly moued hereat, conspired with the Earle of Treuigno, and others his friends and kinsfolkes, to take that place from the Earle, who had builded a new fort there: the Earle of Treuigno hauing intelligence with the wronged Gentlemen (his lands lying neere to Carrion) he entred the towne with souldiars, and besieged the fort and soone after the Marquis arriued with troupes of horse and foote, as well of his owne tenants as those of the Constable Pedro de Velasco, the duke of Albuquerque and others, who

The Earle-dome of Rossil-lon, original of all the wars between France and Spaine in our daies.

40
Castile.
Quarrel betwixt the Marquis of Santilla-na, and Pimentel.

The Marquis of Santillana survived the towne of Carrion.

who supported him in this quarrell. The Earle of Benauent having notice of what the A Marquis had done, and ment to doe, came in speedily to Valiodolir, and gathered his friends together, so as with the helpe of the Maister of Saint Iames his father in law, who in this tooke his part, hee found himselfe able to offer battaile to his aduersary; but the King being accompanied with the Cardinall of Spaine brother to the Marquis, and with the Maister, father in law to the Earle, did put himselfe betwixt them, and handled the matter in such sort by the Cardinalls meanes, as he hindred them from ioyning battaile: and it was agreed, that the towne of Carion should returne to the crowne, and the Earle should haue the towne of Magaua in recompence, which belonged to the B Cardinall, who to make them friends was content to dispossesse himselfe thereof, and received other recompences for the same. Prince Fernand when this quarrell beganne, was ready to depart into Arragon, and had leauied certaine companies of souldiers, the which with his owne person hee offered to the Marquis who gaue him humble thanks, saying that he was strong enough to encounter a greater Lord then the Earle of Benauent: and therefore hee besought him to preferue his person in safety, that hee might in time to come reigne in Spaine, and not to hazard it now when there was no need.

The Marquis afterwards returned to Guadajajara, and went to Saint Christoferto visit the Princesse Donna Isabella, who went forth to meete him: hee offered her seruice, and all aide and assistance for the obtaining of her right, after the King her brothers death. The Earle of Benauent returned into his owne possessions, the King with the Cardinall to Segobia, and the Maister to Cuellar: but soone after, the King with the whole Court, and the Maister likewise, came to Madrid, where by the Maister his Council it was thought fit that the Cardinall should returne to Segobia to treat with the Princesse, and the Maister brought the King to Trugillo, to cause the fort of the same city to be deliuered vnto him, which hee had so importunately a long time begged: but the Gouernour of that place whose name was Gratian de Sese would not consent therevnto, nor obey the Kings commandment; yet neuerthelesse hee haue bene solicited by the Maister with promise of great recompences hee beganne to negotiate about the deliuey thereof: but the matter being delayed, the King, who since his last sicknesse decayed in his health, was constrained to returne to Madrid, there to take his rest: In the same place remained Donna Isabel in the keeping of the Marquis of Villena: as for the Queene, she was else where, and lead a pleasant life without any shame at all. In the meane time the Maister of Saint Iames, who remained at Santa Cruz de la Sierra, delt in such sort as capitaine Gratian of Sese deliuered him the fort of Trugillo, being recompenced with the Lordship of Saint Helice delos Gallegos, where shortly after he was cruelly murdered and stoned to death by his owne tenants. About the same time the Maister of Saint Iames D. Iohn de Pacheco fell sicke of an Impostume in his throat, which caused him to void great quantity of putrified blood at his mouth, which in the end strangled him, he died in the threecore and fourth yere of his age, hauing more credit and authority in Spaine, then any Lord in his time: his death was kept secret by his seruants, vntill the fort of Trugillo was yielded vp, which was forthwith done, and then it was openly declared to all men: his body was carried to Parral neere Segobia, a Monastery of Saint Ierome, founded by King Henry then reigning for his place of buriall, all, and the Maister was buried in the chiefe chappell with great pompe and solemnity. Great was the Kings sorrow for the Maisters death, to whose sonne and heire Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, he did not only confirme the gifts of the townes, cities and castles, granted to his father, but bestowed likewise vpon him the Maistership of Saint Iames, and sent a messenger to the Pope to obtaine the confirmation thereof, not respecting the Knights of the same Order, who began to murmur and strongly to oppose themselves against it, and they did not onely bandy themselves against the Marquis of Villena, who was not chosen according to the rules of the Order, but they likewise fell at variance amongst themselves: for D. Roderigo Manrique Earle of Paredes Commander of Segura, said, that the election of the new Maister ought to be made in the Couent of Vcles, according to the ancient custome: On the other side, D. Alphonso de

Death of D.
Iohn de Pacheco Maister
of Saint Iames.

A de Cardega great Commander of Leon, affirmed, that it stood with great reason that the election should be made in Saint Marks of Leon, in regard the deceased Maister died in the confines of Leon: wherefore each of them standing firme in their allegations, and hauing their factions and parties, those two were chosen and saluted for Maisters; in such sort as the Order of Saint Iames, had at that time three heads, like vnto Carbetus, the three headed dogge in hell: The Marquis of Villena, besides the Kings fauour, did hope that the Earle of Osorno, great Commander of Castile, would take his part; because he had the keeping of Donna Isabel, the Kings supposed daughter; it made the King more bound vnto him, and aduerted by reason thereof the King did greatly ad- B uance him: the which gained blunts seruants to the Princesse Donna Isabella, who were jealous to see his sonne who had idone them so much mischief in so great credit and authority.

The Cardinall of Spaine hauing bene a certaine tinte at Segobia with the Princesse, came backe to Madrid to the King; with the Constable Don Pedro de Melasco, who ioyntly spake to the King with great boldnes touching the succession of the Kingdome, beseeching him to take in good part, that which they should say vnto him vpon their consciences, which was, that he ought to maintain the Princesse Isabel right, because he knew better then any that this Donna Isabel was not his daughter: and they C oppresse his Kingdome after his decaie, if hee should dissemble in that behalfe, but to speake the truth, for his peoples sake, in declaring his sister the Princesse his true and lawfull heire: wherevnto the King without any trouble made answere, that Order should be taken for them both; neuerthelesse hee delaied all hee could from meddling in that businesse. In the meane space the Marquis of Villena, who promised to him selfe the Maistership of Saint Iames, thinking to praize with the Knights of Castile, and chiefly with the Earle of Osorno, the great Commander, came to Villarejo, in which place the enterview of him and the Earle was agreed vpon: but the Earle feigning himselfe sicke, sent thither his wife, well accompanied with men at armes, by whom the Marquis, at his lighting from his horse was seized vpon, and carried away prisoner into the D castle of Fuente Duegna.

The King being aduertized hereof, did presently take horse, notwithstanding he was very sicke, and came to the Earle of Osorno, who shewed himselfe sterne and obstinate, without respect or reuerence, wherefore the King returned highly displeased to Madrid. By the way he met with the Archbishop of Toledo at Villa Verde, who offered him his seruice, and therevpon, to please him hee beseeged out of hand the castle of Fuente Duegna, whether the King likewise came in person. The seege lasting long, Lopes Vafques de Acugna, brother to the Archbishop, making shew of ending this strife as a friend, found meanes to bring the Countesse of Osorno to a parley, who coming abroad with a sonne of hers, was deceived in the same manner as she had beguiled the E Marquis, and the mother and the sonne were brought prisoners into the castle of Hueta.

This policy did highly please the King and the Archbishop, and was the cause that the Marquis was deliuered: the Cardinall and the Countable made an end of the matter, and the prisoners were set at liberty on either side: the Archbishop of Toledo returned to Alcalá, and the King, being much afflicted and weake, to Madrid, where Catarres, vomitings, and other mortall accidents brought him to his last houre. The physicians hauing told the Cardinall of Spaine, the Constable, the Marquis of Villena, the Earle of Benauent and other Lords of his Council there present, that his sicknesse was mortall, they caused Frier Peter Maçuelo, prior of Saint Ierome of Madrid, his confessor, to put him in minde of matters belonging to his soules health, and the peace of his Kingdome. Hee had long discourse with the prior in confession; then hee made his will, appointing the Cardinall, the Duke de Azeualo, the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Benauent for his executors; and hee commaunded that his seruants should bee paid and well recompenced with his treasure and iewells, and declared Donna Isabel to bee his lawfull daughter, and true heire to his Kingdomes; the Cccc which takes more for the succession of his Kingdome.

King Henry

The Marquis
of Villena taken prisoner
by his complicity.

The Countesse of Osorno, and her sonne taken by the Marquis of Villena set at liberty.

- 18 Enter view of the Kings D. Iohn of Arragon, and D. Fernand of Castile father and sonne, A at Victoria. Cutting off certaine cities of the Realm of Navarre in fauour of Castile.
19 Navigations and conquests of the Spaniards in the Ocean Sea.
20 Institution of the ordinary inquisition of Spaine against the Lewes and Moores.
21 Troubles raised by the Archbishop of Toledo.
22 Seditious prelates, and other petty tyrants punished.
23 Exploits of warre on the frontiers of Extremadura, and at sea betwixt the Portugals and Spaniards.
24 Treaty of peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall propounded by D. Beatrice, Dutcheffe of Visco.
25 Union of Castile and Arragon in D. Fernand the second, the nineteenth King of Arragon.
26 D. Leonora of Navarre the faire and shittish, in the order of the Kings of Navarre, succeedeth King Iohn her father: but shee dieth almost as soone as he; her children and posterity.
27 D. Francis Phæbus, first of that name, the foure and thirtieth King of Navarre, seditions at his commings to the crowne by the factions of Beaumont and Grammont.
28 Estates of Castile assembled at Toledo: their decrees and ordonances.
29 Affaires of Navarre. Estates assembled at Tudela. Feigned reconciliation of the twofamilies of Beaumont and Grammont. Impieties, preasons, murders.
30 Execution of the decrees of the Estates of Toledo.
31 Spanish army in Sicill.
32 Rigours of the Spanish inquisition: iurisdiccions and tribunalls thereof.
33 A great quarrel betwixt D. Ramir Nuges de Guzman, and D. Frederike Henriques, in the Court of Castile.
34 D. Iohn second of that name, and thirteenth King of Portugall.
35 Contentions betwixt the Pope, and the Kings of Castile, for the election to benefices: agreements betwixt the Pope, King Fernand and Queene Isabella.
36 King Francis Phæbus enters into Navarre: pronounces and orders for the quiet of that Kingdome.

Order and continuance of the Kings reigning in Spaine, written in this two and twentieth Booke.

CASTILE. LEON. ARRAGON. PORTVGAL. NAVARRE.

20. D. Fernand the 5. and Queene Isabella the 1. 19. the same Ferd 2. 13. D. Leonora the 1.
34. D. Francis Phæbus 1.

D. Fernand the 5. King 30. of Castile and 41. of Leon, and Donna Isabella the 4. a woman which inherited the Kingdome of Castile, and the 5. which inherited in Leon.

A

T such time as the Princes D. Fernand, and Donna Isabella came to the crowne of Castile, and Leon, by the decease of King Henry the fourth, then did iustice and peace beginne to smile vpon Spaine. And it seemed that for the quier, honour and exaltation of the Spanish nation, God had chosen and defended them, in the midst of so many straits and difficulties, wherein they were oftentimes plunged, as well during the reigne of the Lord King Henry, as afterward: adorning each of them for that purpose with royall qualities, and heroike vertues, both of body and minde. For, as well Don Fernand as Queene Isabella, were of meane stature and proportion, yet well composed, faire and pleasant aspect, gracious in their speeches and of such Maiesty in the gesture and motion of their bodies, as was requisite for such great Princes: they were sober and moderate in their diet, and all other their actions, deuout and religious, as they had beene instructed, but yet for all that a little to much courtesie of glory and honour which made them oftentimes stumble, and transported them out of the right way of equity, especially D. Fernand. To loue, and desire honour and glory, is in deed an affection befitting great persons, and without the which they can hardly giue themselves to the greatest vices: They were also maintainers of iustice in Spaine, the which they executed in such sort, as their severity did not deprive them of the praise which they deserved by their mildnesse and clemency. The plaies and pastimes which King Fernand vsed in his youth, were Cardes and Chess, but afterward he became inclined to hunting and hawking, to the exercise of armes, and he did prouoe excellent in all kinds of horfemanhip: he loued learned men: but his euil hap was, not to be instructed therein in his youth, which was thorough his fathers negligence, who was also himself in a manner wholly vnclearned: King Fernand did greatly delight to heare learned men talke, and to vnderstand of the laudable actions of great men, but especially of his ancestors.

Queene Isabella, for her part, tooke great pleasure in learning the Latin tongue, and professed so well therein, as in lesse then a yeere, she was able to vnderstand what her selfe did reade, or what was spoken vnto her in the same language: her continency and chastity was rare, and it did appeere in all her actions, speeches, attire and countenance. Shee kept ordinarily in her house young men and women of noble parentage, whom shee brought vp, and also Ladies of great place, who were honoured for their vertue and honesty: She would willingly haue had the King her husband like her selfe, of whom shee was extremely ielous, and if at any time shee perceiued him familiar with any of her Ladies or Gentlewomen, she presently sought means to quench those vnlawfull fires yet without scandall, either by marrying them, sending them away, or admonishing them, or by some other honest and discreet meanes, desiring that the Ladies of her traine should be rather vertuous then faire.

It is noted of her, that in her trauaile of child, what paine soeuer she indured, shee did neuer fetch one sigh or groane, and at that time she would cause her face to be covered. Charms and enchantments shee abhorred as became a Christian: shee did greatly loue learned men, who were of good conuersation; especially prelates of an holy and religious life, doing more good vnto such, and sooner preferring them to liuings and dignities, then others of greater houses, who made more shew of the fame and glory of their ancestors then of their owne vertues.

These Princes being thus qualified, obtained the crowne of Castile and afterwards, that of Arragon, not without paine, trauaile and great oppositions (as hereafter shall appeare) which being by them surmounted and passed ouer, they established iustice, gaue peace to the Spaniards, quenching all forepassed ciuill warres, and did zealously labour about the ordering of religion, wherein they wanted good helpe: this at the leastwise redounded to their honour, that they did roote the Moores out of Spaine, and made conquests in Affrica, they did quicken vpon the Spaniards spirits, and incited them to al excellent artes and sciences, ordaining great stipends to learned men, namely benefices and Ecclesiasticall reuenues: they made diuerse good and profitable lawes, A and by their authoritie and meanes, the inhabitants of a new world came to the knowledge of those Regions, the which hath for all that in diuerse sorts redounded to the hurt of man-kinde: not by these Princes occasion, but by the couetousnesse and cruelty of those which came after them.

The Princeesse Isabell (as hath bene already said) was at Segobia, at the time her brother King Henry died, whither the Princes and Lords, which tooke his part, did come, after the Kings obsequies were finished, which lasted nine dayes, and there they saluted her as Queene of Castile and Leon, taking the oath of fealty, and dooing her homage after the accustomed manner. There were present when this was done Don Alphonso B after the accustomed manner. There were present when this was done Don Alphonso B of Castile & Aduena Archbishop of Toledo, D. Pero Gonçall of Mendoza Archbishop Siull, called Cardinal of Spaine, and the Bishop of Siguencia, Don Pedro de Velasco, Constable of Castile, Don Alphonso Henriquez Admirall of Castile, by the death of his father Don Frederick, newly deceased, and Vnckle by the mothers side to the new King, Don Garcy Aluarez of Toledo, Duke of Alua, Don Bertrand de la Cuenca Duke of Alba, querque, Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, Don Roderigo Alphonso Pimentel Earle of Benauent, Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, and others, some of whom were already with the Princeesse before the Kings death.

Prince Ferdinand was at the same time in Cattalonia with his father King John, who beeing advertised of that which hapned, came speedily to Segobia, where hee in like C manner was received and acknowledged as King, to the great ioy and contentment, not to onely of the City but of the whole kingdom, who sent their Deputies vnto him, to doe him homage and seruice, as to their lawfull Lord and King, in the right of his wife: it beeing a matter out of all question, that Donna Isabe was a bastard, borne in adultery, and not capable of any right to the Crowne. Other Lords, which were absent, did in like manner send their deputies to make their submissions, and to take the oathes due to the new King. But the Marquis of Villena, who had Donna Isabe in keeping, and Don Aluaro d'Espuniga Duke of Arcualo, Don Roderigo Tellez Giron, Maister of Calatrava, and Don John Giron Earle of Vregna, cousins to the Marquis of Villena, with others their confederates and adherents, were of another opinion, and did not D only fauour Donna Isabe, who called her selfe Queene of Castile, but craued many things for their owne particular profit. The Marquis would haue the Maistership of Saint James, and the places belonging therevnto, which Don John de Pacheco his father had enioyed: The Duke of Arcualo would haue his Dutche confirmed to him, and the Maistership of Alcantara for Don John d'Espuniga his sonne; other men demanded other matters. Now the first thing that was thought vpon by the King and Queenes Councell, was, about the ordering of their treasures, and administration of iustice, the managing and execution whereof, was to be committed to fit persons, and capable of such affaires: wherefore Don Gutierre de Cardena, the Queenes Chamberlaine, and Don Gonzalo Chacon, were created chiefe Treasurers, and with them Roderigo de Villos E was sent Ambassadors to Lewis the eleventh the French King, to aduer-tise him of King Henries death, of their promotion, and to request him to continue, and confirme the ancient alliance with the house of Spaine. The Ambassadors had likewise commission and instructions, for the restitution of the Earldome of Rossillon to the King of Aragon. King Lewis made a shew of sorrow for King Henries death, and seemed to reioyce that they had succeeded him: but touching the restoring of the County of Rossillon, hee would by no meanes hearken therevnto, but sent a learned Lawyer to King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell to shew his reasons for the contrary, who came to Validolite with the Ambassadors, his coming beeing to no purpose.

The city of Perpignan beeing succoured (as heretofore hath bene said) by Prince Ferdinand, was after his returne into Castile againe besieged by the French. King Lewis was willing and commanding his Captaynes, who had shamefully raised their siege, and were retired into the countrie and territory of Narbona, on paine of being punished as traitors to their king and country, to returne and assaile the towne, and not to stirre from thence

Lords holding the party of the Princes Ferdinand & Isabell.

Lords, contrary to the Princes, taking Donna
Isabe part.

Iustice, and treasures the principall members of a state.

2
Aragon.

A thence till they had taken it, although it should cost all their liues: whervpon, they came backe, and by the helpe of the Castle, did for eight moneths space, so presse the besieged, as they brought them to the extreamest poynt of necessitie: for besides the continuall toyle, watchings, fights, and daily reparations of the breaches, whereunto they were constrained, the want of victuals was so great in the towne, as they were not onely enforced to eat dogges, cattes, and all other sorts of vnclane meates, but also the very bodies of men, friends or enemies, which were slayne in the assault, yea, mothers did de-voure their owne children: such was the obstinacie of those people, who would not yeeld to an enemy, whome they had despised and offended, and from whome they did expect

B no mercie: but in the end, extreame necessitie, and inexorable famine brought them to that poynt which they sought most to auoide, and they found more mercie then they hoped for: for they were taken by composition, their offences pardoned, and the Garriso permitted to depart with their armour and weapons: so as King Lewis, by the taking thereof, pretended now more interest to it then before. This was the last quarrell which King John of Aragon had with the French, or any other: for the gouernment, his yeares, and other discommodities of old age, perswaded him to spend the remainder of his dayes in rest and quiet in the city of Barcelona, leauing the gouernement of the Kingdome of Nauarre to his daughter, who was heire thereunto, and his other dominions to the rest of his children and Lieutenants.

C This yeare 1457. there grew a contention betwixt King Fernand and Queene Isabella about the gouernement of Castile, disputing which of them two had most right to the succession thereof: she, as daughter to King John of Castile the second: and hee, as sonne to King John of Aragon, who descended in direct masculine line from King John the first, in the third degree. Some, who tooke the Kings part, did say, that it was a thing against nature and all good order, that the regiment of so great a State should be in a womans power, and that so many great Lords and braue Knights should be vnder the command of that sexe, weake both in body and mind, without experience, wisdom, or knowledge of what was profitable or hurtfull to a kingdom, vnlesse it were by hearesay, beeing oftentimes deceyued by ignorance, and which did follow their owne passions, D and those of them that they fauoured, who for the most part were chosen amongst the worst sort of people.

That all kingdomes, Iurisdictions, and well-gouerned Common-wealths, as well auncient as moderne, had wholly reiecte a womans empire, and if at any time they had submitted themselves thereunto, their ruine and desolation had soone after ensued: alled-ging for example the Sallicke law of France, which is a good old custome, alwaies pro-hibitable when it was obserued, either in the total gouernement, or parts thereof. On the contrarie part, others who held with Queene Isabella, did say, that euery one ought to be maintayned in their right, and that there was nothing more consonant to nature, then that children should succeed their fathers and nearest kinsfolke: that diuers women had E bene profitable to Kingdomes and Common-wealths, as well in old times, as of fresh memorie, namely, that there were fundrie recent examples thereof in the Monarchie of Castile. And as for Queene Isabella, her constancie, iudgement, and wisdom was sufficiently knowne, and that all men were assured of her good gouernement, and that there was not the first woman which had inherited that kingdom.

This last opinion was followed and allowed of, whereat King Fernand seemed to be highly displeased: but the Queene, who did dearly loue him, and would not willingly haue him discontented, told him, that her intent was not in matters concerning the affaires of Castile and Leon to bee more obeyed than himselfe, and requested him to consider, that whatsoeuer was decreed in that poynt, was for the good and benefite of their F onely daughter Donna Isabella: if so bee that they should happen to haue no issue male, who otherwise should bee wholly depriued of that honour and royall dignity, if what hee had pourfused and alledged, should take place, by these probable reasons the king was satisfied with that which the great Lords had decreed.

Yet neuerthelesse it was concluded and determined, that all letters missiue, writtings, and other expeditions, should bee made in both their names, and vnder the scale
of

Famine in Per-pignan.

Perpignan yet
ded to the French.

3
Castile.

Contentions betwixt King Fernand and Isabella.

4
The Marquis of Villena his demands.

of the two kingdomes of Castile and Arragon, and that all coyne shold be likewise stamped with both their armes quartered therein.

The Marquis of Villena moued the King and Queene, that by their fauour he might be confirmed in the Master-shippe of Saint Iames, and that a husband might be promised for Donna Isabel, with a dowrie besitting her estate: which beeing performed, hee promised to become their faithfull and obediens seruant: hee was one of the brassest Knights, and best men at armes in all Spaine: the King and Queene sent him word, that concerning the Master-shippe, hee should haue all their fauours and assistance, as well to the Pope, as to the Knights of the same Order, notwithstanding that Don Alphonso of Cardega, and Don Roderigo Manrique had diuided it betwixt themselves, and were in possession thereof, and that as for Donna Isabel, they would intreate her kindly and honourably, and prouide her a husband, but in any case it behooued him to deliuer her into their hands.

A scilicet Per late.

The Marquis who had bad counsell, and was still accompanied with seditious persons, refused to deliuer the Ladie, and that which was worse, at the perswasion of Don Antoine Nomes of Cite Rodrigo, hee beganne to broach new practises with Don Alphonso King of Portugall, for to procure him to marrie Donna Isabel, promising to make him King of Castile. On the other side the Arch-bishop of Toledo, a man of turbulent spirit, and a louer of Innouations, complayned, that the King and Queene, did not accomplish that which he had hoped for and deserued, nor yet what they had promised him before their comming to the Crowne, seeking all meanes and occasions to free himselfe from their seruice. But enuie was it that vexed him, to see the Cardinall of Spaine (whome he hated) to be in so great credit and authoritie by their meanes: for these respects hee left the Court, being accompanied by Hernando Alarcon his familiar Councellour, the great and renowned Alcauist of those dayes.

Hernando Alarcon.

The king and Queene beeing come to Vailladolid, by the way of Medina del Campo, the more or furt whereof they left in the keeping of the Duke of Alua, they were visited by diuers Deputies of Townes and Citties, who came to do them homage, and to offer them all dutie and obedience. In the meane time, the Marquis of Villena importuned the king of Portugall to marrie Donna Isabel, with the kingdome for her dowrie, or else to defend her as an Vnkle, assuring him that hee should find readie to do him seruice, himselfe, the Master of Calatraua, the Earle of Vregna, the Marquis of Cales his brother-in-law, Don Alphonso of Aguilar, the Earle of Benauent, and also the Dukes of Auevalo and Albuquerque, and the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, together with fourteene of the chiefe Citties of Castile, who wanted but a head, who at his first arrival would furnish him with fise thousand Lances, with other forces and meanes. And among these bargaines, hee demanded of King Don Alphonso diuers great gifts and aduancements both for himselfe and for others.

Præfides of the Marquis of Villena in
Portugal.

The king of Portugall hauing consulted with his Councell about this businesse, notwithstanding that their opinions were diuers and contrarious, yet hee sent Commissioners to treat of this marriage with Donna Isabel his Niece, and by Ray de Sepa his Ambassadour, hee willed king Don Fernand and Queene Isabella, to giue ouer freely vnto him the kingdomes of Castile and Leon, the which they did vniuilly possesse and inherit, in regard they did belong and appertaine to D. Isabel, whome the Ambassadour called Queene, saying, that if they had any right or interest in those Realmes, they should submit themselves to the tryall of lawe, and that hee would lay downe his armes, so as they would dispossesse themselves, and leaue the kingdomes in the hands of a third person: and if they should refuse so to do, hee then tooke God for witnesse and iudge, that he was not the author of those miseries which should ensue.

Vntill that time, king Don Alphonso had liued and reigned in great credit, magnificence, and reputation, and with good and happie successe in his affaires concerning his State: but the couetous and greedie desire hee had to raigne in Spayne, by the meanes of Donna Isabel, whome hee had oftentimes reiected and refused, as beeing assured, and confidently resolu'd, that shee was not lawfull daughter to the late king Henry, did cast him head-long into a gulph of miseries, by the vnluckie and intestine warres, which

A which hee tooke in hand by her meanes against the Kings Fernand and Isabella: who by the aduice of their Councell, did wisely answer his demands, shewing him, that there was no reason in that which hee went about, and that hee ought to call to mind the cause why hee had refused Donna Isabel in King Henrys life time, whose daughter hee very well knew shee was not, and that therefore they did greatly meruaile at that which hee now beganne to attempt: and they did likewise protest not to bee guilke of any miseries which follow warre, beeing determined by all meanes to defend and protect their kingdomes.

The King and Queene finding hereby, that warre would follow, they did seeke by all means to giue contentment to the Marquis, the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo and others, on whome those affaires depended, but their labour was in vaine. The Arch-bishoppe shewed himselfe most obstinate, who among other furious speeches, sayd, that hee would teach the King and Queene what it was to offend the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo: and no perswasions nor intreatie of Don Pedro of Acugna, Earle of Buendia his brother, nor of other graue and religious persons, could alter his determination, but hee did still with great obstinacie persist in that which Hernando Alarcon had suggested: Therefore on either side great preparations of warre were made, and the Kingdome was in such sort diuided, as diuers, who seemed to be desirous of quiet, gaue occasion to haue their loyaltie called in question: souldiers were leauied euery where, and diligent watch was kept in all the Citties, Townes, and Castles, some taking the Kings and Queenes part, others adhering to the King of Portugall, who aduertised his Partisans, that hee would shortly come into the Countrey with a great army.

Andalus
speech: the Archb.

The King Don Fernand, and Queene Isabella diuided betwixt them the charge of the defence of the Kingdomes, so as King Fernand should haue a care of that part which was toward the North, that is to say, old Castile, Leon, and the countieys next adjacent, and Queene Isabella should looke to those Regions and Prouinces which are beyond the mountains, namely, Toledo, Andalusia, and Murcia: shee was accompanied by Don Pedro de Velasco the Constable, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, who was created Duke of Infantalcho, and by Don Garcia Aluarez of Toledo Duke of Alua: by the way shee caused the Arch-bishoppe to be founded once againe, who lay at Alcalá, sending the Constable vnto him, who was a wife and discret Knight, who did so well handle the matter, as the Arch-bishop had condiscended to the Queenes demands, had not Hernando Alarcon and his associates perswaded him to the contrarie.

Died is of Jan
Janisga.

King Ferdinand beeing desirous to haue the Citties of Salamanca and Zamora to take a new oath of allegiance, went thither, and would willingly haue exacted the like from them of Toro, but hee would not hazard his person in going thither, albeit that Roderigo de Villos his chiefe Treasurer, had the Castle in his power: for not long before, his eldest brother John de Villos, had made himselfe Master of the Cittie, whither he had drawne diuers leude persons, who fearing punishment, for their many heinous crimes, did shadow themselves vnder his protection: who for his owne part did greatly tyrannize in the city and had newly caused the Licenciate Roderigo of Valdiuiesco to bee hanged forth at the windowes of his owne house, and had moreover receyued money of the king of Portugall, at whose seruice and deuotion he kept the same place.

The Cardinall of Spaine did at the same time write to King Don Alphonso, alledging many reasons to diuert him from a warre so dangerous and vncertaine, but the King in his answer wanted no contrarie reasons. Queen Isabella in the meane time furnished Toledo with Garrisons, and placed Don Roderigo Manriques, Earle of Paredes for an assistant there, who teamed himselfe Master of Saint Iames, and hauing by her presence well ordered that Cittie, and by letters and commandements other places of Andalusia and Murcia, shee returned to Vailladolid. At the same time the Inhabitants of Alcarraz rebelled against the Marquis of Villena, and craued ayde of Don Roderigo Manriques against the Marquis, who intended to beseege them, the which they obtained, moreover the King and Queene sent vnto them the Bishop of Auila, and the Lord of Coca and Alexos, who were both of them called Alphonso de Fonseca.

The Marquis fearing least other places might reuolt, by the example of Alcarraz, follisolicited the Kings of Portugall to make haste, and having taken Donna Joane whom he termed Queene, out of Escalona, hee brought her by Trugillo vnto Plaisance, where as King Alfonso of Portugall arrived with an army of five thousand horse, of all sorts, and fifteen thousand foote. Hee was attended on by the Archbishoppe of Lisbon, the Bishoppe of Ebor and Coimbra, and many other Prelats, and Church-men, who were alwaie desirous to see where stirres and tumults are, albeit the true followers of Christ Iesus, haue peace in greatest recommendation: moreouer, there were with him, the Constable, and Marshall of Portugall, the Duke of Bragança, and his brother the Earle of Faro, the Earles of Villa-real, Penela, Marialua, and Pegnamaçor, with a great number of other Nobility, desirous to serue their King to winne honour, and to encrease their estates by the enlargement of so great a conquest as they hoped to make vpon the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon, with the reitories annexed there-vnto, the most part of whome, hauing vpon this vncertaine ground, sold or morgaged their lands and liuings.

The King of Portugall and Donna Joane were betrothed each to other in the City of Playfance, protesting to craue a dispensation from the Pope: there were present, Don Diego de Estuniga Duke of Arealua, and his brother the Earle of Miranda, and King Alfonso, and Donna Joane, were at that act and ceremony called and intitled, King and Queene of Castile and Leon. King Alfonso at his departure out of Portugal, least his Sonne the Prince Don John Regent and gouernor there, who was newly made father to a Sonne by his wife Donna Leonora, who was named Alfonso being borne at Lisbon in the year 1475. King Fernand and Queene Isabell did like-wise intitle themselves Kings of Portugall and of the Algarues, and either-side did beare the armes of both the Kingdomes indifferently. The gouernors of the frontiers were commanded to invade one another, which they readily executed with great cruelty, and to the great spoylle of the realme of Portugall, the people of Castile putting all to fire and sword that were neere to their borders, especially on the coast of Badajos, where the Castle of Nodar was taken from the Portugalls, and Martin de Sepulveda, one of the foure and twenty of Siuill, was made gouernor thereof, who from thence made sharpe warre vpon the Portugois, and yet in the end hee proued scarce faithfull to his Kings. Don Alfonso of Montroy, Treasurer of the order of Alcantara, who seemed him-selfe Maister thereof, did on the other-side winne Algretta.

In like manner Don Alfonso de Cardegna, great commander of Leon, who called him-selfe maister of Saint James, did with sundry troupes of horse forrage and spoile the frontiers of Portugall, and brought great booties from thence. Don Pero Aluarez de Soto mayor, shewed him-selfe on the King of Portugalls side, and tooke Tuy, calling him-selfe Vicount thereof, and tooke also Bayon of Minio: sundry other exploits of warre, with burning of houses and robberies, were committed on the frontiers by this enraged multitude.

Now the king of Portugall did perceaue that the warre was likely to last longer and be more difficult than hee had expected, and almost despairing of ending it with honour, vnles hee had the aide and supply of some greater power, hee sought by all means to incite the French King, Lewis the leauenth, to breake his alliance with the Kings of Castile, and to assaile them on that side of Guisulcoa, the which hee obtayned, as hereafter shalbe mentioned. In the meane time, hauing receiued the City of Toro, by the treason of John Villoa, hee assailed the Castle, and tooke it by force, and by the like treason made him-selfe Maister of Zamora, the which was deliuered vnto him, by John de Porras one of the chiefe citizens thereof, whose Sonne in law named Alfonso de Valencia being Marshall, was Captayne of the Castle, who had rather trust to the vncertaine promises of the King of Portugall, than respecting his owne honour, relie vpon the offers of King Fernand and Queene Isabell: from Zamora King Alfonso came backe to Toro, where his new betrothed wife and her mother Queene Joane lay, who was sister to this King, who dyed about that time, and was very honorably buried at Madrid in the monastery of S. Francis.

The

The army of Portugall
retrieued
Castile.

The king of Portugall and Donna Joane
betrothed each to other.

Genealogie of Portugal.
An. 1475.

Toro deliuered
to the King
of Portugall.

Zamora in the power of the King Portugall.

A The Kings, Fernand and Isabella, greatly apprehending the wrongs and losses which they daily sustained, they hastened on their subjects and souldiers to suppress the Portugois, or else to fight with them. Great numbers of Lords, Knights, and men at armes came to Vailliodolit, where the whole bodie of the armie, from all places of Spayne, was assembled, Andalusia excepted, in which Prouince the quarrell did still continue betwixt the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales, and betwixt the Earle of Cabreça, and Don Alphonso of Aguilar: and there was some likelihood, that the Marquis, and Don Alphonso would take the Marquis of Villena's part their brother-in-law. The men of note that were come to Vailliodolit, were these, Don Pedro Genesal of Mendoza, B. Cardinall of Spayne, and his breethren Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, Duke of Infantalga, Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, Don Lorenzo Saues, Earle of Crugna, Don Pedro Velasco, Constable of Castile, Don Alphonso Henriques high Admirall, Don Garcy Aluarez of Toledo, Duke of Alua, Don Radevigo Alphonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, Don Henry Henriques, Earle of Alua de Lista, Don Pedro Manrique, Earle of Treuigno, Don John Manrique, Earle of Castagneda, and his brother Don Gabriel Manrique, Earle of Osorno, Don Pedro Aluarez of Osorio, Marquis of Astorga, D. Diego Lopes Surmiento, Earle of Salinas, Don Pedro of Mendoza, Earle of Montagu, D. Alphonso d'Arcellan, Earle of Aguilar, Don Pedro of Acugna, Earle of Buendia, with other Lords ecclesiasticall and temporall.

C Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Duke of Albuquerque remaind neuter, knowing not how to resolute: he would willingly haue adhered to the King of Portugall, who was to be husband to her, who was reputed to be his daughter, but he durst not yet for all that at the last, he tooke the partie of king Fernand and Queene Isabella, by meanes whereof diuers did take their parts, who before that time were doubtfull what to do: Garcy Lopes of Padilla Treasurer of Alcantara, who was the last Master of that Order, and Don Diego of Castile, with diuers Knights and Commanders came to the Kings and Queenes seruice. The armie being mustred, there were of the Prouinces of Guisulcoa, Biscay, Alua, Galicia, and the Asturia's, thirty thousand foote, four thousand men at armes, and eight hundred Genets or light horse. King Fernand with this mighty armie marched along the riuer of Duero against the citie of Toro, where the King of Portugall, with his betrothed bride, did remaine: by the way the Biscans and Guisulcoans did take by force a place called las Hazeñas de los Hierros, and some of the Inhabitants thereof in regard of the rebellion, were hanged.

The King of Portugall who was inferiour in forces, would not come to field, but kept him-selfe within Toro, before which citie king Fernand stood with his armie embattled about five howers, and at the last he sent Don Gomez Manrique, to tell king Alphonso, that he should do well to giue ouer the title of king of Castile, and to returne into his owne kingdome, and that if his future wife did lay any claime to the Realme of Castile, that the same might be referred to the iudgement of the Sea of Rome, or if he had rather to trie the matter by armes, that then he should come forth to fight, or else to accept the single combat betwixt them two, to saue that effusion of innocent blood: King Alphonso made answer to euery poynt with great modesty, but to that of Duell or single fight, hee required, that Isabella, and Donna Joane, (who pretended each of them to be Queene of Castile) should be kept as hostages, to the end that hee which should prouoe conqueror, might enioy his prize, to wit, the kingdomes of Castile and Leon: thereupon were diuers messages and answers sent too and fro, but to no purpose: so as King Don Fernand hauing carried certaine dayes about Toro, his army beginning to want vituals, and other necessaries, hee was aduised to retire from thence, notwithstanding that hee was assured, that the Portugals were in the selfe same estate. Howfoeuer, the armie was brought backe, to the great discontent of the souldiers, who were extremely forrowfull, that so great a force had bene so vnprofitably and idly employed: and they did much murmure against the great Lords, whome the king had much adoe to qualifie and appease.

Being returned to Medina del Campo, Queene Isabella came thither from Tordesillas: then the king had great need of money, by reason that his treasures were drawne dry,

Toro besieged by King Fernand.

in a short time to recouer what was taken from him, but that his affaires would prosper A the better.

The King of Portugall hauing had therevpon the aduise of the Lords, and Captaines, of his army, was aduised not to leaue the hilly country on that side of Burgos: for who-soeuer was possessed thereof, might boldly terme himselfe Maister of Castill and Leon: and withall, if he should seeme to march towards Toledo, the enemy would say, that he did run away from them: wherefore he entertaigned the Marquis, with promise to aide him in all he could, and moreouer to recompence him with great gifts, and honours, provided that hee would take some good order for his affaires, and in some fort prouide for the present danger.

From that time, the Marquis, who felt his losses, and saw no hope of rising againe, began to thinke vpon fit meanes to returne to the King and Queene B serue: At the same time, the City of Zamora did seeke some fit occasion to rebell against the King of Portugal, whereof hee stood in some doubt, and vsed such diligence, for the discouery of their practizes, as hee had notice of a plot, which they had layd, for the which he caused foure of the chiefe Citizens to be put to death. Yet notwithstanding, Francis de valdez, Captaine of the bridge of Zamora, being solicited by Queene Isabell, did promise to deliuer that forte into her hand, and withall to giue her entry into the City, but that it behoued King Ferdinand to bee present in person at soe great an enterprise.

The King was not slacke at such an occasion, but leauing his brother Don Alphonso of Arragon, and the Constable at the siege of the Castle of Burgos, hee came thither in a disguised habit, being accompanied with three horse-men, by the way of Valladolid, causing it to be giuen out, that he was sicke, and kept his chamber. Although this enterprise seemed to be kept close, yet the King of Portugall had notice thereof, and did meane to put a new supply, of such as he durst trust, into the bridge, vnder colour of sending certaine soldiers forth in the night a boot haling: but the Captaine would not suffer them to passe, bidding them come in the day time, saying that the night is euer dangerous to strong places, and passages of importance, as this was. The day following the King attempted the like, and finding the like resistance, would by force haue taken D the passage, but those of the garde of the bridge did valiantly defend it, and did kill and hurt diuers Portugois: wherefore, King Alphonso, by the Arch Bishoppe of Toledo's counsell, withdrew his forces from the sight, and hee with Donna Ioane, his betrothed wife, left the City about midnight, suspecting some treason, in regard that the bridge alone made such resistance, he being there in person.

The inhabitants at the same instant brought in Don Aluaro de Mendoza by another gate, who tooke and spoyled the Portugois, which were left, excepting a few, who saved them-selues in the Cathedral Church, who on the morrow after by breake of day yeelded them selues, King Ferdinand, the Admirall, the Duke of Alua, and other Lords, being there arrived. These soldiers were sent away without paying any ranfome, E and carried their baggage away with them to Toro, where their King remayned, and to encourage his people, sayd, that the victory of a warre did not consist in the gayne, or losse of a few townes, or Cities, but in the issue of a battaill, the which alone would decide the quarrell, about the succession of Castile and Leon: for the which purpose hee did write to Prince Iohn his Sonne, to make as great a leuy of soldiers in his Kingdome as possibly he could, and with all speed to bring them to his aide. King Ferdinand being maister of Zamora, beganne to better the Castle, and caused the traitors to bee arraigned, and condemned, confiscating the goods of Iohn de Porras, and others.

Whilest these matters were handled at Zamora, Don Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villahermosa, and the other Captaynes who besieged the Castle of Burgos, did continually batter it, and gaue it many dangerous and rude assaults, but they that were within it wanted no courage to defend them-selues. And as the feminells and those of the garde, were reuiling one another, an Alcayde, or Sheriffe of Burgos, did

The Marquis of Villana being sent to King Ferdinand & Queene Isabella for aid.

The King of Portugal for sake of the City of Zamora.

A called Alphonso de las Cuenas, beganne to talke to those of the Castle, and vsed such perswasive reasons and arguments, as they were resolute to hearken to some composition, especially when they did see a great quarter of their wall beaten downe, by meanes whereof they lay open to their enemies assaults: therefore being solicited, they did capitulate about the yeelding of the castle, vpon condition, that all faults past should be forgiven, the which was granted by the Queene, who for that regard came from Valladolid to Burgos, and did receiue the Castle her owne selfe, whereof shee made Diego de Ribera Gouernour, who had bene tutor and bringer vpp of her brother the Prince Don Alphonso: and hauing appoynted that which was requisite for the peace and quiet of the Cittie, shee returned to Valladolid, and from thence went to Tordeillas, to the end to be neerer to the enemy, the better to haue an eye to his enterprises and proceedings.

Thither Don Pedro of Estuniga, eldest sonne to the Duke of Auevalo, did come to the Queene, whose part hee had still taken, and had shewed himselfe faithfull vnto her, in regard whereof he was vnkindly vsed by his father, and by Donna Leonora Pimentel his mother-in-law. He besought the Queene to receiue the Duke his father into grace and fauour, promising to put all that hee did possesse into her hands, making an apologie, and excusing the faults which hee had committed by reason of his decrepit age, being wholly possessed and ruled by his second wife. It did greatly displease the Queene to pardon him, who had shewed himselfe so mortall and hatefull an enemy to the King her husband, neuertheless, for the sonnes sake shee did pardon the father, and the whole family. The title of the Dutchie was transposed from Auevalo to the Cittie of Plaisance, and euer afterward the Lords of the house of Estuniga became affectionate seruants to the King and Queene.

The warres continuing after this sort in Castile, the French King inclining to the demands and perswasions of the King of Portugal, and bearing no great good will to the house of Arragon euer since the warre of Perpignan, sent a great armie into the Province of Guispucoa, vnder the conduct and command of Aman Lord of Abrit or Albrer, whose posteritie hath reigned in Nauarre, as shall hereafter be declared. Diuers D Gentlemen and braue souldiers of the countrie of Guispucoa, vpon the report of the coming of this armie, did shutte them-selues vp in Fontaraby, others went to Irun, by which place the French-men were of necessitie to passe, who did burne Irun, and slue certaine men: there they went vp and downe for the space of sixe weekes spoyling the countrie, not once attempting or offering to besiege Fontarabic, which was their chiefe designe.

In the meane time Iohn Lopes de La Cano, and Sancho del campo, entered the towne, being sent from the Court with about fiftie horse, at whose comming, the souldiers which were within the towne, made a fallie, and came forth vnto the very limites of Irun, where they found about a thousand French-foote of the foreward of their armie with E their Captaine Purquet of Bayonne, who being assailed and set vpon on the sodaine, through want of good and prouident watch, and hauing no faithfull discouersers, were easily ouerthrowne, and put to a disordered flight: some of them, in this confusion, thinking to saue them-selues in a Tower of a mannor-house belonging to those of Vrdanitia, they were there besieged, and burnt with Purquet their Captaine, the Master of the same house being the first man that set fire thereunto. The poore distressed souldiers, to auoyde and escape the implacable torments of the mercilesse fire, leaped out of the tower windows in most desperate manner, and were with scoffes and mockes receiued vpon the enemies pikes. The Spanish Authours say, that three hundred were there slayne and pittifully massacred, besides diuers others that were captiuated and taken pri- F soners.

Soone after Don Diego Lopes de Sarmiento, Earle of Salinas, Captaine generall for the King and Queene, came into the Province with certaine troupes of horse, bringing letters to the worthie persons and chiefe Magistrates of Queene Isabella's country, who, with perswasive admonitions exhorted the Guispucoans, to stand and continue D d d d 2 faith-

The Castle of Burgos yielded.

6 Alliance betwixt France and Castile.

Purquet a French captaine defeated.

to the end he might do it safely, he sent Don Aluaro of Portugall, sonne to the Duke of Bragança, and the Licentiate Antonius Nunes of Cidre Rodrigo to the King of Castile, to treat of a peace vpon certain conditions, which being refused them, they had in charge to demand a truce for a few dayes, thereby to bring matters to a final agreement.

King Alphonso of Portugall disdigneth Frederic Zamora

This was but a pollicie to auoyd battraile, and to be able to bring his armie in safetie backe to Toro: There were suadrie opinions thereupon, and at the last, they were answered, that the truce which should be graunted, should bee but short, and if there were nothing concluded betwixt the two Kings, hee of Portugall might bee well assured not to bee suffered to depart thence with so great ease, as hee imagined. King Alphonso hauing vnderstood this answer, beganne to dislodge secretly the same night: the next day, the scouts seeing the place empty, aduertized the King, that the enemy was dislodged, who fourth-with commaunded the Captaines to leade the armie fourth into the field, and to follow them: the presse was to great at the passage of the bridge, and at the going out the riuer of Duero, by boate and other waies, as the soldiers could conueniently, as a good part of the day was spent before the armie could passe the riuer, and much time was afterward lost in ranging the battraile into wings and squadrons, which was ordered after this manner:

Battel betwixt the Spaniards and Portugall.

They made a squadron of the kings Guard, and of the troupes of horse of Lemos and Salamanca, of the Townes of Olmedo, Valodolit, Medina del Campo, with others, which was commaunded by the great Master Don Henry Henriquez. On the right hand of this squadron were sixe battaillions, the first was conducted by Don Aluaro of Mendoza, who a little before that time was created Earle of Castro Xeris, and Don Gutierre of Cardenas, and Rodrigo of Villos: the second, by the two Alphonso's of Fonseca, the one Bishoppe of Auila, and the other Lord of Coca and Alaxos: the third, by Pedro de Guzman, the fourth, by Bernard Franc, the fifth, by Don Pedro de Velasco, and the sixt by Vasco de Binar, brother to the Bishoppe of Salamanca. On the left hand, the Cardinele of Spaine ledde the first batralion, the second, the Duke of Alua, the third, the Earle of Alua de Liza, the fourth, Don Garcia Osorio, who brought thither the troups of the Marquis of Astorga his Nephew: betwixt these two, the foote-men were placed, and in this manner the army marched on vnto the hilles which are betwixt Zamora and Toro, and there it stayed. It was thought that the Portugals making such hast, would bee at Toro before the Spanish armie should passe these hilles: and a Councell being called to determine what was best to be done, the most part were of opinion to turne backe againe, and to content themselves to haue gained the honour, that the enemies had fled from them: but the Cardinall of Spayne being a wise man, and of an exceeding great spirit, thinking that they did iudge amisse of the King of Portugals desseignes, intreated the king to suffer him to goe to the toppes of those hilles with certaine troupes of horse, for discouerie, who hauing obtayned leaue, and being gotten vp to a very high place, hee espied the armie of Portugall in order of battraile, without any trouble or confusion at all. Returning then to the king, he told him, that the enemies meant nothing lesse then to flie, and that hee had seene them standing in good and martial order, wayting if any would follow to fight with them: Whereupon, euery man being placed and ranked in his order and squadron, the armie, with great courage and resolution, marched on.

The king of Portugall descrying the Spaniards marching towards them, caused his people fourth-with to make a stand, and with great magnanimitie to turne their faces towards them, resolving rather to dye fighting, then to retire with shame. Hee was at the same time stronger in horse-men than king Ferdinand: wherefore after hee had diuided his squadrons, betwixt himselfe, his sonne the Prince, the Bishoppe of Ebor, the Earles of Phaeo, Villa-reall, and other Captaines, and encouraged the Knights, and souldiers with a large and well-composed speech, putting them in mind of the victorie which King Iohn the first wonne from the Spaniards at Aljubarotta, he caused them to march forward to the fight.

The chiefe strength and flower of the Portugall Caullerie lay in the Squadron of Prince

A Prince Iohn, against whom King Fernand caused the sixth battraillon on his right hand to aduance themselves altogether, albeit that D. Alphonso de Fonseca first of all, and Don Aluaro de Mendoza Earle of Castro after him, had requested the honour to bee the first that might charge them.

The Portugals which were in that squadron ioyned with those whom the Bishop of E-bora conducted, made so braue a resistance, as the Spaniards turned their backs: so as at this first encounter, the victory seemed to be on the King of Portugals side, the Spaniards being fore hurt by the Artillery, and by the Crosse-bowes of the Portugall footemen. Theie being retired, the other squadrons gaue in vpon the residew of the Portugall army with better successe. Notwithstanding that the valor of either side made the fight doubtfull for three houres space. In the end, the Portugalls not being able to hold out, beganne to giue backe, and were disordred and put to flight, taking the high-way towards Toro as fast as they could gallop, but being pursued, there was a great slaughter of them, and there died more of them drowned in the riuer, who thought to haue escaped by swimming, then were slaine by the enemies hands. King Alphonso being not succoured by his sonne, and perceiuing that resistance, without order, was to no purpose, did retire himselfe to Castro Nugno, where hee was received by the Gouvernor of the same place whose name was Abendagno de Villa-reall in Alaua, hauing once lost his royall standard (which neuertheless was recovered againe) thorough the carelesnesse of Don Pedro de Velasco, and Pedro Vaca, who for want of a good guard suffred the Portugals to take it from them: he which did beate it was taken, and being stripped out of his armor, the King and Queene caused it to be hanged vp in the Cathedrall Church of Toledo, in the Chappell of the last Kings. On King Fernands side likewise died a great number of souldiers, though vncertaine; and the Earle of Alua de Liza pursuing his enemies ouer eagerly, and being not well followed and seconded by his people, was taken at the bridge of Toro.

The Prince of Portugall made his retreat towards night vpon a litte hill, and as well as hee could did gather together his disbanded troups, and then retired towards Toro: and if the Spanish captaines had gathered and kept all their forces together they might as easily haue defeated all as some: but diuerse of them were busied in stripping the dead bodies, and others in pursuing the runne-awaies, who being come to the gates of Toro, the Earle of Guimaranes, who was left there for the guard of the City, fearing that the Spaniards who pursued them, would haue entred pel mel with them, would not open the gates for no intreaty of the Archbishop of Toledo; who was the only Spanish Lord that was in that battraile, nor yet for the cries & lamentations which the poore hurt souldiers did make, vntill such time as the Prince Don Iohn arriued with his troups, and then they were all let into the City: but they were meruelously troubled, when they perceived that the King was missing, but the Earle of Guimaranes beganne to make a most pittifull lamentation, shedding abundance of teares, and tare the haire from his head and beard; and beleeuing for a certaine that hee was either slaine or taken, hee did greatly reproach and raile vpon the Portugals, saying, that they were traitors to their King, and that they had basely and treacherously forsaken him.

But the Kings coming soone after, and newes from him by letters to the Prince his sonne in the meane time, did greatly comfort this Earle and all the rest of the army. It is reported that after the losse of the battraile, the King being at Castro Nugno, fell a sleepe as hee fate at meate, where at the Gouvernor did greatly wonder, no, fell a sleepe as hee fate at meate, where at the Gouvernor did greatly wonder, who in regarde thereof reputed him a carelesse man, and said, that honourable Knights and souldiers did greatly wronge themselves in aduenturing their liues for such a King, and yet this gouernour did still shew himselfe faithfull and constant in his seruice.

Queene Isabell in the meane time did remaine at Tordillas, who being aduertised by the King her husband of his victory, shee caused generall processions to bee made, giuing thanks to God, after the accustomed manner, and shee he selfe went bare foote to the Abby of Saint Paule, without the towne, and as well there as in other Cities be- longing longing to the Queene, great signes of ioy were made. The seege of the Castle of Zamora did still continue after that without any impediment, till Alphonso de Valence the Capitaine thereof, who was sonne in law to Iohn de Porras, obtained his pardon by the intercession of the Cardinall of Spaine his kinsman, and did yeeld it vp. There was found in the Castle great store of siluer, treasure, iewels, and other precious mouables, belonging to the King of Portugall, which by King Ferdinands commandement were at restored vnto him, who made Sancho d' Castile Capitaine of the Castle, & after that he had ordayned, and prouided all things requisite for the safety of Zamora, hee came to Medina del Campo, where the Queene met him; This happy successe did daunt the courrages of all the Kings, and Queenes enemies, in so much as the greatest part of them, employed all their meanes, credit, and friends, to obtayne their grace and fauour.

The King of Portugall doth little apprehend the losse of his battraile.

The Constable obtayned pardon for the Maister of Calatraua, and for the Earle of Vregna his brother, vnto whom the Constable gaue one of his daughters in marriage. The Arch-Bishoppe of Toledo, being daily dispossest of the townes, and places belonging to his Arch-Bishopricke, tooke leaue of the King of Portugall, and withdrew him selfe to Alcala de Henares, being accompanied with a gaud and conuoy of horsemen, which did greatly hinder the Earle of Treuignes enterprise, who was sent by the King for to take him.

There remayned in Atienza a Capitaine of the King of Portugalls side, which did great hurt to the country round about, who with his wife, family, and all his goods, was taken in a night by a Knight named Garey Brauo, who had entry given him by one of the Captaines seruants. This prey, amounting to better then tenne thousand ducats, was giuen by the King, and Queene, to this Knight, who did in like manner take Camarena, for their seruice, from which place Iohn de Tour, did commit infinite spoyle. The King of Portugall finding that all matters fell out contrary to his desire, resolved to returne into Portugall, with an intent to craue aide of the French King: Hee carried Donna Isabel his betroathed wife with him, and left good Garrisons in those townes of Spaine which hee did possesse, especially in Toro, where Don Fernando Castino Earle of Marialua was left for Gouverneur, in Iohn de Villosa his steed, who dyed not long before by a suddayne accident. Rodrigo of Castagneda, brother to the Earle of Cisfuentes, did hold Madrid for the Marquis of Villena, being assisted by Iohn Sapata a Cittizen of the towne, and a violent and bitter enemy to all those which tooke the King, and Queenes part, who me by all meanes he chased from thence. He was cheefe of that faction. In the number of those that were banished, was Pero Nugnes of Toledo cheefe, like wife of those on the King, and Queenes side, who had rettyred himselfe to the Duke of Infantado: this man with others, who were banished from Madrid, hauing conferred with the Queenes people, did thinke to surpris the towne by intelligence, with some within the same. Iohn Sapata, at the first newes thereof, left the City, his owne conscience accusing him, and threatening him with death, for his many misdemeanors: neuertheless the commander Pedro of Ayala, a knight of the order of Saint James, being in the City, did defend it for a tyme, and then did deliuer it to the Duke. The Castle held two months for the Marquis, in which space it was beseged by the Duke, sent thither with certaine companies by the Queene. This same yeare, King Ferdinand and Queene Isabel, (their affaires prospering) did celebrate and keepe the assembly of the estates at Madrigall, where Donna Isabel, there onely daughter, at that time, was sworne vnto, and acknowledged, after the ancient accustomed manner of Spaine; Princesse of the Alturijs, and eldest lawfull heire to the Kingdome of Castile, and Leon, and the dependances thereof, in case no male child were borne vnto them. And in ittard of the great zeale and affection they did beare to iustice, which had greates neede of their aide and assistance, the whole state of Spaine being so disordered, and full of confusion, as they which were strongest, would without any feare of punishment exercise infinite kinds of cruelties vpon the weaker sort, it was decreed, for the preventing thereof, to renew and authorise the brother-hoods, and companies of the communalties. To the prouoosts and iudiciall seates whereof, authority should be giuen to giue iudgement in iue cases, that is to say, for murder, enforced theft, or those which should be hurt in the country or places

The Castle of Zamora, yielded to the King Ferdinand's liberality.

Donna Isabel, sworne heire to the Kingdome of Castile.

In what case the prouoosts of castile may give iudgement.

farre

A farre from any dwelling: Secondly, they might iudge the selfe same crimes committed in the townes, and villages, in case the offender should flie away: Thirdly, the breaking open of doores and walles, scaling and burning of houses: Fourthly, the rape and violence offered to women or maides; of what age or condition soeuer: And fifthly for rebelling against the Ministers of iustice executing their charge: which brother-hoods should haue their prouoosts and iudges in the townes, and their Ministers in all places of their iurisdiction, and whereas any controuersie should arise betwixt the ordinary Iudges and those prouoosts vpon the enquiry and knowledge of offences, such differences should be iudged by the Kings Councell.

B Don Lope de Ribas Bishop of Carthagea was chosen chiefe president of all those brotherhoods, and it was decreed that an imposition should bee laide vpon the people, for the entertainment of the souldiars and officers of these Iudges, every twentieth bouise to finde one horseman: so as by that meanes a power of two thousand horse was leauid, to assist the Iudges, and to purge and cleanse the country from theues and robbers. Of whom, Don Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villahermosa, the Kings brother, was capitaine generall. These things being thus ordered, did neuertheless displeas sundry of the great Lords of Spaine; but the Constable was well pleased therewith, who was the first that commanded his owne tennants, to contribute towards the payment of these companies, whose example diuers other great Lords did follow afterward.

C Now the King of Portugall had furnished Toro, Cantalapedra, and Castro Nugno with good and strong garrisons, which did greatly molest all the country there abouts, especially that of Cantalapedra where Alphonso Peres de Buiro was gouernour, who made continuall courtes, vpon the territory of Medina, Salamanca, and other places: which to remedy, King Fernand resolved to beseege it, and sent thither the Duke of Villahermosa his brother, and Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, with Artillery to batter it.

The seege being planted, and the Canon playing on either side, the beseged, who found themselves shut in, demanded aide of King Alphonso, who did forrage and ouer-runne the territory of Salamanca, thinking by that meanes both to diuert the army from before Cantalapedra, and to succour the beseged, but it fell not out according to his desigine; for the Earle of Treuigno marched against the forragers, and did beate them backe, and yet the beseged in Cantalapedra were still as much distressed as before. It was treated concerning the exchange of prisoners: wherefore the Earle of Benauent was freed from his oth, which hee made, not to beare armes for King Fernand in that warre, and so the Earle of Pegnamacor was deliuered forth of prison, the seege raised from before Cantalapedra and the Licentiate Antonio Nugnes of Ciudad Rodrigo was restored to his goods, and the garrisons of that place were not to beare armes for a yeere afterward. The King and Queene gaue to the Earle of Benauent, foure millions of Marauedis, towards the charges hee had beene at, and confirmed his former gift of the city of Corunna, or the Groine, but the Inhabitants taking armes, did resist him, intending to maintaine themselves vnder the demaines of the crowne, without acknowledging any subalterne Lord, and draue those forth of the castle which held it for the Earle. The same time, King Fernand was sent for into Arragon by King Iohn his father, whither he did make a short iourney, & because his wars in Castile, but especially in Guipulco, concerned him very nerely, he made a quick returne to victoria: for the Frenchmen remained still in that Province burning the country, to driue whom away, the King and Queene raised an army of fifty thousand men, the most part of them being footmen, out of the Prouinces of Guipulco, Alaua, Biscay, Asturia, and from other places on the confines of Burgos. Vpon the report of this great preparation the French men retired to Bayonne, with intent and threatening to returne againe the spring following.

At the same time, the faction of Beaumont and Grammont in the Kingdome of Nauarre, were at as deadly warre as euer, and the quarrell betwixt Don Lewis of Beaumont Earle of Lerin, and Pedro of Peralta the Constable, was pursued with all rigour and extremity: the Earle of Lerin beganne to treat with King Fernand to make him King of Nauarre, and to deliuer into his hands the city of Pampelona

Nauarre, Lewis of Beaumont causes the Reuaine of Nauarre.

with

with other fortresses of the same country: sending certaine Knights of Nauarre vnto A him to victoria, to offer him his seruice with all that hee did possesse: the King did curiously entertaine those Knights, & thanked both the Earle and them for their offers, and good will: but concerning the rest, hee said that hee would not lay claime to anothers right, for the Realme of Nauarre did in right belong to his sister the Princessse Leonora, and after her decesse, to her Sonnes Sonne, Francis Phabus Earle of Foix and Lord of Bgarne, and withall because King John his father did enioy the royall authority thereof, during his life: therefore, to enterprise any thing against the right of those persons, vnto whom hee did owe so much honour and respect, it would not onely be a sinne, but impiety and sacriledge, so as by no means hee would harken therevnto: saying moreover that hee was much grieued, to see the inueterate hatred betwixt the Earle and the Constable, and that hee would willingly take the paines to make them friends, thinking it an office worthy of him, to procure the peace and quiet of that Kingdome, which was ruined by the confusions of the ciuill warres, wherefore hee did inuite both of them to come to victoria, and to referre their controuersies to his arbitrement: with these holy speeches hee gaue content, and admiration to the Knights of Nauarre, at whose returne the Earle of Lerin, and the Constable came to Victoria, where if King Fernand could not wholly reconcile them, yet hee procured a truce betwixt them, putting each of them in mind with great meekenesse mixed with grauity of their errors with the amendement thereof, to the good of the Kingdome, their own particular profit and for the seruice of King John their maister.

The King of Arragon afterwards, perceiving him selfe at the graues brinke, and desiring to leaue quietnesse in that miserable kingdome, where the factions had bred such confusions, as neither the feare of God, nor the respect of iustice, nor the loue of honesty was able to containe men from executing all kinds of mischeefes, murders, sacrileges, robberies, burnings, and horrible desolations ouer the whole country, which were followed with the terrible, and fearefull iudgements of God, as plagues, famines, and other scourges of his wrath, all which were not onely encreased, but procured by the Kings second marriage: King John I. fay being moued with these things, sent the Earle of Lerin such assurances, as hee caused him to come to Saragossa, being well accompanied, where the King did gently receaue him, graunted him peace, and gaue a generall pardon to all offences past, proceeding from both factions, and for a greater confirmation of the whole, he gaue the Earle a bastard daughter of his in marriage, called Donna Leonora of Arragon; by these means the Princessse Leonora, widow to the Earle of Foix, and future Queene of Nauarre, recovered without force her townes and fortresses, and was euery where obeyed, except in the City of Caseda, which was battered, at the taking whereof dyed that Valiant Captaine Sancho of Eruiti, furnished the obstinate in the seruice of the Princessse Leonora; about which time Alphonso Carrillo Bishop of Pampelona called a Synode at Estella, wherein they treated of ceremonies and other matters. After all these things, King John being at rest and quiet, in the City of Barcelona, notwithstanding hee was very aged, and full of sicknesse, fell in loue with a yong Gentlewoman called Francisca Rosa, with whole beauty and comlineffe hee did comfort by imbraces, and frutelesse kisses, the waywardnesse of his old age, leauing her concerning other matters free, and vntouched to him who after-ward married her.

King Fernand hauing (as hath beene already saide) made the pacification of Nauarre at Victoria, and by the renoune of his power, deliuered the country of Guipuscoa from the French army, would in like manner order the affaires, of Alua, Bilcaire, and other places neere adioyning, where were many factions, and other disorders: hee therefore entred Bicay, being attended on by Don Alphonso Carrillo Bishoppe of Pampelona, Pedro Lopes de Padilla, great gouernor of the Frontiers of Castile, Don Henry Henriques, the Kings Vncle, brother to the Admirall, Don Pedro de Estuniga eldest Sonne to the Earle of Miranda, Doctor John Dias de Alcocer one of the Kings Councell, Roderigo Villos his great Tresorer and Councellour, Don Diego de Acugna

King Ferdinando meditates a peace betwixt the factions of Beaumont and Gracmont.

King John I. could marriage vnto his daughter the realm of Nauarre.

The Earle of Lerin marries a bastard daughter of Arragon and becomes obedient to King John.

John King of Arragon falls in loue in his extreme old age.

A Acugna sonne to the Bishop of Burgos, Don Fernand de Ayala sonne to the Marshall Don Garcia de Ayala, and by other Knights and Ecclesiastical persons.

The Biscains had an ancient custome, which was, not to suffer any Bishop to come within their country, by reason perhaps of the attempts and wrongs which they had in time before sustained by the prelates and Churchmen, the which was ynknowne to King Fernand, who riding on with the Bishop, hee was aduertized of their custome, and was constrained to send him backe; the peasants and poore country people thinking the ground to bee infected whereupon this Prelat and his Mule did tread were busied many daies after in scraping together the dust of the high-waies, which they laide vp in heapes, and threw it afterwards with curses and imprecations into the sea, the which certainly was not done without some mistery, those people not beeing void of religion, but superstitiously deuout; as the rest of the Spaniards are. The King visited Bilboa, and afterward hee came to Guernica, where hee was received and reuerenced with all ceremonious duty. Hee called the Nobility of the country thither, and confirmed all their priuiledges by his letters patents, written by Gaspard Arin his secretary, dated the thirtieth day of Iuly, the yeere 1476. in the presence of diuers Noble personages of name.

The King being busied about these matters, a famous French Pirate named Colara, came with foure vessels to a place called the figge-tree of Fontarabie, to whom after that, five more ioyned: these nine shippes did ride there at an ankor for the space of eleuen daies, in the view of the towne of Fontarabie, and sundry times they landed their souldiers, who ranne vp and downe the country burning and spoyling all they met with; against whom the Garrison went forth, and slew more then a hundred of them; whereupon they set faile towards Galicia, where they burned the suburbs of the City of Ribadeo, then sayling along the coast of Portugall, they met with certaine Carrakes of Genoa, with whom they grappled, and the fight betwixt them was furious, as seuen vessels were there burned, to weete two Genoueses and five of the Pirates, who with the other foure, which remained were repaired at Lisbon. The report of this Pirate, caused thirty ships of warre to be set forth, as well from Saint Sebastian as from other places on the coast of Biscay, who met altogether at Laredo, and this sea-army parted from Conferua, and sailed towards Galicia, where they tooke, partly by force, and partly by composition, certaine places vpon the sea coast next to Portugall, which were reuolted from the Kings of Castile. Herevpon truce was granted and agreed vpon betwixt the French men and Guipuscoans, by land onely, for the space of three monthes, leauing the sea free for euery man to doe the best hee could: the army aboue mentioned hauing done that exploit on the marches of Galicia, returned laden with spoiles.

Amongst other things, those of Saint Sebastian brought away two yron peeces of ordonance, whereof one did carry a stone-bullet of a hundred and threescore pound weight, taken from Bayon de Minio. The charges of this warre of Guipuscoa, was heauy to the whole Prouince with great discommodity and losse of their blood: which warre, after the retreat of the French, did continue still at sea, where the French lost more then they did winne. King Fernand hauing discharged, honored, and praised the souldiers, and punished certaine euill liuers in that country, and ouerthrowne certaine strong houses, he returned to Victoria.

The Cardinal of Spaine, in the meane time, who was a very wise and polittike man, did trie by all means to draw away the French King from the alliance with Portugall, and to make him friend to his King: hee had in former time written sundry letters vnto him to that purpose, and now hee continued it, sending Alphonso Ianes, treasurer of the Church of Siguenca vnto him, to put him in minde of the inuolable Friendship which had beene in times past betwixt the houses of France and Castile, whose forces had beene so well united together to the preiudice of the English, ancient enemies and competitors of the crowne of France: whereas the Portugalls on the contrary had alwaies fauoured, and followed them to the great hinderance and contempt of the French Nation, and then hee blesought him to consider what occasion hee had to bandy

10
Bishop called nuncio of the Lanney of Biscay.

Strange opinion of the Biscains concerning Bishops.

11

Combat at Laredo betwixt
the French
and Genoueses.

The Cardinal of Spaine, seeks to renew the peace betwixt
France and
Spaine.

bandy against the King of Castile for Portugall, requesting him henceforward to giue A place to that which reason, humanity and profit, did require, which was to cause the warre to cease, and re-establish the holy friendship and league betwixt France and Castile. This Treasorer made diuerse voyages into France for this purpose, and handled the matter so well, as hee obtained truce for a yeere, and there was a place appointed betwixt Bayon and Fontarby for the two Kings Commissioners for to meet at.

About this time the Earle of Paredes, who called himselfe Maister of Saint Iames, did beseege Vcles, where hee found sharpe resistance, and doing his vtermost to take it, the capitaine, who held it for the Marquis of Villena, certified his Maister what need hee had of helpe: the Marquis being then at Alcala de Henares with the Archbishop of Toledo, brought him and as much power as they could raise betwixt them to Vcles, which were about three thousand horse. Yet notwithstanding the Earle made no shew that hee ment to dislodge, but against the opinion of all men hee maintained the siege, and hee had moreouer the courage to goe and affront the troups of the Marquis and Archbishop, keeping them a whole day in alarumm, aking sundrie charges with aduantage: at the last, with the losse of some of his owne people hee enforced them to retorne, not being able to drive him from the Castle, where soone after arriued men at armes to his succor, who were sent by the Duke of Infantazgo, and conducted by Don Hurtado de Mendoza his brother, with the which forces, joyned to some of his owne, hee followed the Marquis and the Archbishop with great hope to haue defeated them if they would haue accepted the fight, but they wanted courage, albeit they were within a bow shot of them; but the Archbishop and the Marquis retired themselves about mid-night to a castle called Arauia, despairing euer to succor Vcles: which the beseege perceiuing, yielded themselves with safety of liues and goods.

As these men did thus trouble themselves in Spaine, the King of Portugall being vexed, that his affaires succeeded so vnluckily, where as he was wont to triumph and bee victorious in Affrica, would once againe sollicite King Lewis, and determined to goe in person into France: Hee therefore imbarkeed himselfe, and hauing passed the Streights, hee came to Marseilles, from whence hee went to the King who lay at Tours of whom hee was kindly entertained: but concerning the affaires for which hee came, hee gaue him no hope at all, but delaied him from day to day, excusing himselfe by the great warres which hee had against the English and the Duke of Burgundy, entreteyning him without any conclusive answer: at the last hee told him, that it behooued him to haue a dispensation from Pope Sixtus the fourth then reigning, for to marry with his Neece Donna Ioane his sisters daughter, before hee could pretend any lawfull right to the Kingdome of Castile and Leon; wherevpon either King did write to Rome to that effect, where the Ambassador of King Ferdinand and Queene Isabella, did mainly oppose himselfe against it, alleging the great troubles and miseries which such a dispensation might cause in Spaine: Yet notwithstanding at the entreaty of King Lewis, the dispensation was graunted, the which did containe that it was lawfull for Donna Ioane to marry any one within the fourth degree. It is reported that King Don Alphons being in talke with King Lewis, and labouring to induce him to pursue this warre, vied many bafe entreaties, and kneeled to him with other like iestures: ill becoming a King, who ought still to shew himselfe couragious, and constantly to resist all aduersities. And perceiuing that the controuersies betwixt the King and the Duke of Burgundy were a great hinderance to his businesse, hee tooke vpon him to reconcile and make them friends, to the end hee might the better procure helpe from both of them: for Duke Charles of Burgundy was his cousin germaine, borne of a sister to King Edward his father: but hauing made a iourney to him, and being returned to Paris, the Dukes overthrow and death did fodainly follow, which happened before Nancy, in the yeere 1477, which did the more alienate the French King from giuing care to the affaires of Spaine, being more attentive to recouer both the Burgondies, with the lands and townes of Picardy, Flanders and Artois, which

V Villena of Villena, who against the Marquis of Villena.

12 Portugal, King Alphons of Portugall death in waies solicite the French King to undertake with him wars against Spaine.

The King of Portugall's abject courage.

An. 1477.

A which were dependances of his crowne, Duke Charles hauing left no other heire of his great Dominions but his onely daughter Mary who was afterward married to Maximilian of Austria, she was grand-mother to the Emperour Charles, heire to all Spaine after the death of King Ferdinand and Queene Isabella, in the right of his mother Donna Ioane their daughter, as shalbe declared in his place. Vpon these pretences concerning Bourgondy, King Lewis found sufficient occasion to delay him: promising that thole businesse being ended hee would doe whatsoever the King of Portugall would request him, who being sorrowfull and discontented, departed out of France, and was brought into such despaire, as hee determined to goe to Ierusalem, and there to become a B Monke, without euer seeing Portugall any more: from which determination his friends and seruants dissuaded him, putting him in minde of the great wrong hee should doe to his honour and reputation thereby. In his absence, Prince John, by his fathers consent, tooke vpon him the title of King, but vnderstanding that King Alphons was arrived at Calcaes, hee like an obedient sonne gaue ouer the title and authority vnto him.

Queene Isabella in this meane space thought to haue surprised Toro by the meanes of the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent, who after a long and dangerous fight, were repulld by the Earle of Marialua who was Gouvernor. It happened in like manner, that the great Maister Andrew de Cabrera hauing taken the Lieutenancy, or Captainship of the castle of Segobia from Alphons Maldonado to bestow it vpon Don Pedro de Boudilla his father in law, Maldonado being enraged thereat, went about to surprize the same place, there to recouer his former authority, and had intelligence with certaine dead paies of the castle, and feyning on a day to haue need of some certaine stones that were within the same, vnder colour of fetching them out, hee put foure soldiars into the fortresse being instructed what to doe, who at the first, slue the porter, and being followed by their Capitaine, they tooke Don Pedro de Boudilla, and constrained the rest which were within it to saue themselves in a tower. In the same castle the Princeesse Isabella, the King and Queene's onely daughter, was kept: wherevpon there arose a great tumult in the City of Segobia, which being vnder stood by Don John de Arias, the Bishop thereof, who as then lay forth of the City, by reason of the disension betwixt him and Andrew de Cabrera, hee came thither and easily made himselfe Maister of the gates which were held by those of Cabrera's faction, being fauoured by diuers principall citizens. Queene Isabella being aduertized of this inconueniencie came thither with the Cardinall of Spaine, and hauing made Gonzalo Chacon Capitaine, hee enquired by way of Iustice of the Captaines behaviour, who hauing yielded good account of himselfe, his iustifications were allowed, and hee restored to his government.

The Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, being not able any longer to resist the King and Queene, made all the meanes they could for to obtaine their grace and fauour, and they practized with the old King John of Arragon, that hee would bee a meanes to his children the King and Queene of Castile to receive them as their faithfull seruants. The messengers that went about this businesse were certaine religious persons, who preuailed so much with King John, as by great importunity they obtained their pardon, and caused whatsoever they had possessed in time before, to bee restored to them (the castles of Madrid and Trugillo excepted) which remained at the Kings dispose and pleasure. The city of Huera, which King Henry had giuen to Don Lope Vasques of Acugna, with title of Duke, was at the same time yielded vp and willingly surrendered to the King and Queene. The Archbishop was more in fault, and more worthy reprehension, then any one that had resisted the Kings.

During these warres, the Castilian martiners made their first voyage into Guyney where were mines of gold, wherevpon, as hath bene before mentioned, there grew a controuersie betwixt the Castilians and Portugalls, who had most right and title vnto that navigation.

King Alphons of Portugall in despaire.

Castile.

Tumult in Segobia.

The Archbishop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena obtaine their pardon.

13 The Spaniards first voyage to Guyney.

Eccc

Whilest

14 Whilest Queene Isabella remained at Segobia, the Spaniards tooke Toro by meanes A of a shepheard, who certified Don Alphonso de Fonseca Bishop of Auila, that there was a certaine part of the City which the Portugals did alwaies leaue without any guard, because by nature the scite thereof was strong. The Bishop sent to discouer it, and finding the shep-herds report to bee true, sent thither sixe hundred men, and him for their guide, they giuing no great credit to the poore man, went on very lazily to that enterprise, but being encouraged by Pedro de Velasco, and by an other young man called Alphonso de Fonseca, who was the first that entred it, they all followed, not being discouered by any one, and having broken open a gate, they gaue entry to the rest of their fellowes, the Bishop having sent a good troupe after them, and so they became Maisters of the City, the Earle of Marialua and his people hauing scarce leisure to recouer the castle, from whence afterward hee went to Castro Nugno, abandoning the said castle, within the which Donna Maria Sarmiento, widow to John Vilna, did fortifie her selfe with those of her faction, who desired by all meanes to returne to the Queenes seruice. The Queene hauing vnderstood those good newes, came speedily to Toro, restored the banished to their goods, did honorably recompence the poore shepheard whom they called Bartlemew, enfranchising him and all his posterity from tributes beside the ready money and pensions which she gaue him: and receiued Donna
Maria Sarmiento into her fauour, who was sister to Don Diego Sarmiento Earle of Salinas, for whose sake and desertes she restored her vnto all her goods and possessions: and by this meanes the castle of Toro came into the Kings power.

15 About this time Don Roderigo Manriques Earle of Paredes, the pretended Maister of Saint James died in the City of Ocagna, whose competitor Don Alphonso de Cardena, great Commander of Leon did in all hast with great troupes of horse march towards Vcles, to the end he might be chosen there by the thirteene Electors: but the Queene pre-uented him, and delin (such fort as the thirteene, and the Commander himselfe were contented to intreat the Pope to put the Maisterhip to the Kings disposing, the which was graunted, and the same dignity was afterward bestowed vpon the same Commaunder.

16 After that, King Fernand returning from Guipulcoa by Toro and Ocagna, met the Queene at Toledo, in which city they builded that famous Monastery of Saint Iohn of the Kings, which is a Couent of Franciscan friers, and from thence they went to Madrid, where they were aduertised that the Portugals had entred Castile by the way of Ba-dajoz, and Cite Rodrigo, with two armies, against whom were sent as Generals, Don Lorenzo Suarez de Figueroa Earle of Feria, and the great Commander of Leon: These did not onely beat backe the enemies, but they entred into the country of Portugal pursuing the poore miserable subiects to fire and sword, who could not remedy their Kings ambition; to which place Queene Isabella, who was a woman of a manly courage, did march, the better by her presence to encourage, and fauour the enterprises of her army.
From Madrid the King went to Medina del Campo, where he took order with his brother the Duke of Villahermosa, and the Constable, about forces sufficient to assaile four fortresses at one time: by meanes whereof, in a short time hee brought vnder his obedience, Cantalapiedra Sept, Egilises, and Cubillas: but at Castro Nugno, which was the fourth, hee found greater resistance, his scege lasting long, so as all the forces which were dispersed abroad in sundry places, were faine to be drawne together to that place, and the King himselfe came thither in person, by meanes whereof the towne was taken, but the castle made obstinate resistance, before which hauing left his army, hee returned to Medina del Campo.

There he receiued letters from Garcia Osorio, Corrigidor of Salamanca, who aduertized him of diuers outrages committed by a Knight named Roderigo Maldonado, who was of the same citie, who held the castle of Monleon, and from thence did many robberies and insolent attempts, as namely coyning of false and counterfeit money, with diuers others mischiefs: in regard whereof the King would needs go thither, and found meanes to catch this wicked man, who thought to haue saued himselfe 11

A in the Sanctuary of the Couent of Saint Francis, the which neuertheless did saue his life, at the earnest entreaty of the Friers, who deliuered him vpon that condition, as also that he should deliuer vp the Castle of Monleon, otherwise the King would breake open their gates. Maldonado being taken, gaue his wife and subiects notice of his estate, and willed them to deliuer vp the Castle to the King, the which they refused to doe, saying, that they would haue some recompence of the King, otherwise they would deli-uer it to the King of Portugall; and if hee were taken prisoner, he might thanke himselfe.
Then the King caused him to be carried to a place, in the sight of those which were in Monleon, and commanded that in their view his head should be stricken off: but being B come to the place, hee made such pittifull lamentation, as they compassionating him, yielded the Castle and saued his life. From Salamanca, the King returned to the Campe before Castro Nugnes.

As Queene Isabel went towards Badajoz, shee sent from Guadalupe, to Pedro de Baca, Captaine of the Castle of Trugillo, who held it for the Marquis of Villena, commanding him, following the agreement betwixt her and the Marquis, to deliuer vp the fortresse to Gonzall d' Auila, the which hee refused to doe, saying, that hee would neuer yeeld it whilest hee had life in him: the Queene tryed by faire meanes and promises to drawe him to deliuer it, but all was in vaine: wherefore shee raised a power, and marched to Trugillo, whether the Maister of Calatraua came, and Don Alphonso de Montroy, who called himselfe Maister of Alcantara, with diuerse other Lords and C Knights: whilest shee remained there, shee recovered diuerse Castles of the same countrie, some of which shee razed. And knowing her selfe to bee strong and well accompanied, shee gaue ouer all milde and gentle meanes, and began to vie greuous threatnings, so as Don Pedro de Bacsa, became more tractable, and was willing to deliuer it, so as the Marquis would come thither in person, and bid him doe it. The Marquis was sent for, who to auoyde farther quarrels with the Queene, caused it to be deliuered, and Gonzall d' Auila was made Captaine thereof.

After that, shee did choofe certaine Arbitrators at Caceres to compose the controuersies betwixt her and the Marquis, (heereformed the state of the towne, and D made the officers thereof perpetuall: and from thence shee went to Siuill, the which City shee found in a miserable estate, and diuided into factions; which caused infinite disorders and villanies: for the inhabitants were of a long time bandied one against an other about the quarrells betwixt the houses of Guzman and Ponce: and they were so grounded therein, as they fought for the same with incredible cruelties and impieties, the father against the sonne, the brother against brother, the wife against the husband, with more furie and obstinacie then the Guelphs and Gibelines in Italy, and the Gambins and Ognazins in Biscay, the City of Cordoua being likewise infected with the same pestilence: Don Alphonso d' Aguilar Lord of Montilla, being chiefe of the faction for the Marquis of Cales, his brother in lawe, and Don E Diego de Cordoua for the family of the Guzmans.

The Queene was receiued into Siuill with great honour, where shee made some stay, and tooke the paines to heare all these controuersies, with others, sitting her selfe in counsell, and giuing audience eury Friday, being accompanied with Prelats, Doctors, and other noble personages: whose example is to bee followed of all Christian Kings and Princes, who in regard they will not take the paines themselves to harken vnto their affaires, doe see and heare by other mens eyes and cares, which causeth them to fall into greuous errors, by not knowing truly what is done in their Realmes and dominions, through the pernicious dissimulation, and damnable flattery of their Ministers and officers.

F The Queene determining to punish all those that were guilty of the maine miseries which this stately Citie had endured; the Bishoppe of Cales, Suffragan to the Cardinall of Spaine, Archbishoppe of the same Church, did admonish her in a wife and learned Oration, of the difficultie and danger of that shee pretended to doe, saying, that it was the end of all good Princes, and of Iustice, to amend, Bccc 2 and 17 Reformation of the towne

and state of Andalusia.

The City of Siuill could not stand the factions
of Guzman, and Ponce.

A Queene
carefull of doing iustice to her subiects.

The end of all good government is to maintain and not destroy offences.

Gentle punishments whereby the seditions in Siull are appeased.

and not to destroy; otherwise in stead of Kings, they would bee accounted barbarous A tyrants, greedy of humane blood, true Ministers, not of the diuine clemencie, but of the destroying spirit, who had beene a murderer from the beginning of the world, applying to his speech many examples of old times, drawne out of the Holy scriptures: adding, that the number of the offenders was so great, that if all of them should bee punished according to their deserts, the City would want people to dwell in it: the Queene therefore being moueued with these reasons, gaue a generall pardon for all matters past (apostacy onely and mens priuate interests excepted.) The Duke of Medina and the Marquis of Cales, who were the causes of all these euils, comming into the Queenes preience with great submission, would haue laied the fault one vpon other: in the end hauing deliuered vp into her hands the places and fortresses which they had vsurped, as well the one from the other, as those which did belong to the City of Siuill, shee made peace betwixt them, and gaue to euery one his owne. The castle of Vtrera onely made resistance, the capitaine thereof saying, that hee would not deliuer it, because it belonged to the Marshall of Sahauedra vnto whose father Gonsalo Arias of Sahauedra the late King Henry had giuen it, for which contempt, the Queene caused it to bee beleaged and furiously battered, in regard hee did defend it with such obstinacy: in the end, the place being taken by assault, himselfe, with all those that were within it, lost their liues, the most part of them in the heate of the fight: the residue of them being brought to Siuill seruied for an example to others not to resist a greater power, and were publickly hanged.

King Don Fernand reigned not very long ere hee came vnto Siuill to the Queene, who about that same time was brought in bedde and deliuered of a sonne, who was named Don John; for the which, great ioy feastings and gladnesse was made ouer all Spaine.

There came vnto the Kings, being at Seuill, an Ambassage from Muley Albobacen King of Granada, with whom they were at peace, notwithstanding hee had not paid the tribute which his Predecessors did vsually doe vnto Castile, the which the warres of Portugall had constrained the Kings to dissemble till a fitter time. These Ambassadors craued confirmation of the truce betwixt the Realmes and Kings of Castile and Granada; the which was refused them, vnlesse that Albobacen would send the arrearages due for the tribute: but the Moores answered (hauing expresse commission so to doe) that the Kings of Granada, who had beene tributaries to Castile were dead, and their bondes buried with them, and that the money of Granada was no more coined of gold or siluer, but the iron of launces, darts and many other such like weapons, which they would turne vpon their enemies, and deliuer themselves from all slavery and bondage.

This braue answer caused the Kings to thinke (who were not yet freed from the Portugall warres) that it was not good to draw so many enemies vpon them at once, therefore they granted them a truce, being sufficiently aduertized that King Muley Albobacen was the best provided of souldiers, armour, horses, artillery and all other munition, and more abounding in treasure, by reason of the long peace hee had enjoyed, then any of the Kings of Granada his Predecessors. King Don Fernand being highly offended at the rebellion of the Marshall Don Fernand Arias de Sahauedra, would haue had his proces made, and haue punished him as a contemner of the royall Maiesty: but diuerse of his friends and kinsfolke who were in the Kings fauour, and their faithfull seruants did saue him from this daunger, and obtained his pardon, with restitution of all his offices and possessions.

The Admirall recovered the government and captaineship of Tariffa with the castle thereof, the which was giuen to his brother Don Pedro Henriquez Gouvernor of the frontiers of Andaluzia, who placed therein Pedro de Godoy, from whom the three castles of Carmona had beene taken, and were giuen to Don Gutierrez de Cardagna, who therewith was promoted to the great Commanderie of Leon, because Don Alphonso de Cardagna who had beene great Commander was elected and confirmed

A med Maister of Saint Iames alone, and the last that hath beene Maister of the same Order, the which dignity, with the rest of the Maisterships hath euer since continued in the hands of the Kings of Castile; the Princes and their prudent Councell hauing considered and well weighed with themselves, that these Maisters were ordinarily followed by great numbers of Knights of their Order, men of warre, who had for the most part made such tumults and factions in the Realme of Spaine, as they haue not let for to make heads against their owne Kings. Queene Isabella would willingly haue had the Maisterhip of Saint Iames to haue beene for euer after extinct, but shee could not obtaine it. The King her husband leauing her at Siuill, returned to Trugillo, where he made

B Sancho de Auila capitaine of the castle.

These matters happened in the yeere 1478. in the beginning, whereof Philip Archduke of Austria was borne, who was sonne to Maximilian as then King of the Romaines, and to Donna Maria, the heire of Bourgondy, Flanders and other great Dominions, this Philippe was husband vnto Donna Isaone of Castile who, succeeded King Fernand and Queene Isabella her father and mother in all their Kingdomes of Spaine.

At the same time, King John of Arragon being laden with many yeeres and nere to his end, was desirous to see and conferre with his sonne King Fernand, concerning the affaires of Nauarre, Arragon, Sicill, and his other Dominions, hee therefore consented to request him, if the Portugall warres would permit it, to meete him at Victoria. King Fernand being wonderfull ioyfull to see his father, came thither before him, where the King of Arragon soone after arrived, accompanied with a great number of Lords and Gentlemen, chosen amongst the ancientest of Nauarre, Arragon, and his other countries, so as the beholding of such a company of reuerend old men was very notable and to bee admired, for the youngest amongst them was about three score yeeres of age, all of them in decent habits besetting their yeeres, and yet differing one from another. The sonne being gone forth to meet the father, they did a great while strue about complement and ceremonies, and the King of Arragon, would neuer suffer his sonne of Castile to kisse his hand, neither would hee take the place of him, but they entred into Victoria, the father riding on the lower hand of the sonne: and when they were come before the lodging which was prepared for the King of Arragon, and both of them on foote, as soone as the father perceived that it was his owne lodging, hee seemed to bee very sorry, as though hee had committed a great fault, and said, „ You my sonne, who are Lord and head of the Royall house of Spaine, from whence wee are descended, ought to receiue from vs all honour, reuerence, and seruice due vnto you, in regard the obligation which in this respect wee owe vnto you, as to our King and superior, is stronger then that of the sonne towards the father, therefore take horse againe, and I will accompany you to your lodging, for reason commands it to bee so. „ And King Fernand was constrained so to doe thorough the great importunity of his father, who went with him to his lodging, where hee left him, and the olde King rode backe againe vnto his owne.

For the space of twentie daies that these two Kings remained in Victoria, the father did still giue the honour, ypper hand, and preheminance in all matters to the sonne, were it in sitting, or rising vp, and in speaking, walking and keeping of company: in writing, and in euery other thing belonging to honour and dignitie, wherein great Lords vie ceremony and complement to honour one another with. Wherevpon their arose a disputation and controuersie betwixt the Lords and Knights of the Court, to weet, whether it a were a seemely, and a decent matter for a father, to shew such great submission to his sonne, who beside being his father, was also his guest, being an vsuall thing alwaies to honour and giue the places to those whom wee receiue into our houses, albeit hee were of meane quality then our selues, and whether the sonne did well to receiue and accept of these honours. The Spaniards thought that either of them had done that which was fit. Now the chieft communication betwixt these

The father & the sonne cut off diuers places from the kingdome of Naxarre.

Castro Nugno yielded to king Fernaund.

Peace betwixt France and Castile,

19 Navigations
and conquests
of the Spaniards
in the O. cean sea.

20 Inquisition in Spain again,
Jews and Moors, did beget the negligences of the Bishops and Pastors.

two Princes at this interview was concerning the affaires of Nauarre, touching Donna A Leonora's future fucccession to the same, with her grand-child Francis Phelipe Earle of Foix:
 and some are of opinion, that the townes and fortes of Saint Vincent, Garda, Bernedo, Arcos, Larraga, and Miranda de Arga were at the same time wholly cutt off from the crowne of Nauarre, in recompence of the charges which Don Fernand had bene at for the warre of Perpignan, with an agreement, that the customes rights and priuiledges which they had, should for euer be maintained: but seeing it is certaine, that a long time before this assembly, Saint Vincent, La Garde, and Arcos, were possessed by the King of Castile, it is most likely, that they were at that time onely confirmed vnto King Don Fernand. They did likewise intreate of many matters belonging to B the Kingdoms of Arragon and Sicil, and then they returned each of them into his owne Dominions, and the King of Castile did neuer more after that see his father, who spent the final remainder of his daies at Barcelona, afflicted with the goutte and other diseases which doe ordinarily accompany old men.

which doe ordinarily accompany old men.

King Don Ferdinand returned into the campe before Castro Nugno, which was very faithfully and valiantly defended by the capitaine Nicholas de Abendago of Villalreal, in the Province of Alaua, but the great want of victuals and of men (those which were with him, being in part dead, and the others were so tired and weakened with watchings, wardings and huris received at the assault as they could hold no longer) did constrain him to yeeld up the same place, and yet vpon very honorable conditions; for he carried away into Portugall all those that were with him, without ransom, with their armor, weapons and baggage, and their engines displayed, and drummes beating; and was greatly praised by the King, the fort was presently razed downe to the ground: after the rendering whereof, the King returned to Siuill to the Queene, where order was taken for the well governing of the City, and excoesse commandeement given to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales, not to remaine there. Don Iohn de Gamboa Governor of Fontarabie, and the Licentia Iohn de Medina, both of them of the Kings Council were likewise dispatched into Guipulcoa, with instructions and authority, to treat and conclude the peace with the French Kings Ambassadors who were at Bayon. These, came to Fontarabie, and after that, both sides did meet; at Saint Iohn de Luz, where they conferred together, and concluded the peace, renewing the alliances, leagues, and ancient friendship betwixt the two Kingdomes. The French Commissioners were the Lord of Lescut, and the Abbot of Saint Denis: and so the warre ended betwixt France and Castile.

From Siuill France army to conquer the

The King and Queene before their departure from Siuill sent an army to conquer the Canaries vnder the conduct of Pedro de Vera, where, for the space of three years, diuerse notable exploits of warre were performed by the Castilians: Thirty five ships were likewise sent to Guiney, Pedro de Cobides being their general, from which place great quantity of gold was brought, with great profit for the Kings, who had the fifth penny. In the first, the thing which was most esteemed of that blacke Nation was cockenys, who were of opinion that they had great vantage against thunder and lightning, by means whereof they were fold in Spaine at a great rate, so as men could hardly get any for money.

This year 1478. the inquisition beganne at Siuill, instituted at the first by the Councell of Don Pero Gonzalez de Mendoza Archbishop of the same City, against the lewes and conuered Moores, which did returne to their superstitious ceremonies: this Prelate, and other, depured for that search, thinking that for to conteyne them in the profession of Christianity, rigour and ciuill punishment was more expedient then other milder meanes, or greater care: Beeing content for to take away the occasion of seditions and troubles which grew in the Townes and Prouinces of the Realme, against these miserable creatures, most commonly at the instigation of Preachers, and other Clergy men, inciting the people to murine against them.

Whereas in deed, they ought to haue bene instructed by good and wholesome examples: but the Bishops and Pastors had no great care of their foules health: for

A for the affaires of State, and worldly greatnesse hath so busied them for many ages, as they have not had leysure to eleuate their eyes and minds higher then the earth. Since that time, the power of the Inquisitions tribunall, which is diuided into diuers iurisdictiones thorough euery Province of Spayne, hath bene chiefly bandd against those who have dared to speake against the pompe and pride of the Sea of Rome, and the abuses brought into the Church, for to entertaine the ease and wealth of the Clergie, a gulph which hath swallowed vp many good and honest families. Concerning this Inquisition, which within awhile made it selfe knowne for a fruitlesse iuention, more ample mention shall be made hereafter.

B The King and Queene hauing pacified and ordered the cittie of Seuille, left Diego de Merlo there, who was a good Knight, in qualitie of an assistant; and went themselves to Cordoue, which was in like manner afflicted by the factions of Don Pero Fernandes of Cordoua, Earle of Cabra, and that of Don Alphonso d'Aguiar, who in the last tumults had driven the Earles forces out of the cittie, and had taken the forts and places thereof, which were in the keeping of the Earle, detaining them, with other places also belonging to the gouernement and iurisdiction of the cittie: they and their followers being moreover charged with so many robberies, thefts, and murders, as the King and Queene had much ado to chastise the offenders, and to restore euery man to his owne. Alphonso of Aguiar was driven forth of the cittie, and the fortresses taken from him. Vpon complaint made against the Iudges and Officers of the legal Courts, who did greatly exact, the King and Queene caused their fees and stipends to bee rated, more then what, they were not permitted to take vpon payne of forfeiting seuen-fold as much, which was executed vpon some, who neither feared God, nor reuerenced the lawes.

As these busineses were managed in Andalusia, the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, who was euer turbulent and desirous of inuouation, had secret intelligence with the King of Portugal, vnto whom hee undertooke to deliuer the Cittie of Toledo, and to kill Don Gomes Mariques assittant there: and to the same purpose he had praised with the common people of Toledo, and had executed it, if the assittant had not been a proud and politicke man, who hauing discovered the plot tooke order for it, standing on his guard and by punishing some of the Conspirators, hee caused thereto to containe themselves within their bounds for feare of the like punishment. The Arch-bishop too remained at Alcala de Henares had inuited the King of Portugal to come vnto his house of Talavera, assuring him, that hee would put him into Toledo: who was in a readinesse to haue come thither, had not the Prince his sonne, with his friends and seruants, told him what small profite hee should receiue, and how great danger hee should incurre by such an enterprise.

The Kings, Don Fernand and Donna Isabella being aduertised of the Arch-bishops dealings, were iustly incensed against him, they caused all his temporalities to be seized on, sending the Duke of Villa-hermosa to Madrid, to briidle that cittie, commanding all his tenants and seruants to forsake him, and no more to obey him, vpon payne of deprivation of their goods: and for a terrour to the rest, they caused the houises of diuers of the Rebels, who had contemned their commaundement, to be razed downe to the ground.

Wherefore the Arch-bishoppe within a few dayes was left alone, and his great friend Heruard Alarcon did forsake him and fled presently into France, not daring any longer to tarrye in Spaine. Don Tello de Buendia, Arch-deacon of Toledo, and a learned man, did vndertake to bring the Arch-bishoppe to his dutie, he vanquished him by reason, and perswaded him to humble himselfe to the King and Queene, of whome by his meanes he obtained pardon: but hee gave all the strong castles of his Arch-bishoppricke in hostage for his future fidelitie. The Marquis of Villena on the other side hauing entered into the Marquisate, began to picke quarrels with the Governour placed there by the Queen, concerning the limits of his power and iurisdiction, saying, that he did vsurpe more then the covenants would permit him, and would haue letted him from punishing those of Cinchulla, with other rebellious and disobedient people, so that a power was sent thither vnder the conduct of Don George Manrique, and Pedro Ruiz Alarcon,

The cittle of Cordona paci-fica.

The Archb.
always disloyal
and seditious.

The Archb.
enforced to his duty.

Great

Officers for-face the country in aways punishment.

22

A murderer
Bishop, murdered.

Petty tyrants
It ned to death by the common people.

A. 1479.

Natural issue of one brother to ward another

Great was the King and Queene's toyle, in ordering the peace and quiet of the country of Andalusia, for the people thereof were so given over to all manner of villanies, as if they had not vied their meeknesse and elementie, the cities and towns would have beene voyd and empty of people: for it is most certaine, that this yeare and the former, there went out of Seulle and Cordoua about eight thousand men, tainted of notorious crimes, who left the country for feare of punishment.

It happened about the same time, that Don Rodrigo de Vergara Bishoppe of Leon, borne at Logroño (it is not knowne vpon what occasions) caused Pedro Pasa Treasurer of his Church, to be slayne in the same Citie, being a Knight of a great parentage, whose death his friends and kinsfolkes reuenged by the death of the Bishoppe, who asslayed him in his owne house, and pursued him, as he thought to haue fled for safetie to the house of Diego Fernandes Quiñones, Earle of Luna, where they murdered him in the bosome of the Countesse, who intreated them to spare the spilling of his blood for her sake.

In the towne of Fontecoujuna, the Inhabitants did kill with stones D. Hernand Gomes de Guzman, great Commander of Calatrava, for outrages and tyrannies which hee had done to them, for the which fact the Iudges which were sent by the King to informe of the matter, could neuer find any one witness, which would charge any one particular man with that murder, and they could haue no other answer, than this, that Fontecoujuna had slaine him, which passed for a Prouerbe thorough Spaine. This same yeare the inhabitants of Saint Helizes de los Galegos, a place neere to Trugillo did in like manner stone their Lord Graian de Sese to death, who as it hath beene heretofore sayd, had bene Captaine of Trugillo.

In the beginning of the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, seuentie nine, the King and Queene left Cordoua, and came with great deuotion to the Monasterie of Guadalupa, and also to take order for the Portugall warre, which they daily feared. From Gua-dalupa they sent the duke of Villa-hermosa their brother to Almorox neere to Escalona, in which place were Don John de Laxan, and Don John de Pacheco the Marquis of Villena's brother, who ranne yppe and downe burning and spoiling the countrey round about.

The Marquis on the other side remayning in Garcy Nugnos, did violently resist the the Kings souldiers, and defeated the troups of Don George Manrique, who within a few dayes after, dyed of the hurts which he had receyued in that encounter. By meanes wher-of, others of the Kings Captaines, being lustily moued against him, did hang vp fixe of his seruants whome they had taken, to serue for a terrour to the rest: the Marquis in like manner would not be indebted to them for reuenge: but caused as many heads to bee stricken off, casting lots among the prisoners, which fell vpon a souldier who dwelt at Villa-noua de Laxara, neere to Alarcon, who amongst others was to bee beheaded, but a younger brother of his did befeche the Marquis, that he might dye in his brothers stead, who had wife and children, and did so much importune the matter, as hee redemed him from death, giuing his owne life for him: a notable example of brotherly loue, and well worthe to haue bene considered by those who did cause the execution, if they had bene possessed with a noble and generous disposition. The names of these two brethren are vnjustly supprest by the negligence of the authors. The Marquis yet notwithstanding sent Rodrigo of Castagneda to Court to excuse him to the King and Queen, and to lay the fault vpon their Lieutenants and Officers, whose pride and insolencie had prouoked him to those courses, the King answered that the Marquis should be heard according to lawe: but being aduertised, that Don Roderigo had intelligence with the king of Portugall, they sent him away prisoner to Talauera, where hee quickly ended his dayes.

Whilest the King and Queene remayned at Guadalupa, Donna Maria de Pacheco Countesse of Medelin, the Marquis of Villena's bastard-sister, being a proud and haughtie woman, who held the towne of Merida, and had driuen her owne son out of all his possessions, presented a petition to the King and Queene, the effect wherof was,
that

A that shee might enioy the Earledome of Medelin, during her life, with the commandery of the same city. An other petition came from Don Alphonso de Montroy, treasorer of Alcantara, who called himselfe Maister of the same order, and held most part of the fortresses belonging to the same, who requested that he might be confirmed in that dignity, notwithstanding any pretence that Don John de Estuniga Sonne to Don Aluaro Duke of Auevalo could make, vpon whom the Pope had bestowed it. Both of them were answered, that vpon hearing of the parties, they should haue speedy iustice. The Countesse and the Treasurer not contented therewith, became enemies to the King and Queene, and did cleaue to the King of Portugall: Don Alphonso hauing forgotten, how that when he was taken prisoner by the Captaine of Maganza in Extremadura, the King had deliuered him and paid his ranfome, bestowing diuers other benefits vpon him.

Ambassadors from the French King Lewis the eleuenth, arrived at Guadalupa to see the peace agreed vpon by the Commissioners at Saint Iohn de Luz to bee sworne and ratified. There the Popes Bull was scene, which dispensed with the King of Portugall about the marriage of Donna Joane his Neece, not without excuses on the Popes part, who said, that he had bin circumvented, and finistely informed, concerning that matter. And to the end the French King should on his part swaere, and ratifie the articles of the peace, the same commissioners, who had first treated thereof were sent into France, to meet, Don John de Gamboa, and the licenciad Don John de Medina both of them of the Kings Councill. It was likewise agreeed vpon with the French Ambassadors, that the towne of Perpignan, with other fortresses of the Earledome of Rossillon, should bee deliuered as hostages, into the Cardinall of Spaines hands, and that with in five yeares following, arbitrators should decide, whatfoeuer king Lewis could pretend to be due vnto him.

Whilest the Spanish Court remayned at Guadalupa, God (being willing to make peace betwixt Christian Princes in Spaine, to the end they might haue leasure to vnderake more worthy enterprises,) did inspire Donna Beatrice Dutchesse of Viseo, widow to the Infant Don Ferdinand of Portugall, Duke of Viseo, and Mother to Donna Leonora, married to Prince John the eldest Sonne and heire of the Crowne of Portugall, with a desire to imploy her vttermost credit, and meanes for the effecting thereof. This Princeesse hauing founded King Alphonso mynde, and finding him to be inclined to an agreement, sent word to her neece Queene Isabell (for shee was sister to her Mother Queene Isabell, widow to King John yet liuing,) that if it would please her to come to the frontiers of Portugall, shee did hope that some good agreement would be made betwixt them; wher-vnto the Queene disposed her selfe with the consent of King Fernand her husband.

King John of Aragon dyed about this time at Barcelona being foure score and one yeares of age, hauing reigned in Nauarre fifty three yeares and foure months, and one and twenty yeares and fixe months in Arragon: hee was buried in the monastery of Pobleta. By his last will and testament hee left his Sonne Don Fernand, heire to his Kingdomes of Arragon, and Sicill, and his daughter Princeesse Leonora, widow to Earle of Foix, heire to the realme of Nauarre: and soone after deputies were sent from the states of Arragon, Catallogne, and Valencia to the Court of Spaine, to request King Fernand, to come and take possession of his dominions; they came vnto him in an vnseasonable time, by reason the Portugall warre was hotly beganne, by the practices of the countesse of Medelin, and Don Alphonso de Montroy, the pretended maister of Alcantara.

The King and Queene were aduertised that the army of Portugall was in a redinesse to invade the country of Extremadura: by reason wherof they called the Constable, and other Spanish Knights to Court, and sent forces to the frontiers, with great garrisons to Badajos, and other fortes of the same marches, where Don Alphonso de Cardeña Maister of Saint James was generall, who lodged his army at Lobon betwixt Badajos, and Merida, wherein the Tresorer of Alcantara remayned, attending for the Portugalls, and the Bishoppe of Ebor, their Generall, who came with an intent

Two pers, in regard they might not be authorized in their outrages do landon them se nes
against the king

Arragon.
The death of John King of
Arragon.

Castille.

The Portugall
army defeated at Albuhera.

Battell of Al-buhera.

Defeat of the Spanish army
by sea.

Titles of King Fernand and Queene Isabell

24

Entrance of the Queene Isbella and the prince of Viseo
into the city of Toledo.

intent to ioyne with him: to preuent which, the Maister of Saint Iames did march against the Bishoppe, and gaue him battaile, in the fields of Albuhera, the which was fierce, and bloody, on either side: but the Portugalls were ouerthrowne, and the Bishop taken, (although afterward he escaped away) hauing lost their ensignes, baggage, and all the equigage and munition: the maister of Saint Iames, and all the King of Castiles Captaines were hurt: but about the rest the valour and prowess of Don Martin de Cordoua Sonne to the Earle of Cabra, of Sancho del Aquila, of Alphonso Henriques and of Rodrigo de Cardena, Cosin to the Maister of Saint Iames, was admirable: the which Maister by his Iudgement and valour, hauing gotten the King, and Queene this victory, was so charitable, as with his owne mony, hee releued the dearth and famine which at that time, did oppress the country of Extremadura, in regard whereof the King and Queene, did acquit him of three Millions of Marauedis, which he was to pay, as a pension vnto them out of the renewen of his place. After this battaile the Treasurer of Alcantara, went to Deleitosa, which had bene taken by Roderigo de Monroy his brother, and the Bishoppe of Eborra went to Medellin to encourage the Countesse, who perhaps, was valianter than him-selfe. Gods will was, that the King of Portugall, in recompence of this losse, should by his army at sea, take the five and thirty Spanish shippes which came from Guiney wherein was great store of gold, which let-ted well to pay his soldiours, and the prisoners, to exchange for those which were taken at the land Battaille of Albuhera. After this manner are the euents of ioy, and sorrow, C mixed in this miserable world.

King Fernand being importuned to goe into Arragon, and considering the notable vnion of those two Kingdomes, being at that time at Trugillo, where after hee had celebrated the obsequies of King Iohn his father, hee treated with the Queene his wife, and those of her counsell about the forme of precedency, and the order which should bee kept in the letters, and writings concerning the titles of the realmes, and dominions, which he commanded: diuers of them were of opinion, that they should intitle themselves Kings of Spaine, in regard the greatest part thereof did obey them: but they not being willing to exceed the bounds of modesty, nor yet to preiudice in that behalfe, the Kings of Nauarre and Portugall, with whome they were conioyned in blood, D place their titles after this manner. Fernand and Isabell, by the grace of God, King and Queene of Castile, of Leon, of Arragon, of Sicill, of Toledo, of Valencia, of Galicia, of Majorque, of Siuill, of Sardinia, of Cordoua, of Corsica, of Murcia, of Jaen, of Algarbes, of Algezire, of Gibraltar, Earles of Barcelona, Lords of Biscay and Molina, Dukes of Athens and of Neopatria, Earles of Rossillon, and of Cerdaigne, Marquis of Oristagni, and of Gocian. After this manner, were the titles of these Kingdomes and dominions, ordered according to their ranke and dignity: and in the shieldes of their armes, and deuices it was appointed that the armes of Castile and Leon, should bee first drawne, and after them those of Arragon and Sicill.

The Court being come from Trugillo to Caceres, Queene Isabell was greatly solicited by Donna Be. trice Duchesse of Viseo, to come to Alcantara, where shee promised to meet her, and to conferre about the meanes of a peace betwixt Castile and Portugall: the King and Queene departed the one from the other, they towards Alcantara, which for the same purpose was committed to the keeping of Don Gutierrez de Cardena the great commander by Don Aluaro de Estuniga Duke of Playfance or Arealuo, who held it as lawfull administrator of Don Iohn de Estuniga his Sonne, who pretended him-selfe Maister of that order: and King Fernand went into Arragon to take possession of his new Kingdomes. These Princesses being arrived at Alcantara, were lodged in one house, namely in the Castle, where they spent thirty daies in conference, and agreeing at the last vpon certaine Articles, the Dutcheffe being highly honored, by the Queene Isabell of Castile, and rewarded with many rich presents, and Jewells, F returned into Portugall, carrying Roderigo Maldonado, one of Fernand the King of Castiles counsell with her, to communicate more at large with the King of Portugall, concerning them.

In

A In the meane space whilst these matters were conferred on, the Treasurer of Alcantara surprized the fortresse of Montanches on the one side, and those of the Countesse of Medellins part made sharpe warre in Extremadura on the other: the which country besides the miseries which it endured by the warre, it was oppressed with extreme famine: so as euery one perswaded the Queene to goe backe to Toledo: but her haughtie courage, would not suffer her to leaue such places where shee knew trouble and danger to bee, being able by her wisdom, speedily to redresse it. Shee then gaue order to beseege diuers places at one time, from whence the enemies made stindie roades with incredible spoyles, euen to the gates of Trugillo.

B The Master of Saint Iames was sent against Merida, Don Lewis Fernandes de Porto Carrero, Lord of la Palma beseegeed Medellin, Rodrigo de Monroy d'Eleitosa, and Don La- renco Suares of Figueroa, opposed himselfe against those which molested the country of Badajos. The Treasurer of Alcantara ranne vpp and downe, and tooke booties now from one place, then from another, hauing his retreat at Piedra nueva, Castro nuevo, Majorca, Azagala, and other forts, and not contented therewith, hee went into Portu-gall, animating King Alphonso, not to giue ouer that warre, but courageously to pursue it with great hope, and not bee carried away by the perswasions of the Dutcheffe of Viseo: and hee did chiefly vrge him to come with a mighty armie, to raise the seege before Montanches, that place being the strength and importance of the warre: which D C Pero Fernandes de Velaſco the Constable fearing, fortified his campe with trenches and walles of stones, so as he could not easily bee assailed on the sodaine. Don Lewis Fer- nando Porto Carrero, beseegeing Medellin, where the Countesse, and the Bishop of Eborra remained, sustained infinite difficulties: for besides the continuall sallies and skirmishes of the beseegeed, who were very strong, his campe was troubled with a horrible number of flies, which constrained him to change his seat, and to retire halfe a mile from thence.

At the end of the seege, which lasted three moneths, those of Deleitosa yielded, sauing their liues and goods, and with-drew themselves to Montanches. Great was the paine and toyle which the beseegers and beseegeed of this place did endure, with those likewise of Merida and Medellin, where the Bishoppe of Eborra spared no care nor diligence, to D recouer his honour, and to couer the losses which he had sustayned at Albuhera, and also at the battell of Toro.

Hunger, sicknesse, and other inconueniences were the chiefe enemies, that either part had to warre against: although Queene Isabella to her power had provided for the necessitie of her people, who from time to time receiued letters from Maldonado her Ambassador in Portugall, putting her out of hope of peace, by reason of King Alphonso's obstinacie, who could not bee brought to any reasonable conditions: she therefore willed him to returne into Castile. The Ambassadour being readie to depart, came to take his leaue of King Alphonso, who was at the same time accompanied with the Prince his sonne, and the Lords of his Counsell, who did perswade him by diuers reasons and examples of things fallen out lately in Spayne to consend to a peace: which perswasion E of his, being better taken and apprehended by the Prince and the other Lords, then by the King himselfe, were of such force, as he was drawne by them to receiue the peace which the Dutcheffe of Viseo had concluded at Alcantara: Wherevpon the Ambassa-dours departure was prolonged, and the morrow after he assembled his Councell, where the Articles were againe perused and considered of, which the King allowed, confirmed, and swore to obserue, after this manner.

First, that the King of Portugall should lay aside the title of King of Castile and Leon, and should wipe out of his shield the armes and deuices of the sayd kingdomes.

Secondly, that he should sweare not to marrie Donna Joane his Neece, who called her F selfe Queene of Castile and Leon.

Thirdly, that shee being at that time eightene yeares of age, should choose one of these things within fixe moneths, that is to say, to forsake the Realme of Portugall without hauing ayde, meanes, or any assistance from king Don Alphonso, or if shee would tarrie there still, then to marrie with Prince Iohn of Castile, who was newly borne, when he should come to age, or else to enter into one of the five Orders of Religion of Saint Clare

Queene Isbella perswades
the King to Extremadura.

Peace brought Portugall and Castile.

Articles.

Clare in Portugal, and if she would consent to marrie Prince John, shee should live and remaine in the meane time, in the company of Donna Beatrice Dutcheffe of Visco.

Fourthly, that the Infanta Donna Izabella, eldest daughter to the King and Queene of Castile, should marrie the Infant Don Alphonso, eldest sonne to Prince John, heire to the Kingdomes, the which Infant and Infanta should likewise be committed to the keeping of the Dutcheffe of Visco in the fort of Mora in Portugal.

Fifthly, that the Kings of Castile should in no sort let or hinder the king of Portugalls, nor the Prince his sonnes voyage into Guiney, and that the States and people of Castile should bee bound to performe and maintaine that poynt inviolably.

Sixtly, that all crimes and offences, layde to their charge, who had fauoured and taken the King of Portugalls part in those warres, should be abolished, and a generall pardon graunted to them all, especially to the Countesse of Medellin, and to Don Alphonso of Monroy, Treasurer of Alcantara, and euery of them to be restored to their goods, liuings, and dignities.

Seuenthly, that this peace should be kept betwixt the Kings of Castile and Portugall for an hundred and one yeares.

This peace thus concluded, was proclaymed in the Court of Portugal, to the great contentment of all men, and presently the Licenciado Figueria, one of the kings Councell, and his Confessor, named Friar Martin, were sent Ambassadors to Queene Izabella, who lay at Trugillo: who on her part, did likewise sweare to ratifie it, the Castilians beeing no whit displeased thereat; for they were all tyred with that pernicious warre. The which warre did wholly cease, and the seeges, from the aboue-mentioned places, were rayed. Merida which belonged to the Order of Saint James, was yielded to the Master thereof: Medellin was committed to the keeping of Don Lewis Fernand Porto Carrero, vntill the controuersie betwixt the Countesse and Don Pedro Porto Carrero her son, were decided by order of lawe. Newes hereof was carried to Barcelona to King Fernand, the which was most welcome vnto him, who gaue thanks vnto God therefore, causing the which was most welcome euery where, and did worthily recompence the messenger which brought tidings of so desired a peace: by meanes whereof those two kingdoms haue bene encreased and maintayned in the greatnesse whereunto they are risen in the dayes of our fathers, and in our time also.

25
Prison of Castile
and Arragon.

In king Fernand, the two kingdoms of Castile and Arragon with their dependancies, were ioyned together, which had bene separated foure hundred, fortie, and five yeares, euer since that the two States of Earledomes, became Kingdomes, after the death of Don Sancho the Great, King of Nauarre, who was the last Earle of Arragon and Castile.

Now King Fernand hauing taken order for all things belonging to so great a succession, wherein hee found no difficultie nor resistance, hee came to the Queene his wife, who lay in the city of Toledo, where with great solemnitie he swore the peace in the presence of the Portugall Ambassadors: and for a greater confirmation thereof, there were sent Ambassadors to the king of Portugal, Friar Hernand of Talauera, the king of Castiles Confessor, of the Order of Saint Hierome, great Prior of Saint Marie du Pré of Vailliodolir, who was afterward Bishoppe of Auila, and successiue first Arch-bishoppe of Granada after the conquest, and with him Doctor Alphonso Manuel of Madrigal, one of the kings Councell, to reiterate and sweare the peace the second time. Donna Joane, who till then was called Queene of Castile and Leon, and by a particular surname the Excellent, beeing questioned vpon the Article of peace, which concerned her marriage with Prince John, did rather choose a Monasticke life, who therefore was shorne and veiled in the Monasterie of Saint Clare the royall, at Coimbra, and casting off his royall habits, shee tooke the Order of Saint Francis, not without great griefe to king Fernand, to see so great a Ladie in such manner to abase her selfe, where if she had so pleased, might haue reigned in Castile, Leon, Arragon, and Sicill.

The Ambassadors of Castile hauing executed their commission with the king of Portugall, went to the citie of Coimbra, where they did see this Princeesse to professe her selfe a Nunne, with protestation to spend her dayes in such humilitie, notwithstanding that

D. Joane, called, the Excellent, contented the marriage with the wife of Castile, Arragon, &c. and becomes a Nunne.

As that they brought her King Fernand and Queene Izabella's honourable word and promise, to accomplish in her behalfe, all that which had bene agreed vpon in the treaty of peace, and to marrie her to their sonne when time should serue: but she with an incredible contancie refused all these dignities, and spent the whole time of her life (which was very long) in religion, and was euer after called, (in stead of royall titles which had bene offered vnto her by the King and Queene) Donna Joane the Nunne.

The troubles beeing thus appeased in Castile, Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena, who in his Marquisate had made warre vpon the Kings Lieutenants and Captaines, came to the Court at Toledo to iustifie himself concerning the same: and to speak truth, the matter beeing well weighed, hee was not found to bee the principall cause of those mischiefs, nor yet to haue any intelligence with the King of Portugall, since his last agreement made with the Queene, in regard whereof, the King and Queene receyued him to grace and fauour, vnto whome afterwards in the warres of Granado, hee did many notable seruices.

Marquis of Villena reconciled to the King and Queene.

This yeare, 1479. in the moneth of Nouember, Queene Izabella was brought to bed in the Citie of Toledo, in a house belonging to the Earle of Cisuentes, of a daughter named Joane, who in proceesse of time came to succeed in all the kingdoms, as by the progresse of this Historie shall appeare. This Infanta did in all poynts lo resemble queen Joane of Arragon her grandmother, as when the King her father did play with her, hee called her his mother. In like manner the Infanta Izabella, because she was in lineaments like to Queene Izabella her Grandmother, mother to the queene then reigning, was by her called her mother: the rest of queene Izabella's children were commonly called her Angels. At the same time that these things happened in Spayne, the armie of Mahomet the second of that name, Emperour of the Turkes, did houer about the Isle of Rhodes, the seat of the Knights of Saint John of Hierusalem, Peter d'Aubusson a French-man, being great Master of that Order: the Sicillians fearing lest the Turkes would haue landed in their Isle, sent messengers to king Fernand, to obtaine of him ayde and succour, vnto whome certaine shippes laden with munition, armour, and other prouision, were sent.

D

Donna Leonora Queene of Nauarre, and 33. in order.

AS King Fernand succeeded in the kingdoms of Arragon, Valencia, Sicill, Majorca, and principallie of Cattalonia, with other dominions and dependancies thereof by the deceale of the late king Don John his father: the Princeesse Leonora in like manner, daughter to him and to his first wife Donna Blanche, queene of Nauarre, did inherit the same kingdom, nine yeares after the death of the Earle of Foix her husband, remaining all that time a widow. She was crowned queene in the citie of Tudela, where she did sweare and promise to maintaine the rights, lawes, priuiledges, franchises, and liberties of the country, in the same manner as her predecessors had done before her. Her reaigne was so short, as we haue no matter afforded to speake of, but onely her death, which happened by a sudden sickness fiftene dayes after she was crowned, in the same citie of Tudela: she was buried in the couent of S. Sebastian of the Order of S. Francis, neere to the city of Tafalla, which was since ruined by the commandement of Cardinal Francisco Ximenes, Archbishoppe of Toledo, and Gouvernour of Castile, who thought that the strong building of that Monasterie, was no good neighbour to such a towne. Albeit we haue already in the precedent booke spoken of this Princeesses children, yet wee will somewhat more amply enlarge the discourse thereof in this place. Their eldest sonne was Gaston, who bearing the title of Prince of Viana, was married to Donna Magdalene of France, and dyed at Libourne, being misfortunatly hurt with the splinter of a Lance, as hee there ranue at Tilt: hee was father of two children, that is to

26
Nauarre.

Genetrix of Nauarre.

Ffff

say,

say, Francis Phœbus and Katherine, who were King and Queene of Navarre, and Earles A of Foix, successively the one after the other. Their second sonne was John, who had the Vicouny of Narbonne for his portion, purchased by his father for readie money, and married Mari, who was daughter to Lewis, Duke of Orleans, who was French king, and the twelfth of that name. Paradin sayes more truly, that she was daughter to Charles, Duke of Orleans, of whome were borne, Gaston of Foix, Duke of Nemours, who dyed in the battaile of Rauenna, and Germaine, who was second wife to Fernand, the Catholick King, and after that shee was secondly married to Fernand of Arragon, Duke of Calabria, lawfull son to Fredericke king of Naples, who dyed being Viceroy of Valencia.

This John Vicount of Narbonne, was Gouernour of Daulphiné, and afterwards of Guyenne, a hardie and valiant Knight, renowned in the warres against the English, and in those of Italy, whither hee went with King Charles the eighth, in great credite and authoritie, and afterwards dyed in the raigne of King Lewis the twelfth at Estampes where he lies buried.

The third sonne of Earle Gaston, and Donna Leonora, was Peter borne at Pau in the countrey of Bearne, the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, forty nine, who gaue himselfe to studie, and did chooseth an ecclesiasticall life, vnder the gouernement of his great Vncle, the Cardinall of Foix, Bishoppe of Lescar, and the Popes Legate in Daulphiné and Prouence: after whose death hauing professed at the Vniuersities of Tholousa, Pavia, and Ferrara, in the ciuill and canon Lawes, hee was also by Pope Sixtus the fourth, made C Cardinall of the title of Saint Cosmo and Damian, being before Bishop of Vannes, and prouided of many rich Benefices, by the fauour of Francis Duke of Brittain his brother-in law, who had married his sister Ladie Margaret of Foix, mother to Queene Anne.

The fourth sonne of the Earle of Foix, and of Donna Leonora, was called James, hee onely of all their children was borne in Navarre, and was a Knight highly esteemed, and honoured by King Lewis the twelfth, with the Order of Saint Michael, and with the leading of an hundred men at armes: in the warres of Lombardie and elsewhere; he purchased the commendation of a valiant and wise Captaine, but hee dyed young, hauing not attained to the age of thirtie yeares, and was neuer married. Hee left certaine base children, who professed an ecclesiasticall life, and did possesse rich benefices, euen till the latter dayes of King Francis the first.

Besides these foure sonnes, Earle Gaston and Donna Leonora had fise daughters, the first whose name was Mary, was married to William Marquis of Montferrat, who, by the Popes authoritie, erected the church of Casall into a Bishops See: this Ladie was brought to her husband, the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, sixtie sixe, by her brother Peter of Foix, by Bernard the Bastard of Foix, Gudfrey Basleus, Bishoppe of Riues, by the Bishop of Conserans, and Peter of Sobreuil, and by diuers other Lords and Knights: Of this marriage no male children were borne, but daughters onely, the eldest of whom was married to Lewis, sonne to Thomas Marquis of Salusses, and these daughters did not succeed their father in the Marquisat, but a brother of his: Loane second daughter of Earle Gaston, and Donna Leonora, was married to the Earle of Armagnac, sonne to him who was slaine by the commaundement of King Lewis the eleuenth: with which marriage, the King being displeased, the Earle was so persecuted, as hee was constrained to flee for safetie into Castile, where trusting to the faire speeches, oathes, and promises of the Cardinall of Albi, the French Kings Ambassadour, in the sayd kingdome, being returned into France, hee was there cruelly stabbed to death with daggers. Whereupon his wife Donna Loane of Foix, returned into Bearne, hauing had no children by him. The third daughter was Marguerite, wife to Francis the last Duke of Brittain, by whome hee had two daughters, Anne and Isabella, Isabella dyed young, but Anne was married to two French Kings successively, Charles the eighth, and Lewis the twelfth: by Lewis she had two daughters Claude and René; Claude who was first promised to Charles, who was since king of Spain, and afterwards Emperour, the fifth of that name, did marrie Francis of Valois then duke of Angoulesme, and afterwards French king, first of that name. René was married to Hercules of Este duke of Ferrara: the Earle Gaston and his wife D. Leonora, had besides these, Catherine, married to the Earle of Candale, and mother of 3. children, the

A the eldest of whome was Lord of Candale, the second Arch-bishoppe of Bourdeaux, and the third who was a daughter named Anne, Queene of Hungarie and Bohemia, wife to Vladislaus, son to Casimir King of Polonia. This Vladislaus first king of Bohemia, had before married Donna Beatrice of Arragon, widow to King Matthias of Hungarie, for whose sake the Hungarians chose him for their King: but he was diuorced from her in regard of her loose life, and afterwards married this Ladie Anne of Foix, who was brought to her husband thorough the Dutchie of Milan, at that time possessed by the French, and by the cittie of Venice, the great friend and ally of this King, Leonard Lauredan being at that time Duke thereof. Of this marriage was borne Lewis, who succeeded his father in the kingdomes of Bohemia and Hongarie, husband to Queene Mari of Castile, who was sister to the Emperour Charles, and a daughter named Anne married to Ferdinand of Austria, afterwards Emperour and Brother to Charles, and by her, king of Bohemia and Hungarie, after the death of his father-in-law King Lewis, of the which Fernand and Anne, the Emperour Maximilian was borne, and many other children: the fifth daughter of Earle Gaston, and Donna Leonora of Navarre, dyed vnmarried, being onely promised to the Duke of Medina Celi, issued from the same house of Foix, and was called after her mothers name Leonora. This house of Foix and Navarre hath brought forth this offspring of great and illustrious Princes, giuing to Christendome at one time foure Queenes, who were cousin-germaines, namely, Catherine Queene of Navarre, C Germaine Queene of Castile and Arragon, Anne Queene of France, and Anne Queene of Bohemia and Hungarie.

Francis Phœbus, the foure and thirtieth King of Nauarre.

LET vs now go forward with our Historie: after Queene Leonora's decease, her sonnes D Loane Francis Phœbus of the age of twelue yeares, succeeded by right to the Crowne of Navarre, the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, seueny nine, being brought vp in his Earldome of Foix, and Lordship of Bearne, vnder the gouernement of Donna Margdaleine of France his mother, and the Cardinall his Vncle: but three yeares were expired before hee durst passe into his Kingdome, by reason of the seditions which suddenly after the Queene Leonora's decease, were renewed betwixt the Beaumontois, the Earle of Lerin being their head, who held the Cittie of Pampelona, and those of Grammont, who followed Pedro of Peralta the Constable, and Philip of Navarre the Marshall, who had for their forts the places of Estella, Sanguessa, Olica, and a great part of the cittie of Tudela.

The young Kings mother made a iourney thither, as appeareth by letters graunted E by her this same yeare, dated at Pampelona; where (she laboured (though in vaine) to settle peace and quietnesse in the Countrey: diuers Prelates and great Lords of Castile and Arragon did in like manner, but to none effect; go about to appease these obstinate seditious persons, who were hardened in their wickednesse. The Faction of Grammont was much discontented, to see the Earle of Lerin married to a Ladie of the blood royal; sister to King Fernand of Castile, and for that hee was possessed of the cittie of Pampelona, the chiefe of the Kingdome, they sayd, that hee thought to make himselfe king of Navarre. These quarrels being sharply pursued by either side, it happened that Philip of Navarre, successeour to his father in the office of Marshall, and in hatred to the Earle of Lerin, did surprize the cittie of Viana, but he could not get the castle, wherein a knight F of the house of Gongora was captaine for the Earle: and being out of hope of being able to keepe the towne, so great was his hatred towards the Earle, as hauing conspired with Don John of Riueria, Gouernor of Logroño for the king of Castile, Captaine Mudarra, and other Spanish knights, he deliuered the towne into their hands: the which deed of his, the Earle of Lerin greatly resenting, endeauored to recouer that losse, which did not so much touch him nor his faction, as the whole Realme in generally, and hee, did Seditions excited by those of Grammont and Navarre.

Viana surprized by the Marshall Philip.

Expulsion of the Earle of Lerin.

so well bestirre himselfe, as he did not onely recouer Viana, but Larraga likewise, which A had beene before that time possessed by the king of Castile, and if he had beene as strong as hee was courageous and skilfull in martiall affaires, he would, without all doubt, haue recouered the places of Saint Vincent, la Garde, and Arcos, the which hee attempted: but hee was too weake: with this good happe, yet neuertheless hee tooke the towne of Miranda vpon Arga, and caused those which held it, to leape into the riuer. In theſe troubles was the Realme of Nauarre, when this young King, Francis Phœbus, came to the Crowne, in danger vpon such like occasions, to haue the kings of Castile attempt some thing to his preiudice, as well thorough the euill offices of the chiefe of the Factions, as by the superfluous duties of the Captaines of the frontiers, who to bee accounted good and profitable seruants, do oftentimes draw their masters into vniust quarrels, contrarie to their owne minds and dispositions.

28
Castile.
Parliament at Toledo.

Consultation touching the reueuion of the royall reuenue.

The Court of Castile remayned yet at Toledo, in the which cittie in the beginning of the year, one thousand, four hundred, eightie, the kings had called a Parliament: there the Deputies of the citties, who were accustomed to haue voyces, hauing well weighed and considered the disposition of the royall reuenue, which was alienated to particular persons, in recompences, perpetual rents, superfluous gifts, and other such like wastes, which were not well digested, did craue reformation thereof, and demanded to haue those things which had beene giuen from the Crowne, to be restored to the same: and they were the more instant therein, because they did fore-see, that if the kings did not looke to it, necessitie would constrain them, to seeke money in another nature, and to charge the people with new tributes and taxes.

The matter being consulted on by the kings, the Cardinall of Spaine, and by other Prelates, Lords, and Knights, it was determined, that regard should bee had to the peoples admonishment: but concerning the manner how, the opinions were diuerſe: some thought it fit, that whatsoever had beene alienated, should be vnited againe: others were of opinion, to call that onely in question which had beene euill employed: others sayd, that no distinction ought to be made in that point, but either to take all, or leaue all. Vpon this diuersitie of opinions, the Kings knew not what to resolve; but wrote their letters to the great Lords of Spaine to come to Toledo to giue their opinions concerning D that businesse, and if some of them could not come thither in person, that they should set downe in writing, what they thought was fit to be done, and to send it. The most part of them thought it requisite, that the whole reuenuen of the Crowne should be reuited.

Whereupon the Cardinall did secretly aduise the Kings, to make this difference in the matter: namely, to take away from those vpon whom the late King Henry had bestowed anything, that is to say, from the Lords and Knights which had beene the cause of the troubles, and had followed the Prince Don Alphonso: and not to mention those gifts which they themselves had giuen vnto such as had serued them. In these difficulties the Kings made this conclusion: That all those who had gifts, reuenues, and other such like E penſions out of the ordinarie reuenue of the Crowne, should by a certaine prefixed time penſions out of the ordinarie reuenue of the Crowne, should by a certaine prefixed time come and shew cause, how and wherefore they had obtained such graunts: and Friar Fernand of Talauera was appointed to search out the truth, and set downe an order, vpon whose good conscience and integrity, all men reposed great trust, and to satisfie euery man according vnto right and reason, who with other assistants did so order the matter, as hee brought backe three millions of reuenues into the kings coffers, and diuers men had their graunts confirmed, others were cut off in part, others had all taken from them, and others enjoyed their penſions during their liues. The Estates were likewise very much buſied about other matters, and euery day was a Councell held, in ſeuerall chambers: one was for the State, another for the administration of iustice, another for the affaires of Arragon and Sicill, another for the businesſes of the commons, and for the iurisdiccions of the Hermandades or brotherhoods, and the fift and last, for the treasure and royall reuenue.

At the same time iustice, which had a long time beene banished out of Spayne, was called home againe and reuerenced, and diuers wicked persons punished, among whom A Hernand

A Hernand Alarcon, the familiar friend and instigator of the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, a seditious and turbulent person, was beheaded, by means of which example, euery man submitted himselfe to law, and framed himselfe to a ciuill and honest life: then did the tyrannies of great men cease, the thefts and robberies of their followers were suppressed, in such sort, as the fields were as safe as good townes, those things which were vsurped were restored to the right owners: the seates of iustice were well ordered, and diuers good lawes and Edicts were made.

It was there enacted, that the Iewes and Moores in townes and citties, should dwell in streetes and places by themselves. All Noblemen were forbidden to carrie Guards about with them, to place Crownes vpon their shields and armes, or to haue vsfers to carrie maces or rodde before them, vnlesse they were Magistrates, nor to vse titles in their letters, belonging to Princes and Soueraigne Lords: And for that the Kings felt their consciences burthened with the death of many poore people, who had followed them in their last warres, whose widowes and children were in great necessitie, they appointed a summe of twentie millions of Marauidis to be distributed vnto such people by Friar Hernand of Talauera, as he should thinke it meete and conuenient, thinking by laying this charge vpon him, to discharge themselves.

Charity of K.
Fernand and Queen Iſabel.

In this assembly of the Estates in the moneth of May, the Infant Don Iohn was, according to the custome of Spayne, sworn vnto, as Prince of the Asturia's, and heire to the C Kingdomes of Castile and Leon, in the presence of the Prelats and Lords, whose names follow: The Cardinall Don Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza, Arch-bishoppe of Siuill, and withall, Bishoppe of Siguença: Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, Bishoppe of Palence, Friar Alphonso of Burgos, Bishop of Cordoua, with others of the Clergie. For the Nobilitie and State militarie, Don Alphonso of Cardegna, Master of Saint Iames, Don Pero Fernandes de Velasco, Constable of Castile, and Earle of Haro: Don Alphonso Henriques great Admirall of Castile, and the Kings Vnkle: Don Pero Aluarez Oſorio, Marquis of Aforga, and Earle of Tranſtamara: Don Aluaro de Mendoza, Earle of Calſtro: Don Lorenzo Suarez de Mendoza, Earle of Crugna: Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, Don Diego Lopes of Estuniga, Earle of Miranda: Don Fernand Aluarez of Toledo, D Earle of Oropesa, Don Gutierre de Sotomayor Earle of Benalcazar: Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Earle of Ledesma, Don Diego Fernandes of Quignones, Earle of Luna, Don Iohn de Ribera, Lord of Montemayor, Don Almar Peres of Guzman, Lord of Saint Eulalia: Don Gutierre of Cardegna, great Commander of Leon, with diuers others of name and place: For the third estate, the Deputies of the Citties on this side, and beyond the mountains, did take the accustomed oath, to wit, for old Castile, Burgos, Leon, Segobia, Auila, Soria, Zamora, Toro, and Salamanca: and for the other part, Toledo, Guadaluja, and Cuenca: and for Andalusia, Siuill, Cordoua, and Iacen, and the Cittie of Murcia for that Countrey: Diuers Lords likewise of the Realme Arragon were present at this solemnitie, as Don Raymond Bishoppe of Vrgell, and Don Philip of Arragon E bastard-sonne to the late Prince Charles, Nephew to the King, and cousin germaine to Prince Iohn.

At this assembly, Don Andrea de Cabrera, and Donna Beatrice of Bouadilla his wife were created Marquises of Moya, with graunt of twelue hundred vassals neere to Segobia for the good seruices which they had done to the kings Don Ferdinand, and Donna Iſabella, at whose table, the more to honour them, they did eate, the same day. The Parliament or assembly of States being ended, the Court came to Medina del campo, where they began to take great paines to haue the ordonances of the Estates executed, and put in practise, vpon the vsurpations, tyrannies, quarrels, and enmities which were past. In the same towne a knight, whose name was Aluar Ianes of Lugo, was put to death, who being courteous to adde to his owne great wealth the goods of a certaine Citizen, hired a certaine Notarie or Scriuener to make some false and counterfeit contracts, and to the end the deceit might not be knowne, hee fourth-with payed him his hire, cutting his throat, and burying him secretly in the back-side of his owne house: the which murder was discouered by the diligent inquirie of the poore widow, whose husband was neuer scene abroad, since hee was scene to go into the Knights house.

Prince Iohn
sworne vnto
with great solemnitie.

A gentleman gentle and civill.

This Gentleman was taken; conuicted, and beheaded notwithstanding his great friends A and kindred, who offered fortie thousand Duckets for to saue his life, which was a great summe in those dayes, which sundrie of the Councel wished the Kings to take. but these Princes being great lusticers, would not hearken to it: but the Knight was executed according to his desires.

King Fernand
and Queene Isabels zealous of iustice.

The yeare 1481. the Kings departed from Medina, and did take leaue the one of the other for a certaine time, the Queene went to Vailladolid, and the King made a voyage into Arragon with intent to haue the like oath made, there to his son Prince John, as the States of Castile had done at Toledo, and to order the State of his owne patrimoniall Kingdome, as also to demaund a certaine subsidie of money of his subiects there.

29
Nauarre.

The King being at Sarragossa, the Cardinall of Foix, and his brother Don James, Vn- B kles to the young King Francis Phœbus of Nauarre, came thither to him, to beseech him to ayde him with forces and meanes to suppress his audacious subiects, which did tur- bles the peace of his Kingdome, who contemning his youth, did commit infinite ty- rannies there, whom king Fernand did most louingly receiue as his Nepheues, sonnes to Queene Leonora his sister, and did promise concerning their demaunds, to performe the office of a Christian Prince, friend, and neere kinsman to the young king. During his a- boade at Sarragossa, the Marshall of Nauarre, who was at Tudela, had ordinarie intelli- gence with diuers Castilian Lords, some of whom knowing their masters will, did be- ginne to treat of meanes for the pacification of the factions of Beaumont and Gram- C mont, by whom the kingdome was spoiled. Amongst those which did most earnestly employ themselves therein, was a Friar, Preacher to king Fernand, whose name was A- barca, who dealt in such sort, as hee agreed vpon a marriage betwixt Philip of Nauarre the Marshall, and a daughter of the Earle Lewis of Lerin, which he thought would bee a meanes, that these two Lords would forget all former hatred, and become heartie and affectionate friends, by whose example, the rest of the factions would do the like, but the poore Friar was deceyued in his hope: for those of the Grammontois faction, rejecting this marriage, as hurtfull to their side, and fearing to lose so mighty a Captaine, did so preuayle with the Marshall Philip, as notwithstanding that matters were in such forward- nesse, as neither of the parties could go backe with honour and credit, the Marshall ne- D uertheless refused that alliance, and went wholly backe from his former promises: whereat the Earle of Lerin being extremely enraged, and being of a haughtie and proud spirit, was sore reuenged, by killing the Marshall, as hee rode from Sanguessa to Villa-franca to speake with Don John de Ribera, the Earle hauing attended for him vpon the way, as well for to chastise his lightnesse and inconstancie, as for ialousie that hee had, concerning the businesse that the Marshall went about in conferring with that Ca- stilian, doubting some treason as well towards himselfe as the kingdome, like to that of Viana which he still remembered, and could by no meanes forget.

The Estates of Nauarre at
Tafalla.

In this manner, the father and the sonne, both of them Marshalls of the Realme of Nauarre, did perish by one selfe same hand: in which Office Peter of Nauarre succeeded, who E was younger brother to Philip, and the fourth of that family, who had held the same di- gnitie. The Constable Pedro de Peralta was at the same time out of the Realme, who ha- uing with great labour obtained absolution from the Pope, for the murder committed on the person of Don Nicholas of Echaurri, Bishop of Pampelona, did publicly ac- knowledge his fault in the cathedrall Church of Valencia, and liued not long after, lea- uing one onely daughter who was called Ioane of Peralta, heire of his house, who was wife to Don Tristo Carrillo of Acugna, sonne to the Arch-bishop of Toledo, of whom we haue often spoken in this Historie.

Bishop of Pam-pelona (being by
D. Pedro de
Peralta.

This house of Peralta, descended from the royall stocke of Nauarre, and by the death of Pedro de Peralta, the office and dignitie of Constable ended in that family, the F successors whereof were called Earles of Saint Stephen, and great Chamberlaines to the Kings of Nauarre. Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, entering into that Office was af- terward dispossessed thereof, and the Constableship fell since to Don Alphonso, grand- child to Pedro de Peralta, the heires of whose house, in processe of time, were called Mar- quis of Salces, a towne in Nauarre.

Marquis of Salces.

Ciuiil

A Ciuiil warres spoyling after this manner the poore Kingdome of Nauarre, the young Kings vnclcs returned into the Realme, accompanied with diuers Lords and Knights of the King of Castiles Court, who promised them that if by faire meanes, they could not bring the Kings rebellious subiects to his obedience, the which hee wished them in any case to trie, that he would then furnish him with men, munition and money for the warres: these Lords being come to the towne of Tafalla, they did forthwith assemble the generall Estates, by vertue of a commission which they had from the King, the Cardinall and Lord James of Foix promising free and sure access and safe conduct to all men.

The Estates of Nauarre at Tafalla.

B The Deputies of the three Estates of the Kingdome being assembled, and hauing vn- derstood by the Cardinall the cause why they were come into Nauarre, whereunto were ioyned the French King Lewis the eleuenths letters, which did exhort the Nauar- rois to continue obedient to their King, and to acknowledge and serue him as faithfull subiects ought to doe, prouiding thereby, for the welfare, rest and quiet, of their coun- try: they did all with one generall consent make answer, that the Lords and people of Nauarre, did neuer meane to forsake their obedience towards Francis Phœbus the young King, whom they did acknowledge for their natural and lawfull Prince, but that on the contrary they had euer till now bene iealous and fearful, in regard of his youth and absence from the Realme, least some stranger should haue made himselfe

C Maister thereof, and therefore they did no lesse desire his coming then himselfe, and they humbly besought him to make hast as a thing most necessary: and if his coming had bene hindred by meanes of the ambition and tyranny of a few priuate persons, they gaue him to vnderstand, that it was to the great griefe of others, and in no sort occasioned by common consent; therefore they intreated him to come in a lucky ho- wer, seeing they were ready to receiue and honour him, accordingly as it did become them. The Cardinall and his brother vnderstanding so pleasing and desired an answer, did forthwith write thereof to the young King Francis Phœbus, and to King Fernand his great vncl. And because whatsoever was done, was to no purpose vnlesse those two great houses of the Earle of Lerin and the Marshall Don Pedro were reconciled,

D the Cardinall did vse the best meanes hee could to make them friends: but by reason of their inueterate quarrels hee found matter enough whereon to set his iudgement and industry a worke, and also incredible resistance against his brothers authority and his owne, so as diuers times they were in despaire of the matter: neuertheless, knowing that by perseverance, all difficulties are surmounted, and that in such holy and laudable actions we ought to vse our best endeavors, they laboured so earnestly therein, as in the end they thought that they had wholly reconciled them. And for a greater and more strict band of this alliance, this assembly of the Estates being in the time of Lent, the Cardinalls would needs haue the Constable and the Marshall to receiue the Sacrament together, in an hostie parted betwixt them in the Monastery of St. Sebastian in Tafalla.

Perseuerance
ouer-cometh
all difficulties.

E But as the heart of man is oftentimes different from the outward shew, so this reconcil- iation prooued but feigned and counterfeit; for notwithstanding promises, oaths, and all respect to Religion, which are oftentimes but masks to euill intents, the Earle of Lerin thinking with these ceremonies to haue sufficiently secured his aduersary, did determine to kill him vpon the first proffered occasion, perswading himselfe that if he could dis- patch this man, as hee had done his father and brother in time before, that then in Nauarre, hee should haue no more great enemies left to make head against him. There- fore vpon the very next day after their reconciliation which was good Friday, he hauing intelligence that the Marshall rode from Tafalla towards Tudela, or else to the Mona- stery of Oliua, hee came with a great troupe vnder the hill of Agnorba and there lay in

Feigned reconciliation betwixt the Earle of Lerin and the Marshall
of Nauarre

F ambush intending to assaile him on the sodaine as hee should passe that way. The Mar- shall who feared no such matter, came riding in the company of the Earle of Saint Steuens the Constable of Peraltas successor with their traine, and being come neere to the place where his death was prepared, Gods will was that hee had some inckling of the Earles treachery, wherevpon on a sodaine hee galloped backe againe as fast as hee could, being so hardly pursued by his enemy, as without the assistance of Arnaud

Treachery of
the Earle of Lerin against the Marshall.

Gouernor

gouverneur of Vnqul, who speedily thrust him into a Church, he had beene there slaine. A
The Earle being made that the Marshall had escaped, did the very same day execute his furie vpon other Gramontois, for with his owne hand hee slew Leon de Garro the barnard, the Arch-priest Mendigorria left John de Pelex of Medran for dead, with diuerse others slaine and hurt, and then returned home to his house: not long after that, certaine of the family of Artieda, hauing murdered some of the house of Ayane, the murderers were upheld and received by the Constable the Earle of Beaumont, by reason whereof, those of the family of Ayane, who had euer followed the Beaumonts faction, reuelted from their side to those of Grammont. These things are set downe by some, to bee more likely to haue beene done after the assembly of the estates, and they say, B that it is not to bee beleueed that the Constable would so much forget himselfe, as to commit such an act the next day after his reconciliation, which was made in so religious a manner, especially seeing the Cardinall and his brother were in the realme, and the estates of the kingdom there assembled, and they rather beleuee, that this quarrell was renewed a long time afterward in the reigne of Queene Catherine, vpon some new wrongs offered betwixt these Lords.

The peace of Castile, according to the determination of the States at Toledo, was virtuously procured by Queene Isabell, who in her husbands absence remained at Valiodolit, being accompanied and counselled by the Cardinall of Spaine, the Earle of Benauent and others; by whose aduise were sent into Galicia, to order the affaires of C that Prouince, which had beene greuously shaken by the fore-past tempests, Don Ferdinand d'Acugna a good and a virtuous Knight, sonne to the Earle of Buendia, with title of Gouvernor, vnto whom the Licenciat Garcilopez de Chinchilla of the Kings councill, and a man of great integrity, was ioyned in quality of Corrigidor, or Iudge, who found much to be reformed there; for diuerse tyrants oppressed their neighbours, vsturped the temporall and spirituall patrimony and reuenues of the Church, not caring for God, the King, nor Iustice, nor acknowledging any superiority, and did keepe backe the Kings tribute. The cities of Lugo, Orense, Mondogedo, nor the townes of Buero and Corunna were exempted from such calamities, in regard whereof the Gouverneur and the Corrigidor, accompanied with two hundred horse, went to the city of S. James, D there to make their residence, and to begin to order the affaires according to the forme of law: The inhabitants of Saint James seeing their company so small, were afraide that they were too weake to take in hand to bridle so many tyrants as were in that coun-trei, did make some difficultie to let them into the city: but at the last being satisfied by the reasons of the Licenciat, they opened their gates, and promised to their power to aide and assit them to execute iustice: wherefore they began to fall to worke, and they made such executions, without partialitie or respect of persons, as they were not afraide to strike off the head of the Marshall Pero Parde, who had committed infinite mischiefs, so as in lesse then three months, more then one thousand five hundred persons, attainted with notorious crimes worthy of death, went out of the countrey of Galicia: as they E Commissioners did raze downe to the ground diuerse strong houses, which serued for places of retreat to theues and robbers: by means of which executions, euery one did acknowledge his dutie, and there were many, who without any constraint by iustice, did restore that which they held of other mens, by means whereof Don Ferdinand d'Acugna and Garcilopez de Chinchilla got much honor and credit.

This yeare, fiftie ships of warre, with men and munition, were set forth out of Biscay, Guipulcoa and Castile, vnder the title of warre against the Turkes, wherevnto the people of Biscay did contribute; nor preiudicing their priuiledges and exemptions, onely for the present occasion of so holy a warre, the Armie met together at Laredo, and was sent into Sicill, vnder the conduct of Don Francisco Henriques, sonne to the Admirall F of Castile, and serued at the taking of Otranto, which the Turkes had taken from Don Ferdinand the bastard of Arragon, who at the same time reigned at Naples: Before the Armie departed from Laredo, the standards and banners of the ships were blessed, Don John de Ortega Pouruoier of Villafranca, singing a sollemne masse: then they sailed alongst the coast of Spaine, and ioyned with other twenty vessels that came from Galicia, so as
the

A the whole army of Castile consisted of three score and tenne ships gallantly rigged and furnished, who sayling towards Otranto perceived the army of Portugall to be there before them. By this succor the towne was recovered from the Turkes, who yeelded it vp vpon the newes of the death of their Emperour Mahamet, which happened at the same time. The Turkes being gonne forth of Italy, and the suspicion of other enterprises ceasing, the Spanish and Portugall ships returned home into their owne country.

The first acts of the new Inquisition in Spaine were at that time so sharpe and violent, as this yeere 1481. Don Pero Gonçales de Mendoza Cardinall of Spaine vpon the B extreme complaints which the Conuerts did make, by reason of their vniust persecutions were enforced to take some milder and gentler course: for there were already more then three thousand house-holds destroyed and rooted out, onely in Siuill, and the Diocesse thereof. For these causes the Cardinall and other Prelats met together to moderate the cruelty and violence of the pitiless Inquisitors. Then friar Thomas of Torquemada, a Iacobin, was chosen chiefe inquisitor: who by the Kings leauie did appoint diuers Iudges in the Prouinces of Spaine, which by the Popes authority did enquire of euery ones faith and manners. This iurisdiction hath bene often times since then amplified and reformed vntill that the tribunalls and seates were established in manner following. Valiodolit, and Calaoorra on that side of the C mounts towards Burgos, and Toledo and Cuenca on the other side, Murcia in her owne iurisdiction: Siuill and Cordoua in Andalusia: and Erena in Extremadura: then after the conquest of Granada in the same city.

The Inquisition was successfullie received into Arragon, at Saragossa, and Valencia, and at Barcelona for Cattalonia: All which Prouinces are twelue in number. Na-uarre answereth to Calaoorra, the seate whereof was transported to Logroño for better ease and commodity. The knowledge of these Iudges Inquisitors did at the same time chiefly extend to the Iewes; and Moores, which were conuerted, and yet neuer-thelesse did secretly adhere to their old sects: then to heretikes, and such as were reuolted from the Catholike faith, to Magicians, Blasphemers, and those that were attainted D with the sinne against nature. The generall Inquisition remayning at Court neere to the Kings person did rule and were chiefe ouer all these other Tribunalls. At the same time Pope Sixtus the fifth, did allow and authorize all that the Cardinall and his Coun-cell had decreed concerning that matter, and he did confirme the election of friar Thomas of Torquemada of the order of the Preachers, and Prior of the Monastery of Santa Cruz in Segobia, vnto whom Diego de Merla the Assitiant of Siuill, and Pero Martinez Camagno the Kings Secretary were ioyned as coadiutors. The first effect of the Inquisition after that it was ordained, was to set downe an edict that all Heretikes and Apostataes should appeare, and re-unite themselves to the Church of Rome, acknowledging their offences: More then seuentene thousand persons, did appeare E at this commaundement, who were enioyned what to say and doe; then they proceeded against the obstinate and rebellious, more then two thousand of them were burned and their goods confiscated, and taken from their children and heires: the same sentence was executed vpon those that were absent and dead, digging vp their bones and burning them: in such sort as the Inquisition continuing thus rigorously, great numbers did leaue Castile, and with-drew themselves into the Kingdomes of Nauarre and Portugall; others went into France, England and to other farre Countries.

Let vs now returne vnto the Court, which was then at Valiodolit where the Queene of Castile was accompanied after the accustomed manner with a greater F traine of Ladies and Gentlewomen, the Nobility (who in these latter times giue themselves wholly to the exercise of armes, and doe for the most part contemne all other course of life which causeth them and not without cause to be esteemed of all men as people very vnprofitable in time of peace) did in this Court thinke vpon nothing else then for to serue and court the Ladies and Gentlewomen, and gae themselves to such other like vaine and idle pleasures, accustomed in Princes Courts, and most of

March recommended by the Earle of Arden.

30
Castile.
The decrees of the Kings
executed.

Justice established in Galicia.

31 Spanish Army
in Sicilie.

Rigor of the Spanish Inquisition mediated.

Friar Thomas of Torquemada da.

Power of the Inquisition.

Shame and rigorous executions of the Inquisition.

of all in that of Spaine from whence did spring such fruites as vice doth produce, A namely quarrels and dishonour and losse, which euills had almost spread themselves from the particular to the generall, corrupting the publike peace, by troubles, seditions and mutinous wars.

Quarrell betweene D. Frederike Henriques and Don Ramir Nugnes
de Guzman.

Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, sonne to Don Goncal de Guzman Lord of Torall, being in an evening in talke with Donna Maria Manuel in the Queenes presence Cham- ber, was interrupted in his speech by Don Frederike Henriques eldest sonne to the Ad- mirall, who either thorough the insolency of his youth, or else to content Don Gut- tierre de Sotomajor his brother-in-law, who made loue to that Lady, and was loath to haue an other man walke in his pursues, caused Don Ramir to arise as hee fate by B her, making as though he would haue gonne by him to haue spoken with Don Marine Zapate, and sodainly fate downe in his place by her, whereat Don Ramir beeing offen- ded, beganne to murmur against Don Frederike, so as they threatened to baltinado one another, and fell to bitter and reproachfull speeches: in such manner as Don Ramir Nugnes his honour was greatly interested: for Don Frederike going forth of the Queenes lodging called him drunkard, and base fellow, with many such like bitter termes. The Queene hauing notice of this quarrell, commaunded both of them to depart forth of the pallace, then shee confined Don Frederike to the Admirall his fathers lodg- ings and committed Don Ramir Nugnes to the keeping of Garci Laso de la Vega, Mai- ster of the Hall, vntill it were knowne who was in the fault, as also to keepe them from C hurting one an other in action as they had done a little before in words. Hauing vnderstood afterwards that Don Frederike had committed the greatest insolency, her will was to haue them still to keepe their Chambers till such time as shee had made them friends.

Notwithstanding which commaundement of the Queenes Don Frederike went a- broad to a tournament which was held the next day following, by reason whereof the Queene was extremely moued against him and the Admirall his father, and told them that if they went about to vse their power against Don Ramir Nugnes, hee should finde those to take his part as would not suffer him to susteine any wrong or iniury at their hands. The Admirall finding the Queene to bee much displeased, did beginne D to humble himselfe, and did assure her that Don Ramir needed not to feare any wrong either from himselfe, his sonne, or any of their followers; wherewith the Queene being contented did permit Don Ramir freely to goe out and come into the palace, acquaint- ing him with what the Admirall had promised her, bidding him to relie vpon her word, and to walke abroade vnder her royall safe-guard and protection. Don Ramir was well assured by her Princely and comfortable words, and. Don Frederike had saluted him, and talked familiarly with him and met diuerse times for the space of three daies together, yet notwithstanding this outward shew of reconciliation, Don Ramir was vpon a day baltinadged as hee walked in the streetes by certaine persons vnknowne vnto him, who presently after hauing their horses ready, galloped away.

The Queene beeing aduertized of this disgrace offered to Don Ramir, contrary to the Admirals promise, and her owne royall assurance, did rigorously pursue the Ad- mirall, and did not leaue (hauing seized vpon two of the chiefeft places that hee had name- ly the castle of Simancas and Iosecco) vntill shee had his sonnes person in her power, saying that those bl- ues lighted vpon her selfe, and that shee had felt them, and that shee would know whether it were the manner of Spaine, that Kings should bee so contented and despised by their subiects. The Admirall notwithstanding that hee was the Kings prouince, was constrained to deliuer his sonne Don Frederike to the Queene; with pro- mise that he should receiue no harme in his person, who by the Queenes commaunde- ment (who would not see him) was sent prisoner to the castle of Arealo. Don Ramir F hauing receiued this disgrace went to Torall with an intent to bee reuenged in a most rigorous manner, and was very glad to heare of his Aduersaries imprisonment: but nor contenting himselfe with the right which the Queene meare to doe him, he inuent- ed meanes how to bee reuenged on him with his owne hands, wherefore diuers nights together he caused the castle of Arealo to bee watched whether that he might finde any

Effects of immoderate
colours.

A any meanes to enter the same, and to kill Don Frederike, who was to narrowly garded: so as hatred daily encreasing in Don Ramir, who not being able to execute that which his choller had pretended, hee did resolute to kill the Admirall Don Alphonso Henriques, father to his aduersary, and in the same minde he rode secretly towards the Court, whe- ther hee had first of all sent Aluaro de Valderas one of his confederats to obserue the Ad- miralls actions, and to espy a fit time when hee might execute his designe, that hee might aduertize him of the time and place: Aluaro de Valderas cunning enough in other matters, communicated the businesse to Garci Franco, reposing trust in him, be- cause that his eldest sonne had married not long before Don Ramir Nugnes sister, but he found himselfe deceiued, for Garci Franco did forthwith aduertize the Admirall there- of, to the end that hee might stand vpon his guard: therefore Don Ramir lost his la- bour, and had no other recompence for that painfull journey, but onely daunger to bee drowned, as hee did inconsiderately and hastily passe ouer a riuer neere to Saldaigne. The Admirall did not faile to complaine that the Queene, how that, notwithstanding they were vpon termes of law, Don Ramir had praized against his life: this was done in the presence of the Cardinall of Spaine, who afterward pursued the matter in his behalfe: wherevpon shee did write to Don Ramir Nugnes, commaunding him by no means to attempt any thing against the persons of the Admirall, his kinsfolkes and seruants; and Pedro Mercado, who brought the Queenes letters, did demand letters C of assurance from him to performe that which the Queene commaunded him. Don Ramir answered the messenger that hee would fend his brother to the Court with his answer, and hauing consulted therevpon with his friends and kinsfolkes, within a few daies after, hee did write to the Queene that hee did assure the Admirall and all his fol- lowers vntill her returne from Arragon, whither shee was then going, and for five and twenty daies after her returne, the which did content the Queene, who gaue the Admi- rall that letter.

In the meane time Don Frederike was deliuered out of the castle of Arealo, and confined into Sicill, whether he was to haue gonne howe soeuer, to marry the Coun- tesse and heire of Modica, who was one of the greatest Ladies in the Island; and of D whom Queene Isabella in time made more account, then of any other whatsoever, and it is reported that before King Fernand was married to her, his father King John had thought to haue married him to this Countesse of Modica. When Don Ramir vnderstood what they ment to doe with his Aduersarie, hee thought that the punishment was not sufficient for the offence which hee had committed, therefore hee sent to beseech the Queene, that it might please her to permit him to endeavour to repaire his lost ho- nour, and reputation, by taking vengeance on Don Frederike, or else to grant them the single combate against him now whilest shee held him in her power: The Queene an- swered that these combats were no matters belonging to women, and that therefore he should content himselfe till the King were returned, who would see that right should E be done vnto him, and that his honour and reputation should bee maintained. Don Frederike went into Sicill, passing by Saragossa, and accomplished his marriage. Don Ramir Nugnes being continually solicited by the spirit of reuenge, perceiving that hee could haue none other remedy, did pursue his former enterprize against the Admirall Don Frederikes father, and was with great difficulty contained by his friends and kins- folks from killing of him, but at the last hee determined onely to crie quittance with him, and to entertaine him with baltinadges as they had serued him; the which hee ex- ecuted after the Queenes returne from Arragon; so soone as the five and twenty daies were expired within the which terme hee had promised not to touch him, the Court be- ing at Medina del Campo; hee assailed the Admirall as hee came out of the Queenes F house in the company of the Marquis of Astorga, which being done Don Ramir fled away hauing men and horses ready in the streete and at the gates to further his escape, and tooke the ready way towards Tordesillas, the bridge of the which place vpon Duero hee passed by night, the gate being opened to him by one that had beene sometime his seruant, and as then did serue the porter and kept the keyes. When he was passed ouer and the bridge locked againe, they tooke the keyes from the poore fellow and threw them

D Frederike
Henriques
confined in a Sicill where hee married with the Countesse of Modica.

them into the river, fearing to bee pursued by the Queenes people, and by the breach of a day he arrived at Villalobos, where he changed horses and kept on for his greater safety the way of Benauent though it were the longest, and passing the bridge of Castro Gengalo, he turned on his left hand towards Saint Ciprians Church into the which he entered, as triumphing of his victory, with his vnkle Don Pedro de Guzman, and his brother Don Pedro Nugnes de Guzman, who waited for him there, and from thence they came al together to Torall, the which place they beganne to fortifie fearing that the Admirall, who was a great Lord, and the Queene likewise would send thither to beseege him. Ramir Nugnes leauing his vnkle and his brother at Torall, came to Leon, where diuerse of his friends met him, reioicing with him for what he had done. It is reported that entering into the Church of Saint Dominie in the same city, where diuers of his predecessors were buried, after that he had said his prayers he said openly before all men, that since the time he had bene disgraced, hee durst not come into that Church, being ashamed to be found in a place where the memories and remembrances of so many illustrious and honourable persons did remaine: but hauing now recovered his owne honour, his fathers, and that of their whole family, he was boldly come to visit them. Hauing afterward visited his mother, and his betrothed Lady Donna Maria de Quignones youngest daughter to the Earle of Luna, and tarried a while in the city, he withdrew himselfe by his vncles counsell to the castle of Auiaados, where he told him that he should be in greater safety then at Torall. Now after that this outrage was committed at Medina del Campo, the Marquis of Astorga, being present thereat, did enforme the Queene who commaunded Alphonso Osorio to pursue Don Ramir Nugnes and his people with fifty horse, who hauing rode all that night and the next day without finding any of those whom he fought for, he came and lodged at Villademor, a place not farre distant from Torall, where afterward, other captaines and souldiers sent from the Queene did meet together, who made a shew as if they would beseege the towne. The Bachelor La Font, came thither likewise to commaund Pedro de Guzman in the Queenes name to yeeld the place, hee receiued this answer, that if Don Ramir Nugnes had done any thing for the recovery of his honour, it was not a fault that did deserue to haue him spoiled of his patrimony and goods, lest him by his predecessors, therefore he besought the Queene to proceed in this businesse by order of law, and if that Don Ramir should be found guilty, then to punish him: with these speeches they entertained La Font, and gained time to the end that Don Ramir might haue leisure to fortifie himselfe. Whilest La Font went to the Court, the souldiers did much hurt in the country neere to Torall, and provoked the Inhabitants and souldiers which were within the towne, to come forth and skirmish with them, albeit that Don Pedro de Guzman with-held them from so doing, as much as in him lay: for hee would not giue that aduantage to Don Ramires aduertaries, so say that those of Torall had fought against the Queenes forces, who commaunded Alphonso de Quintanilla to vse all fit means that hee could to take the towne and castle of Torall, Alphonso hauing demanded to speake with Don Pedro de Guzman and Pero Nugnes his Nephew, acquainted them with the Queenes resolution, exhorting them not to delay the time till they brought the canon, they answered that they would in no sort shew themselves rebellious to the Queenes commandement, but they only entreated that Don Ramir might be proceeded against by the ordinary means of Iustice, which being graunted they were ready not only to yeeld vp Torall, but the castle of Auiaados in like manner, and namely if need required to put Don Ramires person into the hands of the Duke of Medina Sidonia in hostage, orto Don Gomes Sueres de Figueroa Earle of Fertia: the which was agreed vpon betwixt them and signed by a Notarie, and a truce made betwixt the beseegers and beseegeed whilest that Alphonso de Quintanilla might goe and come from the Court. The Queene was at the same time gone to Cordoua, wherefore Alphonso being come to Valadolid, and hauing conferred with the Admirall, sent the dispatch to Cordoua to the Queene, who appointed for depositor of D. Ramires lands and person the Earle of Fertia who had married D. Constance, D. Ramires Aunts daughter he accepted it vpon condition, that he should be aduertized fure and twenty daies before the sentence should bee pronounced, and that the Kings should promise

33
Quarrell betwixt D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman and D. Fendric Henriquez.

A promise him by writing, not to demaund Don Ramires person during the time of the processe, for he would assure him whilest he was in his power: On the other side, Don Ramir lent to the King of Portugall to know, whether that if it should happen, that a sentence should be pronounced against him which might touch his life and honour, hee would permit him to come into his Kingdome and Court in safety. These things being graunted, Don Ramir was brought to the castle of the towne of Fertia, for greater surety, and there kept in prison, vntill his processe was ready to be iudged; and then the Kings according to their promise, did aduertize the Earle of Fertia thereof at the appointed time, who sent Don Ramir well accompanied into Portugall, where King Iohn the second of that name did then reigne, who entertained him very courteously, as shalbe hereafter declared.

Queene Isabella as hath bene said made a voyage into Arragon, and carried thither with her husband Iohn Prince of the Asturias, and was receiued into the city of Calatayub with great and magnificent triumph, whether the King came not long after, who at the same time was at Barcelona with the Lords and Deputies of the States of Arragon, by whom Prince Iohn was likewise sworne vnto and acknowledged for Prince of Girona, heire vnto Castile and Arragon, and true successor in these Kingdomes, the Kings in like manner did sweare and promise to maintaine the rights, priuiledges and exemptions of the country: That being done they went to Saragossa, where they made as triumphant an entry as at Calatayub. Thither was newes brought of the death of the great Turke Mahomet, of the succession of his sonne Bajazet in that Empire, and of the discord betwixt him and his brother Zemir, and also how that King Fernand of Naples had recovered the towne of Otranto which Acomat Bascia had taken from him the yeere before. For all which desired newes, the Kings yeelded thanks vnto God by generall processions after the accustomed manner. The Kings did in like manner assemble the Estates at Barcelona and Valencia, where the like others were made vnto Prince Iohn as next future heire: but touching the subsidies they demanded, it was impossible to obtaine any, and they were faine on the contrary to grant many things to the people, and in diuerse sorts to supply their wants, being but poore euer since the last warre that the Cartellans made against the King Don Iohn.

The States of Arragon sworne to Prince Iohn.

Hisier at Barcelona and Valencia.

D Don Iohn the second of that name, and 13. King of Portugall.

A About the same time died Alphonso King of Portugall at Sintra, who since the last warres betwixt him and Castile, had euer led a melancholy and discontented life: he lay sicke fure and twenty daies, and de ceased the three and fortieth yeere of his reigne, being of the age of nine and forty yeeres and seuen monethes: his body was buried with great solemnitie and funerall pompe in the royall Monastery of the battle, of the Order of the Friars preachers: the Catholike Kings remaying still at Barcelona did there celebrate his obsequies. After him reigned his sonne Iohn, father to D. Alphonso who did not succeed him, because he died before his father, as hereafter shalbe mentioned.

34
Portugal.

King Fernand hauing ordered the affaires of Arragon, Catalonia and Valencia, returned with the Queene his wife into Castile, where, during her absence, the Constable and the Admirall were appointed Viceroyes, who committed the Earles of Luna and Valence to prison, in regard of certaine tumults and seditions which they had raised in the Kingdome of Leon. The Court remaying at that time at Medina del Campo, happened, as hath bene herebefore declared the reuenge of D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman against the Admirall.

There arose at the same time a new contention betwixt the Kings of Castile and the Pope, wherein they shewed no want of courage. The Episcopall See of Cuenca was vacant by the de cease of the Bishop, Pope Sixtus gaue it to a Nephew of his borne in Genoa, Cardinall of the title of Saint George, without the knowledge or consent consent of the Kings, who being highly displeased that the Bishopricks and great benefices of Spaine should be possessed by strangers, against the ancient decrees of the Estates of the Kingdome, obserued from time to time, did hinder this Cardinall from taking possession of the Bishopricke, and gaue the Pope to vnderstand how preiudiciall it might be to the Realmes of Spaine, whereof the Pope making no account and continuing in his former purpose, the Kings commanded all their subiects that were in the Court of Rome, to depart from thence, and made protestations to the Pope that they would procure a generall Councell to bee called to redresse these and other such like disorders.

35

Gggg

The Pope who abhorred that more then any thing in the world, sent a Gentleman of Genoa, whose name was Dominico Centurion for his Ambassador into Spaine, who being come to Medina del Campo, and crauing audience, it was refused him, and he was told from the Kings, that because their Ambassadors were euill intreated and contemned at Rome, they would not entertaine nor harken to the Popes, therefore he should doe well and wisely, speedily to depart from thence, and concerning his owne person, they would no farther assure it in their dominions, then whilest he could returne towards Italy. The Ambassador being amazed at this commandement, did forthwith reiect the name and priuiledge of an Ambassador, and besought them to hold him as their subiect, for he was borne in their Kingdome. The Kings in regard of this humillity, committed him prisoner to the fort of Medina, from whence soone after he was deliuered, by the means of the Cardinall of Spaine. When the Pope vnderstood what the Kings had done, hee was content to let them enjoy their ancient rights, and they made couenants and agreements together, by the which it was decreed, that the Kings of Spaines presentations to the Bishopricks, should from thenceforth bee admitted in the Court of Rome, and they should be bestowed vpon such as had well deserved of the Spanish common-wealth: and by this meanes it hath benee oftentimes seene that diuers good religious persons haue benee, against their willes, constrained to become Bishops, as Don Pedro de Maluenda, generall of the Order of Saint Ierome, who was enforced to take the Bishopricke of Coria, and Doctor Don Tello de Buendia that of Cordoua.

Before we end this booke, it shall not be amisse to returne to Nauarre where we left the Cardinall of Foix, and his brother James of Foix, much busied to ouer-rule the chiefe of the factions in that Kingdome. They hauing had an answer of the States such as they desired, and ordered the affaires of the country as well as they could, came backe into Arragon before King Fernand went thence, with whom hauing consuled, they concluded that it was expedient, that King Francis Phabus should come into his Kingdome, and enter it in armes and military Order as soone as conueniently he could, before the peoples mindes and affections should be changed by any occasion that might happen; wherefore as soone as they were returned into France, they declared to the King and to Donna Magdalene his mother, what they had effected, as well in Nauarre, as in Arragon, signifying vnto them that the chiefe hope consisted in diligence: wherefore they sodainely assembled their friends and seruants from all partes, and gathered together a thousand or fiftene hundred horse; and like number of footmen, with which forces, this young Prince, accompanied with his mother, and the Cardinall his vnckle entred into Nauarre, where hee was receiued by the Nobility and townes, without any difficulty or resistance at all, namely the Earle of Lerin albeit he was not pleased with his coming, did deliuer vp the city of Pampelona vnto him, considering that if he should doe otherwise, the young King had the King of Castile on one side, and the French King on the other, mighty Princes and his neere kinsmen, who would constrain him to doe his duty.

King Francis Phabus in the month of Nouember the yeere 1482. made his entrie into the City, where the three Estates were assembled, he was there crowned, and did giue and receiue the othes of fidelitie, and good government, in the Cathedrall Church after accustomed manner, in the presence of the Cardinall his vnckle, the Lords of his Kingdome, the Princess his mother accompanied with

A with Ladies and Gentlewomen, and by the Ambassadors of Castile, France, and from other potentates being at that time not above fiftene yeeres of age: and the same day and many daies after, tilts, turneys, and other royall feasts were there made in magnificent manner. These matters being ended, he went in person to visit the townes, cities and fortresses, as well to see the manner of the government of the country, as to receive the particular othes of the captaines and gouernors, to see iustice administered, and to make how firme and constant euery one was in his seruice: and the better to provide for the publike peace and quiet, he commanded proclamation to be made by sound of trumpet both in his owne Court and ouer the whole Kingdome, that no man vpon paine of death should any more vse the feditious names of Beaumont and Grammont. And the more to gratifie the Earle of Lerin and to binde him more strictly to his seruice, hee confirmed the office of high Constable vnto him which Peter de Peralta deceased had held in time before and gaue him moreouer Sarraa and other places which he had won from the Spaniards, Viana excepted, because it was the chiefe of the principallity, and the title of the eldest sonne of Nauarre. In the Cathedrall Church, where hee was crowned, he gaue gifts, and graunted priuiledges, namely to be free from lodging, the letters whereof were dated at Tafalla in the month of Ianuary, the same yeere: he did grautifie in like manner other Lords, Knights, Churches, Townes, and particular persons with such moderation and equiry, as all men did admire so great wildome in such young yeeres, and did praise God that had giuen so good a King vnto Nauarre: In all which matters, he was ruled by the wildome of the Princess his mother, of the Cardinall his vnckle, and other persons of State and experience which were in his Court and neere his person. Whilest in his nonage his mother the Princess did gouerne the Kingdome, shee vied these titles in her letters. We Magdalene daughter and sister to the French King, Princess of Viana, gouernor and protectresse of our deere and best beloued sonne Francis Phabus by the grace of God King of Nauarre &c. This Prince was surnamed Phabus because he was faire as the sunne among the starrs, and also in regard diuers of his race were of the same name. Diuers marriages were procured for him, but none was accomplished: for he died fiftene monthes after he was crowned, hauing but shewed himselfe to the world, and sodainely vanished in the prime of his youth. King Fernand his great vnckle, would haue married him to his second daughter Donna Isabe, who was since heiress to all his Kingdomes: but the Princess his mother following the counsell of King Lewis the eleuenth, who did not greatly affect the affaires of Castile, did hinder that match. The like hinderance was ministred by her and King Lewis in the marriage of his sister Catherine who was Queene of Nauarre and the Prince Don Iohn of Castile heiress to the same crowne: for King Lewis who had great deieignes in his head, did goe about to marry this King Francis Phabus to Donna Isabe the Nun at Coimbra the pretended Queene of Castile: and by that pretended right, and the forces of his owne Kingdome, to cast King Fernand and Queene Isabella out of the Realmes of Castile and Leon, and for euer to keepe the Earldome of Rossillon to himselfe, with other purposes which vanished into aire: and the better to effect what hee had determined sent Ambassadors into Portugall to King Alphonso, whose death happening this yeere with that of the King of Nauarres soone after, did quite frustrate these practises: to the which, King Iohn of Portugall, who succeeded his father Alphonso, would by no meanes harken.

The end of the two and twentieth Booke.

Gggg 2

THE

THE THREE AND TWENTYTH Booke of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 The beginning of the long warre of Granada against King Muley Albohacen.
- 2 Death of King Francis Phoebus. Marriage procured by the Kings of Castile for their sonne D. Iohn with Queene Catherine of Nauarre.
- 3 Continuance of the warre of Granada. Conquest of that great Canaries: Switzers hired for this warre against the Moores.
- 4 Causes of suspicion of King Fernand and Queene Isabella against the heire of Nauarre. Intelligence and practizes with the factious to get that Kingdom.
- 5 Continuance of the warre of Granada.
- 6 The reign of King Iohn the second of Portugall. Discovery of Manicongo: the King intitles himself Lord of Guiney: Conspiracies: Death of the dukes of Bragança and Visco, with other irragittall acts in the same Court.
- 7 Continuance of the warre of Granada against Muley Boabdellin the one and twentieth King of that Country: The Pope helpeth forward the warre of Granada: Politike acts of the Kings of Castile.
- 8 Christopher Columbus his first comming to the Court of Castile: his disposition and qualities.
- 10 Siege of Malaga.
- 11 Hermandades or brother-hoods: Inquisition in Arragon.
- 12 Iohn d' Albret, and Catherine of Nauarre the five and thirtieth in Order of the Kings of Nauarre: The vicount of Narbonne quarrels about the Earldome of Foix: Enterprises of Castile against Nauarre by meanes of the factious.
- 13 King Fernand's fauours towards Amand d' Albret: aide granted by him to the Princes and Lords confederate against the French King Charles the eight.
- 14 Death of the duke of Alua, and other Lords of Castile. Exploits done against the Moores.
- 15 Nauigations of the Portugalls into the Ocean sea: search and discovery of vnkowne lands, and great diligence of King Iohn of Portugall about these matters.
- 16 Treaties of marriage, and other domesticall acts in the Court of Castile, oppression of the Conuers.
- 17 Continuance of the warre against the Moores of Granada. Siege of Baça.
- 18 Masterhip of Calatrava incorporated to the Crowne of Castile, with other matters belonging

The Contents.

- A long to the same Order.
- 19 Pursute of the Moorish warre, Baça yeelded up.
- 20 Pursutes against Mahomet the Little, the last King of Granada, to dispossesse him of the same city, vnder colour of right.
- 21 Marriage of Prince Alphouso of Portugall with Donna Isabella the Infanta of Castile.
- 22 Siege of Granada, and yeelding up of the same city.
- 23 Politike acts of King Fernand and Queene Isabella of Castile.
- B 34 D. Alphouso of Portugall his pittifull death.

In this three and twintith Booke, for continuance of the Kings reigning in Spaine, mention is made of.

35. Iohn D' Albret, and Catherine his wife, King and Queene of Nauarre, himselfe the second of that name.

Gggg 3

THE

Qualities of King Muley Albohacen.

He warre which King Fernand began and ended against the Moores of Granado, was one of his most memorable acts: for the Kingdome of Granado did flourish more at that time, then it had done in many yeeres before, being full of men, riches and armor, and governed by one of the wisest and pollicke Kings that euer reigned ouer that Nation: namely Muley Albhacen, if hee had bene a little more faithfull, and lesse ambitious and proud, which qualities did plunge him into troubles, and miserable diuisions as well against his subiects in the bowels of his owne country as against the Castilians his neighbours. Hee had enioyed a long peace, and as it were with pride and brauing he pulled vp the assurance thereof by the rootes from the Kings of Castile, hauing freed and discharged himselfe from the tribute which his predecessors were accustomed to pay them. And albeit the same was greuous to King Fernand and Queene Isabella, which were magnanimous and impatient of all losse and diminution of their royall Estate: who besides that, were pricked forward as well by their owne zeale to Christian Religion; as by the perswasion of the Popes and Prelates to undertake the same warre: yet notwithstanding, the truce agreed vpon, the charge and discommodities of the warres which they had newly ended against the King of Portugall, the present confusion wherein the Realme of Castile was at the same time, did counsell them to waite for a fitter opportunity. Now when it pleased God (vnto whom all times and occasions are subiect) that this Mahometan superstition should take an end, and that this race of Moores should bee rooted out of Spaine by armes, seeing that other more conuenient meanes could not bee vsed by the Church, the warre which commenced constantly pursued against them, and wholly ended in the space of tenne yeeres, did beginne in this manner.

I
Nauarre.

King Muley Albhacen hauing bene aduertized that the city of Zahara was negligently kept by the Christians, and presuming vpon the truce, caused it to be taken in the night by scaladoe, together with the fort and castle; he carried away the men, cattraile, and all the riches that he could finde therein, and manned it with a good and strong garison of Moores. The taking thereof being knowne in Granado, one of their Philosophers which they call Alphagiques cried out publicly: Either mine Oracles deceiue mee, or the end of the ancient reigne of the Moores in Spaine is at hand: the which in deed came to passe, the surprising of this towne giuing King Fernand occasion to lay hand vpon this conquest, with all his forces and meanes, and with incredible perseverance: The newes that the truce was broken by the Moores being vnderstood at Medina del Campo where the Court then was, diuerse companies were dispatched to the frontiers of Murcia and Andaluzia, vnder the charge of Don Alphonso de Cardenaz Maister of Saint James, who lay in garison at Eccia, Don Roderigo Telles Giron Maister of Calatraua, remained at Iaen and others in other places, besides the ordinary garisons and forces of Don Pedro Henriquez Gouvernor generall of the frontiers of Andaluzia and assisted by Don Pedro Ponce de Leon Marquis of Cales, the Duke of Medina Sidonia and others: the King commaunded all of them to make sharpe warre in the country of Granado with fire and sword, the which they beganne to execute with all violence; for hauing ouer-runne and ruined a great part of the country, they did winne by the industry of Diego Merlo assistant of Siuill, the city of Alhama, as carelessly guarded by the Moores as Zahara had bene by the Christians: by reason that it was most in the midst of their country: the castle was the first that was taken; being scaled, a valiant souldiier of Carmona called John de Ortega a great sceler of wallies being the first man that entred it, being neerely followed by Martin Galindo a Knight borne at Eccia, John of Toledo and others to the number of thirty, who cut the next Court of garde in peeces, whom they found fast a sleepe, then they brake open a posterne gate, and gaue entrance to the rest of the army.

Alhama taken by the Castilians.

The Moores which were resident in the towne, hearing the noyse and clamour of this surpris, ranne confusedly and in great disorder (and not yet thorowly waked) to succour the castle: but they soone perceived that it was past all remedie: therefore

A therefore they fortified themselves in the Mesquites or Churches, and in the towers of the wallies, with all sorts of armes and engines for defence: giuing notice to their next neighbours of what had befallen them, and craued speedie ayde, which they expected also from Granado, which was ten miles distant from thence. The Christians who in like manner made account, that if they did not driue the enemies forth of the towne the same day, they themselves should be ouer-runne with the multitudes which would come thither, did resolute valiantly to assaile them, by the perswasion and example of Sancho de Anula Captaine of Carmona, and of Nicholas de Rojas Gouvernor of Arcos: but finding great resistance, the opinion of those was almost followed, who would haue the castle razed downe to the ground, and so to returne: yet for all that the Marquis of Cales, nor the Assistant of Siuill not consenting thereunto, they began onely to ouerthrow that part of the castle which looked vpon the towne, and the souldiers being againe brought to the fight, did behaue themselves so valiantly, as, notwithstanding the Moores brauer resistance, before the latter end of the day, all the churches and forts were taken, and the towne wholly wonne, which was esteemed the goodliest prize, that they could haue wished, for the importance of the warre. Three thousand Genets or light-horse were brought to this expedition, and as many foot-men by Diego Merlo, Don Pedro Henriquez, and the Marquis of Cales, who for the hatred which he did euer beare to the duke of Medina Sidonia, would not haue him made acquainted with this enterprise. The Moores of Granado being greatly astonished for the losse of Alhama, beganne to make euill prelagges of the end of the warre, and to murmure against King Muley Albhacen, not sparing to say, that his taking of Sahara would sticke to him and to his posteritie to the worlds end. He did speedily lend a thousand horse to their ayde, but they could not come time enough.

Euill prelagges of the Moores.

In the meane space he gathered together all his men at armes from all parts of his kingdome, and came in person to beseege Alhama, not bringing any artillerie with him, imagining that the Christians not being yet fortified therein, would quickly leaue it, but he was deceiued, for hee found them fowre and stubborne aduersaries; but chieffy there was a bloudie encounter at such time as the Moores went about to turne away the riuier which passeth by the towne, where diuers of both sides lost their liues: and it is to be doubted, that without the ayde of God sent to the beseged, they had bene ouercome by so great a power, as then fought against them, for they began to be out of hope and beganne to spoile all that they could not carry away, and were resolute to yeeld it, when Don Henry de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, arrived with a sufficient armie of his owne tenants, friends, and followers, with others entertained with his owne money, which (they say) amounted to three thousand horse, and forty thousand foot, with whom were ioyned the Earle of Cabra, and Don Alphonso of Aguilar, and his brother Don Gonsal Hernandez of Cordoua, who was afterward called the great Captaine in the warres of Italy, bringing with him the troups of Seuille, Eccia, Cordoua, and other places. All these forces, which were great and wonderful, for the short time wherein the were gathered together, did march towards Alhama.

King Fernand hauing notice of the taking thereof, made himselfe forthwith readie for to come into Andaluzia, hauing in his company Don Berrand de la Cueva, Duke of Albuquerque, and the Earles of Treuigno and Tendilla, with many other knights, the Earle of Cifuentes meeting them at Toledo, and then they altogether passed the mounne called Sierra Morena, to ioine with the armie which the king commanded to attend him there: but the Commanders knowing the necessitie of those of Alhama, went forward with great diligence to deliuer them, the which they did onely by the noyse of their coming: the Moore King being retired in the night with his whole armie. The king who followed, passed on to Anteguera, and there receyued newes, that the seige before Alhama was rayzed, wherefore he returned to Cordoua to meet the Queene whom he had left to leaue souldiers.

Now the Marquis of Cales, who was beseged with great danger in Alhama, considering the generosity of his aduersarie the Duke of Medina, who for the weale publike and seruice of the king, hauing forgotten all enmitie, had come to his ayde, he did highly esteeme

The king of Granado besiege Alhama.

Don Hen y de Guzman comes to the succour of this aduersarie.

Debate betwixt the besseged, and those that came to their ayde.

Alhama preferred at the instance of Queen.

Death of Don Alphonso Carrillo.

esteeme of him, and casting away all euill will and hatred, he ranne to him and embraced him with great loue, giuing him infinite thanks for so great a fauour: and these two Lords had such louing and pleasing conference together, as euer after they liued in strict and vnfaigned friendship, this Moorish warre hauing brought fourth effects contrarie to the seditions in Castile. The Chieftains being agreed, there arose contention betwixt the souldiers, those which came to their ayde did say, that they ought to haue their part of the spoyle of the towne, the others gaine-fayed it, in such sort, as if the wisdom of their Captaines, and their new reconciliation had not preuented it, they had fallen into tumult. The spoyle remayned to those who had defended the place, and the new come souldiers were appeased with reason and good words, and they all dislodged with the Duke and the Marquis, and returned euery man to his home: after the garissons were refreshed, and the towne well manned, where Diego de Merlo, Don Martin of Cordoua, and Hernand Carrillo remayned Captaines. After that the armie was gone, the King of Granado hauing notice thereof, he did forth-with returne backe to assaile Alhama, and brought at this time no more engines of batterie with him, than at the former, but only a great number of ladders, thinking in regard it was not yet thoroughly fortified nor rampired, to take it by the multitude of his souldiers: and at last hauing assailed it day and night without ceasing, he earely in a morning scaled it in a place which was not thought vpon: so as he put three-score and ten Moorish souldiers into it, and had caused greater numbers to haue entred, had not a souldier perceyued them, and giuen the alarme: wherefore the Christians running to that place, did cut in peeces those that were entred, and repulsed the rest who endeauoured to follow them. The successe of those assaults was not according to king *Malley Alboacen*s expectation, therefore he went thence once againe, with an intent to returne thither with artilerie. In the meane space Queene Isabella hauing left the Admirall Viceroy of Castile, marched with those forces which she had leauiued, towards Cordoua, to meete the King, being attended on by the Constable, who refused to be Viceroy of Castile, saying, that warre and armes were the proper offices belonging to an high Constable of Spaine. The Kings Councell did determine and almost conclude to raze the Citie of Alhama, in regard it stood in the middelt of the Realme of Granado, and therefore very hardly to be kept: but the Queene, who was desirous to preserue it, as the first conquest of her raigne, did perswade the contrarie, so as it was not ruined: and order was giuen to assaile, and take in all the forts and castles nere adioyning.

The Kings came after that to Eccia, where they receyued newes of the decease of Don Alphonso Carrillo of Acugna, Arch-bishop of Toledo, who dyed at Alcalá de Henares: they procured the election to the same dignitie for the Cardinall Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, the seuentith Arch-bishop of that Sea and Primate of Spaine, and the Arch-bishoppricke of Siuile was giuen to Don Inigo Manriquez Bishop of Iuen. There were at the same time with the King, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza Bishop of Palence, the Masters of Saint James and Calatrava, the Constable, the Dukes of Villa-hermosa, Infantazgo, Medina Celi, Albuquerque, the Marquis of Villena, and Cales, the Earles of Vregna, Cabra, Treuigno, Tendilla, Cifuentes, and Benalcázar, Don Alphonso d'Aguiar, Don Henry Henriques great Master, and the Kings vncler, John Chacon, Rodrigo of Villosa, Don Frederick of Toledo, sonne to the Duke of Alua, Don John de Ribera Lord of Montmajor, Don Alphonso of Cardenaz, Don Antonio Fonseca, Hernand of Vega, with other Lords and Knights of great name: Don John of Estuniga, master of Alcantara, by reason of his young yeares was absent, with his father the Duke of Plaisance. With this companie the king departed from Eccia, with eight thousand horse, and great numbers of foot, and came to Alhama, the which they fortified with rampars, bulwarkes, and other sufficient defences, and the king made Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, Lord of Palma, Gouvernor thereof, leauing him foure hundred horse: the Cardinall did purifie and blesse the three Mesquites or churches with the accustomed ceremonies, and dedicated them to other vses: then the army began to ouer-run the country on euery side, whilst the queene busied her selfe in providing victuals, armes, munition, and other necessaries for the wars. The Christian army being strengthened with new supplies, did presently beseege Loxa and

A and was lodged amongst the Oliue trees, vallies, and little hills neere to the riuer of Guadaxenil. The Mooreking on his part lost neither time nor courage, but fortified and defended the passages and streights, by the which the enemies might assaile him, and approach towards Granado: sending to the Kings and Potentates of Affrica, to aduertize them of the dangerous warre wherein he was engaged, intreating them for the religion common betwixt them, for the honour of their nation; for the equall danger which threatened them, if Granado should be lost, that they would come or send to his ayde: and he did in the meane time oppose his owne forces against the Christians, and on either part there were valiant encounters and skirmishes performed, where neuertheless Don Rodrigo Telles Giron Master of Calatrava's shappe was hard, who dyed being shot thorough the bodie with two poysoned arrowes, and Don Garcia Lopes of Padilla was promoted to his place, and was the last Master of that Order. King Fernand being desirous to change and alter the seate and lodging of his armie to a more conuenient place, there were sharpe skirmishes in the removing of the campe, where the Constable receyued two wounds in his face: the besseged, who were not about three thousand, made continuall sallies vpon the Christians with such furie and brauing, as it was to be wondered at: and did oftentimes put the great Lords and Captaines which kept those quarters which they assailed, in great danger of their liues: committing notable spoyles vpon their troups, and the Duke of Medina Celi, and the Earle of Tendilla, did hardly escape with their liues, being rescued by the forces of the Earle of Playfance, which his sonne Don Francisco of Estuniga brought to their ayde: the Kings owne person was likewise succored by Don John de Ribera, Lord of Montmajor, assisted greatly by Don Fredericke of Toledo, sonne to the Duke of Alua, Don Antonio de Fonseca, Don Alphonso of Cardenaz, and Hernand of Vega. Such was the enraged hardinesse of the Moores, as notwithstanding that they were beaten backe and streightly shut in by the valour and industrie of the Marquis of Cales, yet they constrained King Fernand to raise his seege and returne to Cordoua.

The souldiers which lay in Alhama hauing notice of what had happened, and of the Kings retreat from before Loxa, fearing that the Moores would returne to bessege them, cryed out to haue the towne razed and ouerthrowne, and to returne home to their houses: but Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, and Pero Ruiz of Alarcón, with others, did oppose themselves against it, and hindered it. The king of Granado came thither the third time, and did greatly annoy them: but they valiantly defended themselves vntill K. Fernand came with succour to deliuer them from the seege, who changed both the garisson and the Gouvernour, and left other souldiers there, vnder the command of Don Lewis Oforis Arch-deacon of Astorga, and brother to the Marquis of the same place. That being done, the Christian armie did forrage, burn and spoyle the cuntry of Granado, from whence they carried away much spoile, and many prisoners to Cordoua.

E Mahomet Boabdellin called the Little, and the twentieth king of Granado.

THE Christian souldiers found smal resistance in this latter roade, in regard the Moores were greatly diuided among themselves, by means wherof king Malley Alboacen was dispossessed and driuen away; for hee was much feared, and hated, because of his tyrannies which extended chiefly to the Nobilitie, and he had namely euill intreated the family of Abencaraxes, one of the most illustrious houses among the Granadins. These men with their complices and allies constrained Malley Alboacen to giue place, and they deliuered the citie with the Alhambra or fort thereof, to his sonne Mahomet Boabdellin surnamed the Little, who was fled to Guadix for feare of being slaine by his father, who was carried away with vnreasonable amorous passions, and false suggestions of a second wife, a renied Christian, whom hee had married for her rare and excellent beaurie, in regard wherof she was called Zoraya, which signifieth Morning-Barre. This woman

The Moores make Iournales to lie vpon the Christians.

The sege of Loxa raised.

Seditions betwixt the fauer and sunne.

woman being desirous to aduance her children which shee had by the King, did incite A a uour by all meanes to roote out those which hee had begotten on the Queene Aixa his wife, a Ladie of a great and illustrious house, and his neere kinswoman, who because she would not see her eldest sonne murdered, which was this Boabdellin, she caused him on a night to be let downe out of the window of the castle with the helpe of her woman by a rope made of their vailles, and night tyres, and thereby gaue him meanes to saue himselfe in the citie of Guadix, where the Admireraxes his kinsmen, who were of great power there, did kindly receiue him, and dealt in such sort with their friends of the city of Granada, as they acknowledged him for their king. The father hauing retired himselfe somewhere else, made fierce and sharpe warre vpon his sonne, which caused the losse of B their Crowne, and totall ruine to the raigne of the Moores in Spaine.

The Moores take Cagnette. Albeit that those barbarous people were at such dissention among themselves, yet when there was any cause they would agree together to annoy the Christians, so as they tooke the towne of Cagnette, spoyled it, and carried away all the inhabitants and soul-diers for slaues, and afterwards razed it downe to the ground. These things were done in the yeare 1482. wherein is to be noted, that foure seuerall Christian armies entred in

An. 1482. a few moneths space into the kingdome of Granada. King Fernand and Queene Isabella appointed Captaines for the frontiers, namely, for Iacn Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, who was newly made Duke of Nagera: the Master of Saint Iames for Ec-cia, and Don Iohn de Siliua Earle of Cisuentes for Siuill, the assistant Diego Merlo being C lately dead. Towards the end of the yeare, the Queene in the citie of Cordoua was delivered of a daughter, called the Infanta Maria, who was afterward Queene of Portugall, and after she was churched, the Court remoued to Madrid.

Nauarre. The beginning of the yeare 1483. was sorrowfull to the Nauarrois, by reason of the death of their king Francis Phœbus, whome the Princeesse his mother had carried backe into France, to auoyde the Importunate solliciting of marriages which they would haue procured in Spaine both for him and his sister Donna Catherina, wherewith King Lewis the eleuenth was not contented: hee dyed not without suspicion of poyson: for without any apparance at all of sicknesse, he selfe himselfe to be stricken with a deadly priking, as he was playing vpon a flute, which was presented vnto him, in which, and all other D instruments of musike, he did greatly delight. Being neere to his end hee repeated these words taken out of the Gospell: My kingdom is not of this world, therefore I leaue the world: trouble not your selves, for I go to the Father. He dyed in Bearne, in the castle of Pau the fourth yeare of his raigne, if we reckon from his grand-mothers death, Queene Leo-nora, being but fifteene yeares of age fully compleat: hee lyes buried at Lescar in the Cathedrall Church of S. Mary.

Castile. King Fernand and Queene Isabella receiued newes of his death at Madrid, where they had called a Parliament, and because the Crowne of Nauarre descended to the Infanta Donna Catherine sister to the deceased king, they sent the Licenciate Rodrigo Maldonado of Talauera, one of their Councell Ambassadors into Bearne, to the Princeesse Magdalen E her mother, to demand the Infanta in marriage, for the Prince Don Iohn their sonne.
 The mother Princeesse notwithstanding that these would willingly haue condescended thereunto, made answer that shee could not bestow her without the consent of his brother the French king. Vpon this answer, the Catholike kings sent Iohn de Ribera with troupes of men at armes towards the frontiers of Nauarre, to haue intelligence with the Earle of Lerin, who had married King Fernandes bastard sister, to the end to hinder the French-men from enterprising any thing, and from entering into that kingdome. The Estates assembled at Madrid granted a subdie to the King, towards the warre of Granada:
 and besides that, the Pope permitted them to leaue one hundred thousand Crownes vpon the Clergie of Spayne, and sent them a Croizado, to gather contributions and gifts for the same purpose: and in this Parliament, the power, authoritie and iurisdiction of the Hermandades and vnions of the Communalities was ordered and reformed. Afterwards the Kings diuided the affaires betwixt them, that they might the better provide for all matters: these remayned in Castile, and he prepared himselfe to returne into Adalusia, but the troubles which were raised in Galicia, by the meanes of D. Pedro Almaraz Orosio,

A Orosio, Earle of Lemos did call him into those parts. The Earle dyed there before the Kings arrivall, and by that meanes saued the King a labour, who otherwise would haue had him arraigned by order of lawe. Another contention arole betwixt a bastard sonne of the late Earles called Rodrigo Orosio, whome his father had appointed heire in the Earldome of Lemos, to the preiudice of his lawfull daughter, who was married to the Earle of Benaunts sonne: she sayd, that in regard Rodrigo was a bastard, he was incapable to inherit: he on the contrarie alleged his legitimation by the Pope: the king imposed silence and peace to both parties, and referred the cause to his Councell to bee ordered according to iustice: and in the meane time did commit the towne of Ponferrada, and the Lordship thereof, being a parcell of the litigious inheritance, to the keeping of his Vncle Don Henry Henriques great Master, excepting one strong hold of the same Lordshippe, which he gaue in keeping to Don George d'Abendaño his countri-man, and a Knight of the Kings house. These matters thus ordered, the king returned to Madrid, from whence he dispatched Ambassadors to procure the peace of Italy, which flamed with intestine warres, the Pope and the Venetians hauing ioyned, to the preiudice of King Fernand of Naples and the Florentines, drawing all the Potentates of Italy to their Factions: who by the diligence and good meanes of Don Iohn Bishoppe of Girone, P chiefe of that Ambassage, and by the fauour and authoritie of the Kings of Castile were reconciled: albeit the Venetians did alwaies nourish a secret hatred and contempt of King Fernand and Queene Isabella, and did not greatly care to obserue the peace.

C In this meane space the Captaines, which lay vpon the frontiers of Granada, made inroades and incredible spoyles vpon the Moores, especially those of the Garrison of Alhama, from whence a craftie and cunning Squire, whose name was Iohn de Corral, of Diego Lopes d'Alcala his companie, came forth by meanes of a safe-conduct, to conferre with the King of Granada, giuing him to vnderstand, how that hee of himselfe could vif meanes to cause Alhama to bee restored vnto him, wherewith the Moore king was pleased, as he offered readily on his part to yeeld vp Zahara, and to set all the Christian prisoners at libertie, giuing a great quantitie of gold, and besides that, to pay tribute, and for euery to become vassall to the kings of Castile. Iohn de Corral with these promises, came to the Kings, and declared to them in part what he had treated with the King of Granada, his chiefe drift being onely to get gifts and rewards, whereupon D the Kings giuing credite vnto him, gaue him limited authoritie to contract with the Moore.

Being returned to Granada, the Moore King, who thought that the principall Article of his Commission, was for the restitution of Alhama, had not the patience to consider and looke vpon Iohn de Corral his authoritie, but beganne readily on his part to performe what hee had promised, causing diuers Christian prisoners to be set at liberty.
 Then Iohn de Corral contenting himselfe with that which was done, came to Iacn and told the Duke of Nagera how he had deceived the king of Granada, who presently sent to the Duke to complaine of this deceipt. The Duke sent Iohn de Corral to the Court, aduertising the Kings what he had done, wherat they were highly discontented, and they did command that the prisoners ransomes should bee payed, and that Iohn de Corral E should pay backe the money, iewels, and other presents that hee had receiued of the King of Granada, and that hee should bee kept prisoner in Anzequera, vntill hee had made full restitution, and that the warre should stand vpon the selfe-same termes as before.

Notwithstanding that the Kings had begunne the warre of Granada, and did greatly suspect the French on the side of Nauarre, yet for that they did not giue ouer to vnder-take matters of great importance, either of them being of an haughtie and magnanimous courage.

Of the seauen Ilands called the Canaries, which are girdled with the Atlantick Ocean, foure of them were already conquered by the valor and industrie of certaine inhabitants of Seuill, euery since the raigne of King Iohn the second, and there remayned yet the great Canarie, Thenerif, and the Ile of Palmes to be brought vnder the subiection of the kings of Castile: therefore this yeare 1483. they sent thither Alphonso of Muxica, and Pedro de Veraz,

Sedition in Galicia.

Part of Italy opposed.

Integrity of Fernand and Isabella.

Canaries made subiect to the Kings of Castile.

Vera, valiant Captaines, and no lesse skilfull in sea-fights than at land, who landed in the great Canaries, where they found two kings striving for the principallitie thereof: they fauoured one of them, and dealt in such sort, as hauing rooted out the other, they obtained the gouernement of the Island: the Cittie was erected into a Bishops Sea, and translated from the Isle of Lançarot.

The Christians
defeated.

In Andalusia the Master of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Cales, the Earle of Cifuentes, Gouernour of Siuill, Don Alphonso d' Aguilar, Don Pedro Henriquez, Captaine of the frontiers, and others, came to Antequera with an intent to spoile the country of las Lomas de Malaga, called Axarquia, a territorie abounding in cattell: of the which enterprise the Moores had notice, who made themselves readie to charge them on the sudden, when they should least looke for it, hauing driuen their cattell into streights and strong places. The Christians being entred into the country beganne to spoyle, and they loone found sharpe resistance: wherefore in regard of the streightnesse of the country, and because they found not such booties as they expected, they thought to turne backe: but being ignorant of the wayes, and ouertaken by the night, they fell into streight and narrow places betwixt certaine hilles, which were filled with enemies, at the last they came into a valley, where with great labour and disadvantage, they were enforced to fight all that night with the Moores, the which did greatly amaze the whole army. The Master of Saint Iames being valiant and couragious, in striving to ascend an hill, lost his Ensigne-bearer, and a kinsman of his owne called Iohn d' Osorno, Iohn Bazan, and other Commanders, who sold their liues at a deare rate: the Marquis of Cales did in like manner follow the Master of Saint Iames, but the victorious Moores ouerthrew his troupes likewise, and slue Don Diego, Don Lope, and Don Bernard his brethren, and Don Lorenzo, and Don Mannuel his nephewes euen in his sight: yet notwithstanding, himselfe, the Master of Saint Iames, and Don Pedro Henriquez did escape with great danger. The Earle of Cifuentes making meanes to escape among the rest, was taken prisoner, with Don Bernardin Manrique, the Captaines of Antequera, and Moron, and diuers others: great was the slaughter of the souldiers at this defeat, the which was notable and of great consequence.

The Moores carried away the Earle, and the rest of the prisoners to Granado: but they did not long reioyce in the good hap of their victorie; for the Christians soone after tooke a sharpe vengeance on them: for King Mahomet Boabdellin, surnamed the Little, hauing with great troupes of horse and foote ouer-runne and spoyled the territorie of Lucena and Aguilar, at his returne backe being pestered with great herds of cattraile and other booties, Don Diego of Cordoua Earle of Cabra, who lay in garrison at Beana to resist such enterprises, and Don Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, on the one side, did pursue him to cause him to leaue his bootie behind him, and Don Alphonso of Aguilar on the other side with his troupes placed themselves in ambush in a narrow streight, thorough which they were to passe at their returne with intent to charge them on a sudden. Now the King who had tenne Moores for one Christian of the Earle of Cabra's band which followed him, made no difficultie to stay for them, yet they charged one another with great furie, where the Moores notwithstanding their multitudes proued the weaker: and thinking to make a safe retreat, they fell into Don Alphonso d' Aguilars ambush, who slue a thousand of them vpon the same place: the rest, leauing their prey behind them, fled away as fast as they could, forsaking their king, who was there taken prisoner. There were taken at this encounter nine hundred mules, fise hundred horse, and nine Moorish Standards, besides other spoiles, which were distributed among the souldiers, and the Kings person fell to the Earle of Cabraes share: in token of which victorie the Earles of Cabra, by the aduice and grant of the Kings of Castile, do beare for their armies a Mores head in prison, tyed with a chaine of gold, with a bend ouerthwart their shield, wherein nine standards are painted. By this ouerthrowing Mahomet the Little lost much of his reputation, and many strong Castles revolted from him to his father Malay Albohacen: during his imprisonment he was honorably vsed and like a king.

King Fernand being ioyfull for this victorie did thinke it fit to follow the occasion, and with a great armie to assaile the Moores, who were astonished with their losse: wherefore

A wherefore he tooke order that the Affrican Moores should not come by sea into Spaine to their ayde: and then hee entred into the Countrey of Granado with an army of tenne thousand horse, and thirtie thousand foote: among whome there were great numbers of Switzers, with a great trayne of Officers, victuallers, Merchants, and other people who serued and followed the campe: before which the Earle of Cabra and Don Alphonso of Aguilar did march with troupes of auantcourtiers, who burned the country round about Illora and Montefrio: the armie passed by Illora which was not easie to be taken without great Artillery: but they tooke the towne and castles of Tagara, which lies betwixt Alhama and Loxa; the King would not take those of the Castle to his mercie, because they did not yeeld at the first assault, which together with the town was razed to the ground.

Switzers in the wars of Granado.

Diuers valiant men of the Christian campe were hurt at the taking thereof, as namely, Don Henry Henriquez the Kings Vncle, and Lord great Master of his house. Being come to Alhama, the King caused it to be well fortified, and left Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla Gouernour there, who was a very vertuous Knight: then he led his armie farther into the countrie of Granado, ouerthrowing and destroying all that stood before him, but for want of victuals, he returned to Cordoua. The Moores being thus persecuted and afflicted, did beginne to intreat for peace, and offered to pay the King tribute, and some Moore children of Noble houses for hostages: Wherewith King Fernand acquainted the Queene his wife, who then lay at Victoria to looke to the affaires of Nauarre, which shee feared would shortly flure, who was of opinion to haue the hostages to be townes and castles, and not children, wherunto the Moores not consenting, the warre stood at that same stay as it was before. Thereupon the Moore Queene, mother to the King, made meanes for her sonnes deliuerie, and sent to offer King Fernand perpetual homage, twelue thousand Duckets for yearly tribute, and a great summe of readie money for his ranfome, and besides, to set three hundred Christian prisoners at libertie, such as he would please to name, and shee offered sufficient hostages for the performance of what shee promised.

The King commaunded the Earle of Cabra to deliuer the prisoner vnto him; the which he did, and deliuered him to Martin Alarcon, Captaine of Porcuna, whether King Fernand sent to visite and comfort him; for the which, Mahomet gaue him infinite thanks, saying, that he could not be in care, so long as he was in the hands of so great and courteous a King, whome he had euer desired to serue being at his full libertie, and to receiue the Crowne of Granado at his hand, in the same manner as king Ismael his Grandfather had done from King Iohn. And because the King had occasion to go into Castile, and also to Arragon, he did determine to deliuer the Moore King: the opinions concerning his deliuerie were diuers, some agreeing thereunto, and others, not, wherein the Master of Saint Iames, and the Marquis of Cales were contrarie one to the other: Wherefore they sent to haue the Queenes opinion in the matter, who therein agreed with the Marquis, that he should bee deliuered: the prisoner was brought to Cordoua, where he wold haue kissed King Fernands hand, but he would not permit it, the better thereby to oblige him to himselfe: hee did there sweare to accomplish whatsoeuer was agreed vpon, and he was set at libertie hauing beene honoured with rich presents. King Fernand after that went to Victoria, from thence he passed into Arragon, and going by Guadalupe, being a deuout Prince, he there performed a vow.

King Mahomet
deliuered.

The Frontier was well furnished and provided of all things necessarie against the assaults of the Moores: yet notwithstanding, they hauing notice of the Kings departure out of Andalusia, did make diuers roades into the country, being extremely moued against King Mahomet, in regard he had beene so well intreated by the Catholicke King, and was become his vassall, and of whom, besides other benefices, he had promise of aide and assistance against Malay Albohacen his father, and they sayd, that it was a matter displeasing to God, and against all right for the Mahometan Kings to beg any assistance of Christians against the Princes of their owne religion: wherefore diuers forsaking him, they tooke part with Malay Albohacen, and brought him with fise hundred Knights into the Castle of Alhapubre, where he slue all such as were of his sonnes faction, who retired himselfe to Almeria.

Hhhh

Now

The Moores de-fraid at V.
terra.

Isabella surprised by the Christians.

Counterfeit money.

4
Nauarre.

Now the army of the Moores being strong and resolute to do their worst, entred in to the marches of Andalusia, the Garrisons and chiefe Commanders of the warre being in the cities, were forth-with aduertised thereof by the souldiers called Almogaraues, or ordinarie watches of the frontiers: therefore Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, Lord of Palmas, who was afterward made Earle thereof, with the forces of the Master of Saine James, of the Marquis of Cales, those of Ecicia, Xeres, Arcos, and others which were gathered together, did march against the enemies, whome hee found disbanded, spoiling and destroying the territorie of Vviera: whome he charged with such resolution and courage, as in an instant they were all defeated and put to flight, with losse of diuers of their captaines, great numbers of souldiers, fifteene ensignes, and all their spoyle: of which victorie the Queene being aduertised, shee caused generall processions to bee made in the citie of Victoria: and because this encounter happened vpon the sixth day of Ianuarie being Twelfth day, shee sent a gowne of cloath of gold to the Lord of Palmas wife, to the end shee should weare it euery yeare vpon that sollempne festiual day.

The Christians in Andalusia hauing this good hap, the Marquis of Cales was aduertised, that Zahara was ill furnished of souldiers and victuals, wherefore hauing communicated his desseigne with the Lord of Palmas, they went forth on a night being accompanied by the troupes of Xeres, and hidde themselves in covert places neere the towne, whither they sent tenne men, who in great silence lodged themselves at the foot of the wall, towards the Castle: these were seconded by three-score and tenne other souldiers. At the breake of day, the Marquis sent certaine light horse to runne about the towne, against whome three-score and ten Moorish horse-men came forth, (and with them also, the Sentinels and Guard leauing their places) to skirmish, then the ten men did set vp ladders against the Castle, and beggan to make a shew, as if they would haue skaled the wall, to the defence whereof as many as stayed within came running: in the meane space the three-score and tenne souldiers which were hidden, did seize vpon one of the gates: besides that, those which were come forth against the Christian light-horsemen, perceiving themselves to be charged by others, who came to their ayde, turned their backs and fled towards the towne, and were so narrowly pursued, as they all entred pell-mell together: and being in this sort surprized on euery side, they lost the town. The Castle would haue made resistance if it had bene well victualled, but for want thereof they yielded, compounding for their liues.

The Earle of Tendilla who kept Alhama, would not suffer the Moores his neighbors to rest, but he oftentimes annoyed them, so as he was feared like lightning ouer all the Countrey. The winter this yeare was very rainie, by means whereof a great part of the wall of Alhama fell to the ground, making a large breach for the enemies, if they had then assayed it: whereat the souldiers which were within were greatly amazed and thought vpon nothing but flight, but the courage and valour of the Captaine, which is euer of much worth, contrayned them in their duties, who delc in such sort by hanging of painted cloathes against the breach with such art and cunning, as the enemies neuer knew, that the wall was fallen downe, till it was made vp againe stronger then before. The Earle Don Isigo, true sonne to the Marquis of Santillana, caused the tower of Alcala la reale to bee repayred, on the toppes whereof euery night a burning lampe was set, which served to direct the poore slauers that fled from Granado. His souldiers being disobedient for want of pay, (money being very dangerous to bee sent vnto them without the conuoy of an armie) the Earle inuented a certaine kind of counterfeit money, and of diuers stamps, the which hee named and prized according to the coynes of gold and silver which were currant in Spayne, and with the same hee payed his souldiers, promising them to change all that false money into good, according to the value of euery coyn, and by this means hee did appease them.

Whilest these matters fell out in Andalusia, King Fernand and Queene Isabella were in great doubt to bee disturbed on that side of Nauarre by the French: it may bee that this suspition came from their owne consciences touched with their sinister proceedings

A proceedings with the Earle of Lerin, and with the treaties of marriage of these poore Princes of Nauarre, and matters happened vpon those occasions. Now Queene Catherine, who was newly come to the Crowne of Nauarre, besides her being wholly at the deuotion of France, and vpon the poynt of her marriage with John d'Albret, sonne to the Earle Alaine, King Lewis his death happened a litle before, which had openly troubled and hindred the alliance betwixt these two great kingdomes of France and Spayne: for Ambassadors being sent from one to another, as well for to make the accustomed condolences, and consolations ordinarie at such accidents, as for to treat of the alliances, and moreover, about the restitution of the Earldome of Rossillon which the French held, the Ambassadors of Spayne receyued no pleasing answer from the young King Charles the eighth, who succeeded King Lewis his father, nor from his tutors and counsellors, so as they made the protestations and declarations which Princes usually do make, when they are vpon the point of making warre one against another: therefore Queene Isabella had furnished the frontier of Castile ioyning to Nauarre with strong garrisons, and sent forces to Tudela a towne in Nauarre which held their partie, vnder the conduct of John de Ribera.

After the death of King Francis Phelbus, his mother the Princeesse fearing, and not with our cause, the reuolt of that nation, which was an enemy to rest and quiet, had sent thither the Cardinal of Foix, and the Lord of Abenas, brother to the Lord of Albret, who did call a Parliament, to receyue a new oath of fidelitie for Queene Catherine, and commanded them moreover to receiue the sayd Lord of Abenas for Viceroy, notwithstanding that the Constable Earle Lewis of Beaumont did resolutely oppose himselfe against it, hauing secret intelligence with his brother-in-law King Fernand for the same purpose.

The Lord of Abenas was a graue, wise, and modest Knight, who by these qualities and vertues had well gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, and maintained it in peace and quiet, vnill such time as Queene Catherine, hauing married his Nephew John d'Albret, came herselfe in person to rule and gouerne the same. The Constable in the meane time, who held the Citie of Pampelona vnder his power, and many other places besides, did rayse troubles, and brought the Castilian men at armes into the Kingdome, vnder colour of the Factions of Beaumont and Grammont, during all these actions they still pouised the marriage, so that after King Lewis his death the Princeesse Magdalen being continually sollicit to marrie her daughter Queene Catherine to Prince John of Castile, shee was aduised to make a small answer, and to say, that the inequality of their yeares would not permit it to be done, in regard her daughter was marriageable, and the Prince a little child in his cradle: and that in the meane time, before hee should come to age, there might bee great troubles and combustions in the Realme of Nauarre, which stood in need of men to gouerne it, and to suppress the vsuall contentions and quarrels which those people did naturally entertaine: and that without this let, her selfe, and her daughter would thinke themselves happie in so great an alliance; for they esteemed no match in the world like to that of Prince John, who was presumptiue heire to so many rich and mightie Kingdomes.

All this notwithstanding, Queene Isabella perswading her selfe to effect this marriage in despite of all these hinderances, carried still at Victoria, the most part of this yeare 1484. at which time (as hath bene sayd) shee sent Don John de Ribera with forces into Nauarre, who hauing intelligence with the Earle of Lerin, tooke Viana, the Castle of Saint Gregorie, that of Iruera and others: which disorders the Viceroy sought to redresse with great prouidence, and kept the people in their obedience to the Queene their naturall Princeesse. About this time Pope Sixtus the fourth dyed, in whose place succeeded John Baptista Cibo, Cardinall of the title of Saint Laurence in Lucina, and Bishop of Malfetta, who was called Innocent the eighth. The yeare before King Lewis the eleuenth dyed, who (as it is reported) had ordained by his last will, that the Earldome of Rossillon should bee restored to King Fernand the lawfull Prince thereof: but his sonnes Counsellours thought it not conuenient. This King being very deuoute and greatly honouring Saint James, had giuen tenne thousand Crownes, and sent great store of mettall and worke-men to make the greatest bell there in all Christendome.

Don Lewis of Beaumont rebo-ly assistant to the Kings of Castile.

Hhhh a

Now

The generall History of Spaine.

Lib. 23

Now for the causes heretofore declared, the Kings of Castile did enterprife against Nauarre and France, notwithstanding the warre of Granada, the which they would in no sort giue ouer, but did earnestly sollicite it, and provided sufficiently for it.

King Fernand being yet in his Kingdome of Arragon, there were assembled in the citie of Cordoua, and afterwards in Antequera, the number of fixe thousand horse, and twelue thousand foot-men, which ouer-ranne and spoiled the Countries of Alora, Coin, Caçaranouella and Carthama, where diuers notable skirmishes were made: the Master of Saint James, the Marquis of Cales, and Don Alphonso d'Aguilar were Captaines of them. This armie was refreshed with victuals from Siuill and Xeres, and then returned to Antequera laden with spoyle. The Queene in the meane time visited the Prouinces of Guipulcoa and Biscay, and at her returne to Viçoria, the King arrived there out of Arragon, where he found much to do, for the Arragonois were not so easily gouerned, nor so ready to please their Kings appetites, as the Castilians, both of them left Viçoria, and came to Tarassone, where the Estates of Arragon were appointed to meet, whose Deputies, did let downe such difficulties and delays, as they would by no means contribute money towards the warres of Granada, nor against France for the Earldome of Rossillon, so as they were at the point to dissolue the assembly: for the time of making warre being come, it behooued them either to assaile or defend on the frontiers of Granada.

The Kings Councell made long disputations vpon the difficultie of making this double warre: for King Fernand was desirous to assaile the French for the recouerie of the Earldome of Rossillon, and the Queenes mind was to pursue the Moores, euen to the totall ruine of their State, and expulsion out of Spaine. The most part of the voyces fauoured the Queenes desire, and shee, to please her husband, was of opinion, that hee with the forces of Arragon, Valencia, Catalonia, and some part of Castile should warre vpon the French, and her selfe with the rest of the armie would pursue the Moores. Hereupon they seuered themselves, the Queene went towards Toledo, and the King stayed to make an end of the assembly. The Cardinall of Spaine did accompanie the Queene, and hauing not yet made his entrie into the citie of Toledo, since hee was Arch-bishop thereof, he entred the same in great pompe, in which sollemnitie vpon that day by an ancient custome the Arch-bishop of Toledo was preferred in all honors and ceremonies, about the Soueraigne Magistrat: neuertheless the Cardinall gaue place to the Queene, albeit shee would haue had the old custome obserued. From thence they went to Andalusia, where they ordered and reformed certaine customes which the people of Iuen, Baeca, Vbeda, Caflona, Andujar, and others had concerning feasts and plaies nothing profitable to the common-wealth. When they came to Cordoua the great Lords did there meete to conferre about the warres: there came also diuers French and Almaine Gunners, for Cannons and Bombards were not as yet much vsed in Spaine. There was likewise a great army by sea sent forth, Don Aluaro of Mendoza, Earle of Castro being Generall. The Queene would haue made the Cardinall Generall ouer all her land and sea forces: but the kings vnlookt for returne, who could do no good with the States of Arragon, gaue end to his commission. They were determined to beseege Loxa: but for the easier execution thereof, they first of all did assaile Alora, the which they took hauing beaten downe two towers with the Cannon: The Moores fledd into the Castle, and did afterwards by composition saue their liues and goods.

The King and Queenes custome was, so soone as they had taken any towne from the Moores, to send three ensignes thither which were consecrated or blessed, (as they term it) the which were to be set vp on the highest tower or place of the same towne: the first, was of the Crucifixe for a signe and token of the redemption of mankind, the which was carried to the highest topp of the towne or fort, and there by an ensigne-bearer displayed and flourish in the ayre: the whole army kneeling downe, and giuing thanks to God in diuers prayers: but this prayer was chiefly rehearsed with a loud voyce, as followeth:

Deus qui per crucem tuam, populo in te credenti triumphum contra inimicos tuos concede-re voluisti, quesumus, ut in tua pietate adorantibus crucem, victoriam semper tribuas & honorem. Others did say: Exaudi nos Domine salutaris noster, et per Triumphum sancte

Cruis

Lib. 23

The generall History of Spaine.

A Cruis a cruis is nos defende periculis. The Clergy and Ministers of the Church did afterwards sing, Te Deum laudamus.

The second stander was that of the Apostle Saint James the Sonne of Zebede, whom the Spaniards acknowledge for Patron, and protector of their Country and state, and for guide and defender of their Kings of Castile and Leon: at the sight wherof the army and the people cried out with great ioy, Santiago, Santiago. Saint James, Saint James; And the third was the King and Queenes royall Banner, wherein were pictured the armes of all their realmes, and dominions; and when that was lifted vp and displayed, they all cried aloude Castile, Castile, for King Fernand, and Queene Isabell. After all this, the prelates, and Clergy did expiate, and purge the mesquites, or Churches, which had serued for the reprobate vse of the Mahometan religion, blessing and dedicating them to some Saint or other; and if in the towne or Citie taken, any Christian Captiues were found, as vsually there were some, they after the Priests had sung Te Deum laudamus, were made to answere, Benedictus dominus Israel, quia visitauit et fecit redemptionem plebis sue. These were the ceremonies, vsed by King Fernand, and Queene Isabell, at the taking of any towne from the Moores.

Alora being taken and fortified, Don Lewis Fernandes Lord of Palma had the keeping thereof, then the royall army passed on to the valley of Carthama, the Marquis of Cales led the vanguard with two thousand horse and as many chosen foote-men. Those of Alozagra yielded vpon condition, they might bee mayntayned in their consciences, and religion, the which the King graunted; then they besieged the towne of Caçaranouelle where the Moores made incredible resistance, killing in diuers skirmishes greates numbers of Christians, as namely Don Gutierrez de Sottomajor Earle of Benalcaçar, a young Noble-man, of foure and twenty yeares of age, hardy and valiant; who was shot throw the body, with a poysoned arrow, for whose death the king and the whole army were very sorry, because these braueries of the Moores, did make them become obdurate, and encouraged others, which would haue yielded, to make resistance. The Army, with this losse, & without performing any other exploit, then burning the country, did returne backe to Antiquera, where the King receaued letters from the Queene his wife, which caused the whole army to blush for shame; for shee lett them vnderstand how that so goodly an army, ought not to liue vnprofitably, nor returne without doing some notable exploit: wherefore, being encouraged by a woman, they retired againe into the enemies country, and spoiled it euen to the mountaine called, Sierra Neuada; the King being lodged with a great body of an army, within halfe a mile of the Citie of Granada, to oppose him selfe against the sallies, which they of the towne might make vpon those that did forrage, the Duke of medina, and the Earle of Cabra, being in another place, where as much as in them lay, they spoiled the country; and made it vnfit to beare frute, the sooner thereby to starue them. The Queene had laden 5000. beasts of cartiage with victuals which by the helpe of this army, entred into Alhama where the King left Don Gutierrez de Padilla gouernour, who was nephew to Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla, Master of Calatraua, in regard the Master had promised to defend that place, with the forces of his iurisdiction. After wards the army returned to Cordoua, where the Queene being demanded if shee were pleased with what they had done, shee answered, that it was not fit they should spend the rest of the yeare in idleness: where-vpon the King returned, and marched against Septenil, which for three daies space was battered, and afterwards the Moores yielded it vpon composition; that they might depart with their liues, goods and liberty, the place was committed to the keeping of D. Francisco Henriquez: from thence the army went to ruine the country of Ronde, and because winter did draw neere, it did attempt nothing else, and was brought backe to Siuill, whether the Queene came. The garrisons of Alhama, Alora, and Septenil, were commanded by the King and Queene to aide King Mahomet the little with all their power against Muley Albohacen his father.

Wee will here for a while lay by the affaires of Castile and Arragon, and speake of Portugal, and of the raigne of Iohn the 2. who succeeded Alphonso 1481. being fixe and twenty yeares of age. This Prince was a great Iusticer, and it may be, ouer rigorous

Hhhh 3

Portugal.
King Iohn a grete iusticer, namely against the nobilitie,
with other of his qualitties.

in

in the execution thereof, especially against the Nobilitie and great Lords of his kingdom, whom he did punish, and reclaime from many oppressions which his father had tolerated: this caused him to be hated, and gaue cause vnto some who were very neere vnto him in blood, to practise against his life and state.

Mediocritie is to be observed in the aduancement of Vertu cessantibus.

Discovery of Manicongo.

Genealogie of Portugall.

The Duke of Bragança
practises dis-served by his Secretarie.

A gentle admonishment made by King Iohn to the Duke of Bragança.

He was of a quicke and sharpe iudgement, and of an excellent memorie, he could discusse eloquently of all matters, and would haue those that did talke with him, to consider how and what to speake, and he would ordinarily say, that it was impossible but that Kings should be wise men, because euery one that spake to them, whether they were foolish or wise, did strue to speake well and wisely. He shewed great wisdom in all his actions, not suffering himselfe to be carried away by Court-flatterers, and if hee did fauour any one, hee would aduance him but to a certaine meane and no further, giuing authority to no man more than was needfull: hee was a louer of good counsell, very true, firme, and constant in whatsoeuer he graunted or denied, liberrall aswell to strangers as to his owne seruants: he was religious according to those times, and charitable towards the poore, for whose ease and comfort, hee builded the royall Hospitall of Lisbonne, in the honour of all Saints: he shewed himselfe very obedient towards his father, and had the good hap, to haue the kingdom of Manicongo discovered in his raigne, at which time with great care and diligence, the nauigation for spices did beginne, for which things, hee was furnished the Great. When hee beganne to raigne, hee was already father to the Infant Don Alphonso begotten on Queene Elenor, daughter to Don Fernand Duke of Viseo his Vncle, and to the Infanta Donna Beatrice, shee who had procured the peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall: the Infant was seauen yeares old when his father came to the Crowne, who the yeare 1481. had a sonne by a Mistris of his called Donna Anne de Mendoza, whose name was George, Master of Saint Iames and Auis, Duke of Coimbra, Lord of Auerro and Montemajor the old, who was brought vp openly as the Kings sonne, by his Aunt the Infanta Donna Isabe, a Nunne in the Monastrie of Iesus d'Auero: hee was father to Don John Duke of Auerro, a worthie Prince in our age.

This King John of whome wee speake, was the first King of Portugall that entitled himselfe Lord of Guiney, the nauigation into which country hee mayntained and continued, and builded the Cittie and Castle of Saint George, the fort of Tanger and others. Hee called a Parliament in the Cittie of Eborá, there to receiue the oath of fealtie and homage due to the Kings his progenitors: at the same time it happened, that Don Fernand Duke of Bragança, being at his house of Villa-viciosa, did search for certaine records and titles of lands with other letters of priuiledge, to haue them renewed and confirmed by the new kings: his Secretarie whome hee employed in this businesse, found certaine letters of intelligence and practise in a chest, betwixt the Duke his master, and the King and Queene of Castile, contrarie to his allegiance to King John: Wherefore this Secretarie, whose name was Lope de Figueredo, being moued either with zeale towards his Prince, or with hope of some good reward, did embezell those writings, and gaue them to the King, who hauing copied them, re-delivered the originall to Figueredo, who layd them among the rest of the papers which hee had found, his Lord not perceyuing in the Duke neuertheless was still fauoured and welcomed by the King, who in matters of Duke neuertheless was still fauoured and welcomed by the King, who in matters of weight could very well dissemble, and was continually at Court accompanying and seruing the King and Queene: vntill vpon some time the Court being at Almerin, where the Queene was brought a bed before her time, and in great danger of her life: the Duke of Bragança came to visit her, with Don Dominique Duke of Viseo, one of his complices, who was brother to the Queene: the King entertained them with a pleasant countenance, and vpon a certaine day hee tooke the Duke of Bragança aside into his chappell, within the with-drawing Curtaines, and did brotherly admonish him of his fault in these tearmes:

„ Cousin, I haue vnderstood a matter, which I must acquaint you with in this holy place, where I stand in the presence of God, before whom I will not dissemble: therefore beleeue it, I speake nothing but truth: I heare that you haue secret intelligence and practise with the Kings of Castile, against my State and seruice, greatly forgetting therein the

A the honour faith and loyaltie which you owe vnto mee: in regard whereof, considering the reasons on both our sides, I for my part hauing giuen none occasion to your selfe or any other, and seeing no cause why you should hope for more honour and fauour of any other Prince then of me, I can not but be very much troubled, and I know not whether I may firmly beleuee it or no: yet notwithstanding, howsoeuer it is, I thought good to admonish you, that if vpon any false surmise, you haue entered into this vnreasonable imagination, to giue it ouer: protesting to you that I meane to forget, and graciously to pardon your offences, requesting you, seeing it hath pleased God to make me heire to his crowne to stand stedfastly to me, and to acknowledge this fauours towards you, and the place and rancke which you hold in this Kingdom, wherein by your owne deserts, and those of your ancestors, you are the chiefe person next vnto my selfe, the which should stirre you vp to maintaine and procure the safety and greatness thereof, especially considering, that God hath as it were parted the faculties and riches of this royall patrimony betwixt vs two: and that of two sisters borne of the noble race of the Infants Don Fernand and Don Beatrice, Dukes of Viseo, I haue married the one and you the other. It may be that I am taxed with some fault, common to Kings newly come to their crownes, as to proceede our rigorously against some persons, and to shew small liberality and meekenesse in certaine matters, which could not be otherwise managed: but if it were so that some bee offended with my new government; you before all men, ought to tolerate it, and to be a singular president of loyalty and obedience vnto others. If my Iudges and Commissioners sent into your iurisdiction haue exceeded the bounds of modesty in their charge, you know very well that they haue had great cause so to doe, and that they haue many reasons on their sides to iustifie their proceedings, in respect of the present state; but if they were in fault, should not you greatly binde me vnto you for bearing with those things? and for your owne part you may be assured, that in regard of your place, wisdom and deserts, I can not refuse you any thing that you should craue of mee. Now, you are bound, in regards I am planted in the royall seate of Portugall, to aide mee both with counsell and armes if need were, and whensoeuer I shall craue it; therefore I intreate and command you both in heart and will to dispose your selfe thereto euer hereafter.

When the Duke heard these words, he would haue excused himselfe, and entreated the King not to beleuee those reports, which (he said) were contrary to his meaning, and that whilst hee had a heart, a hand and meanes, they should all bee employed in his seruice. And so the King left of hoping that the Duke would amend, and that he should no more neede to speake vnto him concerning it. But the Court being not longe after remooued from Almerin to Saint Iren, Isaper and Peter de Iuhartes brethren and seruants to the Duke of Bragança, came to the King, and certified him that the Duke their Maister did continue his practises with Castile, and that Isaper had bene twice sent as messenger to the Kings of Castile, and that the Marquis of Montemajor, and the Earle of Faro the Dukes bretheren, were consenting to those practises. The King did largely recompence these two bretheren for their aduertisement, and did resolute to punish the Duke of Braganças treachery, and hauing a fit occasion by his coming to the court, which lay then at Eborá, whether hee accompanied the Prince Don Alphonso, hee caused him to bee arrested of high treason and to bee committed to prison in May the yeere 1483.

The Kings Atturney General pleaded against him, & he was found guilty of treason, and was iudged and condemned by the Lords, to haue his head cut off, and all his goods to be confiscate to the crowne: the which sentence was executed; and Fernand Duke of Bragança was brought to the publike place of execution in the city of Eborá, where he was beheaded and made a pittifull spectacle to all men. Six other gentlemen were likewise beheaded with him, and diuers banished, in which number, was the Constable of Portugall. The Dutchesse Isabella the Queenes sister, as soone as she heard of her husbands imprisonment, sent her three children Don Philip, Don James, and Don Dennis into Castile who were kindly receiued and welcomed by Queene Isabella their Aunt: the poore Lady their mother, hauing no other comfort in her widow-hood but a little daughter

The Duke of Bragança beheaded at Eborá.

daughter called Marguerite, whose company she enioyed not long, for within a while after she died. D. Philip her eldest sonne died in Castile: the second Don James returned into Portugall, and Don Denis this third sonne, did marry the Countesse of Lemos in Castile.

The Marquis of Montemajor, and the Earle of Faro, the Dukes brethren, did likewise flie into Castile, where they spent the remainder of their daies beeing honoured and maintained by King Fernand and Queene Isabella. Now Don Dominico the Queenes brother, was one of the conspiracy as hath bene already said; and the King the next day after the Duke of Bragança his execution called him into his presence, and knowing him to be young both in yeeres and discretion, he did admonish him as a father, to behaue himselfe discretely, and told him diuers things which concerned his honour and wel-fare, and did freely pardon him all offences past: to which speech of the Kings, Don Dominico could not answer one word but onely kissed the Kings hand in signe of thanks. This young Prince had aspired to reigne, and being young and inconsiderate, he did oftentimes permit his hand to bee kissed, and would receiue other honours belonging to a foueraigne Prince, the which in the end bred his ruine.

After all these things the King being gon to visit the townes and fortresses vpon the frontiers of Galicia and countries neere adioyning, Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman arriued in Portugall, of whose quarrell to the Admirall of Castile and his sonne we haue amply spoken heretofore. This Lord came to the Court at Saint Iren, where hauing a time appointed him to come into the Kings presence, as hee was going to masse in Saint Iames his Church, he kneeled downe at the great doore with his traine and seruants; the King presented him his hand to kisse with his gloue vpon it, but Don Ramir thinking that the King did either contemne or scorne him, and being a knight of an high and courageous spirit, he did plucke the Kings gloue off, and so, kist his bare hand, then the King said, I could haue done that my selfe if it had pleased me; but Don Ramir did not heare him in regard he was some-what deafe: for this cause he was called euer after in Portugall El de la luba, which is as much to say, as He of the gloue. Yet neuertheless the King vsed him very graciously; and did assure him that he was in a place of safety, and therefore willed him to be merry and not to feare any danger at all. Don Ramir gaue him many humble thanks, and excused his boldnesse in plucking off his gloue, beseeching him not to take it as done vneruerently, in regard it was the custome of Spaine to kisse the Kings bare hand. Not long after, done Ramir, had some ielousie of the Marquis of Villareall a friend and kinsman to the Admirall of Castile, King John hauing notice thereof, called the Marquis before him, and told him that his pleasure was, that Don Ramir should liue safe and secure in Portugall, free from feare either of the King of Castile or any else, and therefore if any euill did happen to him, his life should answere it: the Marquis answered, that for him Don Ramir should liue in all safety, and that he neither had nor would procure him any displeasure.

But the Duke of Bragançaes death did displease diuers great Lords of the Kingdome of Portugall, in regard whereof, new conspiracies were made against the Kings life. The chiefe of the conspirators were Don Garcia Meneses Bishop of Eбора, and Don Fernand de Meneses his brother, Don Lopo de Albuquerque Earle of Pegnamacor, and Don Pedro de Albuquerque his brother, Don Aluaro de Arayde, and Don Pedro d' Arayde the father and sonne, Don Guttiere Contino Commander of Cezumbra tonne, to the Marshall, and Fernand Selueyra, who againe did draw Don Domingo the Duke of Viseo into their practises, determining to make him King, and they watched for a fit time and occasion to kill King John, who being at Setuball did discover the treason, by the relation of one called Diego Timoso, who knew it by the means of a sister of his who was concubine to the aboue named Bishop no lesse secret then chaff and faithfull, and this Timoso came of purpose disguised in a Friers habit, to discloase it to the King, who in recompence of his good service, gaue him five thousand Cruzados in ready money and fixe hundred thousand Marauedis of yeerely rent, the which hee did not long enioy, for soone after he died. Within few daies after, the King receiued the same aduertisement from Don Vasco Contino, vnto whom Don Guttiere his brother, one of the

The Kings fatherly aduertisement to D. Dominico Duke of Viseo.

D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman commeth into Portugall.

A the confederats had revealed it, thinking that without any danger he might haue spoken it to him by reason that he was in disgrace with the King, and ment to haue fled into Castile; but he was therein deceiued; for Don Vasco by this meanes made his owne peace, was created Earle of Barba with hereditary right, and besides the Castle of Estremoz, hee receiued many other aduancements. The same day that the confederats should meete the Duke of Viseo at the Court, the King hauing visited a Church neere to Setuball, he went a boord of a little fisher-boote to see them take fish, hauing with him onely foure of his faithfull seruants, namely Fernand Martinis Mazzerenas captaine of the genets or light-horse, Diego d' Almeida, Don John de Meneses, and Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman: In the euening, as he was returning to Setuball, thirty of the confederates stood vpon the banke of the riuer, with intent to haue executed their treason, whereof the King being aduertized at his landing, by a Groome of his Chamber named Anthony Faria, who told him in his care that it behooued him at that time to dissemble, and to shew his Kingly courage, expecting a fitter time and opportunity to punish them according to their deserts: the King who could very well dissemble, being leape on horse-backe, called the Duke of Viseo to him with a smiling and pleasing countenance, and gaue him and the rest of the conspirators, many gracious and louing words, so as for that present they had not the hearts to proceed in their determinations: in the meane time, the King who was weakely accompanied, went into a Church called Our Lady the Old, waiting for his guardes arriual, and beganne to talke with them leaning his back against the wall, the better to keepe his enemies from comming behinde him, among whom was D. Vasco Contino, whom he called vnto him and made a shew to diuert him from going into Spaine, the better thereby, vnder colour of this talke, to draw the whole conspiracy from him. By these meanes it was Gods pleasure that the King should escape that daies daunger, and returne in safety to his pallace. Certaine daies after, the King being more sufficiently aduertized of these Lords conspiracy against his person, sent to commaund the Duke of Viseo, who was then at Palmela with his mother the Infanta Beatrice, to come to him to Setuball, who forthwith did so, not doubting any thing, and he was no sooner arriued and come into King Johns presence, but hee was stabd to death with a poniard by the Kings owne hand, in the night, in a Chamber in Don Nugno d' Acugna house where the King then lay, in the presence of Don Pedro de Vega, Diego d' Açambuya and Lopes Mendez, with no other words but these, Thou shalt die, and goe carry newes to the duke of Bragança in what state the treason stands which hee beganne.

In this manner the Duke of Viseo died a young Prince of twenty yeeres old, by following naughty counsell, and giuing credit to the vaine predictions of Astrologers, who had assured him that hee should bee King. The Dutcheffe his mother was by the King certified of what had happened, who excused himselfe, in regard that hee was constrained by necessity to commit so sodaine an execution, and intreated her to beare it patiently: and in some sort to comfort her, the very same night he called Don Manuel ether other sonne into her presence, who was more wife and discret then his brother vnto whom hauing told the Dukes death, and the causes wherefore he died, hee gaue all that his brother did possesse and more, and conferring with him, with a fatherly affection, hee promised to cause him to be sworne and acknowledged for Prince and heire to the crowne of Portugall, after his death and Don Alphonso his sonne: but hee would not permit him to name himselfe Duke of Viseo as his brother had done, but Duke of Beja, Lord of Viseo, and Maister of the Order of Christus, and hee made him Lord of the Ile of Madera, and gaue him other lands.

The Duke was at the same time onely seauenteene yeeres of age, and the King gaue him a Sphere for a diuise to beare in his armes, the which the Kings of Portugall doe yet at this day beare in their armes and royall scutcheon: the same was a lucky preface vnto him of the conquests and discoveries which were afterward made in his reigne and name vnder both the Poles: the same was likewise fore-told by the Bishop of La Garde a great Mathematicien; in regard of his Horoscope, and position of the heauens at his Natiuity, being in the yeere 1468, albeit that such iudgments are deceiuable and vnlawful,

The young duke of Viseo seduced by King John's owne hand.

The Duke of Viseo seduced by Astrologers.

A Sphere vpon the armes of Portugall.

Profitable was for to redresse superfluous expen-
ces.

The generall History of Spaine.

Lib. 23.

the Kings thought to redresse those matters by two courses, both profitable and milde, A namely, by admonishments which they themselves made to the noblest, and to others by religious persons of credit, and afterwards by their owne example shewing in their appaill, traine and manner of life great modesty, wherein neuerthelesse some Maistty did appeare, as was fitting for their degree.

As concerning the warre the opinion was, that Malaga should be besieged, and by the way they laboured (but in vaine) to take the castile of Montefrio. Passing forward, they did ouer-runne, spoile and destroy the country neere to Carthama, where the common opinion was to seeketo take Carthama and Coin before they did attempt any thing against Malaga, to the end to haue the country more at their commandement, the which was not the worst counsell: and because the army was great, part thereof was sent to besiege Carthama vnder the conduct of the Maister of Saint Iames, the Constable, and D. Alphonso D' Aguilar, and the other part to Coyne which was commanded by the Marquis of Cales, the Earle of Crugna, and D. Hurtado de Mendoza, with the Cardinals people. The King with some part of his forces was lodged betwixt both these sieges, to succor either of them as need should require. In the mean time the towne of Benamex yielded as it had done in time before: but it did reuolt when the Earle of Benalcaxar was slaine, into the which fault it fell againe after it had yielded, and was now taken by assault, the Inhabitants were taken or slaine, and the place razed to the ground: the King did choose out one hundred of the principall prisoners C and caused them to be hanged for a terror to the rest, chiefly for an example to them of Carthama, Coin and Ronde; yet notwithstanding they were not negligent in their owne defence.

Exigred by affluence of the reuolted.

Certaine African Moores of Velez de la Gomera, being moued with zeale to their religion, came ouer into Spaine, and espied a fit occasion whereby to enter into Coin, which they did at such time, as a great and large breach was made, which the Christians did assaile, who by this new aide were rudely repulsed with great slaughter: there were slaine Ferro Ruiz Alarcon, a most wise and valiant capitaine, and Tello D' Aguilar likewise, whose death did greatly grieue King Fernand, whereupon hee caused the battery to bee redoubled and did so presse the besieged, as they beganne to take of composition. The King being highly displeased for his losse received at that assault, would not receive them at the first vpon any condition, but at the last he granted them their liues and goods, and so the towne was yielded vp. Coin was a great towne and very hard to be kept, wherefore it was razed. Those of Carthama hauing notice that Coin was yielded, did compound in like manner, whose example was followed by Cariana, Pasiana, and others. The garde and defence of Carthama was committed to the Maister of Saint Iames vpon his entreaty, who left there for Lieutenant vnder him a Gentleman of his owne, named John de Céspedes. About the same time, Don Alphonso Henriquez high Admirall of Castile died at Valodolit, in whose place and dignity Don Frederike Henriquez his sonne succeeded. The Queene being at Cordoua tooke care to provide the army of money and victuals, wherein she vied incredible diligence and dexterity.

Coin, Carthama, and other places taken by composition from the Moores.

D. Frederike Henriquez Admirall of Castile.

After the taking of the places aboue mentioned, the King passed on with a great number of men at armes and came within sight of Malaga, a strong towne and exceeding well furnished with men and all things necessary for a towne of warre. The Moore King who lay within it made a sally with a thousand horse, which were the floure of his cavalry, where they skirmished valiantly on both sides, where D. Fernand D' Ayalos the eldest of that family was slaine. And because the army wanted water, the King went backe to Carthama, where sitting in counsell what was best to bee done, it was concluded to goe and besiege Ronde. D. Pedro Henriquez Marquis of Cales and capitaine of the frontiers of Andalusia with other capitaines marched on before with three thousand horse and eight thousand foot to inuest the place, and the King followed them at the heeles with the rest of the army. The towne was stronge and defended by very warlike Moores, being besieged and furiously battered, the Christians in a few daies won the suburbs thereof, where Alphonso Fajardo shewed great prooffe of his worth and valor. The battery continuing against the towne albeit the Moores which were sent to the succor thereof, did

Lib. 23

The generall History of Spaine.

913

A did their best to enter into it and did put the campe in continuall alarmes, the Christians neuerthelesse did so presse them as the besieged were faine to yeeld, vpon condition that their goods and liues might be saued, with liberty to liue in their owne sect in any place of Castile where they pleased. The King entred into the towne of Ronde vpon Whitsunday; D. Bernardin de Velasco, sonne to the Constable hauing first seized vpon a tower of the castle, and as soone as the Moore gouernor was gonne forth of it with his people to retire himselfe into the King of Castiles country to a place in the territory of Siut, the towne was repleoted with Christians drawne from the same city, from Cordoua and other places of Andalusia. The Queene made prouision for the ornaments of the Churches, and things necessary for their seruice, and the gouernment of the towne B was giuen to Antonio de Fonseca. The Moores of that country hauing made themselves Mudejares, that is to say, vassals to Christians, were at that time religiously maintained and preferred, according to the capitulations and promises, by means whereof, diuers other townes did voluntarily yeeld themselves to the Kings, namely, Burga, Lunquera, Monda, Ganfin, Caferes, Montija, with other castles and fortresses of the mountaines of Ronde, Villalonga, and Carthama, who were permitted to liue in their owne religion, paying the same tribute which they were wont to giue to the Moore Kings. The places which did yeeld were more then forty in number. And because Casaramonella did make delaies, King Fernand caused the Inhabitants thereof to bee summoned to yeeld, vpon paine of tasting of all the rigour of warre: wherevpon they submitted, vpon the same conditions as the rest had done, and the garrison thereof was giuen to D. Sancho de Rojas. Those likewise of Marbela, a sea towne, being summoned to yeeld, made answer that they were contented so to doe, and they sent their gouernor or Alguazil Major to the King, who desiring to bee present at the yielding thereof, brought thither his army by the way of Antequera, fetching a long circuit but easie and commodious: By the way hee received letters from the Moores of Marbela, who demanded new capitulations, the which were not answered till the army was in sight: wherewith they being amazed, deliuered vp the town, and retired themselves, some into Affrica, and others into the Kingdome of Castile: Montemajor and other places of the country of Marbela did likewise yeeld. And because the army beganne to want victuals by reason that the tempests and stormes at sea did hinder the ships of burthen from sayling, the King was aduised to make retreat to Cordoua, so the army marched within sight of Malaga once againe, from whence the Moores came forth and skirmished, but to no purpose, the siege whereof had not bene in vaine nor without effect, if victuals had not wanted. The army being returned neere to Antequera, it was abundantly refreshed with victuals sent thither by the Queene. The King afterward entred into Cordoua with great ioy and applaud of the Queene, Prince and Infantes of the Court, the people, Clergy, and sundry Ambassadors: there were sollemne processions made, where the King in manner of a triumph caused great number of Christians to bee led in pompe, and in a glorious shew, which were redeemed from captiuitie, whose shackles and irons were afterward sent to Toledo, and there hung vp against the wal of the Monastery of Saint John of the kings, which are to bee seene at this day.

Ronde taken, and the Moores liues, goods, and religion granted unto them.

Equity of the King and Queene of Castile.

For the maintenance and preferuation of what had bene wonne and conquered, John de Torres, a knight of the Kings house, was sent vnto the frontiers with a Prouost or Alcayde of the Court, named the Licenciate La Font, who distributed the lands to the new Inhabitants, for the ordinary garrisons were vp in the country of the Moores more then twenty leagues; and because diuers Pirates had robbed sundry Moores as they passed out of Spaine into Affrike, contrarie to the capitulations, informations being made therevpon, the Licenciate recovered all that had bene taken away, who demanding a safe conduct for his passage ouer into Affrica to restore to euery one what was his owne, the Moores made him answer that hee needed none other safe conduct then the greatnesse and renoune of the Kings of Castile his Maisters: wherevpon the Licenciate made himselfe ready to passe ouer, yet diuers of his friends counseled him not to giue ouermuch credit to the slight faith of the Moores, whereto with great boldnesse and constancy hee replied, that God forbid, that the power and greatnesse of his Kings honor should be impaired or diminished thorow his feare: A a courageous speech of a most faithfull and affectionate subiect and seruant. And so he paf-sed ouer and restored the Moores their goods, and promise was kept with him. In the meane time the garrisons of Alhama hauing ouer-runne the country neere to Granado, as they returned with great quantity of cattail and other booties, they met on a fodaine and unloked for the King of Granada who came from Malaga thither, accompanied with great numbers of horse, by whom they were charged and pursued vnto the very gates of Alhama with great losse of their people, beside the spoiles which were re-couered from them. There remained yet some small season of this yeere 1485. fit to make warre in, the which the Kings would not haue vnprofitably spent, without exte- B prizing some matter of worth: therefore they caused the forces of Andaluzia, Extre-madura, and the Marquisate of Villena to bee assembled (for they had licenced the men of warre of the farthestmost prouinces of Spaine to depart as soone as they returned to Cordoua ) wherafter diuers consultations, they resolved, at the perswasion of the Earle of Cabra to goe and beseege Moclin: the Earle with Martin Alphonso de Cabra Lord of the house of Montemajour, was sent before to shut in those of the towne with the fo-ces which he had in Baena, then their followed him with foure thousand horse and other forces the Maister of Calatrava, the Earle of Buendia and other Knights; the King with the rest of the forces came after, and the Queene with the whole Court came to Baena. C

Equity of the Kings of Castile.

Those that went first with the Earle of Cabra being arrived on a morning neere to Moclin fell vntwaires vpon the King of Granados army which was come to Moclin consisting of twenty thousand Moores as well horse as foote, who neuertheless began to flie as soone as they did see the Christians whom they thought to be farre more in number then they were : but hauing better viewed them they returned and charged them so brauely as they disordered and put them to flight: diuers were there slaine and taken, the Earle escaped being hurt in the hand with a Harquebuz shot, his horse hauing receiued foure wounds with a lance, his brother D. Gonzalez of Cordoua was slaine, the Moores following the chafe were staid and constrained to turne their backs, by the troups of the Maister of Calatraua and the Earle of Buendia. This newes did greatly displease the Kings, who altering their determination left Moclin and turned their forces against Cambill and Alhabar, very strong places on the confines of Ialen, and within three leagues of the city, alwaies well kept and defended by the Kings of Granado. The Marquis of Cales with the vanguard did approach neere vnto their forts, whether the Artillery was brought with great difficulty, and the battery made with all diligence: but they yielded forthwith and the Moores which were within it were sent away free with their goods into Granado: the Queene gaue these two forts to the city of Ialen, where the King with the Maister of Saint James did determine to strengthen Alhama with foure thousand horse and fise thousand foote which were appointed for the same purpose. The Treasurer of Calatraua being gouernor of Alhama, was solicited by a Moore of the garrison of Salea, to come thither with his forces, and hee did assure him that he would find means to cause him to enter into it: the Treasurer hauing first of all well examined the Moore, and being assured that he ment no deceite went on a night to Salea, where the traitors brother did let downe a rope from the walles, and helped to erect the scaling ladders by which the Christians mounted, who after a dangerous fight made themselves Maisters of the place, the Inhabitants whereof were all made slaves.

Pope Innocent the eight being daylie aduertized of these goodly victories, graunted this yeeare to the Kings to raise certaine subsidies vpon the Clergy, the which were moderated by the Cardinall of Spaine to one hundred thousand golden florins of the coine of Arragon. About the end of the yeeare the Court leauing Andalusia, came to Alcala de Henares, where Queene Isabell was brought in bed of a daughter named Catherin who was wife to Arthur Prince of Wales: heire to the crowne of England, and afterward married to his brother King Henry the eight of that name.

In Alcala which was a place belonging to the Archbishop of Toledo, the Alcaldes and

A Pronots of the Court executing their offices, were hindered by the Cardinall, who was Archbifhop of Toledo, who made greuous complaints to the Queene, how her Officers did vsurpe upon his authority: the Queene told him, that ſhee being Soueraigne in Caſtile, and in all other her realmes, might execute iuſtice in any place: The matter being debated on both ſides, it was referred to the compromise and iudgment of five perſons of the counſell, whom the Queene would name, and to five Channons of the Chapter of Toledo for the Cardinall: but the other affaires of Court, the ſhort ſtaye thereof at Alcala, with other hinderances, did end this ſtrife, the which remained undecided. Then were the Iudges of the Court diſcharged of part of the Proceſſes which did abound in all places where the King and Queene went, the which were turned over to the Chancery at Valiedolit, where Don Alphonſo de Fonſeca Archbiſhop of Saint Iames was made Preſident, with eight Doctours for his Counſell.

During all these warres and businesse Don Ramir Nuyges de Guzman, of whom wee have often spoken heretofore, had remained in Portugall, greatly honoured by King John. His understanding of the Admirall of Castils death, his ancient enmy, procured his friends to obtaine his pardon of King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell, but being aduertised that the matter was now harder to bee effected then before, by reason that Don Frederick, sonne to the deceased Admirall, who had begonne the quarrell, was made Admirall in his Fathers place, and highly fauoured, hee desperately resolved to kill him: and to effect his purpose, hee departed with leaue from the Court of Portugall, and came to Bragança. Don Frederick Henriques being aduertised by his friends what his enmy did intend, hee thought, like a wife man, that it was not good to hold him still in dispaire, and therefore hee sent to Mary Oforio, Don Ramir Nuyges mother, to let her vnderstand, that if shee would come to Valadolid to sue for her sonnes relickition, hee would assist her therein, provided that shee would take order that Don Ramir should returne back from Bragança, to the Court of Portugall.

This Lady being desirous to haue her sonne restored to his lands and goods, did not looke for fit and vnlooke for an occasion, but came to the Admirall, with whom after long conference, she went to the court being at Alcald de Henares, where she obtained, but not without difficulty, the goods of Don Ramir as depositarie, and that hee might returne into Spaine, vnder the keeping of the Earle of FERIA. Don Ramir hauing notice hereof, tooke his leaue of the King of Portugall, and came to the Earle of FERIAS house, where hee remained three yeares, vntill his businesse were brought to this conclusion; that hee might enioy his goods, and marry with his promised wife, the daughter to the Earle of Luna: but that hee might not goe to his owne lands, vntill the King and Queene gaue him leaue. Afterward hee was permitted to come into his owne houses, vpon condition, that during his life he should not come ouer the riuer of Duero: such was the end of the quarrell caused by the Ladies of the Court, betwixt Don Ramir Nunez de Guzman, and Don Frederick Henriquez.

E Before the Court departed from Alcala de Henares, Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla, and Doctor Iohn de Medina, both of them of the Kings Council, were sent Ambassadors into Italy, about the warre which was betwixt Ferdinand King of Naples, and Pope Innocent; the which Ambassage they performed so wisely, as they made peace betwixt those great Potentates. These Ambassadors did in open Consistorie performe the obedience and submissiōs due to the Pope. King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell did in the meane time cause diligent search and punishment to bee made, upon converted Iewes and Moores, which did returne to their old superstition. In the beginning of the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, eighty and sixe, the Court remooved to Medina del Campo, with intent to punish Don Rodrigo Osorio Earle of Lemos, who did disquiet the countrey of Galicia, and had surpris'd the Castle of Ponserrada, driving thence the garrison which Captaine George Abendaño held for the King, and had broken in all forts the truce which the King had made betwixt him and the Earle of Benauent. In regarde whereof hee was commanded to repaire in person to the Court, but hee durst not, and adding crimes to crimes, hee committed sundry excefles and robberies in Galicia.

The Christians
defeated at Moclin.

Birth of the Infanta Catherine.

Contention betwixt the Archbishop of Toledo and the Queen.

Sentences of the quarrelling twixt Don Ramir Nagues
 de Guzman,
 and Frederick Henitques.

The Queene being busied about the warres of Granada which she so much affected, and not being able to goe in person into Galicia, gave commission to the Earle of Beaumont his vtter enemy to repress this insolent Earle of Lemos.

The spring time drawing neere, the city of Cordoua began already to be filled with souldiars sent for by the Kings out of all the Prouinces of Spaine for the Moorish wars: wherefore the Kings parted from Medina, and passing along by Toledo came to Cordoua. There, did hourly arrive many troupes, not onely of Spaniards, but of Frenchmen, English and other forraigne nations. Amongst the Lords of Castile, D. Inigo Lopez de Mendoza Duke of Infantazgo made the bravest and gallantest shew. The army being mustered amounted to the number of twelue thousand horse, and forty thousand able fighting footmen, great number of Cannoniers and peeces of Ordinance of all sorts, thirty thousand beasts of carriage, two thousand waggons with their equipage and ment to drue them. With these forces Loxa was besieged. Into this towne King Mahomet the Little had shut him selfe, breaking his faith giuen to the Kings of Castile, for to reconcile himselfe to his vncl: for the Moores perceiuing, though to late, that their ordinary diuisions and strifes had plunged them into extreame ruine, they did to handle the matter, as they made these two Princes friends, who diuided the foweraigne aucty it betwixt them, the city of Granada remaying neuertheless to King Maury Bosbellin el Zagil: in such sort as communicating their counsels and forces together to annoy the Christians, Mahomet the Little, did vndertake to defend Loxa, from whence diuers sallies and hot skirmishes were made vpon the Kings vanguard, so as King Mahomet receiuing two wounds there, the Moores were shut in, the place was besieged, and the battery furiously begunne. The Duke of Infantazgo being one day vpon the garde, did take certaine Moores of Granada who would haue entred into Loxa, by whom he had notice that King Maury Bosbellin came with a great power to the aide of the besieged, wherevpon the guardes were doubled in all places of the campe, and preparation was made for whatsoever might happen. The suburbs being opened with the Canon, they were sharply assailed and well defended, neuertheless they were taken, with great effusion of Christian blood, where the Lord Scales General of the English was hurt. There was found in the suburbs a Moore that was a Weaver, who was so obstinate, as seeing the place to bee taken, and that the other Moores with-drew themselves into the towne, would not for all that leaue his owne house, saying, that hee had rather die by iron then die in irons, seeing that Loxa which was wont to defend the Moores and offend the Christians, was now the repaire of the enemies, and the grave of her owne citizens, and in this obstinacy hee was slaine. The suburbs being wonne, they beganne to batter the towne in such sort as in a short time, the walles, towers, and defenses were ouerthrowne, so as the Moores which defended them, lay open and exposed to the Cannons mouth, which did so terrifie and discourage them as they craued parley and composition vpon these conditions: That King Mahomet the Little should be pardoned for his disobedience passed: that hee should giue ouer the title of King of Granada, and intitle himselfe thence forward Marquis of Guadix, if so bee that hee could recouer the place within fixe monthes next ensuing, and that it might be lawfull for him to goe into Africa, or to liue in the country of Granada or else in Castile as hee should see fit vnto him, and that the Moores which were within Loxa might doe the like. These things agreed vpon, Loxa was yielded, and the government thereof committed to Don Aluaro de Luna Lord of Fuente Dueña, processions and figures of ioy were made at Cordoua and else where for the taking of this towne. The Melquites being purged, the Queene provided them of ornaments after the accustomed manner.

From thence the King sent the Maister of Saint Iames and the Marquis of Cales, with four thousand horse, and twelue thousand foot to beginne the sege of Illoraa very strong place and well defended, distant three leagues from Granada: whither the rest of the army being come, the quarters and lodgings appointed, and well fortified hauing ser warches, and sentinells in the fields, vpon towers and high eminent places, to discover from a farre off, (for being so nere Granada, they feared some sodaine and vnlooked

The King of Castile's army at the siege of Loxa.

Loxa yielded.

A for assault of the Moores) the suburbs were beaten and assailed, where the Duke of Infantazgo with his troupes, had the honour of the first assault: but he perceiuing his souldiars, who at the mutter made the gallantest shew in brauery of armor and apparell above all others, to goe coldly to the fight, cried out vnto them, How now my fellows, shall men say of you, that you are of the number of those braggarts which are of no other worth then to make a shew in the streetes and in a muster, where men are out of danger and farre from blowes; and that you are courageous in nothing but spending of your money in brauery like vnto women, no, no, souldiars, your honor consisteth in being valiant in fight, and therefore if you be men, preferre it before your liues, and doe not endure, that being beaten backe from this place with double shame, other men should carry away the glory from you: for mine owne part rather then I will blush at your baseness and cowardize, I am resolu'd not to suruiue such a shame, but forgetting the place which I hold, I will cast my selfe into the breach amid the greatest throng of the enemies; and whoeuer loue their honour let them follow me.

The souldiars being ashamed, at this speech reiterated by the Earle of Cabra and others, they tooke courage, beseeching their captaine to command them what they should doe, and they marched with such fury against the enemies, as entering into the suburbs, they made a pitifull slaughter of all those which could not soone enough get into the city; against the which, the cannon being planted, the flanks and curtains were soone ouerthrowne and infinite numbers of houses perced thorow: so as the Moores fearing to bee sooner forced by the enemies, then succoured by their friends, yielded themselves and went forth of the towne with bagge and baggage, and without their armes. The King gave the garison of Illoraa, to Don Gonçalo Hernandez de Cordoua brother to Don Alphonso d' Aguilar, who was afterward surnamed the great captaine.

The army after that, marched to Moclin, whether Queene Isabella came to ioyne with the campe at Loxa. The towne had bene newly fortified with towers and bulwarks, more then in former times, but the battery was made with such store of ordinance, as nothing could resist it: the Christians besides did vie diuers kinds of artifice, the which did great hurt to the besieged, and burnt all their store of gunpowder, by means of a pot of this wild fire which flew in the ayre, and did stick fast in a tower where the said powder lay, which was blowne vp into the ayre; wherewith the Moores being amazed, they did compound to depart with their liues and goods saued. Moclin being taken, part of the army was sent to beate Montefrio, they were the troupes of Suill, Xeres, and Carmona, whilst the King with the residue thereof made spoile vpon the confines of Granada, not without diuers encounters and sharpe skirmishes with the Moores, who came forth of the head city. The King being returned to Moclin, the captaines of Montefrio and Colomera presented themselves vnto him demanding composition, which was granted them, and the Moores went forth of those two places to Granada with their goods, but they left their armor, weapons and victuals behind them. All these places which were taken were rampired and fortified with good garisons, victuals, and other necessities, and hauing left D. Frederike de Toledo, sonne to D. Garcy Aluarez of Toledo Duke of Alua, captaine generall of the who country newly conquered, the King and Queene returned to Cordoua.

Not long after, they marched towards Leon, to order the affaires of Galicia, which was greatly troubled, by the insolency of the Earle of Lemos, who neuertheless appearing before the Kings, did humbly craue his pardon and obtained it, being fauoured by diuers great Lords of the Court: Hee was notwithstanding enioyned not to entred into Galicia for a certaine time, and the places of Ponferrada, Sarria and Castro were taken from him and were applied to the crowne, the Kings neuertheless giuing a certaine summe of money for the marriage of his aunts.

These things thus ordered, the Kings went to visit Saint Iames his Church, in the which city they builded a goodly Hospitall, for the releefe of the poore and of pilgrims, from thence fetching a circuit round about the country of Galicia, they redressed diuers tyrannies which were there committed, restoring diuers monasteries and Churches, which were

thus yielded to King Fernand.

Moclin taken.

The Hospitall
of Saint Iames,
built by King Ferdinand and Queene Isabella
for the releefe
of pilgrims.

were by force dispossessed of their goods, lands, and reuenues by certaine Knights and Gentlemen. To containe whom and all others in their duties, they established a Iudgement seate of foure Auditors, which was the beginning of the Royall Audience of Galicia, and they confirmed Don Diego Lopes Earle of Haro in his dignity of Viceroy of the country, as he had beene in time before. And the better to procure the peace of the country, they caused diuerse strong houses to be ouer-throwne and razed to the ground which serued for the repaire of theeues and robbers, and carried away with them out of Galicia diuerse mutinous and quarrellous Gentlemen, to the end they should employ their strength and courage in the warre against the Moores. The Court beeing returned to Benauent, the Earle shewed himselfe very liberrall and magnificent in the entertainment of the Kings and the great Lords: from thence they came to Salamanca, where they spent the remainder of this yeare 1486.

It hapned this yeare in the towne of Trugillo, that the Iudge or Corrigidor of the place, hauing laide hands vpon a Priest for committing some notorious crime, and not sending him soone enough to his ordinary Iudge, the prisoners kin folke hauing taken a Crosse in their hands, ranne vp and downe the City crying out for helpe, and said that the holy Catholicke faith was trodden vnder foote, the which did so stirre vp the brutish multitude, as they ranne to rake Armes, and came in tumultuous manner to the Corrigidors lodging, who was glad to make hast to deliuer the prisoner, whereof the King and Queene had notice, who were greatly displeased with such feditious, and sent certaine Iudges and Commissioners to Trugillo with forces, who executed diuerse of the mutiners according to lawe.

This yeare, Christopher Columbus borne at Cugurco vpon the riuer of Genoa, came to the Court of Castile, who made offer to searce the Occidentall Ocean, where hee did undertake to discover a great land, riche and abundant in gold and other commodities, crauing ayde of the King and Queen of money and shippes, to furnish him out on such a voyage. Columbus was a man very expert in Navigation, and vntill that time hee had gotten his living by making Sea Cardes. Hee beeing married, and dwelling in the Isle of Madera; a shippe of Biscay, which had for many dayes beene driuen vp and downe by tempests, and cast vpon the same coasts, whereof hee did then speake, did happen to arriue in the Island, Columbus brought the Pilot thereof and three other Marriners home to his house, who hauing endured much misery at sea, did there dye, and in recompence of their kinde entertainment, they did amply informe their host, whereabout these lands lay, and with what windes a man might saile thither. Columbus being a man of a quick apprehension, and great courage, came to King John of Portugall, hoping to perswade him to undertake that Navigation, offering him his seruice therein, and after that to King Henry the seauenth of England; in the end to Don Henriques de Guzman Duke of Medina Sidonia, and to Don Lewis de la Cerda Duke of Medina Celi, who held commodious Hauens in Castile, beseeching them to ayde him in so worthy an enterprise: but all his traualle was to no purpose, for they esteemed him as an Italian, who by bragges and vaunts of matters which hee knew not, endeouored to recleeue his pouerty. Now this yeare hee came to Court with letters from Frier John Peres de Marchena, one excellently learned in all humane learning, who dwelt at Ruیدا, which gaue good testimony of Columbus skill, yet all this was to small purpose: and without the assistance of Alphonse de Quintanilla, hee was at the point to haue giuen ouer all: Quintanilla hauing brought him to his house, and well founded him, gaue him access to the Cardinal of Spaine, and after that, to diuerse of the Kings speciall fauourites, by whose meanes hee was sundry times heard discourse, in so much as his speech beganne to please, and the Kings promised him ayde and employment for the discouerie of a new world, so soone as the warres of Granada were ended: In this manner Columbus, full of hope and courage, did constantly pursue, for the space of sixe whole yeares, the effects of the Kings promise, till at last it was performed. Hee was a man firme and constant in what hee vnderooke, strong and able in traualle, seuer, and chollerick, bigge of limbes and stature, redde faced and full of pimples.

The

At various and quite some perfect of the country
under the
of other employment.

Mating under the of registration.

The first commission of Christopher Columbus,
by the King and Queen
of Castile.

Qualities of *Christopher
Columbus*.

A The Court lying at Salamanca, the Kings caused the Court of Chancery to remooue from Valliolid into their owne pallace there, which was the Bishops house, to the end they might be eye-witnesses, after what manner they ended suites, and did administer iustice, in regard many complaints were made of them. And beeing aduertised that the Marshall Don Pero d' Ayala had caused a Scriveners head to be cut off, who was one of his tenants, for giuing his mother Donna Maria, with whom hee was at strife, a coppie of his fathers will, they sent to take him prisoner, and to seize vpon his goods.

When he was brought to Court, the Constable, who was allyed vnto him, (for hee had married a Niece of his, daughter to the Earle of Miranda) would haue departed, saying that he would not be present at the iudgement of one so neere vnto him: but the Queene assuring the Constable, that the Marshall should not bee touched neither in life nor member, stayed him there. The controuersie betwixt the mother and the sonne, was referred to the Kings Councill, as also the difference betwixt the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Earle of Alua de Lissa, about the Earldome of Niebla, which the Earle said did belong vnto him in right of his mother, which controuersie remaynes at this day vndecided. The country of Biscay beeing at this time somewhat troubled, in regard the Kings Officers did seeme to inroach vpon their priuiledges, the Licenciado Garcy Lopez of Chincilla, one of the Kings Councill, was sent thither, who did iustice, and reformed many matters: but he could neuer obtaine of the people, that the Bishops should come into the country to visit the Churches, who sayd, that it was against their priuiledges. In regard of the warre against the Moores great leauies of souldiers were made as well in Biscay, Alaua, Guipuscoa, Asturia's, as Galicia, who marched into Andalusia towards Cordoua.

The state of the Moores, which was the other day vnited, became on a sudden diuided; it being an impossible matter for two Soueraignes to commaund in one country. King Muley Boabdellin el Zagal, which possessed the citie of Granada, with a great part of the country, began a fresh to pursue his Nephew Mahomet the Little; putting all those Moores to death which tooke his part, confiscating the goods of such as he could catch: and laboured by all meanes to procure King Mahomet death by payson or otherwise, who after the taking of Loxa, had withdrawn himselfe into the towne of Velaz the white. To that place there came to him a very dangerous Ambassage from his vncle Muley, sayning to treat of peace and concord, with too great submissions, the better to disguise his intent, which was to kill Mahomet, and the Ambassadors had expresse charge so to do, who brought him some paysoned presents, to the end that if they failed in the execution of the one, yet the other might take effect. King Mahomet beeing aduertised by his friends of the Ambassadors intents, would by no meanes heare or see them, nor yet receiue their gifts, but sent them word to tell his vncle Muley Boabdellin, that he was sufficiently warned of his proceedings, and that he would accept of no other conditions from him, but onely to throw him out of the royall throne of Granada, which was his true inheritance, and did in no sort belong vnto him, who was a tyrant and a murderer of the Princes of his blood, for the which hee did hope shortly to chastise him, and to cut off his head.

Now was King Mahomet ayded and assisted by the commandement of the kings of Castile, by John de Benauides, Gouverneur of Lorcia, and by Don Frederick of Toledo, Gouverneur of the new-conquered countreys, and other Christian Captaines, who did often enter into the lands and territories of Granada, and were sundrie times constrained to beate backe the enemies, and to defend their owne gouernements from their inuasions. This assistance notwithstanding, King Mahomet the Little was euill intreated by the contrarie partie, dispossessed almost of all, and brought into depayre, by which he was driven to a marueilous hazard, either to lose all, or winne all: for hee went secretly to Granada, not hauing any intelligence there, and arriuing in the night at the gate of the Albaycin, he called to the guards, by whom he was knowne and brought in, hauing but foure or five men in his company: there he assembled diuers of the inhabitants of the Albaycin, and did so well lay open the tyrannies and wrongs which King Muley his vncle had done to him, and did so perswade them by forcible reasons to fauour his right to the Crowne.

Principle core
full of iustice.

Bishops translation of Biscay.

Moores.

Refutation of of K. Mahomet
the Little.

Great Edition
in Granada.

Crowne of Granado, as every one being moued with pittie towards him, and rage against the tyrant, did take armes in his behalfe, and raised a great tumult in the City, crying out, that Mahomet was lawfull King. In the morning King Muley Boabdellin, who lay in the Forte of Alhambra, vnderstanding that his Nephew had frazed on the Albaycin, caused his people to arme themselves; and came forth into the City, where hee likewise had many partakers, where this cursed nation made such hauck and spoile one vpon another, as imagining the streetes not to bee spacious enough for their furie, they went forth into the fields, and fought a fierce combate, wherein dyed multitudes of men, and then returning every one into his owne Forte, they renewed the skirmishes and assaults a fresh: but Mahomet the little, perceiving his party to be the weaker, hee sent to Don Frederick de Toledo, eldest sonne to the Duke of Alua, who was Generall of the Christians in the next garriſons, to entreate ayde and succour from him. Don Frederick who was wise and discret, gathered together all the forces hee could, and came neere to Granado, but would by no means enter into it, to meete whom King Mahomet sent a Moore Capitaine named Aben-Comix with certaine troopes of horse, hee himselfe remaining in the City, fortifying himselfe in certaine places. King Muley vnderstanding of Don Fredericks coming, sent to offer him battaile, but hee would not accept thereof, saying, that the Moores feigned to haue quarrels among themselves, by that meanes to entrappe him and his souldiours, and to enclose them: wherefore keeping his forces in good order without stirring, hee placed the Moores horsemen ledde by Aben-comix in the Front to sustaine the enemies skirmishes, which were furious and bloody. King Muley Boabdellin el Zagal, perceiving that the Christians kept themselves in order, and that by no meanes they would come to battaile, hee did re-enter the City, and began to assaile the Albaycin, which was courageously defended, in regarde that Don Frederick stayed more then an houre after, in order of battaile before the City: but afterward hee returned into his Fort, leaving the Moores to murder one another, and because hee knew that vpon Mahomet the litle's victory, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabels content and profit did depend, hee sent him certaine Harquebuziers vnder the conduct of Ferdinand Aluarez Gouverneur of Colmera, by whose valour the Albaycin held out, and the assaults and combates continued fifty dayes after, D King Boabdellin people being vexed within by King Mahomet, and abroad, by the Christians of the next garriſons.

Castile.

Whilest these troubles continued in Granado betwixt the two factions, King Ferdinand hauing assembled and reviewed the troopes, which from all parts were arriued at Cordoua, hee went to field with an Armie of twenty thousand horse, as well men at Armes, as Genets, and of fifty thousand foote: the chiefe Commanders were the Masters of Saint James and Alcantara, the Duke of Nagera, the Marquis of Cales, and Villena, the Earles of Benauent, Vregna, Cabra, Oropesa, Feria, Cileuences, Olorno, Medellin, and Ribaden. Don Alphonso d' Aguilar, the Treasurer of Calatrava, with the Capitaines generall of the Frontiers of Andaluzia and Murcia. Those which sent their forces thither, were the Cardinal of Spaine Archbishop of Toledo, the Archbishop of Siuill, the Bishops of Burgos and Cuenca, the Dukes of Medina Sidonia, Alua, Playfance, Medina Celi, and Albuquerque, the maister of Calatrava, the Marquis of Astorga, and Aguilar, the Earles of Caltro, Gragna, Saint Steeuens, Miranda, Nieua, Priego, Fuenfibia, Alua de Lusa, Montague, the Constable, the great Commanders of Calatrava and Leon, with other Lords and Knights of Castile. There came likewise from Arragon diuers great Lords, among whom was Don Phillip of Nauarre, bastard sonne to the late Prince Charles of Viana, whom King Ferdinand his Vncle had newly made maister of the order of Montesa in the Realme of Valentia, hauing obtained it of the Pope, and deposed Philip Boyll from the duke dignity, who had bene elected maister thereof conuently. Don Lewis Borja Duke of Gandia was likewise there, with many others of Arragon, Valentia, Sicill and Sardinia. With these great forces they undertooke to goe and beseege Malaga, but first of all it was thought fit to remooue all lets and impediments that Velez Malaga might do vnto them, which place was beseege in April 1487. And the king being desirous to lodge certaine companies of footmen vpon a rising hill, which 1487.

Velez Malaga
beseege.

A which did greatly import the safte of the armie, the Moores making a furious salley forth of the cittie, did beate them from thence, and the King was the same time armed with a Cuirasse, his sword in his hand, exposing himselfe that day to the enemies arrows and shot, which fell round about him as thicke as haile, being in great danger of his person: neuertheless his people by his presence were encouraged, and forced the Moores to turne their backs, and to shut themselves into the towne.

Albeit, that this valour of the kings be prayse-worthie, and highly to bee extolled as a singular example, yet notwithstanding it may be reproofed, in regard of the consequence of a mischiefe which might haue happened, therefore they besought him, no more to hazard his person in such dangerous attempts. The next day they assayed the suburbs, where the Moores had barricadoed themselves, who defended it for the space of fixe whole houres with such obstinacie, as the Christians could not get one foote of ground from them, vntill that the Duke of Nagera, and the Earle of Benauent came with fresh succours, who caused the enemies to leaue the place, but to the cost of diuers: for Nugno d' Aquila, and Don Martin of Acugna were slayne there, Don Carlo of Gueuara, Garcy Laco de la Vega, Fernando de Vega, Iohn de Merlo, with diuers other men of note were hurt. The Artillerie was not yet come to the campe, therefore King Fernand caused diuers forts to be made against the citie, wherein he lodged diuers companies of souldiers, and being well acquainted with the Moores pollicies, he placed in all the wayes that led to the campe, in the mountaines and vallies, which might any way be an hinderance to the armie, diuers watches and sentinels, with places for them to retire vnto, which were well furnished and defended by valiant souldiers, vpon which occasions, sundrie profitable things were ordained necessarie for martiall discipline, the Moores neuer ceasing from coming downe from the Mountaines, and making many enterprises vpon the armie which they kept in continuall alarme.

King Muley Boabdellin on the other side, being importuned by the Affricane Capitaines, and old Moores of Granado to succor Velez Malaga, he went to field with great numbers of horse and foote, and passing thorough sharpe and narrow places, hee sent part of his forces from Bentomnix against the Master of Alcantara, who conducted the Artillerie, but hauing intelligence, that King Fernand had sent the great Commander of D Leon for his conuoy, he called backe the Moores, and with all his forces hee beganne the very same night to come downe from the hilles, and presented himselfe in order of battell in the view of the Christian armie, making shew as if they would succour the beseege, or else dye in fight. This sudden and vnlookt-for arriuall of the enemies, made diuers at their wits end, and did in a manner terrifie them: wherefore it behooued King Fernand to vse his best skill and discretion, so to order matters, as he might not receiue a disgrace: but Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, brother to the Cardinal of Spaine, a brane and resolute knight, being in the foreward with the Cardinals forces, did put them out of feare: for he gallantly opposed himselfe against the front of the Moores battalions, and made them to stand still. They perceiving the Christians valour and boldnesse, did dislodge by breake of day, like runaways in such amazement, as many of them flung away their weapons and armor, to be the lighter to run. This notwithstanding, the king would not be ouer confident, but caused every man to stand still in his order the whole day long and the night following, vntill he had certaine notice that the Moores flight was not fained but true.

King Muley Boabdellin by this shamefull retreat lost his reputation amongst his own people, so as they beganne to detest him, and to incline to his aduersarie Mahomet the Little. This Moorish armie did disperse it selfe into sundrie places, and Muley withdrew himselfe to Alnumegar, and then to Almerie, from whence he went to Guadix. By this disgrace of his, King Mahomet the Little found meanes to recouer the Alhambra, and all the strong places of the Cittie, where hee cut off the heads of foure Moorish knights of the noble family of Aben Carrax, because they had opposed themselves against him at his returne from prison. By this meanes he remayned King of Granado alone, and making vse of the king of Castiles friendship, hee obtained two truces for his vassals, and sufferance to go and trafficke in their dominions, and to buy all kind of merchandizes, armor,

Shamefull
retreat of the Moores.Moores.
Muley Boabdellin overwhelmed by Mahomet the Little, recouered the Alhambra
and the Granada.

armor, and victuals excepted: and hee did not nor onely obtaine it for those Moores, A which were now obedient vnto him, but for all those that would submit themselves to his Crowne hereafter, and besides that, souldiers, artilerie, and all other prouision to pourfue his Vncle, and to annoy those places which were vnder his subiection, publishing declaratorie letters of his loue and good will towards all such as within fixe moneths after would submit themselves to him, and threatening grieuous punishment to the obstinate and rebellious.

Castile.

The Moores within Velez Malaga hauing scene the flight of their King Muley Boabdil lin el Lagal were out of all hope to receiue any succour from him, and fearing that as soone as the artilerie was come, they should be enforced to yeeld, they compounded by the meanes of the Earle of Cifuentes, and yeelded vp the place, their liues and goods beeing saued, their victuals and armor excepted: and they had licence to depart into Africa, or else-where, or if it pleased them, they might remaine in Castile. The towne of Bentomunx followed the example of Velez Malaga, and the gouernement thereof was giuen to Pietro Namarro, who from a poore youth, (although a gentleman) and from being a mariner, as it is reported, attained to the degree of a Capitaine, and afterward became one of the most famous men of his time, as well in the warres of Spaine as Italy, and was created Earle of Alberto. The towne of Comares, and diuers other Castles of the Countrey called las Alpujares, hearing of the Kings of Castiles good successe, did at the first summons without any resistance submit themselves to their obedience, paying the same tribute to them which they did vse to pay to the Moore kings; and vpon other conditions which were imposed vpon them, to the end to be the better assured of them, till such time as they did become Mudejares, whereby they might liue in their vaine superstition. The gouernement of Velez Malaga was giuen to the great Commander Don Gutiere de Cardena, Superintendent or high Treasurer to the Kings.

Malaga besieged.

The neighbour Countries being thus cleared of the enemies places of retreat, the armie marched to the seege of Malaga, a citie, as hath beene sayd, exceeding strong, and well provided of men, victuals, and all other necessities: within the which a valiant Capitaine called Hali Duax, had the command of diuers valiant Moores, as well of the Realme of Granada, as of Affricane Gomeres, but vnderneath a Generall, or Alcayde major, who was as Constable to the King el Lugal, whose name was Amir-zeli, who was then at Guadix, from whence the King made warre vpon his Nephew, and from thence, at the earnest entreatie of his subiects, hee intended to succour Malaga, if neede were; which the Kings of Castile sent to summon, promising libertie to the Moores, and assurance of their liues and goods: but they answered that their king had placed them there, not to giue the towne to the Kings of Castile, but valiantly to defend it, whereof they meant to shew sufficient proofes.

This answer being made, they consulted whether it were best to batter it, or else to beseege it a farte off, cutting off their victuals, and annoying them by the neighbour garisons, vntill they were enforced to yeeld: the king remained firme in his opinion, which was to beseege it roundly neere hand, notwithstanding, that they prayed him to consider the great strength thereof, as well by nature as by art: for the citie of Malaga stand vpon a plaine on the sea side, which beates vpon the walles, wherewith it is well rounded: and it was flanked with strong towers according to those times, hauing two Castles seated vpon a little hill, one of which is called Alcaua, and the other Gibraltar, which is the highest of the two, whereunto men go from the one to the other, by a way about fixe foorthe broad, betwixt two great walles, wherewith it was couered, and these two fortresses were likewise compassed with strong walls and high towers, furnished with Artilerie, engines of defence, and great numbers of valiant souldiers, who were all of them determined rather to dye then to yeeld.

Now for the more easie and commodious lodging of the armie, it was needfull to winne a little hill, seated a stones cast from the fort of Gibraltar, betwixt the same and an high hill: there the Moores made great resistance, notwithstanding it was wonne, and foureene thousand footmen, and fixe and twenty hundred horse were placed there, vnder the command of the Marquis of Cales: the next day after, they disposed the quarters

ters round about the towne: the Marquis had the first, with whome were Don Gutiere of Sottomajor, Don Aluaro Bagan, Fernand de Vega, and the Pourueyvor of Villafraanca, Don Pedro Vaca, and Garcy Bravo Capitaine of Atienza, with other Capraines and Knights, namely, Charles Arcellan, Hernand Carillo, Don Francisco of Bouadilla, Don Diego Lopes d Ayala, George de Peteta, Gouernour of Soria, and Michel d Abassa. The next quarter belonged to Don Diego Fernand of Cordoua, hauing charge of the forces of the Dukes of Albuquerque, and of Medina Sidonia, and so consequently euery man had his quarter disposed to him round about the citie, the Earle of Cifuentes, Capitaine of the men of Siuill, Don Lorenzo Suares Figueroa, Earle of FERIA, and Don Gutiere of Padilla, Treasurer of Calatraua with the forces of Eccia, those of the Earle of Benauent, those of Pero Carillo of Albornos, and of the Arch-bishop of Siuill, then the companies of the Earle of Vregna, those of Don Alphonso of Aguilar, of the Duke of Nagera, of Don Fredericke of Toledo, of John Aluarez, and of Alphonso Oforio: Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza followed after with the forces of the Cardinall his brother, the Earle of Caba, the great Commander of Leon, with the men of Cordoua, those of Don Garcy Lopes of Padilla, Master of Calatraua, of Don Antonio of Ponseca, of Antonio d Aguilar, of Don Alphonso of Cardegna, Master of Saint Iames, those of Don Lewis Fernand Portocarrero Lord of Palma, and of Don John of Estuniga Master of Alcantara.

Malaga being thus beseege, the Kings teur was knowne by the Moores, who bestowed many cannon shot vpon it from the citie, so as they were constrained to remove it behind a little hil. The batterie planted to the most conuenient places was great and furious from the Marquis of Cales quarter against the Castle of Gibraltar, the which in many places was pierced and ouerthrowne in many places, and as soone repaired by the Moores. The Marquis hauing taken away the towers which did offend him, advanced his lodging a stones cast neare to the fort, but hee was constrained to returne to his former quarter by the continuall sallies which the Moores made vpon him and his people, fighting with such furie, as they came to the poynnyard, and slue the Capitaine of Atienza, and Inigo Lopes of Medran, Lord of Catagunillas, Gabriel of Sottomajor, and other valiant men, besides diuers hurt, in the number of whome was the Marquis, who was shot into the arme with an arrow, for the Moores fought from a place of great advantage. At this seege, two great shippes of warre arrived on the coast of Malaga, commanded by Don Ladrón de Guevara sent from Flanders by Maximilian of Austria king of the Romanes, husband to the heire of Bourgondie, and father to Philip which was sonne-in-law to the Kings of Castile, who for the seruice of this warre did send these two vessels laden with diuers peeces of brasse Ordonance, and barrells of powder, bels for the use of the Churches of the places newly conquered, great store of mettrall, with workmen to worke it, with other instruments and things necessarie for the warre, being desirous for his part to partake in some sort the honour of this great conquest which his posteritie enioyeth at this day. A tower of the citie being wonne with great royle and effusion of blood, was quickly recovered againe by the Moores, who grew more obstinate in their defence, by meanes of a false rumor raised by certain cowards of the campe, which desired to returne home againe, who sayd, that Queene Isabella did sollicite the King her husband to rayle his seige, because the plague was within and about diuers places of the Citie, and in this hope the Barbarians did valiantly resist all assaults. The King to let them vnderstand, that his intent was otherwise, sent for the Queene to come to the campe, who was accompanied thither by great numbers of voluntarie Knights: and then hee sent word to the beseege, that if they would yeeld, he would vse them gently as hee had done others, if not, he gaue them to vnderstand, that he would not depart thence, till the citie were taken, and that then they should expect nothing but rigor; to the which they made no answer, but did straightly command that not any one amongst them should dare, vpon paine of life, to talke of any agreement or composition with the kings of Castile: and they did indeed kill diuers vpon the same occasion; being resolved to hold out till their last breath, the which did greatly prolong the seege, where powder beginning to fayle, the gallies were sent to Valencia, Barcelona, yea into Sicill, which brought thither great quantitie.

The Emperor Maximilian sends Artilery and powder from Flanders to the king of Castile.

The

The King of Portugall being entreated to send some thither likewise, did it willingly, A & with great speed. There was no part of the day almost, which was free from skirmishes, where many men of either side dyed daily: wherefore certaine Moores of the Cittie being displeased with the losse of their friends, and fore-seeing the danger whereinto they were likely to fall, yet not daring to speake of composition, did secretly send a messenger to the campe, to tell King Fernand, that if he would promise to save their lives and goods, they would give him entrance, whereunto the king consented, and as this Moore returned, he was taken by certaine Gomeres of Affricke, who assailed him with their swords in such sort, as he returning hurt to the campe, dyed there, and so the treaty ended.
As the land skirmishes were continuall, so were those at sea, where the armie of Castile B did hinder, as much as in them lay, any entrance of comming forth of the cittie, and to redresse the sallies by land, there were by the diligence of Garcy Lazo de la Vega, John d'Es- turniga, and Diego of Tayde, diuers forts made, and great trenches drawne, where diuers great Corps de gard were placed, so as the Moores in that manner shutt in, could not do so much hurt, nor vex the armie as before it had done, the Moores being neuer-theless constant in their resolution to hold out to the last man, notwithstanding that viſuals did greatly decrease in the cittie: for they were aduertised by diuers traitors of the campe of what fouer was done there good or bad, and oftentimes they told them, that which was false, in such sort as they were not discouraged, but did beleue, that the king and Queene would shortly bee constrained to depart thence, and there were some C that left the cittie, vnder color of yeelding themselves to the King, and to become Christians, who falsely reported, that there was great and incredible abundance of viſuals, and all other necessaries in the cittie, to the end thereby to cause the Christians to leaue the sege, the which report did put the King and his Councell into a studie, whether they should cease the batteries and assaults, and keepe the sege by sea with certaine gallies, or else by land with certaine forts to starue them by little and little: but weighing the nature of that nation, who live with so little meate, as it is to be wondered at, this counsell was rejected as vnfruitfull, wherefore the batteries were renewed, and to that end diuers artificiall engines were made of excellent inuention, and mynes were wrought in diuers D places, which being discovered by the industrious and vigilant Moores, were cause of the death of a great number of braue souldiers. King Basbellinel Zagal being daily sollicit to succour Malaga, went forth of Guadix, with certaine troupes of horse and foote, but being met and encountered by the army of his nephew Mahomet, which came forth of Granada for the same purpose, hee was vanquished and put to flight, whereof King Fernand had speedie intelligence, to his great contentment. Within the besieged cittie were certaine Moores that were esteemed holy men, who with mad and idle prattle went about to encourage the souldiers, saying, that the dead did greatly desire to rise againe, for to helpe them to driue the Christians thence, with other such like words, which were of great force to animate that superstitious race. There arrived at the campe fresh supplies of horse and foote from Arragon, Valencia, and Cattalonia, E which did much encourage the assaillants, who had this aduantage, not to want viſuals.
The King of Tremessen being aduertised by the Moores which daily past into Affricke vnder the Kings safe conduct of their great good successe in those warres of Granada, sent his Ambassadors to them with rich presents, who did request their friendship and protection, and permission for their Kings subjects to saile vpon the seas without hurt or feare of the Spanish gallies, the which was graunted them, so as the King their maiesty did not give ayde and assistance to those of Malaga, and other Moores of Granada their enemies.
Matters standing at a stay, a certaine Moore borne at Tunis, leading a solitarie life nere to Guadix, called Abraham Algenri, a man of a low stature, and aged, began to preach how that their Prophet Mahomet had revealed to him, that if Malaga were this one time relieved, it should neuer more be in danger to be taken: therefore vnder the conduct of this Hermite, who was reputed a holy man, foure hundred horsemen did hazard to enter the towne, who making way thorough the guards and trenches of the campe, two hundred of them passed into the cittie, and the rest of them were cut in peeces.

The Hermite in the meane time had withdrawne himselfe aside, and looking as if hee had

A had beene rauished in spirit, was at his prayers in great deuotion: the Christian souldiers which pursued the Moores did finde him, and brought him before the Marquis of Cales, who askt him what he was, hee made answer that hee was an holy man, vnto whom God revealed his great secrets, which should happen in that sege, and end by the taking of Malaga, which the number of seauen; and what signifies seauen sayd the Marquis, are they yeares or moneths? they are neither yeares nor moneths, quoth the Hermit but weekes, daies, or howers, but enquire no farther of mee, for Calla (that is God) hath commanded mee, to tell the rest in secrete to the King and Queene, and to none others. The Marquis although hee made a iest of that hee heard the Moore say;
B did neuertheless send him to the King, by a renolted Moore; for hee would not leaue his owne quarter, especially so soone after the fight: when hee arrived, the King was asleepe, and the Queene taking no delight to behold such manner of foolish peoples, hee was brought into a tent, where Don Beatrix de Bouadilla was in talke with Don Aluaro, Son to the Duke of Braganca who was fled from Portugall, and Ruy Lopez de Toledo, the Queenes Treasorer. The Marchiones looking vpon this old Hermit, bad them giue him some meate: hee seeing her to bee richly appparelled, and that they were with her in like manner, asked those that were next him, if it was the King, and Queene, they to mocke him, told him it was they. Then the villaine, who of purpose came from his cell with an intent to kill them, layd hand vpon a short Cimeter, that hee wore vnder his habit, and C therewith gaue Don Aluaro, such a stroake vpon the head, as he had well nere flaine him; and being ready to doe as much to the Marquis, the Treasorer there present did hold him backe, and the rest runne out of the tent, yet at the noyse diuers of the Marquis ser-uants, came running in and hewed the wicked Hermit in peeces. The King being awake and hearing what was done, did greatly wonder at his boldnesse, and was afterward better guarded. The peeces of the Moores body, were with engines throwne into the City, in reuenge whereof the Moores did kill a Christian prisoner, who was a man of note, and setting him vpon an asse, they draue it towards the campe, where at the same instant Don Henriques de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia with his trayne did arriue, who besides the supply of soldiours, which hee brought, did lend the King twenty thousand golden doubles, and the very day of his comming, more then a hundred shippes lo-den with viſuals and munition did arriue in the roade nere to Malaga, where with the army was greatly refreshed, and the Duke highly honored and esteemed, for such a seruice: Soone after, there arrived other succors from the Duke of Infantazgo. The Moores being againe summoned to yeeld, and not to attend the merities, which a victory gotten by force doth bring with it, being still obstinate, and hauing notice of certaine disca-ses in the campe, they would by no means hearken there-vnto: wherefore they were assayled a fresh, and did as valiantly defend them-selues, killing many Christians. The citty being in great want of viſuals, the Moores did already beginne to eate roasted skins, and other such like things, but they had still some idle Prophet or other which confirmed them in there obstinacy: yet notwithstanding, two of the chiefeſt Moores in the citty, whose names were Amet, Aben-Amar, and Ali Dudax, and with them an Alfagui called Abraham Albaris; with diuers Marchants, officers, and men of quality, being ioyned together, came and besought the gouernour to take some order, for the people of the City, which dyed for hunger, who without any hope of releefe, could not auoyd the enemies rigor, and that hee needed not to thinke it a disgrace to him to yeeld the citty of Malaga, seeing that other places as strong as it in the realme of Granada had yeilded to the Christians: if hee thought to better their estate by a battayle, they wisht him to march forth to the fight, for they were not able any longer to liue, in so great necessity: but all this serued to no purpose. The King perceauing the obſtinacy of F this wretched people, caused certaine peeces of ordonance to be bent against the towers of the bridge, the first of which was wonne by assault, Francisco Ramiers of Madrid Captaine of the artillery, halting and increasing the battery to prepare entrance for the soldiours was by the king made knight the same day for his good seruice. The besieged being brought to the last dispaire, a great troupe of horse and foote animated by one of their Prophets, made a furious sally vpon the quarters of the masters of Saint Iames, and Alcantara, where at the beginning they caused great disorder comming vnlookt for, Kkkk but

but at the last they were repulged and beaten back with great slaughter, and the Moore Prophet was the first man that was slaine. By this overthrow the Alcaide or Gouvernor being excused from making any more resistance, gaue the inhabitants leaue to capitulate as well as they could with the Kings of Castile : wherefore they sent Amer-Aben-Amar, and Ali Duda, and three other principall Moores to the Campe, who besought the Kings to receiue them for Mudejares or vassalls, and to giue to them and the rest of the Citizens, the towne of Coin to dwell in, and to permit those that would, to passe in to Affrick with their goods : the King told them that the great Commander of Leon should make them an answer, the which was, that for as much as the extremity of hunger had constrained them to yeeld, and not any good will to the Kings, it behoued them to yeeld to their mercy. Those of the towne hauing vnderstood the Kings resolution by their deputies, did say, that in regarde they went about to take away the liberty of their persons, they were resolu'd to hang five hundred Christian prisoners on the walls, and then to come forth every man with his sword in hand, and to dye fighting : the King sent them word that if they did put one Christian to death, hee would without any mercy, put them all to the edge of the sword. These of Malaga once againe sent foureteeen Moores of euery quarter of their City to the Campe, who brought with them a writing which they shewed for an example of the deceased Kings of Castiles clemencie vsed to the subingated Moores, and with great humillity they begged for mercy. Diuers of the Lords and Captaines were of opinion to put all that rashly obstinate nation to death, who were enemies to the name of a Christian : but the Queenes more iust and Christian-like opinion was followed, which was to saue all their liues. Then the King wrote back to them, that their liues were only granted, and no more : whereat the Moores being much astonied, were at strife amongst themselves, some being of opinion to make a desperate fall vpon the Christians with their weapons, and to set fire on the City, and all the wealth thereof, following the examples of certaine townes of Spaine in antient times; but they who thought it better to become slaues, did preuaile. Thus was the City of Malaga yeilded: the great Commander of Leon entring first into it with his troops in armes, by means of hostages, who seized vpon the City, towers and Fortes thereof, and hauing disarmed the Moores of all their weapons and munition, all people of both sexes and of all ages were assembled in the two base Courts of the Castle of Alcauao, where most lamentable cryes of Morish men and women were heard, lamenting their liberty, and goodly City lost, with their Fortes, Towers and Castles, which could not defend her Citizens liues, nor giue them buriall after their death. Among the multitude, twelue renegades Christians were found, who serued as spies for the Moores, who were stricken thorow with Darts, and so slaine : the Christian prisoners were deliuered and sent home to their houses, fauoured and rewarded by the Kings. Two other Sea townes neere to Malaga, were likewise taken, and the Moores made slaues, by Pedro de Pera whom the King had sent thither.

After that all things were surely possessed by the Christians in Malaga, the Bishops and Clergie made their entrance, who performed the accustomed ceremonies, purifications, dedications, with such other solemnities, as wee haue heretofore written : and the Kings hauing at the same time receiued a Bull from Pope Innocent, by the which hee granted them and their successors, authority to name and appoint Bishops and other Ecclesiasticall dignities needfull in the Realme of Granada, it was thought fit to restore the Bishops See to the City of Malaga, as it had beene in times past, and Don Pedro de Toledo was chosen Bishop of the same, who was a Channon of Siuill, a man of great learning and merit, who was confirmed therein by the Pope, vnto whom the Kings sent a hundred Moores Gomerers of Affrick for a present, and to Queene Isabel of Naples the Kings sister, fifty Morish maides, and thirty to the Queene of Portugal : of all the other slaues, the third part of them was diuided among the Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, and Captaines of the Campe: an other third part was employed for the redemption and exchange of Christian Captiues: and an other third part remained to the Kings, to wards their great costs and charges sustained in that siege, the which lasted three moneths and one day, which was the eighteenth of August this yeare 1487.

The

The City of Malaga yeidel.

Don Pedro de Toledo Bishop of Malaga.

A The order and gouernment of the Cittie being disposed, the commaund thereof was giuen to Don Garcia Fernandes Manrique, who had beene Corrigidor of Cordoua. The Iudges, Rectors, and Iurates, with other Officers of iustice, being established, the goods were distributed to such as were receiued for new inhabitants, who were prouided of good and wholesome lawes, though fit and necessarie for those times.

These matters with others being dispatched, the King and Queene returned victor-ious and triumphant to Cordoua; where they were no sooner arriued, but they began to thinke vpon necessarie prouisions for the next yeares warre : for, seeing they had had fo happy successe already, they were very loth to giue it out by any interruption what- soeuer.

B In the interim of these great busineses, the strifes of diuers Arragonois did still trouble the Kings eares, for that in regard of his long absence, all appeales coming before the Magistrate, whom they call Iustice of Arragon, all euident wrongs, excesses, and outrages committed by the great ones, were with partialitie drawne out in length. The Kings left Cordoua and came to Sarragossa, where they assembled the Estates to redresse those insolencies which were complained of. The Estates being perswaded by the Vice-chancellor of the Kingdome, whom the King had appoynted to speake vnto them, did relinquish diuers poynts of their pretended rights and liberties, and did suffer many things to be reformed, and namely, they were content to establish the Courts of iustice of the Hermandades or brotherhoods, after the manner of Castile, a most profitable and

Hermandades
in Arragon.

C necessarie matter for the whole countrie, and did besides that obtaine great subsidies of money for the King towards the wars of Granada. And because the Inquisition brought great profite to the Kings coffers in Castile, of the goods of the Iewes and Moores, which were reuolted to their foolish superstitions: it was decreed, that like proceeding should be vsed against them in Arragon, and Iudges appointed to make their definitiue sentence. One of the sayd Commissioners had like to haue beene slayne, by those manner of people, on a morning in the Church of Sarragossa, which gaue them occasion to enquire more diligently of such as were faulty: wherein, choller, greedinesse of gaine, and desire to fill the kings coffers, made them greatly to exceed, the which the practise of D their successors at this day can very well witnesse: the obstinate were burned, and those which did reconcile themselves, or were in any fault at all, were fleeced to the very quick.

Inquisition in
Arragon.

The Kings passing into the Realme of Valencia, which was troubled with the same diseases, did call the Estates to Orihucla, where they made diuers goodly Edicts. Whilest the Court lay at Valencia, there entred into Cattalonia an Ambassador from the French king Charles the eighth, sent to King Fernand, who sent to meete him, and to let him vnderstand, that vnlesse he brought with him the restitution of the Earledome of Rossillon, he might returne from whence hee came, and for ought that the Ambassadour could say or do, he could not be suffered to come to Valencia, but was enforced to returne without being heard or sene. King Charles at the same time was troubled with ciuill warres against the Duke of Orleans, Duke Francis of Brittain, and the Lord of Albret, who was dispossessed of his lands, father to John of Albret who was king of Nauarre, and with others.

King Fernand
refuseth to heare or see the French Am-
bassadour.

Kkkk 2

Iohn

John of Albret, and Katherine of Nauarre, Kings of Nauarre, accounted for the 35. in the order of the Kings.

Nauarre.

John Vicount
of Narbon quarrels for the Earldome
of Foix, and Suzerainty of Roussie.

JOHN of Albret, the sonne of Alain, of whom we haue made mention heretofore, was married to Catherine the heire of Nauarre: but before we come to the declaration thereof, it shall be needfull to speake of the state wherein the late King Francis Phœbus left the succession to his sister Catherine who reigned after him. John, Vicount of Narbone, vnkle to her, and to the deceased King, did forth-with quarrell with the Lords of Foix and Bearn, saying, that for those lands, lying vpon the limits of the Realme of France, where women do not succeed, that Queene Catherine his Neece was incapable of enioying them, and therefore shee ought to content her selfe with her inheritance of Nauarre, which is gouerned by other lawes, and to leaue those two Lordships to him. Vpon this strife great warre arose betwixt the parties the Vicount of Narbonne, being fauoured by Isper of Villemur, Seneschall of Foix, and the Lord of Calmont, John of Castel Verdin, and others; who the year 1484. leading with them forces of horse and foot, tooke, through the trecherie of one called Romengat, the towne of Maçeres, and then they seized on Monthault, and in the end they came to assaile Pamiers, where the citizens would willingly haue receiued the Vicount, whom they acknowledged to be a son of the house of Foix, but not his souldiers, whereat the Vicount being enraged, went to S. Antonies, which is the Cathedral church, and the Bishops place of residence, from whence he draue away Palschal, who was Bishop and possessor thereof, and enthronized Mathew Artigala therein, who pretended and pleaded the sayd Bishopricke against the other: the Vicount moreover, doing his best to enter into Pamiers, but the inhabitants persistering in their resistance, he was constrained to retire to Maçeres, from which place he continued the war against his Neece, and the princeesse Magdalen her mother, who sent in the year 1485. John of Lautrec to keepe and defend the countrey of Foix with diuers troupes leaued in Bearn, and in the Earldome of Bigorre, as also to recouer that which John of Foix Vicount had vsurped. Lautrec marching on to execute his commission, was preuented by the way by Raymond Lordat, Lord of Rodet, who intreated him, from those of Sauardun, who some few dayes before had yielded to the Vicount, to pardon them, in regard they did it to auoyd the present danger, and to appease the Vicounts furie, against whom they were not strong enough to resist, they being desirous with all their hearts to serue queene Catherine their naturall Princeesse, and that if her pleasure were to receiue them, they would obey her, and most willingly would cast off the Vicounts yoke: therefore the Lord of Rodet intreated him to make all the haste he could to Sauardun, assuring him that hee should be kindly welcomed, and let into the towne. Lautrec accepting this offer marched thither, and arriued at the bridge gate, at the same instant, when as the Vicount of Narbone, who was aduertised of all their practises entred at another gate called Vlmet. These two Lords being met together in this fort, did in stead of assaying one another, performe offices of complement, and they fell into discourse of peace, which grew to this conclusion, that John of Foix should enioy Sauardun, Maçeres, Monthault, and S. Elspartio, with the church of S. Anthony, the castle of Heremen and Montagu, with other places and forts, the which agreement, as being vnlawfull, was not obserued: for within a few dayes after, Odet Cardinall of Carcasson, recouered Montagu and S. Antonies, and restored them to Queene Catherine. Lautrec likewise on the other side took Montagu, S. Elspartio, with the castle of Heremen, which he ouerthrew. In those busineses was queene Catherine entertained in the beginning of her raigne, to the great contentment of the chief Lords of the factions in Nauar, who in the meane time managed their owne affaires by the intelligences which they had in Castile, notwithstanding any impediment that the Lord of Aubenais was able to giue them, who was Viceroy in that Kingdome.

The year following, which was 1486. John Vicount of Foix in recompence of the losses he had sustained, did by intelligence with certaine of the Inhabitants surprize the towne

A towne of Pamiers, and left the Lord of Lauellane with certaine companies of souldiers there: but Captaine Peter Banfiere, did, by the selfe same meanes, and by the helpe of a Locke-smith who made false keyes to the gate of Conserans, being sent thither by the Princeesse Magdalen, and the Queene her daughter, recouer the sayd towne, slew diuers of the Garrison with Lauellane their Captaine, and carried thence whatsoever hee found: yet for all this, the warre ended not; but continued to the great hinderance and preiudice of the countreys of Foix and Bearn: during which tymoiles, the Princeesse Magdalen reiecting the great and profitable match which was offered by the Prince of Castile, married her daughter to John of Albret, which caused many troubles in the Realme of Nauarre: For it was no easie matter to bring the factious to any reason. Those which had any intelligences with Castile, were so farre off from desiring this marriage with Prince John of Castile, as they hindered it to their vttermost power, because they would not be subiect to a Prince that was mightie, and had means to punish their crimes, and yet neuertheless, they could make vse of the occasion, why that match was not accomplished, by resisting their Princeesse and John of Albret her husband, and by that meanes vpheld themselves in their tyrannies. The absence of the Cardinall of Foix, the Queenes Vnkle, was a great hinderance to her affaires: For this year 1486. he was sent for to Rome by Pope Innocent the eighth, to be employed for the pacification of Naples, which was troubled with ciuill wars betwixt the Barons and their King Fernand, the same king being at great strife with the Pope, who sent this Cardinall to Naples with power as Legate à latere, where in some sort, he composed those differences: but he dyed at Rome, and neuer returned more into Nauarre: the state of which Kingdome being thus miserably distracted, Amand, Lord of Albret, father to the new king, did resolute to enter into Nauarre, where hauing had conference with the Lord of Aubenais his brother, who was Viceroy there, and then with John de Ribera, who spoiling the countrie for the King of Castile at the same time, vnder color of defending and vpholding the Constable D. Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, and who had taken certaine townes, hee delt in such fort, as he perswaded him to go with him to Valencia to king Fernand, where being arriued, the Lord of Albret being welcomed and kindly entreated, did beseech the King to accept of the desire he had to do him seruice, in stead of the effect, for so much as he was a poore Knight, vnjustly expelled from his countrie by the French King, who was moued against him, and John of Albret his sonne, whose person with his kingdome of Nauarre, hee came to offer vnto him, requesting him to receiue them into his protection: and also that he had commission to make the like request for the Dukes, Francis of Brittain, and Lewis of Orleance, pursued and assisted by the same King Charles, each of whom promised him seruice and ayde for the recouerie of his Earldome of Rossillon, and in all other occasions. The Lord of Albrets speech was fauourably and attentively heard by King Fernand, who granted all that which hee demanded in the behalfe of the king his son, commanding John de Ribera to restore to him or his Lieutenants Viana, with all the rest of the places, which he held in the Realme of Nauar. And did moreover giue order for the rigging forth of an army by sea in Guipuscoa and Biscay, against the French King for the aide of the aboue-named Princes, who had likewise solicited Henry the seventh King of England to take their part, who inclined thereunto, so as a great number of Spanissh shippes did lye vpon the coasts of Brittain, whose Admirall was Monsieur Gralla, with whom Alain of Albret returned, and an armie out of England was likewise sent, conducted by the Lord Scates to the hurt of the French-men, who by meanes of a victorie obtained by K. Charles or his Lieutenants, at S. Aubin, did deliuer themselves from all danger, the D. of Orleance, and Monsieur Gralla being taken prisoners: the Lord of Albret escaped, and the D. of Brittain died for griefe of mind, leauing two daughters, Anne the eldest, albeit that she was promised to Maximilian King of the Romans, who was of the D. of Orleance faction, was won by King Charles to be his wife, who was desirous by such a marriage to vnite the Dutchie of Brittain to his Crowne. And because he was betrothed to Marguerite of Austria, daughter to the king of the Romaines, who being very young, was brought vp in France, in hope of the future marriage, he sent her home againe, and she was afterwards married to Prince John of Castile.

The factious of Nauarre under their Princesse marriage.

Castilian foile
the scales of Nauarre.

Amand of Al-bret, succedeth the K of Foix to woe upon K. Charles the eighth.

King Fernand
sues for aid of Alret against King Charles.

K. Charles his victorie at S.
Aubin.

The Britons oppose themselves against the French
King.

The Britons ever hating the French government, keeping their Princeesse in the Castle A of Nantes, made new practises with the Kings of Castile and England, and obtained great ayde from both of them, Don Diego Peres Sarmiento Earle of Salinas, being Generall of the Spanish Armie on the coast of Brittain, with Don Pero Carrillo de Albornos, and other renowned Captaines, having two hundred men at armes, and great numbers of footmen, Crosbowes, Pikes, and Harquebuziers, who were called in those dayes Elpingardiers. King Charles in the meane time came with a mighty Armie, and besieged Nantes, and by intelligence with some, hee obtained the Citie, Castile, and the Dutcheffe whom hee married in the yeare 1489. and made her French Queene, making himselfe Maister of her inheritance, in despite of the Britons. This faire and gracious Princeesse Anne, was daughter to Dutcheffe Marguerite, and grand-child to Queene Leonar of Navarre, as hath beene already said, and coosin germaine to Queene Catherine of Navarre, of whom we now treat.

Castile.

Wee will now returne to the Kings of Castile. After the assembly of the states of the Realme of Valencia at Orihuela, where diuerse ancient customes were reformed, and many notable orders received and established, they came to Murcia, with an intent to warre vpon the Moores from that part. There did Don Frederick de Toledo Capitaine of the Kings guards, aske leaue to visit Don Garcy Aluarez de Toledo his father, who lay deadly sick; in wole dignities, to wit, the Dutchie of Alua, the Marquisat of Cortia, and Earldome of Barco, his sonne succeeded him. This yeare likewise dyed Don Aluaro d'Esuniga Duke of Playfance, leauing his sonne of the same name successor in his Dutchie. The Bishop of Altorga likewise dyed, in whose place Bernardin de Carnajall was substituted, who was afterward Cardinal of the Sea of Rome, of the title of the holy Crosse. The companies from all parts of the kingdome made their Rendez-vous at Lorca, whether King Ferdinand marched, hauing in his company the Duke of Albuquerque, the Marquis of Cales, the Earles of Lemos, Saint Steeuens, Castro, Cabra, Montagu, Buendia, and Don Henry Henriquez the great Maister, Don Pero Lopes de Padilla Capitaine of the frontiers of Castile, Don John Chacon, Capitaine of the frontier of Murcia and others. The Army being ready to march, the Marquis of Cales, and the Capitaine of the frontier of Murcia leading the foreward, marched against the Citie D of Vera, the inhabitants whereof, who were Moores, being assured that they came towards them, would not fall into the like mischiefe as those of Malaga, wherefore they sent out before to the Marquis, offering to yeeld their Citie to King Ferdinand, if hee were there in person: wherefore the King made hast, and the Citie submitted vnto him on condition that their liues, liberties and goods might bee saued, with promise to liue in their religion in the next townes, or else where they should thinke good. Garcy Lasso de la Vega Maister of the Kings Hall, was made Gouvernor of Vera. Diuers others strong townes and castles on those marches, being moued by the reports of the Kings clemency, and fearing likewise their great power, sent their Alfaquins or wise Counsellors and deputies, to offer them obedience and tribute, as they were accustomed to pay to the Moore Kings, and namely the two Velez, the white and the redde, Muxicar, Cucuas, Telleque Huefcar, and Porchena, Tabara, Alborca, Serena, Torilla, Monjcar, Tabernas and Benamauel: the inhabitants of which places and diuers others, made themselves Mudejares or vassals to King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell, keeping their ceremonies and fest. The Armie after this marched towards Almerie, the which towne was then onely lookt vpon by certaine light skirmishes with the Moores of the garrison: then part of the army marched on forward within the view of Baza, where King Muley Bosadelin was then in person, who came forth with certaine troopes of horse and foote, and made a great skirmish, where D. Phillip of Navarre and Arragon dyed, who was maister of Montezca, nephew to the King, and sonne to Prince Don Charles of Viana, by vs oftentimes heretofore mentioned, with other men of note, the which caused the Christians to make their retreat, who were insolently pursued in the Rere by the Moores, who notwithstanding were afterward beaten back by the Capitaine of the frontier of Murcia. King Ferdinand leauing for that time Almerie and Baza, two strong places, marched towards Huefcar which yeelded, and Don Rodrigo Manrique was made Gouvernor thereof.

Whilest

Death of Don Garcy Aluarez
and of D. Aluaro d'Esuniga.

Vera yeelded
by com. offision.

Places yeelded
to the King
and Queene
of Castile.

A Whilest the warre continued in these quarters, the Capitaine of Alua de Tormes, and the gouernor of the Duke of Aluas lands, did Bastonado one of the Kings Collectors of his rents, which the King hauing notice of, the Licentiate Lewis de Polanco Prouost of the Court was sent thither to doe iustice therevpon, who tooke the Capitaine of Alua in his owne Castle, and caused him to bee hanged in the same place where hee had done the deed: As for the Gouvernour of the Countrey, hee was brought to the Chancery at Valiodolite, and there condemned to haue his hand stricken off, and to bee for euer banished out of the Kings dominions. In the which place of Valiodolite the Court came and wintered: there was an Edict made concerning the moneys, that the siluer I coyne should bee thenceforth made of the same sterling as that of Paris.

It was enacted not long before in Portugall, to coyne certaine kindes of gold of two and twenty Carates, of the golden mine of Guiney, and likewise certaine siluer money, called, Twenties, of the worth of twenty Res, which were equivalent to the Maraudis of Castile: for thirty six Res, were at that time worth a Real, as thirty six Maraudis in Castile and Nauar: The affaires of which kingdome since the execution of the Lords made by King John were quiet and peaceable; for eury one seeing that hee had not spured his owne blood, kept himselfe still, and this King was not onely reuerenced in Portugall, but likewise in Affricke, where hee possessed much land: in so much as the Moores of Azamor, who had beene in times past vnder the subiection of Portugall, and were now revolted, did againe this yeare submit themselves vnto it: about which time hee built the Fountaine at Setuball. And hauing no busineses to hinder him, hee went about to pursue new enterprises, no lesse profitable for mankind, than honorable to the house of Portugall: Hauing had the opinion and aduise of diuerse great personages skillfull in Cosmographic, and all other Mathematicall sciences, and especially good Mariners, hee sent away Bartholmew Dias, with a certaine religious Frier, named Anthony, inioyning them to coast the shoares of Affricke of the Ocean sea, till they could bee able to relate vnto him how farre that land stretched, and how the voyage which hee conceiued in his owne vnderstanding, might bee made by the South into the East, to the countreys and Islands where the spices growe: Bartholmew Dias and the Fryer arrived at the Cape of Bona speranza, or good hope, which is the farthest stretched out point of Affricke beyond the Equinoctiall winter Tropicke, and doubting againe the East, they came to the mouth of the Iland termed by them, of the Infant, which is a hundred and fifty leagues farther then the Cape of good hope. There Fryer Anthony with the consent of Bartholmew Dias landed, and trauielled with such turnings vp and downe this vnknowne world, as hee brought himselfe with great labour and danger, as it is credible, into Palestine to the Citie of Ierusalem, taking a carefull note of all things.

Bartholmew Dias returned by sea into Portugall, the same way hee came, and informed the King of all that hee had seene or knowne of the shoares and sea coasts: as Fryer Anthony did the like of his land voyage, being returned a good while after, the which encreased King John's desire to execute his praise-worthy enterprise, esteeming, and not without reason, that by the knowledge and practise of that Nauigation great profit might redound to his kingdome. Now the better to vnderstand the costs and charges of this trafficke for Spices brought from the Islands of the Moluccoes, and to be able to reckon what the commoditie thereof might come to, following the passage of the Ocean sea: hee sent Pedro de Couanilla and Alphonso de Payna into the East, who were wise and discrete persons, and very skillfull in the Arabian tongue, to bring him word of the traffick of these countreies: Hauing then furnished them with money, credit, and other necessaries for so long a voyage, they went to Naples, and from thence by Rhodes to Ierusalem, from whence they passed by Alexandria to Cairo, then they went to Aden, to Ormuz, and at last came to Calicut, and other places of the Indies, carrying with them for their conduct, a Carde or Compass made by the licentiate Caladilla Bishop of Viseo, the Doctor Rodrigue, Pero d'Aluaga, and Moses a Jew, who had drawne it after the description of Martin of Boheme the great Mathematician, taking information of all the parts of Ethiopie, Arabia, Persia,

Fauiury done to one of the Kings Receiue of his moneys, and punishment of the offenders.

Moneys.

15 Portugall.

Nauigations of the Portugals
into the Ocean sea, vntill by the command
ment of King
John,
Cape de Bona Esperanca, Ruer of the Infant.

Frier Anthonie, long and dangerous
journey.

King John diligence to know the way to the East by the Ocean
sea, and the Iland of Mo-luccees.

Perfia, and of the Indies where there is any trafficke, faires or assemblies of people. A
Alphonso Paywa died in this voyage: Pedro de Couanilla was deteyned by Prester Iohn Emperour of Ethiopia, so as the King could haue no relation from any of them concerning their voyage: yet Couanilla found meanes to write a discourse of what hee had learned, and sent it afterward to the King, by one Rabi Abraham, and Ioseph de Lamego, who hauing bene already in Persia, were sent backe againe by King Iohn to heere some newes of the said Pedro de Couanilla. This discourse did whet on the Kings desire to effect this voyage, for the which purpose he did arme certaine Carauels this yeere 1488. at the same time the marriage of his sonne Prince Alphonso, and the Infanta Isabella eldest daughter to the King of Castile, whereof mention was made in the treaty of peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall, was wholly agreed vpon, albeit the Prince was then but thirteene yeeres of age: For the charges of which marriage the Estates of the Kingdom gaue to King Iohn the sum of a hundred thousand golden cruzados: at which time the King being desirous to aduance to wealth and honor D. Pedro de Meneses Earle of Villareal and Lord of Almeida being at Beja, he created him Marquis of Villareal, and Earle of Oren.

Castile.

There came now into Castile a great Ambassage from Maximilian of Austria King of the Romans, who in the city of Valiodolid propounded to King Fernand and Queene Isabella, the desire which that Prince had to ally himselfe more streightly with them by marriages, demanding the Infanta Isabella for himselfe, and the Infanta Joane their daughters for his sonne Philip, setting downe diuers commodities which such a coniunction might bring with it, namely in making warre vpon the French. These Ambassadors being come by sea, their charges borne thorow the Kings countries, and highly honoured, they did returne with an answer, conteyning very gracious and pertinent excuses: to wit, that the Infanta Donna Isabella was promised to Prince Alphonso of Portugall, but as for the Infanta D. Joane, who was a young child, considering that the long attendance for such a marriage might weary the Archduke Philip, they could say nothing, but that as soone as she should be of age, if the occasion should serue, they would esteeme the alliance and friendship of so great Princes as most honourable and highly to be desired, and that they being at that instant greatly busied in the warres of Granado, could hardly thinke as yet vpon the French warres. Whilst the Court staid at Valiodolid, Isabella caused the city of Playfance to bee surprized and taken from Aluaro d'Estuniga who bare the title of Duke thereof, where shee established officers of the crowne: and because the castle made some resistance, shee caused it to be besieged by those of Salamanca, Ciudad-Roderigo, and the men of Extremadura: but the Duke knowing it to be to no purpose to make resistance did forth-with command to yeeld it vp: so this city was reunited to the crowne this yeere 1488. The Dukes of Playfance did then and afterwards intitle themselves Dukes of Bejar. Those of the family of Carauall did chiefly assist the Queene in this enterprife. The same yeere died Donna Beatrice Pimentell, who was wife to Don Aluaro de Luna Constable of Castile and Maister of Saint James, who was executed by order of law, shee liued fife and thirty yeeres in honest widow-hood, and lies buried in the Cathedrall Church of Toledo in the Chappell of Saint James neere to her husband. The Kings passed this yeere in the aboue named businesses about prouision of necessary things for the future warre of Granado, doing iustice, and in persecuting the new conuerter returned to Iudaisme, who were oftentimes ouerthrowne by false and slanderous accusations, whereof inquiry was principally made at Toledo, where diuers false witnesss were punished.

Playfance taken from D. Aluaro d'Estuniga.

James and Isabella married. Monies conuerted by Iudasme into repaite.

Moore.

During this stay in old Castile farre from the Moores, they taking aduantage of the occasion, did freely ouer-runne the country and surprized the city of Nixar, carefully kept by capitaine Bernard Francisco, where they slew three score gentlemen, and preuailed against the Christians in diuers other encounters, killing many, in number of whom the Commander Ruy Diaz Maldonado, sonne to Doctor Roderic, Lord of Aquila Fuente was one, who was a valiant knight, they tooke and burnt the towne of Cuellar, constraining the Christians that kept it to saue themselves within the castle, the

A the which they defended by the space of fife daies against the enraged assaults of the Moores by the discretion and valour of Iohn d'Aualos Lieutenant to capitaine Charles de Viedma who was absent.

In the spring of the yeere 1489. King Fernand and Queene Isabella, departed from Valiodolid, and came by Guadalupe not without great deuotion, to Iaca, with intent to goe and beseege Baça: for this purpose they had leauied thirteene thousand horse, and foure and twenty thousand foote, who hauing mustered at Sottogordo, the army beganne to march, the Maister of Saint James conducted the vanguard, and had for fore-runners, according to the ancient custome, the capitaine de los Donzelles, with the Prouost Marshalls, whose charge was to prouide the lodgings of the campe: King Fernand knowing that the seege would bee long and difficult, and that the Moores of Guadix and Almeri, which held King Boabdelsin el Zagall part, would destitute them as much as in them lay, did place guards and watches in fit places, as well to withstand surprises, as to secure the victuallers and other people which serued and followed the campe. The first attempt which the army made, was at Cujar, a strong place, and furnished with all manner of munition for the warres, by reason whereof being summoned, they answered with armes, sallying forth to skirmish: but it was to their losse, for being put to flight they lost their suburbs, which they had intrenched and fortified, from whence they were afterward so pressed, and vexed, as abating their courage, they would gladly haue yeilded vpon any reasonable conditions, the which the King refused, being highly displeased that they had resisted his mighty army: whereat they became so enraged and desperate, as in the next skirmish they made such slaughter of the Christians, as the King resolved to grant them whatsoever they demanded: so they yeilded vp the towne, and retired themselves with all their baggage in safety to Baça: soone after the fortress of Bensalema yeilded it selfe, with others. The Earle of Tendilla receiued Canillas by composition being a league distant from Baça. The taking of these forts prepared the access to Baça, within which place, King Zagall Boabdelsin had put tenne thousand souldiars as well horse as foote, with diuers expert capitaines, taking the greatest care he could for the well fortifying and keeping thereof, being the D of most importance, and the chiefe Bulwarke of the small state that was left him: for that being lost, hee was no more able almost to make any resistance. The Christian army being re-enforced with new troupes diuided it selfe into two parts, which lodged round about Baça a farre off, which gaue libertie to the Moores to goe out and in at their pleasures without any difficulty or danger: wherevpon the King taking counsell, he caused the campe to remooue, and to place the quarters neerer to the towne: The Moores who thought it was not for their profit, comming forth to fight, did maintain it for the space of twelue houres with a wonderfull resolution, and it may well bee termed a battaile, for the whole forces almost of either side, came to ioyne, and a great number of valiant men were there slaine: the conclusion was, that the Moores were glad to retire, and were in despite of them shut in, and the Christian army lodged in their gardens. Yet notwithstanding, this feat of the campe being not thought to bee very commodious for diuers respects, the King caused the lodgings to be removed where they were at first: and in this retreat the besieged failed not to annoy their enemies by all meanes possible.

The difficulty being great to hinder the furious sallies of those barbarous people, the opinions therevpon were sundry and vncertaine, so as the King was at the point to raise the seege, and to cause great forts to bee raised round about it, furnished with strong guards, and to strengthen the neighbour garrisons, and by these slow meanes to raze the enemies and make them yeeld: but because Queene Isabel did greatly desire to see an end of this warre of Granado, to whose constancy the pursute thereof and the conquest of that Kingdom, so long time held by the Infidel is to be attributed, the King craved her opinion: who being wonderfully displeased that so dishonorable a resolution should be taken, did entreate the King to thinke better thereon, and for modesties sake would not utter her opinion: but perceiving that want of victuals and money was the greatest hindrance they stood vpon, which in so long a seege might disaduantage the army, shee

17
Castile.

Dispaire some times brings help.

Serge of Bistia.

The conquest of Granado attributed to Queene Isabella's constancy.

saide,

said, that they needed not to doubt any such matter, for shee would provide in such sort, A as there should be no want of either of them: The King knowing the Queenes diligence in such matters, and the desire shee had that Baga might be taken, commanded the siege should be continued with all vehemency, wherewith the whole army in generall was well pleased; wherefore the two camps were disposed and placed, a miles distance the one from the other & a great trench drawn from one to an other fortified with piles and fiftene sorts of timber and flags, where great numbers of souldiars were lodged, and by this means the city was more streightly shut vp. An other trench was drawne from the hills side of two miles long, so as the place was environed round about, in which workes they spent two monethes, in all which time they neuer left skirmishing. And as B diuers Moores, distrustful the successe of the siege, fled to the Christians campe it was knowne by their meanes how that the city was not well provided with victualls, wherein King Zagal had greatly failed, and besides, how that they had their water from a fountaine at the foote of the hill called Albohacen, which being taken from them they would be in great want: wherefore the King hauing resolved vpon this intelligence to build a fort vpon that hill: The Moores being aduertized thereof by some spies, did prevent him, and they themselves made a fort there for the garde of their fountaine. In the meane space Don Antonio de la Cueva and others, ranne vp and downe the country, and spoiled the townes and villages neere to Guadix, from whence bringing great numbers of cattails of all sorts, the Moores came forth to the rescue of them, and therethe Christians beganne to stand at a stay, and knew not whether it were best to leaue their booty C to betake themselves to flight, or else to tarry still and defend it valiantly. The valour of Hernand Peres de Pulgar encouraged the rest, who hanging an handkercher vpon the toppe of a pike, cried out aloud, let those that are no cowards follow this Enseigne, and in this fort marching against the Moores, they beate them backe with great slaughter, and returned victorious to the campe: in regarde whereof the King made Hernand Peres Knight: and permitted him to beare a white handkercher in his armes in token of his valor to his posterity.

King Muley did oftentimes attempt to victuall Baga but it was in vaine: and foreseeing that the end of the Moores reigne in Spaine was at hand, his last refuge was, D by the counsell of his friends, to haue recourse to the Soldan of Egypt, who in a manner commanded ouer all the petty Kings of Affrica, vnto whom hee complained of the greedinesse of the Christian King, who did vniufully dispossesse him from the Kingdome which his Ancestors had enioyed so long a time: whereat the Sultran being moued, sent two friers Ambassadors to Pope Innocent, of those that dwelt in the Temple of Ierusalem which they call our Sauours Sepulchre: to let him vnderstand how that the Kings of Castile did deale vniufully in vexing the Moores that dwelt there by warres, wherein if they persisted, hee would vse the Christians in the same manner that liued in his countries and dominions: the Pope gaue notice thereof to King Fernand and Queene Isabella, yet they for all that would not leaue of their designe, but E satisfied the Pope with reasons wherefore they pursued that warre: and being deuout and charitable Princes they gaue and assigned a yeerely stipend to the friars of a thousand ducats, which they enioy and is the fairest reuenuie they haue at these daies: Besides that, the Queene sent a vaile wrought with her owne hand to hang ouer the Sepulchre at Ierusalem.

During the siege of Baga, this yeere 1489, Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla the last Maister of the Knights of Calatrava died: for the Maisterhip was then incorporated to the Royall crowne of Castile by the Popes authority, as not long after those of Saint Iames and Alcantara were: remanaying euer after in the Kings hands with title of perpetuall administrators thereof: for in truth these masters did draw after them, by reason of the authority which they had ouer so great a number of Knights, all gentlemen of great houses, to great a power and to be suspected by the Kings, as pernicious to a state, where in conclusion they were heads of factions, by whom, Spaine was many times torne in peeces.

The

A The Knights of this order were permitted to marry the yeare one thousand, fise hundred and forty, by Pope Paul the third. From the first institution of this order, vntill this time, and the death of Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla, eight and thirty maisters of the same order are reckoned.

The siege of Baga had already lasted foure whole moneths, without hope of winning it, against which the Artillery wrought no great effect: for that men in those dayes were not skilfull in the approches and neere batteries, as they are now in these times: Neuertheless King Ferdinand thinking it would bee a great blemish to his reputation, if hee should raise the siege, would by no means giue it ouer, being assured that B continuance of time would bring the Moores to reason: the besieged on the contrary, knowing that the losse of Baga would carry with it Almerie, and Guadix, and so consequently the whole ruine of the Moores state in Spaine, did all of them resolute to dye rather then to yeeld. And because the trench on the hills side was a great hinderance to them, they went out vpon a day to breake and fill it vp, where they gaue a very furious assault, wherein great numbers on both sides were slaine. Wherevpon the King commanded that no man should goe forth to skirmish without leaue, and caused all the Moores to depart out of the Campe, commanding that all those that should flye forth of the City should be made slaues, but they had rather vndergoe that condition then to starue. Being besieged so farre of, the sallies were the easier and oftner; C but the Moores commonly had the worst: At one of these skirmishes Don Iohn de Luna was slaine, a yong Knight, and heire to the noble houle of Luna in Arragon. Winter drawing on, gaue some hope to the besieged that their enenies would shortly dislodge, and therefore they meant to hold out a little longer: but when they saw that King Ferdinand caused Carpenters to build small houles and cabins for the Souldiours, they then perceived that the King meant not to leaue them so soone. The season being wette and rainie, did greatly trouble the Armie before Baga, and that which was worst of all, the wayes were so deepe and full of water, that no victualls nor munition could be brought to the Campe, but with incredible difficulty. But the diligence of the noble and courageous Queene surmounted all these inconueniences, D for shee hired foureteene thousand ordinary beasts of carriage, besides those which went vp and downe to the Campe for their priuate gaine, taking marueilous paines and care to provide all things necessary for the reliefe of the Armie, not sparing for any cost. For to defray which charges, shee engaged part of the Royall patrimonie, and assigned penctions: shee borrowed money of Citties, and of priuate men and women, and pawned her owne lewels; and for an argument of her great pietie and charity, shee kept foure great tents in the Campe, which were termed the Queenes Hospitall, for the reliefe of hurt and sicke Souldiours, seeing for that purpose, diuerse Physicians, Surgeons, and Apothecaries, and provided for all other necessities, with such care, iudgement and diligence, as the conquest of the kingdome of Granada, E and expulsion of the Mahometan Moores forth of Spaine, may more iustly be attributed to this Princeesse then to any other.

It was thought fitte that the Ordinance which was in the Maister of Saint Iames and the Duke of Nageraes quarter, should be brought neerer to the enemies fortes and defenses: the which was done with many bloody encounters: the Moores continuing still more obstinate, were diuerse times aduised to yeeld, and to enioy the fauour and bountie of King Ferdinand, who promised them the liberty of their religion, and not to take away their goods, lawes, and customes, notwithstanding that they were in great want of victualls and money for the payment of the Souldiours, for whose wages, the Captaines tooke away the Rings and Jewels from the women, to F the end to auoyde sedition and rebellion in the towne. The continuall miseries of that siege did likewise trouble diuerse that were abroad, who cunningly did counsell the King, who was resolute not to rise from thence, to cause the Queene to come to the Campe, saying, that it would cause the Moores utterly to dispaire: but indeed they thought that the Queene, seeing with her owne eyes the traualle and miserie which the Armie endured, would bee a meanes to dislodge, and that the rejected opinion

The Soldan of Egypt diligence in the behalfe of the Spanish Moores.

The King of Castile, gaue a thousand ducats yearly rent to the friars at Ierusalem.

18

The Master of the Order of Calatrava incorporated to Castile.

The Queenes Hospitall in the Campe.

Queene Isabella best great diligence.

opinion of besieging them by Fortes, would bee then renewed. The King wrote diuerse letters to the Queene who lay at Iaen, to cause her to come to the Campe, the which shee did, being accompanied with the Cardinall of Spaine, and other Prelates, leaving the Prince her sonne at Vbeda with the Archbishop of Siuill, and some others of his Councell. Her coming caused most of the Souldiours to forget their misery and trauaile, and brought forth an effect contrary to that which some of them, who had bene the occasion thereof, did imagine; But the Moores were wholly confounded thereby, and discouraged to make any longer resistance. Wherefore their chiefe Commander, whose name was Mahomet Abenahazan, began to hearken to that which had bene so often propounded by the King and Queene, and craued a parley. Don Gutierrez de Cardenas great Commander of Leon, had Commission to treat with him, hee being an eloquent and discrete Gentleman, shewed him what fauour and good hee might expect and hope for from these victorious Princes, and that there was nothing more plaine, then that God had giuen an end to the Moores happinesse in Spaine: The Moore apprehending sufficiently what the Commander told him, did with very humble speeches desire to become their vassall, but hee sayd, that it behooued him to conferre with the inhabitants of Baza, before hee could giue any resolute answer: which being granted him; those people of iudgement which consented to the yielding of the towne, were of opinion to let King Muley vnderstand vpon what termes they stood, to the end they might hee able to iustifie the yielding thereof.

During this negotiation, a suspence from Armes was granted, and King Muley being aduertised and perswaded by Mahomet Abenahazan, did not onely consent to the yielding of Baza, but compounded likewise for the rest which he held, and for his state hereafter: Namely, that Almerie and Guadix should bee deliuered into the Kings hands; the which was effected assoone as the Gouernour returned back. The Moores of the garrison of Baza came forth with their Armor and baggage, and the inhabitants were permitted to liue in the neighbour townes, or else where in Spaine, where they thought good, without any molestation in their belife and superstition: and the Gouernour Mahomet Abenahazan with all his kindred, was receiued into the Kings fauour as their subiect and vassalle.

The Christian Souldiers entred into Baza the fourth day of December, the seauenth month of the siege. The yielding of that place being diuulged all ouer the country, the Captaines and Gouernours of the townes of Almunecar, Porchena, Tabernas, and others of the country of Alpuxarras, from Almerie vnto Granado, came and presented their keyes to the Kings, remaining their vassalls and Mudejares, the Captaine of Porchena excepted, who reiecting all entreaties, gifts and offers, would needs passe ouer into Affricke. King Ferdinand went from Baza to Almerie, where King Muley lay, who came and met him, hauing layde by the royall Diadem, and like a priuate man, alighting from his horse, would in signe of homage haue kissed his hands: but King Ferdinand, considering the alterations whereto humane affaires are subiect, would not permit it, but caused him to remount his horse, and so receiued him neuertheless for his vassalle. The City of Almerie being receiued, and the same conditions granted to the Citizens as was to others, namely, to liue free, and to enioy without any molestation their goods, and the exercise of their religion, in paying the same tribute which they were accustomed to giue to the Moore Kings, the Kings went to Guadix, where the like was done. This was in the beginning of the yeare one thousand, foure hundred and ninety. The governments of these places were giuen by the King, that of Baza to Don Henry Henriques his Vnckle; Almerie to the great Commander of Leon, and Guadix to Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, the Cardinalls brother. The Gouernor of Solobregna and other Moores, did likewise yeeld their Fortes and Castles to the Kings, and did taste of their mildnesse and clemencie. The towne of Andaraz was assigned to Muley Bosbelin for his residence, with a thousand Mudejares to his vassalls, and foure millions of Marauedis for his pension, which hee enioyed but a yeare: for disdaining to liue as a subiect, there where hee had reigned, hee went ouer into Affricke. By meanes wherof Mahomet Bosbelin the little, remayned sole King of Granado,

The Moores
of Baza begin to parley.

Baza, Guadix, and Almerie yielded.

Muley Bosbelin submits himselfe to the Kings of Cas-
tile.

1490.
Moores.

A Granado, who not long after, was brought to the same passe like his vnckle, as shall appeare. The Bishops and the Clergie did in these cities performe the accustomed purifications and ceremonies: and Almerie and Guadix were after that erected into Episcopall Sees.

The power of the Moores after the taking of these places was in a manner brought to nothing: the city of Granado with a few other places remayning to Mahomet the Little: but all that was done was to no purpose vnlesse Granado were taken, which had bene the chiefe of that rich and mighty Kingdome for many yeeres: wherefore Mahomet was entreated by the Kings to giue them the city of Granado, alleading a certaine agreement and promise which he had made vnto them, that vpon the conquest of the cities of Baza, Guadix and Almerie, by the King and Queene, they should giue them to Mahomet the Little, with certaine other places, vpon condition, that hee should liue vnder them as their vassall, and that hee should enioy the rents and reuenues of those places, and hee in regarde thereof should deliuer the city of Granado into their hands. But the said Mahomet thought it an hard matter from a Master to become a seruant, and from a King a subiect, therefore some times excusing himselfe, by the resistance of the Moores of Granado, from performing his promise, and at other times demanding more townes and reuenues, this last was graunted him, with promise to amplifie and enlarge his dominion, and as for the rebellious Moores, hee was enioyned to disarme them.

C Some, who saw that it must needs bee so, did yeeld vp their weapons, others who could not endure such basenesse, did stirre vp King Mahomet in such sort as hee rebelled openly with them: wherefore this yeare 1490. the Moore King beganne the warre againe, and tooke diuers castles neere to the city, driuing away the Christians from thence: by reason whereof the garrisons of Alhama, Loxa, the townes of Illora, Moclin, Montefrio, Alhedin and Colomera were fortified by the Kings: who contenting themselves for that time to haue secured the frontiers, and the new conquered cities, they went to Cordoua, and from thence to Siuill: where receiuing newes how the Moores spoiled the country, they appointed Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla General, who abiding at Alcala the real, did giue and take many defeats: but it was not long after, before King Fernand came in his person, with an army of fise thousand horse and twenty thousand foote, and spoyled all the territory of Granado, where hee left nothing for the Moores to liue on, or to yeeld them any ease or commodity, not without sharpe resistances skirmishes and dangerous and deadly encounters as well on the one side as the other: in the camps retreat the Marquis of Villenas brother called Alphonso de Pacheco, Stefano de Luxon, and an other captaine of the Marquis, did amongst others loose their liues: the Marquis of Villena himselfe was hurt in the arme, which hee felt euer after during his life, but at that time hee purchased the fame of a braue, generous, and charitable Knight towards his seruants: for perceiving that a groom of his Chamber was hand to hand in fight with fise Moores who had the odds of him, hee not being able to endure to see his seruant in that danger, did not feare to hazard his owne person in his rescue, but spurred his horse against those Moores fise two of them with his owne hand, and put the other to flight: and there he receiued that hurt.

After that King the had made his retreat and was gonne to Cordoua with the army, sending them home to their houses (for they were all of Andaluzia and the neighbour Prouinces) the Moores hauing gathered together some forces in the city and out of the hill called Sierra Neuada, came and planted their seige before Alhedin, which was kept by Mondo of Quesada, where they did assaile furiously seuen daies and seuen nights, in such sort as the Christians, hauing no leisure to eate or sleepe, were constrained to giue ouer the place, except a strong tower wherinto they shut themselves where they made the best resistance they could.

The King hauing notice of the danger they were in, did forthwith assemble forces for their succour, but it could not come soone enough, for the besieged Christians, hauing done as much as men could doe in their owne defence, were at

LIII

the

King Mahomet the Little enforced to rebell.

Sharpe resistance of Moores.

The Marquis
of Villena was hurt and absolutely rubbled.

Exploit of the Moors.

the last constrained to yeeld to the enemies discretion, who carried them all away for slaves to Granado: when the King heard this, hee turned back againe: but the Moores proud of their victory, proceeded on in taking of places, as Marchena and others: and because there was nothing to bee had in the territory of Granado, they provided their viſtualls out of Affrick, hauing procured the Moores Mudeiares of Solobregna, a ſea towne, againſt their faith giuen and ſworne to the Kings of Caſtile, to giue them ſafe acceſſe in their harbor, with viſtualls, money, and other commodities, and they receiued King Mahomet into their towne, who a great while beſieged the Caſtle, which was defended by Franciſco Ramirez of Madrid, till ſuch time as hauing intelligence of the comming of the Chriſtian Armie, hee was constrained to abandon it, and to returne to Granado: whether King Ferdinand came to make an end of his former ſpoile. And because hee vnderſtood that the Moores who remained in Baſa, Guadix, and Almerie, had intelligence with King Mahomet, hee went thither, and cauſed that curſed race to bee expelled and diſlodged out of all the walled townes and Caſtles, permitting them to dwell in the Villages thereabout if they would, and then went back to Siuill.

21
Portugall.

In that City in the moneth of March this yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, and ninety, were celebrated the promiſes of marriage, betwixt the Infanta Iſabell, and Prince
John of Portugall, Don Fernand Siluera, and Doct<sup>r</sup> John de Taxeda high Chancelor of that kingdome, being ſent thither Ambaſſadors for that purpoſe, the Cardinall of Spaine performing the ceremony. The feaſts, coſts, gifts and preſents, were great and magnificent, and the Kings being at Conſtantine, vpon their returne to Siuill, they ſent the betrothed Princeſſe into Portugall, who was attended on by the Cardinall of Spaine, by Don Lewis Oſorio Biſhop of Iaca, Alphonſo de Cardega Maſter of Saint Iames, John de Eſtuniga Maſter of Alcantara, Don Rodrigo Alphonſo Pimentell Earle of Benauent, Don Lorenzo Suarez de Figueroa Earle of Feria, Don Pedro Porto carero Lord of Palma, Rodrigo de Villos who went as Ambaſſador, with other great numbers of nobilitie. With this company the Princeſſe arriued at Badajos in the beginning of No-uember, and paſſing on to the bridge of Caia, ouer a little ſtreame which deuided Caſtile from Portugall, ſhee was deliuered into the hands of Don Manuell Duke of Beja, couſin germaine to the King, who being accompanied with the Biſhops of Eboa and Coimbra, with the Earles of Monſanto and Marialua, and diuerſe other Knights, they brought her to Eſtremos, where King John and the Prince his ſonne met her, and in that place they were married by George d' Aceſta, Archbiſhop of Braga: after that they went to Eboa, where they feaſted with great pompe and magnificence. Don George, baſtard ſonne to the King, was preſent at the wedding, who was newly come from the Monaſtery of Ieſus d' Auero, where hee had till then bene brought vp, vnder the government of Don Joane his Aunt the Kings ſiſter, who dyed not long before. At theſe feaſts the King maintained the tilt againſt all knights that would runne, furniſhing them with horſe and armor.

Caia a ſmall ſtreame diuiding Caſtile
from Portugall.

Marriage of the Infants
D. Alphonſo of Portugall and Iſabell of Caſtile

22 Caſtile.

This yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ninety and one, the kings of Caſtile being at Siuill, they began to giue order for the ſiege of Granado, ſending for the Knights and men of warre from all places of the kingdome, as well on this ſide as beyond the hills, commanding them to meete at Alcala the reall, to which place they went in the moneth of Aprill, hauing in their company, the Prince and the Infantas their children, who with the Queene remained at Alcala. The king paſſing on into the plaine country of Granado with the Armie, conſiſting of ten thouſand horſe, and about forty thouſand footmen, in the which were in perſon, the Maſter of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Vil-lena, hee of Cales, and his brother in lawe Don Rodrigo Ponce de Leon, who did begin this warre, the Earles of Vregna, Cabro, Ciſuentes, and Don Alphonſo de Aguilar: diuerſe great Lords which came not themſelues ſent thither their forces. The Conſtable remained Viceroy in Caſtile the old.

The Campe hauing marched as farre as the place called Los ojos de Hueſcar, ſtayed there, and the Marquis of Villena was ſent with 3. thouſand horſe, and 5. thouſand foot, into the valley of Aletin & to other places and paſſages of the country called Alpuſarras
to

A to ſpoile it, and because the King was aduertized that in the ſame country were a great number of Moores able to make reſiſtance, he followed the Marquis, and paſſing along by Granado he maintained ſkirmiſh with diuers Moores which came forth for that purpoſe, who with great loſſe were repulſed; the King went forward, and by the way met the Marquis and his troups as they returned, who had burned and deſtroyed nine townes, and ſlue more then ſue hundred Moores, whom they found careleſſe and ſecure, thinking themſelues ſafe from any ſearch in thoſe ſharpe and ſtony places: ſo their forces being ioyned together they returned againe into Las Alpuſarras to make an end of ſpoyling what was left. And King Fernand hauing notice that three capaines of the Moores were come forth of Granado, and had made themſelues maſters of a paſſage, he ſent the Marquis thither, who fought with them and draue them thence, hee ſlue about one hundred of them and tooke three ſcore priſoners, and they deſtroyed ſiſteene townes more in the country, beſides thoſe nine. about mentioned with great ſtore of ſpoile which they carried away with them: for the Moores did alwaies thinke that their goods were ſafer in thoſe places then in the city of Granado: After which exploit the army was brought backe to Pradal & from thence marched to a place called Goſto: There ticking by the aduice of the Lords which were with him, cauſed the compaſſe of a city to be measured out which was called Saint Foy, with an intent to build houſes in that place for the beginning of the army if it ſhould be constrained to winter there, and if the ſiege of Granado ſhould bee drawne out in length, as it was greatly feared: they gaue it the title of Saint Foy, in regard that warre was vndertaken for the augmentation of the Holy Chriſtian faith. Round about the ſoreſaid compaſſe, the campe was lodged, being fortified and rampired with trenches and walls for feare of ſurprizes, in which workes the Moores failed not to hinder them by comming forth of Granado with continual ſkir-miſhes. The Queene with her children came from Alcala to the campe; the Maſter of Saint Iames and the Marquis of Cales went forth to meet them, and the ſewer her Ladies were lodged in the ſafeſt place of al the campe, and they did oftentimes ride about the quarters, where for their diſport they did many times behold the fights and ſkirmiſhes, which were almoſt euery houre made a farre off, and one eſpecially among the reſt where:

D as the Moores in great troups being come forth with two peeces of Artillery, did looſe them, with 600. of their men ſlaine vpon the place, and more then fourteen hundred of them hurt, the Marquis of Cales leading the Chriſtians, who attributed that victory to the Queenes good hap, and hee aſcribed it to the Marquis his good fortune. Now thoſe of Granado were not long able to hold out: for the greater numbers of horſemen which were wont to ſally forth of the city, were ſo diminished as they hardly had 300. horſe of ſervice, the reſt, were loſt and conſumed in the laſt wars: and beſides this, the city which contained about 200. thouſand perſons was very ill provided of viſtualls; ſo that diuers cavaliers and men of great note began to deſiſe means how to treat with the Chriſtians for their ſafety: to be ſhort, al of them conſidering the ſtate whereinto they were brought, and that they had no hope or expectation of reliefe from any place, they were glad to hearken vnto compoſition and agreement in yielding vp the city to the Kings of Caſtile:
wherefore King Mahomet the Little reſolved to giue place to neceſſity, and to receiue this fatal wound, to fall from his crowne and regall dignity, and to become vaſſal and ſubiect to his enemies, and to that purpoſe he ſent to entreat the Kings to appoint com-miſſioners to treat and compound with him. This newes was pleaſing to the Chriſtians, who did not thinke to haue gotten it ſo good cheape: therefore D. Gonſall Hernandez de Cordoua, and the Secretary Hernando de ſeſra, were appointed to capitulate with him;
who after diuers goings and commings, did conclude with the Moores and their Prince
Mahomet the Little, vpon theſe conditions following.

F 1 That King Mahomet ſhould no more terme himſelfe King of Granado: vnto whom the Kings of Caſtile ſhould giue an honorable ſtipend for his entertainment, who might lue in the cities, lands, and other reuenues, ſpecified, which hee had held in the daies of his father King Maley Albohacen; and the like to bee done to his mother Queene Aixa, his wife, ſiſters, and children.

2 That their traine, ſtuffe, ſeruants and purueiours ſhould be free from al tax and tribute.

Seige of Granada.

The city of Holy ſaith.

A great ſkir-miſh wherein the Moores are deſeated.

Great neceſſity
in the city of Granado.

3 That the Moores should bee iudged according to their owne lawes and customes, A which they call Xaira, and if any Christian were a party, by Iudges that were one halfe Moores, and the rest Christians.

4 That their Armes should not be taken from them (their Harquebuses excepted) the which no Moore might keepe without speciall licence.

5 That all Moores should bee suffered to liue in Spaine, with free liberty of their ceremonies and religion: and if they would goe ouer into Affricke, they might do so, and carry with them their mooueables, money, marchandise, and all other commodities, excepting Armor and munition for the warres, without paying any tribute for three yeares together, and they should bee furnished with shipping for their passage: After three yeares were expired, those that would depart should pay a Ducat for euery head. B

6 That all Moores which possessed immouable goods in Spaine, might enioy them, albeit they shewelues were in Affricke, and they might sell, let out, and accommodate them, and for that purpose they might keepe factors and Attorneys in the King and Queenes dominions.

7 That no Renegada Christian should bee constrained by force to returne to the Christian faith.

8 That within certaine dayes after the conclusion of this treaty, King Mahomet the little, or his Alcaides, should deliuer vp the Fortresse of Alhambra, with all the towers and other strong places of the city into the Kings hands.

9 That those of Granado should giue foure hundred principall Moores for hostage. As these matters were handling, the Queenes tents were set on fire by the negligence of one of the Queenes women; so as the whole Armie was in an vprore, and fell into order of battaile, thinking it to bee some Morish stratagem: but when the cause was knowne, all was quieted. The like inconuenience of fire hapned at the same time at Medina del Campo, by meanes whereof more then two hundred houses were burned. Now after that the aboue-named articles were agreed vpon, a great sedition was raised in the city of Granado, by more then twenty thousand of the common people, who tooke armes, gaine-saying the yeelding vp of the city, in such sort as King Mahomes was glad to take the Fortresse of Alhambra with a strong garde, looking euery houre when they would haue assailed him: but their fury being appeased, he shewed them, that there was now no more time to make resistance, and gaue them many reasons for it: Neuertheless, hee perceiving that there was euer some frantick Prophet or other among that nation which did put the people in those tumules, he wrote to the Kings, that without staying for the day appointed for the deliuey of the Alhambra, they should send to take present possession thereof, which King Ferdinand did forth-with, and marched with his forces against that Fortresse: from whence Mahomes the little, no more a King, went out to meete him, who with a sorrowfull and dejected countenance, presented him the Keyes, saying, that they were the Keyes of the Royall Pallace of Granado, the which, with himselfe, and all the men that were in it, were at his seruice. He pronounced these words with a broken and sorrowfull voyce, and would haue alighted from his horse to haue kist the Kings hand, who moued with pity and compassion, would not suffer him so to doe, but did very gently and graciously comfort him. King Ferdinand gaue the Keyes to the Queene, thence to Prince John her sonne, and he gaue them to Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla, who with three thousand horse, and like number of footmen, entered into the spacious and royall fortresse of the Alhambra, with the Marquis of Villena, and other Knights: & Frier Hernando de Talavera Bishop of Auila (who was afterward Archbishop of Granado) did forthwith goe vp into the highest Tower there, and set vp the Crosse, which was the very fame that the Cardinall of Spaine did vie to haue borne before him as Archbishop of Toledo and Primar, and the which is at this day kept in the Vestrie at Toledo: and then were the banners of Saint Iames and King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell set vp, with performance of the accustomed ceremonies: and soone after, other forces were sent to seaze vpon the gates and towers of the city, where the people were disarmed, and the armor carried into the Alhambra, sauing those which were hidden and afterward found, which cost diuers their liues, who were executed by course of lawe. The cruelty towards

Castilians
the Moores.

Liberty of religion granted
to the Moores.

VP regards
the people.

The Alhambra
of Granado
yeilded
the year 1492.

Granado
yeilded
vp.

A The city was yeelded vp the first day of January 1492. the 675. yeere of the reigne of the Arabians there: and thereby ended the warre of Granado, which lasted tenn yeeres, and gaue end to the Arabians and Moores dominion in Spaine; but the most part of the Knights would not tarry there but went ouer into Affricke: the greedinesse, inconstancy, inidelity, and desire to rule which that Nation had, brought them to this misery. King Fernand aduertized Pope Innocent and other Christian Princes his friends of this great victory, and hee staid a great while in the city of Granado, to giue order for the government thereof, as also of all that they had newly conquered: where in Queene Isabells constancy and magnanimity deserves the first place, then King Fernand valour, wildome and good conduct, with other Lords and chiefe Knights of their Kingdomes: the cities of Suill, Cordoua, Iau, Ecchia, Xeres, Vbeda, Baeza, Murcia, Cartagena and Lorca did not spare any of their publike and particular goods.

The same day that King Fernand and Queene Isabell made their entry into the city of Granado, D. Pero Fernandez de Velasco Earle of Haro, Viceroy and Constable of Castile died, whom D. Bernardin de Haro his sonne succeeded as well in the Earldome as Constableship, who this yeere was made Earle of Frias and married to Donna Isabelle of Arragon the Kings daughter.

A little before the viceroys death, the President and Auditors of the Kings Chancery residing at Validolid, did greatly forget themselues, by receiving an Appellation to Rome, for a certaine cause depending before them, for which the King and Queene depriued them of their offices, and placed others therein: they that were disposed, were D. Alphonso de Valdunisso Bishop of Leon who was president, and Doctor Martin de Auila, the Licenciat Cinchilla, Doctor Caro, and Doctor Olmedilla Auditors: In their roomes were placed Doctor John Arias del Villar Bishop of Ouedo for President, the Licenciat de Villena, Doctor de Palacios, the Licenciate Vile Mariell, the Licenciate Palacios Rabal, and Doctor de Villouela Auditors. The Iewes did also grant a generall subsidy to the Kings, which was the last subsidy raised vpon that sect: for soone after they were all driuen forth of Spaine. The King and Queene hauing begunne to take the best order they could for the government of the new conquered Prouinces, in the month of March this yeere 1492. they came to Cordoua to intend the affaires of the rest of the Kingdom: there they made a statute, whereby all gentlemen of the Kingdomes and Lordships, subiect to the crowne of Castile and Arragon, were enioyned to come and make proofe of their pedigrees and nobility: and because it was made at Cordoua, it was called the statute or law of Cordoua.

Whilest the King and Queene were busied in the warres and sege of Granado, the ioy and feasts in Portugall were sodainly turned into teares and lamentations: the marriage betwixt Alphonso of Portugall and D. Isabells of Castile being celebrated with great magnificence at Eбора, and the feasts and triumphes continuing at Saint Irén, whether the new married couple were gonne to auoide the great heate: the Prince on an Euening accompanying the King his father, and being mounted vpon a very ready and swift horse, would needs runne a race against an other horse, whereon Don John de Meneses, Commander of Algezir, did ride, but the Commander excused the matter by reason it was late and almost night, the Prince commanded a Mule to bee brought vnto him, and in the getting vp the stirrop brake, wherefore hee tooke his former horse, and continuing in his determination to runne, hee tooke the Commander by the hand, and giuing (putres to his horse, hee constrained him to runne the race with him: but the mishap was that the Princes horse stumbling at the races end, ouer-threw his rider vnder him, and did so bruze him, as hee lay speechlesse and almost dead vpon the ground. The King and all the standers by being very sorrowfull, caused him to bee carried to the next cottage which was a fisher-mans, where the Princesses, the mother and the daughter in law, hauing vnderstood this pitifull accident did come on foote, where finding this poore Prince in such state as for no speech nor any thing else that could be said or done, hee did make any sign or shew of vnderstanding out: They did all melt into teares, vntering forth very strang cries and lamentations. Great and sundry were the diligences and remedies though superfluous, which the Physitions

The end of
the Arabian rule
in Spaine.

The President and Auditors of Validolid deposed and their names.

Subsidy raised
vpon the Iewes.

1492.

Statute of Cordoua for the Nobility.

24
Portugall.

A pitifull accident happened to Prince Alphonso of Portugall.

Prince
Alphonso.

Princess. Isbella lamentation.

and Surgions vsed for his recovery: the Physicians telling the King that his sonnes end A drew nere, he brought the Queene and the Princeesse to the houses of Vasco Pallas, which are vpon the riuer of Tayo, and the Prince died seuen and twenty houres after the accident, who was lamented and bewailed by all men, for the great hope and expectation which he gaue of himselfe in those young yeeres, hauing hardly attained to seuentene yeeres of age: and that which did more encrease the sorrow, was that he left the Princeesse Isbell a widdow euen almost as soone as shee had bene a wife: for they had not bene married fully eight monthes. The Princes body was laied in a herse and carried to the Monastery of batraile. The Princeesse in token of sorrow, did cut off her heire, and clothed herselfe in garments besitting her griefe, and hauing remained fiftene daies in the house of Vasco Pallas shee went to the Kings pallace one euening without any light, where the King, Queene, and shee, kept themselues shut vp a long time, giuing themselues to much ouer to griefe, and forgetting the health of their owne persons: and being in this estate they were visited and comforted on the Kings of Castiles part. After this manner King Johns Court remained desolate, and it may bee, that God caused this losse to fall vpon him, for ouer hastily destroying the great houses of his owne Kingdome, especially that of his Aunt D. Beatrice Dutcheffe of Visco, whose sonne D. Dominigo a Prince of his blood, hee had slaine with his owne hand. The obsequies and funerals being ended, where the King and the great Lords and Ladies of the Realme were present, Queene Elenor, and the Princeesse Isbell excepted, shee being sorrowfull and a widdow was brought backe into Castile the same time King Fernand and Queene Isbell were about Granada in the New towne of Saint Foy which they builded. King John being in this anguish went backe to Lisbone, where this yeere 1492. the two Maisterships of Saint Iames, and Auis, fell to his sonne D. George: for whose gouernor hee appointed D. Diego Almeyda sonne to the Earle of Abrantes.

The end of the three and twentieth Booke.

THE

A

B

THE FOVRE AND TWENTY tith Booke of the Generall History of Spaine.

C

The Contents.

- 1 Christopher Columbus his first voyage to the Indies.
2. Arigorous Edict against the Iewes and Moores.
3. King Fernand is hurt at Barcelona: Politicke affaires of Spayne.
4. Christopher Columbus retournes backe: Good and euill which the world hath receiued by the discoverye of the westerne Indies: The Pope giues those new lands to the Kings of Castile: Columbus his second voyage.
- D 5. The Mastership of S. Iames in the hands of King Fernand as perpetuall Administrator thereof: Charles the eight of that name, the French King, restores the Earldome of Rossillon to King Fernand, with other politicke affaires.
6. Order concerning the Spaniards and Portugals navigations.
7. The Mastership of Alcantara in the hands of King Fernand as perpetuall Administrator thereof: the Chancery of Granada, and of the country beyond Tejo.
8. Originall of the warres betwixt France and Spaine.
9. Don Pero Gonçal of Mendoza, Cardinall of Spaine dyes. Friar Francis Ximenes of Cisneros is promoted to the Archbishoppicke of Toledo.
10. Peace betwixt Castile and Nauarre: Coronation of King Iohn of Albret, and Queene Catherine, which was the last in that Kingdome: pursuiues against the Earle of Lerin.
- E 11. VVarre of Naples, noble exploit of Gonçalo Fernandes of Cordona, surnamed the great Capitaine.
12. The Houses of Austria and Spaine, allyed together by marriage.
13. VVarre in the Earldome of Rossillon.
14. The third voyage of Christopher Columbus to the Indies. Enterprises vpon the Affricane Moores.
15. Don Manuel first of that name, and 14. King of Portugal his qualities and vertues, &c. Edict against the Iewes.
16. Vasco de Gama his navigation to Calicut.
- F 17. The Marriage of King Manuel with D. Isbell of Castile, and the birth of D. Michel their sonne, heire to Castile, Arragon, and Portugal, if he had liued.
18. Christopher Columbus and his brother are brought backe as prisoners into Spaine: rebellion in the Indies: voyages of diuers particular persons to the Indies, by the King of Castiles permission.
19. Conuersion of the Moores Mudejares commanded by Edict in Castile.

20. King Iohn of Albreht his journey into Castile: King Fernands countenſſe to get the A Kingdome of Nauarre.
21. The warre of Italy, which in proceſſe of time ſubiectd the State of Milan to Caſtile.
22. Death of Prince Don Michel, whereby D. Ioane, mother to Charles of Auſtria, was aduanced to the ſucceſſiue right of Caſtile and Arragon.
23. Perſecution of the Moores Madejares in Granado and elſe-where: Mahometans wholly baniſhed out of Spaine.
24. Duke Lewis Sforza is taken by the French-men: The Kingdome of Naples is parted betwixt King Lewis the twelfth, and king Fernand, to the preiudice of king Fredericke.
25. Philip Arch-duke of Auſtria, and D. Ioane his wife, their journey into Caſtile, where they receiue the oath of the Caſtillians, as preſumptiue heires to the ſame Crowne.
26. Peter Martyr of Angleria ſent Ambaſſadour to Cayro by king Fernand.
27. Voyages of diuers particular perſons to the Weſterne Indies by king Fernand and Queene Iſabels permiſſion.
28. Voyages of the Portugals into the Eaſt, and other places of the Ocean ſea, to wit, of Pero Aluares Gabralde, Iohn de la Nueva, Americus Veſpucius, &c. Warres raiſed by the Portugals among the ſmall kings of the Eaſt.
29. Birth of the Infant D. Fernand, ſonne to the Arch-duke Philip, and to D. Ioane: their returne into Flanders. Treatie of peace betwixt France and Caſtile to no purpoſe.
30. Aduancement of Pope Iulius the ſecond. The Duke of Valentine perſecuted by him. Miſerable retreat of the French out of the kingdome of Naples. Death of Queene Iſabell.

In

A

B

In this foure and twentieth Booke followeth in the Line of Portugall,

14. Don Manuel the first.

C Hristians in the conquest of the occidental Indies: which their owne Histories beare witnesse of, with terrour to those which reade it, and as a publike scandall to the vnbeleeu-
D ing Nations which haue heard tell of their dealings, for the Christian Religion: the which they thinke by reason thereof, to be a bloudie Religion, which seekes nothing but gold and wealth with an insatiate desire of rule. But wee may easily beleue, that the ex-
E cesse committed by the euill ministers in these searches of the Weſterne Indies, was not by their Kings consent, whose zeale herein is rather prayſe-worthie, but their negligence in redressing and punishing such mischiefs can hardly be excused. Of which voyages and discoueries we intend not to pursue the Historie at large, as wee did protest in the beginning of this Worke, but wee will content our selues with the declarations of the decrees and ordonances made in the Courts and Councils of the Kings of Spaine, for the regard of things executed and done in their names and authoritie in those farther Regions, and to handle, by the way, that which hath followed thereupon in generall: for such matters require particular and distinct Treatises.

Wee haue heretofore declared, how that Christopher Columbus hauing beene diuers times heard to discourse of the navigation which hee had conceiued in his mind to bee made towards the West, with knowledge of new lands, whereof there was no memory in precedent times, had hope and promises of Fernand and Queene Izabella, to giue him meanes to effect it at a time conuenient; the which beeing offered vpon the time that Granado was taken, hee obtained three Caruels rigged and furnished with sixe-score
F men, souldiers and mariners: for the setting forth of whome, the Councillor Lewis of Saint Angell did lend the King fixeene thousand Duckets. Hee departed then from Palos de Moguer in Andalusia, vpon a Friday the fourth of August, in the yeare 1492.
and hauing sayled two moneths and eight dayes, hee discouered the land which hee so much desired, that is to say, vpon the eleuenth day of October of the same yeare.

The first man which cryed, Land, was one called Rodrigo de Triane, who descried the Iland of Guanahami of Lucaios betwixt Florida and Cuba, where they first landed, and tooke

*The Spaniards
as a vice and cruelly toward the Indians, make Christian religion actions to the vnbeleuing nations.*

Christopher Columbus his first voyage to the Indies.

An. 1492.

rooke possession of that new world, in the name of King Fernand and Queene Isabella: then they sayled to Barucoa, the port of the Isle of Cuba, where they tooke certaine Indians, and afterward they turned towards the Isle of Hati, since then called Hispagniola, and entered into the port by them named Rayall.

There the Indians, at the beginning sterne and rough, at the view of such new people, did in such manner become tractable, courteous, and gentle, as they came and brought gold, with such victuals as they had to the Spaniards, exchanging them for bables and toys of small worth. One of their Kings whom they call Cachiques, whose name was Guacanagari, did shew himselfe so kind, tractable and obedient to these newcomers, as they lovingly receyved from him what commodities they would, so as it was lawfull for them, being ayded by the Indians and their Cachique, to build a fort in that countrey, wherein Columbus left eight and thirtie Spaniards with a Captain of Cordoua named Roderigo d. Arana, and with his two Caruels which were left, (for he had lost the third) he returned to Spaine from whence he came, carrying some Indians with him, with gold of the Countrey, and other singularities, which he brought to the aforesaid place of Palos de Moguer within the space of fiftie dayes: before Columbus departure, King Fernand and Queene Isabella did graunt him the twelfth part of all the royall rights of the lands which he should discover, with this reservation, that he should not in his discourie, do any thing that might prejudice the King of Portugals navigation.

There was a matter resolved vpon in the Kings Councell of Castile, as soone as they found themselves to be Masters of Granado, as faile in shew, but of a pernicious consequence: For they made an Edict, whereby all Iewes, which inhabited in Castile and Leon, were enioyned to turne to the Christian Religion, and to be baptized within three moneths, on paine of hauing their goods confiscate, and perpetual banishment. This decree was receiued, published, and executed by an inconsiderate zeale, and without the knowledge of the King and Queene, thinking thereby, as it is likely to augment Christian Religion, and to confirme vnto themselves the name and title of Catholike Kings: whereunto they were incited by the Prelates and slothfull Pastors, who condemned their charge of teaching good and wholesome doctrine, and likewise by the Monkes and other seditious Church-men, who desired rather to destroy, then to feed those miserable creatures, vnto whom they were in perpetuall detestation and skandall, by means of their wicked and corrupted liues, whereby it came to passe, that the name of God was prophaned and blasphemied among the Iewes and Mahometans of those times, who would rather haue retired a thousand leagues, then to draw neere to receive any religious instruction, from so irreligious people, whose pietie was but childish ceremonies, and external seruises, their knowledge meer cunning and deceipt, to maintaine and increase their riches, ease, and vnuly appetites, and their ayme and end, honours and worldly glorie, with a popular opinion of wisdom in the affaires of this world: the which was playne and euident to people of vnderstanding among the Infidels: therefore it behooued such cuill-affected persons, and no way disposed to amend, as were the Prelates of those daies to set forward such counsels, and to cause the Kings of Spaine to practise courses fit and pleasing to the Diuell, who is a murthrer from the beginning of the world, and author of all ruine and desolation: the which hath beene since practised in all places of Christendome with very bad success: for torments, death, confiscations of goods, and such other like violences, cannot beget a graine of fayth in the heart of man, whose seed is the word of God; the watering, the holy workes of vnfeined charitie, by the example of the heavenly Father, and the increase thereof, the spirit of the Lord: but they may well bring forth Atheisme, Hypocrisie, and despair in abundance, which are the offerings which the enemy of Christ Iesus doth demand.

Now the poore Iewes, at the publication of this Edict, were maruailously perplexed, and afflicted with sundry passions, for their religion, liues, and goods which were very great: whereunto perhaps, the Kings Councell had regard, thinking by their obstinacie, which is a vice proper and peculiar to that nation, to find meanes to fill the treasure emptied in the last warres, by the confiscation of so great wealth as they possessed in Spaine, and to redeeme the alienated reuenues of the Crowne, and the Queenes ingaged Jewels.

Now

A Now the most religious Spanishe Iewes, tooke counsell in these three moneths (space of delay before they were to leaue the countrey, and found meanes, to send away their money and chiefe goods out of Spaine, wherein they were ayded and befriended by many honest-minded Christians, who being moued with pittie and humanity, did helpe to hide them, and to conuey them into Portugall, Affricke, Italy, and Macedon, Greece, and other Regions possessed by the Turkes, whom they taught to make Ordinance and Artillerie, and the art of making Gun-powder, Harguebuzes, and such other engines, which they haue sufficiently vied to the hurt of Christendome.

B The rest of them who loued their ease, did value the countrey where they were borne, and their goods, about all other matters, and were baptized, and made profession, either true or fained, of Christian Religion, such as they could learn and comprehend in so short a time, the which did cause another inconvenience: for in processe of time the noble families of Spaine, allying themselves by marriage to that race, did wholly contaminate and pollute themselves both in blood and beleefe. These are the effects which this violent law of King Fernand and Queene Isabella did produce, by the which the Spaniards ended in the 2082. yeare of the Iewes habitation in Spayne, if so be they faile not in their account. The same rigour was obserued against them in Arragon, Valencia, Catalonia, Sicill, and other places vnder the Kings obedience, who from Cordoua went into Arragon to order the affaires of that kingdom.

C Being in the Cittie of Barcelona, God sent them a small aduertisement: for as King Fernand on a morning came forth of the towne-house, where himselfe in person had assisted at the pleas of iustice, and being come downe to the foot of the stayres towards the kings house talking to his Treasurer, a certaine mad man borne at Remensa, whose name was Iohn de Cagnamates, drew neere vnto him, and lifting up a short sword, hee gaue him such a blow from the eare downe to the shoulders, and lifting up a short sword, hee strake not off his head: Whereat the King being astonished, as it was a wonder that hee should not off his head: Whereat the King being astonished, and thinking it to be some conspiracy, hee cried out, Saint Marie helpe me, oh what treason, oh what treason; thinking that some others would make an end of what that foolish fellow had begunne: but when hee perceived that no man stirred, but that euery one stepped before him, to the end the other might not redouble his blow, and that a Gentleman that was his Caruer, and one more had stept to the offender, meaning to haue stabbed him to death with poyards: hee commanded not to kill him; therefore they ledde him to prison, and dressed his wounds: being afterward examined who had procured him to commit that treason, they could neither then, nor after that hee was healed, by any torments whatsoever, get any thing out of him, but that the diuell had assured him, if he would kill the king, to be king himselfe.

The cittie of Barcelona being highly displeased, that this act had beene committed in their iurisdiction, and beleeuing verily that there had beene some conspiracy, did put themselves in armes, and the tumult could not be appeased, vntill the king, whose wound was newly dressed, and stitched vp with seuen stitches of a needle, did come and shew himselfe out of his lodging windowes to the people, to assure them that hee was aliue: and then euery man went home to his own house. The foole who had comitted the deed, was by law condemned to haue his hands and feete cutte off, his eyes pulled forth of his head, to bee dismembred, with burning pincers, and to be drawn on a cart to the common dung-hill, where his bodie was burned, hauing bene first strangled, by the Queens clemencie.

In these businesse the yeare 1492. was spent, in which the Brotherhood of the Court beganne, and the building the stately Colledge of the holy Croffe at Vailliodolit was ended, and the same yeare dyed Don Pero Fernandes, Generall of the frontier of Andalusia, Don Henrique de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, Marquis of Cales, by whose deceale without children, the cittie of Cales returned to the Crowne: Don Pedro of Estuniga, Earle of Miranda of Duero, and Don Bertrand de la Cueva, first Duke of Albuquerque.

Pope Innocent the eight dyed likewise at Rome, in whose stead was chosen Rodrigo Borgia,

The Indians gentle and tractable.

2
He is against the Iewes.

Negligent Pastors stirre up persecutions.

The child of those who persecuted the Jewes.

Humanity of Christians towards the banished Iewes.

The Turke and Infidels make profit of the Iewes banishment.

The Nobilitie of Spaine contaminated by the aliyances with the converted Jewes.

3
King Fernand hurst at Remensa.

Cales reunited to the Crowne of Castile.

Borgia, Cardinal of Saint Nicholas in Carere Tulliano, Bishop of Alba, Porto, and S. A. Ruffine, Vice-chancellor and Deane of the Church of Rome, sonne to Don Jeffrey Lasgoli, Lord of Canales, and to a sister of Pope Calixtus the third, who was of the family of Borgia, from whence this man did take his name, and he was called Alexander the sixth, who soon after his assumption to the Papacie, made two Cardinals of his Blood, the one his Nephew, named John Borgia, and the other his owne sonne called Cesar Borgia, of whom we shall have occasion to speake in this Historie.

The same yeare the sonne of Don Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, Cardinall of Spaine, whose name was Rodrigo, was by King Fernand and Queene Isabella, honoured with the title of Marquis of Zenete, and they made an end of building the vaults of the Cathedral Church of Toledo, which were begunne in the dayes of King Fernand the third, and of the Arch-bishop Don Rodrigo Ximenes: the Court remaying still at Barcelona about the beginning of the yeare 1493. Christopher Columbus arrived there, being returned from the West Indies, whose fame, for the discouerie of those new lands, was spread abroad over all Spaine: he presented the Kings with gold, beafts, and other things brought from those Regions, making an ample relation of his voyage, the which did greatly content them, who gaue him the title of Admirall of the Indies, with armes, wherein he vied this Motto: For Castile and Leon, Columbus hath gotten a new world. If the finding out of the wealth brought from the Indies hath brought any commoditie to the couetous negotiators of our Regions, the euils which did accompanie them, did farre surmount and exceed them:

For then first of all, was the abominable Venerean disease known, which in France is called the great pockes, brought by the Spaniards, which went with Columbus, who having had to do with the Indian women, which were infected there-with, as with a disease proper and peculiar to the Country, did communicate it to the women of Seuill, and of the Court, who distributed it to others: running on with such contagion and horrible accidents of knobbes and rotting soares, as in the beginning, when our Physicians knew not the remedie for such a disease, diuers did miserably perish, or remayned lame of their members, with a villanous and strange change of their forme and fauour, the reward of whoredome, ouer common then in Spaine and else-where, which neuertheless could not chastise the world in such sort, but that this sinne is at this day more in vse then ever it was, to the dishonour of God, contempt of his lawes, and confusion of all good order. The Spaniards in recompence of this euill brought brought from the Indies, carried thither the Kings euill and madnesse by the biting of dogges, which they brought thither with them, of which diseases the Indians had no knowledge at all.

The right remedie of this contagious infirmittie, are Guaiaci, China, and Salsaparilla, which nature bringeth forth in abundance in that new world, where they haue daily need thereof. Another euill hath the desire of gold, pearles, and other high prized things found in those Ilands, brought with it, namely, that the Spaniards haue giuen ouer all honest and profitable exercises, the ground remaying vntilled in diuers places of Spaine, and other arts condemned, the people of Spaine making none account of any other matter, but onely of the voyage to the Indies: so that ever since, it hath had continuall need of the commodities of the neighbour regions.

King Fernand and Queene Isabella did forth-with send the desired newes of this discouerie to Pope Alexander, betwixt whom diuers discourtes did passe by their Ambassadors, and letters to reduce the brutish and idolatrous people of that country, to the knowledge of the true God, and the benefite of Iesus Christ, which would haue bene a memorable worke. This Pope, in the Conuention of the Cardinals did approve this enterprise and conquest for the Kings of Castile, granting and giuing to them and their successors by Apostolical authority, the Indies, Ilands and firme land of the West, and did charge and enioyne them to cause the Gospell to be preached: the which moued the kings to furnish forth the number of eightene shippes, vnder the conduct of John Rodrigo of Fonseca, Deane of Siuill, who was afterward Bishop of Burgos, and superintendent of the Indian affaires: of which vessels, manned with fiftene hundred men, they gaue the charge to the Admirall Columbus, and to a brother of his named

The Indies
haue diuered
the Spaniards
from husbandrie and arts.

The Pope giues
the west Indies
to the Kings of Castile

The great
Pockes, the disease of the Indies, brought into Europe.

A named Bartholomew, the dignitie of Gouvernour of those new Countries, who departing from Cales, did againe cut thorough the Ocean sea, and landed at the Iland called by them the Desired, from whence without staying they passed to the port of la Plata in the Iland Hispaniola, and came to the royall port, where they found their tort to be overthrowne, and the eight and thirtie Spaniards with their Captaine, whom they had there left, to be slaine by the Indians, who were enforced to fall vpon them for the spoiles and robberies which they had committed.

There came in this second voyage with the Admirall Columbus, Friar Bayll, a Monke of the Order of Saint Bennet, a Cattelan by nation, with authoritie of the Popes Vicar, and twelue learned Clerkes of good and holy life, according to those times, diuers artificers, beafts, as well horse as neate, with others, store of victuals, stufes, and necessary and profitable matters for the life of man: with these provisions the better to be furnished for future times, the Admirall Columbus caused a new towne to be measured out, which he named Isabella, after the Queene's name, the which he peopled, and pursuing his search, hee discouered Cuba and Iamaica, and other smaller Ilands: wherein being buised, the Spaniards, left with the Friar, beganne to enter into mutinie, and to commit many disorders, the Governours authoritie, nor the Friars exhortations and interdictions, not being able to containe them within their bounds, whom the Admirall punishing according to their deserts, at his returne it procured him enemies and hatred, who did vnruly vexed and pursue him, as shalbe hereafter declared.

Don Alphonso de Cardenas, Master of Saint James, being dead this yeare, King Fernand retrayned the Masterhippe, not suffering any new election to be made, as hee had done the like to that of Calatrava with the selfe same considerations and reasons, who by the Popes authoritie, remayned Administrator of them. Don Alphonso was then the Master of the same Order, and the three and fortieth in order and continuance the same was done to the Order of Alcantara: the which three dignities were since that incorporated to the Crowne by Pope Adrian the sixth, in the time of the Emperour Charles the fifth, who was heire to the Kingdomes of Castile.

The same yeare the Kings of Castile were altogether rid of King Mahomet Boabdellin the Little, who being impatient of the daily solicitations which were made to him, for to become a Christian, and to receiue the water of Baptisme, did sell all the lands and rights which had bene giuen him by the capitulations, at such time as hee deluded vpon the Citie of Granado, for foure-score thousand Duckets, and with his family retired himselfe into Affricke. There were new teares and lamentations renewed, when his owne mother vbraying him, sayd, That it well became him to put finger in the eye and weepe like a woman, for the losse of his dignitie and pallaces, seeing that hee could not defend them like a man. He was kindly welcommed and receuyed by the King of Fez, but within a few yeares afterwards he was slaine in his fierce and intestine warres against the Xerifs.

The Spanishe Authours set downe for a memorable matter, that the Kingdome of Granado beganne and ended, two kings of Castile of one selfe same name reigning, namely Ferdinand, and the first and last King of Granado were call'd Mahomet. At the same time the Earldome of Rossillon was restored to King Fernand by the French king, Charles the eighth, who hauing vnderaken at the entreatie and request of Lewis Sforza, named the Moore who did usurpe the Duchie of Milan, the Conquest of the Kingdome of Naples, did feare least the King of Castile should in his absence enterprise vpon France, in regard of the strife and contention about the sayd Earldome: Wherefore to free and acquit himselfe from that feare and suspicion, hee yielded it vnto him, and renewed the peace and alliances betwixt the Kingdomes of France, Castile and Arragon, but it was euill and vnfaithfully kept: Wherein the Kings chiefe Councellours did greatly stand him in stead, namely, Stephen Batis de vers, and Friar Alphonso of Albi, and namely, the holy man Friar Francis de Basile, who died at Plessis les Tours, certaine of whose letters are yet extant, which he wrote therevpon, and to the same effect to King Fernand.

Friar Bayll the Popes Vicar in the Indies.

The Masterhip
of S. James was the Kings hands in quality of administrator.

The Earldome
of Rossillon was restored to King Fernaudo.

King Ferdinand
and Isabella.

It was concluded in this agreement, that King Ferdinand of Castile should not give any aid nor assistance to the King of Naples: whereby it appeareth that this Catholike King knew well how to use the vcharitable rule, which sayes, that Charity begins by it selfe. For he to recouer the Earledome of Rossillon, without restitution of the money which King John his Father had borrowed of King Lewis the eleventh, did not greatly care to leaue the honour, state, and life, of his cousin germane, and brother in law Ferdinand King of Naples for a prey to the French, or at the least hee promised it, and swore so to the French King, notwithstanding that hee afterward changed his minde. King Ferdinand and Queene Isabella hauing remained for a while in Cattalonia, and afterward at Saragossa, they came to Valiodolit, where Don Rodrigo d'Vlloa being deceased, who was one of the superintendents of the treasure which they call Cantador mayor, they suppressed that superintendencie, retaining no more but the two that remained, namely, Don Gutierrez de Cardenas great Commander of Leon, and Don John Chacon gouernor of the frontier of Murcia. Being departed from Valiodolit to Medina del Campo, they receiued newes of the death of King Ferdinand of Naples, whom his sonne Don Alphonso Duke of Calabria succeeded. The King at the same time had called in the towne of Tordeillas, a Chapter of the order of Saint Iames, and reformed certaine abuses, and there the differences were compounded, betwixt Castile and Portugall about the Indian navigation.

6
Portugal.
1493.
The Pope limits the Spaniards and Portugals navigation.

The Portugals
navigation towards the VVest.

The Moluccas found to be within the navigation of the Castilians.

The King of Moncong receives the Christian religion.

W<sup>e</sup> have declared how that Pope Alexander had granted by his Bull, dated at Saint Peters, this present year one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and three, and the first of his Popedom, the west Indies to the Kings of Castile. Now for to limit the Streights, betwixt Castile and Portugall, he did draw a line or a meridianall in the Globe from the Poles of the North to the South, leauing a hundred leagues distance to the Portuguese towards the West, from one of the Isles to Cape vert, to make their navigation of Africk, and the East Indies: wherewith the King of Portugall was highly displeased, and complained in such sort to the Pope, that the Kings of Castile entreated that the navigation might be left free to him towards the west, of foure hundred leagues, and the Isles and lands within the same reputed for his conquest, wherewith the King of Castile was not only contented, but added to it threecore and ten leagues more, so as the Portugalls navigation in all, did stretch from the Isles of Cape vert, towards the west, foure hundred and seauenty leagues, passing the meridianall by that point round about the globe: but time made it manifest, that the King of Portugall thereby did finally better his condition: for the riche Islands of the Moluccos, from whence the spices come, are found to be within the streight of Castile: this Transaction was passed the seauenth day of Iune in the year one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and foure.

Now King John thinking that the Moluccos were his part, hee sent certaine Caruels this year to seeke a passage by the African sea towards the East, but they went not farre beyond the Cape of Good hope: wherefore the King being very desirous, that in his dayes this vnkowne navigation might be practised, could not haue that good hap, for hee did not liue this year. In his time neuertheless the kingdome of Manicongo in Guiney was discovered, the King whereof with the most part of his nobility were Baptized. King John being oppressed with continuall melancholy for the death of his sonne Prince Alphonso, hee fell into a dropsie, which by little and little brought him to his end, not without suspicion that his disease was procured or augmented by poyson: hee neuertheless made his abode in the City of Lisbon, and attended the affaires of his kingdome: but his minde was, above all other matters, set on this navigation, the which hee did set downe according to the opinions which hee had receiued from diuers places, which did confirme and verifie the discourse which Pedro de Cobamillas had sent him, who remained in Prester Johns Countrey Emperour of Ethiopia, from whence there arrived at Lisbon, a little before the Kings death, a learned and discrete Monke, who informed the king more particularly of diuers matters, which serued afterwards to great purpose.

Now King John feeling himselfe neere his end, made his Will, and hauing no lawfull children, hee knew that the kingdome was to fall to Don Mannell Duke of Beja: hee

A Hee was therefore desirous to giue Don George his base sonne a portion, vnto whome hee gaue the Cittie of Coimbra, with the title of Duke, and Montmajor the old, and the lands of the Infantsalga, in the same forme, as his Grandfather the Infant Don Pedro, father to Queen Isabella, his mother, had possessed them: hee gaue him moreover, the Ile of Madera, Beja, and Visco, which was not performed afterward.

This will and Testament was signed by Don Manuel, and D. George, and by fine other personages of great place, who made vp the number of seven witnesses. After this hee went into Algarbe to the Bathes of Monchiz, in the moneth of October the season being cold, and visit for his disease: and hunting the wild Bore vpon a wet rainie day, hee got a fluxe: Wherefore as soone as he came to Albor, assured tokens of death beganne to appeare vpon him, wherof he was admonished by D. Diego Ortiz Bishop of Tanger, and Don Diego Almeyda, Prior of Saint Iohns, who was Gouernour to Don George: then disposing himselfe to dye, hee appoynted certaine things, out of a litle Booke, to be read, and accomplished at such time as he was readie to giue vp the ghost. First, hee craved pardon of the Dutchesse Donna Beatrix his mother-in-law, of Queene Leonora his wife, and of the Cardinal Don George of Acosta, who then was at Rome: he likewise craved pardon of the whole Estates of his Kingdome in generall. And to the end that his sonne Don George should not grieve and trouble his mind, hee caused him to be ledde forth of his chamber, and there stood round about his bed, Don George of Almeyda, Bishop of Coimbra, and his brother Don Diego of Almeyda, Prior of Saint Iohns, Don John de Silva Bishop of Silues, Don Diego Ortiz Bishop of Tanger, and Don Iohn de Vasconcelles, Barke of Penela, with certaine Chaplens, who exhorted him for his foules health. In this manner this King died, hauing held the scepter of Portugall foure tene years and two moneths in the year 1495, and in the sixe and fortieth of his age: his bodie, by his owne appointment, was layd in the Cathedral church of Silues, and was afterwards transported by the commandement of the King his succesor to the Monastrie of Battaile, being the last king that was buried there, and it is reported that yet to this day his bodie lyes whole and vnconsumed. He was an excellent King, and esteemed to be so by the other Princes of Christendome.

D Returning to the affaires of Castile, King Ferdinand and Queene Isabella departing from Tordeillas, went to Arealuo to visite the old Queene Isabella, mother to Queene Isabella then reigning, from whence they came to Segouia, and afterward to Madrid, where by the aduice of their Councell it was decreed, that the king, should take the Master-ship of Alcantara into his owne hands, as well as those of Saint Iames and Calatrava, for to be perpetuall Administrator thereof, and to the end that there might be no more masters in Castile, then the King and Queene: the which was approved by authoritie Apostolick: Don Iohn of Estuniga being bereft of his Mastership, was otherwise recompenced. This year also, the new Chancerie and royall audience at Cité reall was erected for pleas and eauls depending beyond Tayo, this riuer separating the bounds of the two Chanceries: namely, of this, and of that at Valiodolit, from this Spring in the mountaine of Cuenca, where it enters into the lands of Portugall, Don Alphonso Carrillo Bishop of Catania, and afterwards of Auila, was the first President thereof. Now the King and Queene had sent some few dayes before Antonio Fonseca Ambassadour to the French king Charles the eight, to the end to diuert him from the warre of Naples, enterprized against King Alphonso their Nephew, and to declare plainly to him (now that they had gotten the Earledome of Rossillon) their meaning. And king Charles being already come into Italy with a mightie armie, the Ambassadour mette him at Villiri neere to Rome, where he deliuered his Ambassage, and did protest, notwithstanding the agreement and promises made at the restitution of the Earledome of Rossillon, that if hee did persist to pursue by armes his pretended right to the kingdome of Naples, king Ferdinand his master could do no lesse then shew himselfe his enemy, and take vpon him his Nephewes defence, and therefore he entreated him to thinke of it, and to referre all their differences to the Popes iudgement, who could very well iudge whither the kingdome of Naples did belong to the French or to the Arragonois.

The Ambassadour wold haue sayd more, but hee was interrupted in his speech, by certain

M m m m 2

hor

Death of King
John of Portugall.
1495.

7 Castile

8

Peace betwixt
France and Castile broken.

hotte and fierie French Lords, who made him hold his peace, and told him that he spake A too arrogantly and impertinently: therefore the Ambassador following his instruction, tooke the Articles of the last agreement betwixt King Charles and King Ferdinand (which he brought with him) and tare them in peeces in the presence of the King, Lords, and Knights of his Armie: and hee warned at the same instant, Charles de Arreilan, and John Petit Cernillon, Spanish Captaines, who served in King Charles his Armie: that as subiects to King Ferdinand they should depart thence within three dayes, and giue ouer the French Kings seruice, on paine of being held rebels to their Prince: From the same time was the friendship betwixt those two Kings broken, and warre in a manner denounced. King Charles pursued his defence, and without any difficulty made himselfe maister of B the Realme of Naples, King Alphonso before hee had fully reigned a yeare, hauing giuen ouer the kingdome to his sonne Ferdinand, went into Sicill, and there ledde a monastick life: but not long after, the Kings of Castile beeing at Tortosa in Catalonia, did openly and by effect declare themselves enemies to the French, as well for feare least they being already Maisters of Naples, should seaze vpon Sicill, where they pretended like right, as also at the entreaty of Pope Alexander and other Potentates of Italy, being in the same feare of their owne estates, and would not permit the power of the French to grow so great in Italy: therefore they set forth a Naue of Gallies and other ships, with five thousand Spanish footmen, and fixe hundred horse, vnder the conduct of Gonsalo Hernandez of Cordoua: the which forces departing from Carthagea, arrived C safely in the Porte of Messina, this yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninety and five, making a shew as if they would haue succoured the new King Ferdinand driuen from Naples. These troopes of Spaniards among other memorable matters, brought the great Pockes into Italy, wherewith they of the country were soone possessed, and did communicate it to the French men, which were scattered heere and there in the kingdome of Naples, and they afterward brought it on this side the Mounts, and did distribute it to their neighbour nations, so as this disease being indeed of India, was called the Spanish, Neapolitan, and French disease, according to the next subiect where it was discovered, and from whence the contagion was perceived to come.

The Great
Pocke in Italy.

Death of the Cardinal Don Pero Gonsall
de Mendoza.

About the same time in the City of Guadalaxara, dyed Don Pero Gonsales de Mendoza D Cardinal, and Primat of Spaine and Goike France, Archbishop of Toledo, Patriarke of Alexandria, and Bishop of Siguença (such were his titles) who beeing visited in his sickness by the Kings, and being demanded whom hee thought worthy to succeed him in the Archbishopricke of Toledo, hee named Frier Francis Ximenes of Cisneros the Queenes Confessor, Prouincial of the order of Saint Francis in the Prouince of Toledo. This Cardinal had a singular affection to holy Crosse, who besides that it was his hap to haue the holy Crosse in Ierusalem for the title of his Cardinalship, hee builded a Colledge at Valodolit, and an hospital at Toledo neere the place of Codebece, called Holy Crosse: hee re-edified the Church of Santa Cruz at Rome, where they lay the original title written by Pilate on our Saviours Crosse in Greeke, Hebrew, and Latin, E was found in an vnfitte place, the which remains as a famous relique in that Church. Besides, it is reported, that beeing neere his end, a great white Crosse of more then forty Cubits length appeared ouer the house where he lay sick, which beeing reported to him, hee did reioyce, and hauing caused a Masse of the Holy Crosse to be said, hee gaue vp the ghost: these things are written for wonders by the Spaniards: his body lies buried in the chiefe chappell of the Church of Toledo, in a sumptuous Marble monument. As concerning Frier Francis Ximenes of Cisneros his successor in the Archbishopricke of Toledo, hee was sonne to a solicitor of causes in the towne of Tordelaguna, called Alphonso Ximenes: his first rising was to the Arch-priesthood of Vzeda, and hee was great Chaplaine of Siguença, and the lxxi. in the order of the Archbishops, and hee was afterward created Cardinal by Pope Alexander the sixt, of the title of Saint Balbine: but D. Bernardino de Carvajal Bishop of Carthagea, was preferred before him to the dignity of a Cardinal by the title of Santa Cruz in Ierusalem, and was likewise admitted to the Bishopricke of Siguença vacant by the Cardinals death, and at the last obtained that of Playfance. Frier Diego de Deza, of the order of Friers Preachers, Schoole-maister to Prince

Pilate's original title set on the crosse of our Saviour kept for a relique in Rome.

A Prince John of Castile, was likewise made Bishop of Salamanca.

The affaires betwixt Castile and Nauarre, since the time that Alain of Albret came to Valencia to King Fernand, were peaceable: but the kingdome of Nauarre was still vexed by the factions: those of Beaumont, had euer for their chief the Constable Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin: those of Grammont ioynted themselves with the Lord of Abenas, Viceroy and Governour of the Countrey, waiting with great desire for the coming of King John and Queene Catherine, vnto whom they protested: all obedience. Now the great affaires which these Princes had on this side the mountaines, detayned them a long time there: for besides that they were in no sort fauoured by Charles the eight, the pursuits of their vnkle John Vicount of Narbonne had continually disquieted them, vntill the yeare 1493. that they fell to agreement with him: and to secure the countries of Foix and Bearne in their absence, from his surprizes and vsurpations, they had made ouer to him the townes of Sauardun, Maseres, Monthault, and Gibel.

This Vicount was a widow, by the death of Donna Marie of Orleans, sister to Lewis the French King, who left him two children, namely, Gaston, who was duke of Nemours, and Germaine, which was afterward wife to King Fernand of Arragon after Queene Isabella's death. Having then contented the Vicount, and King Charles busied in his iourney to Naples, John Lord of Albret, and Queene Catherine his wife, went into Nauarre, leading with them great troupes of souldiers, for feare lest the Constable should rebell, who C held the citie of Pampelona in such fort at his command, as he disposed of all matters there, as if he had bene King: and when the Princes came to the gates thereof, their entrance was denied, and they were constrained to lodge at Egues, where they remayned certain dayes, vntill the Constable and his Faction were pleased to giue them entrance. In that Citie were the Estates assembled, and the King and Queene were crowned with the vsuall ceremonies, in the presence of diuers Prelats, Knights, and the Ambassadors of diuers Princes. It was the last Coronation which was made in Nauarre in our time: for this kingdome beeing soone after in the Kings of Castiles possession, they would no longer continue such ceremonies, being content to receiue the oath of the Estates after the manner of Spaine. The titles of King John and Queene Catherine of Nauarre, were D Kings of Nauarre, Dukes of Nemours, Gandia, Mombanc and Pegnaffel, Earles of Foix, and Lords of Bearne, Earles of Bigorre, Ribagorça, Pontieure and Petigort, Viscounts of Limoges, Peeres of France, and Lords of the citie of Balaguer.

The yeare 1494. Cesar Borgia, who was after Duke Valentinois, Cardinal and sonne to Pope Alexander the sixt, did by his procurators take possession of the perpetuall administration of the Church of Pampelona, by the decease of Don Alphonso Carrillo the Bishop, and by the grant of the Pope his father: and the yeare following 1495. Princess Magdalen of France dyed, who was mother to Queene Catherine, in the same citie of Pampelona, who accompanied her daughter to her coronation, and had euer virtuously employed her selfe about the conseruation of her childrens estates for the space of five E and twentie yeares, all which time she had liued in holy widow-hood: her bodie lies buried in the great Chappell of the Cathedral church of the same citie. About that time Queene Catherine visited the King and Queene of Castile at Alfaro, by whom she was greatly honoured and welcommed, as bestirred so great a Princess: and we reade of none other occasion of her coming thither, but onely for to see them.

Now after that the King and Queene had made themselves masters of the Citie of Pampelona, the chiefe of the Kingdome, and of many other places which they feared, they were obeyed and reuerenced by the most part of their subiects, and strongly accompanied with Knights and men at armes, they did call to remembrance many rash actions committed by the Constable Lewis of Beaumont, as well against King John of Arragon, and Queene Leonora their Grandmother, as against King Francis Phelips and themselves, namely, that the Beaumontois had denied to open them the gates of Pampelona, with other such recent occasions, whereupon they began to persecute him very sharply, so as the Realme of Nauarre was againe in as great confusion as euer it had bene: the two old Factions not forgetting to make vse of any occasions that might hurt one another: the which stormes were in some fort quietly calmed by the mediation of King Fernand

to
The last Coronation at Nauarre.

Cesar Borgia
Cardinal Bishop
of Pampelona.

of Castile & Arragon who procured this agreement, that the Constable Lewis of Beaumont his brother in law should withdraw himselfe into Castile for a certaine limited time, in which meane space either part should lay by their armes, and that the said Constables goods and lands should be laied in deposito in King Fernand's hands. And in this sort the Constable left Nauarre, but he lost nothing thereby, for King Fernand gaue him twice as much reuenue as he had before, and made him Marquis of Huefcar in Granado. The name of open warre ceased in Nauarre, but they left not of committing of many murtheres and robberies without feare of law, for that nation had beene a long time accustomed to such outrages in contempt of the law; the which waxed still worke thorow King Iohn and Queene Catherines negligence, who by euill counsell, and particular affections, vnworthy of soveraigne Princes, did at the last bandy themselves in leagues one against the other, the King taking part with those of Beaumont, and the Queene with the Grammontois whereof infinite miseries ensued.

Lewis of Beaumont made Marquis of Huefcar.

11
Castile.

During these troubles Gonsalo Fernandes de Cordoua, surnamed the Great capitaine, hauing ioyned the forces that hee brought from Spaine with those that King Fernand had, who was driuen forth of Naples, and being accompanied with D. Hugo Cardona the Sicilian, did so handle the matter as after that King Charles was departed forth of the Kingdome hee recovered Calabria from the French, and draue thence the Lord Aubigni who was gouernour in those marches, notwithstanding that soone after hee received an ouerthrow by him neere to Seminara, where King Fernand of Naples had like to haue beene taken prisoner: after which Gonsalo Fernandes hauing made his retreat to Rijoles, where he stood a certaine time on his defence, and being afterwards re-enforced with new supplies out of Sicile, and a nauy of three score and twene ships brought from Messina by King Fernand, hee had courage and meanes to beseege and make himselfe Master of the city of Naples, with her castles, and draue thence Lord Guilbert of Montpensier, whom King Charles had left there for gouernour and Lieutenant General, making such sharpe warre vpon the rest of the French that were left there, as King Fernand in short time was restored to his Kingdome, by the valour, prowesse, and discretion of this great capitaine: which when Don Alphonso vnderstood, who of a King was become a Monke in Sicile, hee laboured to recouer his former dignity: but his sonne who was in possession thereof, and who had valiantly employed himselfe in the recovery of that which his father had carelesly lost, would not giue it out: wherefore Don Alphonso did not liue long after in his monasticke state, for hee died this yeere 1495.

Exploits of Gonsalo Fernandes de Cordoua surnamed
the Great
captaine.

D. Alphonso
from a King becomes a Monke, with in uaine
from a Monke to become a
King.

The successfull exploits of the Spaniards in the Kingdome of Naples did greatly reioyce King Fernand and Queene Isabella, who being at Tortosa, did agree vpon the marriage of Prince Iohn their sonne and heire to the Kingdome, with Marguerite of Austria, daughter to Maximilian then Emperor, who was sent home, as hath beene said, by Charles the French King: and by the same meanes the marriage was concluded betwixt Philip of Austria sonne to the said Emperor and Donna Isabe, second daughter to the King and Queene of Castile and Arragon. These Princes and Princesses which were married, brother and sister to the brother and sister, were very neere of kinne by the line of Portugall: for Donna Isabella of Portugall, wife to Duke Philip of Burgondy, was mother to Duke Charles father to Mary, who was mother to Philip and to Marguerite of Austria.

Aluices betwixt the houses of Austria and Castile.

12

And on the other side D. Leonora of Portugall the Empreffe, wife to Frederike, mother to Maximilian, father to Philip and Marguerite, was cousin germain to King Fernand, daughter to Donna Leonora of Arragon, sister to King Iohn his father, the which Donna Leonora was wife to King Edward of Portugall. These treaties being made, the King made some stay at Tortosa, and then returned into Castile: but they were not long there, till the King was constrained to returne to Tortosa to take order for the warre which the French had raised in the Earldome of Rossillon: for King Charles being highly moued that the King of Castile, contrary to the agreement and promise which hee had made him, had sent aide to the King of Naples, fought against his armies and townes which hee had conquered, had sent a mighty army to

VP auices
twixt the French and Spaniards in the Earldome
of Rossillon.

13

A to the Pirenean hills, the which did assaile Sauffes, defended by Capitaine Bernard Francis, who was ouercome and taken, and almost all the Spaniards were cut in peeces in the sight of the Spanish Armies, commanded by Don Henry Henriques Earle of Alua de Lita, and by the King himselfe, who was come as farre as Gyrone, thinking by vaine shewes to cause the French to retire: the which they did, but it was because winter drew on, and for want of victuals, the enemies Armie being in the like necessity. Sauffes being forsaken, dismantled and burnt by the French, a truce was taken for foure moneths. Among other men of name which dyed at the taking of Sauffes were Don Diego de Acevedo, and Pedro de Solis: the same hapned the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, and ninety and sixe.

Sauffes taken by the French.

1496.

Queene Isabell remaining at Burgos, gaue order for the Iourney of her second daughter Don Isabe into Flanders to Phillip of Austria, vnto whom shee was promised, and for the same purpose shee caused a great Nauie to bee rigged in the Port of Laredo, whether shee came in person, after shee had celebrated the obsequies of Queene Isabell her Mother, who dyed at the same time at Areualo, hauing liued a widow the space of two and forty yeares, troubled with sicknesse both of body and minde, whose body being then laide in the Monastier of Saint Francis of Areualo, was afterward transported to the Carthusians in the City of Burgos, called Mirefleur, where King Iohn her husband was buried. The same yeare dyed in Guipuscoa Don Iohn de Gamboa, a personage full of yeares and honour, who was Maister of the horse to the Kings of Castile, and of their Council, Capitaine generall of the frontiers of France and Nauarre, and gouernour of Fontaraby. This Knight left only two daughters, one of which was married in Guipuscoa in the family of Sarauz, and the other into Biscay into that of Arteaga: the Queene gaue the conduct of the Nauie, and of the Infanta Donna Isabe her daughter, to Don Frederick Henriques high Admirall of Castile her Vnckle, being accompanied by Donna Maria de Velasco the Admiralls Mother, with other Lords, Ladies and Gentlewomen, who being shipped, the Queene went back to Burgos, and from thence into Catalonia to ayde the King her husband.

Queene Isabell
the Dowager sick both in body & minde.

Death of Don
Iohn de Gam-
boa.

The Infanta
Don Isabe
voyage into Flanders.

In the meane space, the great Capitaine continued the warre on the one side, and King Ferdinand on the other in the kingdome of Naples, who were resisted in Calabria by Eberard Stuard Lord of Aubigni, assisted by the faction of Aniow, and with a few French forces which were left him, and in the territorie of Lauoro by the Lord Guilbert of Montpensier Lieutenant general to the French King, in the same kingdome, who was besieged in the City of Auerfa by King Ferdinand and the great Capitaine both together, and was brought to such extremitie, as hee promised, if within thirty dayes hee were not succoured, to yeeld up all that the French men held in the kingdome of Naples, excepting Gaieta, Venosa and Tarentum, which were in the hands of strangers, vpon condition that they would furnish him with shippes to carry him and his people into France: there fell afterwards great sicknesse among the men of warre on either side: and Lord Guilbert of Montpensier dyed at Pozzuolo with other French Lords, and there dyed likewise on the enemies part diuerse men of note, as namely King Ferdinand, who had for successeur his Vnckle Don Frederick of Arragon, brother to Don Alphonso. King Frederick stayed not long ere hee besieged Gaieta, during which siege the Lord D. Aubigni rendred the places which hee held in Calabria, by whose example Gaieta, Venosa and Tarentum were yeilded, and King Frederick by that meanes recouered all the realme of Naples.

In this warre all the Potentates of Italy shewed themselves enemies to the French, the Florentines excepted, who thought by the meanes of the Frenchmen who held Pisa, to bring that Citie into their subiection. And the warre being ended, Pope Alexander did sharply persecute the Vrsins, friends and seruants to the house of France, and the chiefe of that family Virginio Vrsino, an excellent Capitaine, of all which matters, King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell of Castile were aduertized to their great contentment.

All the Potentates of Italy enemies to the French except the Florentines.

The beginning of the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, ninetie and seauen, the Kings being in the City of Burgos, they received aduertisement that the Armie of Castile 1497.

Frier Francis Ximenes Archbisp. of Toledo.

Castile was returned, which had conducted the Infanta Donna Joane, wife to Philip of Austria, and brought Margueret, sister to the said Philip, betrothed to Prince John, who were married in the same City, Frier Francis Ximenes of Cisneros Archbishop of Toledo and Primar of Spaine doing the ceremony: and they had for their God-father Don Frederick the Admirall, and Donna Maria de Velasco his mother for their God-mother. The feasts and magnificences were great and pompous, whereat died Don Alphonso de Cardena second sonne to Don Gonzalez de Cardena, great Commander of Leon.

The wedding being ended, the Court came to Medina del campo, where Christopher Columbus arrived as a prisoner by the slanders and accusations of the Spaniards his enemies, who were impatient of discipline, the most envious of whom was Frier Bail, who came back the same time into Spaine: neithertheless the Kings thinking it an unlikely matter that such a personage should yeeld account of his actions in quality of an offender, they did absolue him of the great rigor which hee had executed by justice on the Spaniards, with commandement thence-forward to vse those more gently, who did crosse so many seas to doe them service, and they willed him to returne to the Iudges, they being highly contented with the reports which hee made of the great riches and wealth which those countries yeilded: whereof hee brought them proofes of golde, Brazil, mother of Pearle, Amber, pretious Feathers, Indian raptric, and other strange things: They did againe rigge forth eight ships for him, furnished with men and victuals, two whereof hee sent away before laden with victuals and weapons to his brother Bartholomew Columbus, who had begun to builde the Cittie of Saint Domingo, vpon the riuer of Oryama in the Island of Hispaniola: hee with the other fixe parted from Saint Lucar de Barameda, and being arrived at Madera, vnderstanding that there were French Pirates at sea that watched for him, being drawne thither by the renowne of the wealth of the Indies, hee sent onely three of his shippes directly to the Island of Hispaniola, and hee with the other three sayled towards the Isles of Cape vert, tending to the Equinodiall, and after great trauaile of heates, and calmes, hee arrived at Paria the firme land of those West Indies: then coasting three hundred and thirty leagues vnto Cape de Velas, hee discovered and tooke note of all that country, D where are Cabo Anegado, the point of Salinas, Cubagua, otherwise called the Isle of Pearles, the point of Araja, Cumana, Chiriuichi, the Gulph of Cariari, Curiana, Saint Roman, Venezuela Coquibocoa, and other places, from whence hee passed to the new City of Saint Domingo, and there was receiued for Governour, to the great grieve of diuerse.

This was the third voyage that Columbus made to the Indies, and then they had already begun to trade and negotiate with the Indians by force of armes: for the violent viage of them had made them become strange, and enemies to the Spaniards, so as they left off tilling of their grounds, and sowing of their Maiz, to the end to constrain them by hunger to leaue the contrey, and at the same time as these shippes arrived, E great number of Indians being gathered together, did besiege the Spaniards of the Forte of Saint Thomas du Ciabo, who were put to flight by Alphonso de Hoiedo. Having then gotten the Cachique Coanabo into the Forte, keeping him prisoner for the death of diuerse Christians, more then five thousand Indians assembled themselves, being conducted by a brother of his, for to deliuer him, who were likewise defeated by Horeda, hauing but a hundred Spaniards in his company, and some amongst them were horsemen, the which made the Spaniards to be greatly feared, and much more afterward when Bartholomew Columbus by night defeated fiftene thousand Indians, tooke fiftene Cachiques, and a Generall aboute all the rest named Garrimex, all which hee set at libertie vpon their words and promises to continue subjects to the Kings of Castile.

Besides these conquests in the Indies, the Spanish Nobilitie, who seeing that there was no more warres in Spaine against the Infidells, began to enterprize vpon the neighbour shoare of Affrick, and this yeare the City of Melilla, neere the sea in the kingdome of Tremessen, was taken by Don John de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, who

A who led a sufficient army thither, at his owne costs and charges. This was the first place which the crowne of Castile did possesse in that country beyond the sea, which gaue beginning to the warres of Affrike, which continued afterward, and whereof wee will speake in his place. This exploit of the Duke of Medina was acknowledged and rewarded by the King, who lying at Valencia of Alcantara did treat the marriage of their daughter, the Infanta Isabell the widdow, with the new King D. Manuell of Portugall, of whom we must discourse.

D. Manuel the fourteenth King of Portugall.

THIS Prince succeeded King Iohn his cousin and brother in law in the crowne of Portugall the yeere 1465, being seven and twenty yeeres of age: hee was sonne to Don Fernand Duke of Visco, and of the Infanta Donna Beatrice, grand-child to King Edward, and great grand-child to King Iohn the first, whose advancement to the royall crowne had bene fore-told by certaine Soothsaiers and Astrologians: he obtained it by right of lawfull succession, and by the testamentary appointment of King Iohn his predecessor: in whose life time hee did in no sort take vpon him the title of Prince and heire of Portugall, but onely of Duke of Beja and Master of Christus. Hee was a iust King, and loued honour, religious and zealous in the faith which had bene taught him, vnto the Nobility kindly, the which hee increased and advanced in his dominions as much as hee could: he was gentle, liberrall and a great giuer of almes, especially to religious friers as well of his owne Kingdome as to strangers, diligent and careful in the administration of justice, an enterprizer, lucky in voyages, nauigations and discoveries of countries, whereby hee greatly augmented and amplified his Kingdome and Siegnories: hee was beloued and esteemed as well of his owne subjects as of strangers: magnificent and sumptuous in buildings, which the royall monastery of Belen or Bethlem, of the order of Saint Ierome doth beare witness of, edified for the buriall of the Kings: the castle of Belen, which stands almost in the riuer of Tayo, for the garde of the Port of Lisbon; the Monastery of Saint Mary de la Pegna of the same order of Saint Ierome neere to Sintra, and that of Saint Clare the New in the towne of Estremos: all which workes were by him built from the foundation; and hee did moreouer restore and augment the couents of Saint Francis of Lisbon, Eborra and Saint Iren. The bridge of Coimbra, and that of Oliuenga vpon Guadiana are likewise of his structure, with diuers others publike buildings and reparations: all which vertues and magnificencies were blemished by one vice, wherevpon Princes and great Lords doe often stumble, namely, he was to light of beleefe. Whereby hee shewed himselfe inconstant and variable, retracting on euery small occasion his decrees, orders, gifts and priuiledges by contrary commandments.

This King Don Manuel was thrice married, and all his wiues were Infantes of Castile, and the two first were sisters: his first wife was Donna Isabell, widdow to the Infante Don Alphonso his Nephew his sisters sonne, on whom hee begat a sonne named D. Michel, who was borne in Arragon in the city of Saragozza at such a time as shalbe set downe hereafter, who if hee had liued, had bene heire to all Spaine: Donna Isabell being dead, his second wife was her sister, called the Infanta Maria of Castile, third daughter to King Fernand and Queene Isabell by whom hee had a great issue. First of all, D. Iohn heire of Portugall borne at Lisbon in the palace of the Riuer, the Infanta Donna Isabell borne in the same city, who was Queene of Castile, Leon, Arragon and Nauarre, and Emperesse of Germany, married to Charles the fifth. Donna Beatrice who was Dutchesse of Sauoy, wife to Charles the ninth, and mother to Duke Emanuel Philibert of Sauoy, D. Lewis borne in Abrantes, father to D. Antonio who was at first for the kingdome of Portugall with Philip king of Spaine in our time; next D. Henry, who in our time was a Cardinall, borne likewise in Abrantes on the riuer of Tayo, D. Alphonso

15
Portugal.

Qualities of King Manuel.

buildings of King Manuel.

Genealogie of Portugal.

14 Columbus his third voyage
to the Indies.

Enterprizes
vpon the Aff-rican Moors.

Earldomes erected in Portugall by King Manuel.

Alphonso who was borne in the city of Eborā, and was likewise made Cardinall at seuen yeeres of age by Pope Leo the tenth; Don Catherine who died young, then D. Fernand, Don Edward and Don Antonio. His third and last wife was Donna Leonora daughter to Philip of Austria, Infanta of Castile, and sister to the Emperour Charles the fifth, by whom he had a sonne named Charles who died young, he had moreover by her a daughter, borne after his death, named Donna Maria, who lived in great chastity in our daies: So as this King had by his three married wiues thirteene children liuing, namely nine sonnes and foure daughters: This Prince comming to the crowne hee erected diuerse Earldomes for the ornament of the Nobility of Portugall, hee gaue that of Portalegre to Diego de Silua his gouernour, who enioyed but the title only, for the Inhabitants of Portalegre did defend themselves, by reason of their priuiledges: hee made Don Vasco de Gama Admirall of Portugall Earle of Bediguera, Don Martin de Castil-blanc Earle of Villanoua, Don Iohn de Meneses Earle of Taroco and prior of Saint Iohns, Don Rodrigo de Merlo Earle of Tentugall, Don Pedro de Castro Earle of Montfandio, Don Francisco de Sofa, sonne to the Bishop of Eborā Earle of Bemiofo, and Don Antonio of Portugall Earle of Lignare, honouring in that manner, by liberality and royall bounty the Nobility of Portugall.

At the instant entreaties and requests of the widow, Queene Leonora his sister, and of the Dutchesse Donna Isabel, widow of Bragança, hee restored to the honours and goods of the deceased Duke, D. Iames, vntill then in exile in Castile, who was the Dukes second sonne, for Don Philip the eldest died in Castile, because the Princes of his blood should not liue in such calamity, and that so noble a race might not faile in Portugall: he shewed the like grace and bounty to diuerse other Lords, who were absent, for offences committed against the crowne, albeit that the new Duke D. Iames had for his owne part no way offended, but had run into his fathers disgrace who was executed by law. For a notable and religious act, as he and his counsel thought, he gaue commandement that all Iewes and Moores should voide forth of Portugall, vnlesse they would be baptized, confiscating their goods, and children of euery sex, excepted vnder thirteene yeeres of age, whom by force he caused to be baptized, but being afterwards better aduised, hee retained onely the men and women of those sects by force, causing them to be receiue baptism, and to confesse Iesus Christ with their mouths, but, as it is to be presumed, without beleeuing it in their hearts, and people constrained, and not well instructed, the which did beget infinite apostacies, sects, and heresies in Portugall, as it could not fall out otherwise.

Following the steps of his predecessor King Iohn, hee sent men into the parts of the East to make ample and certaine information of the traffike of spices, and hee caused Don Vasco de Gama to pursue the navigations and discouery of the shores of Affrike, who departing from Lisbon this yeere 1497. with two ships, the one named the Angel Gabriel, the other the Angel Raphael, manned with a hundred and forty men, coasted about Affrike, and touching at the Isle of Saint Iames, and that of Saint Helen, places by him so named, hee came into Maçambuque a country of the Moores, and from thence, by a long and tedious journey passing hard by a rocke, which hee called Saint George, and by the shelles and sands of Saint Raphael hee arrived at Mombaza a land fertile, pleasant, and of great trade and commerce, then going forward he came to the city of Melinde, in the which hee had not only some rest and refreshing from his painful journey, but did likewise contract peace and alliance betwixt the King of Melinde, and King Almanuel his Master: at the last sayling farther, he came to Calicut the place so much desired which was the aime of his enterprize. He found Calicut to be a great and wel peopled city, and of great trade for spices, he saw in the haueen more then a thousand fine hundred saile of marchants ships, great and small, but ill built and vnserviceable for long voyages, without art in their sailes, anchors and tackling, not vntill the compasse, and wholly vnfit for sea fights, not being able to saile vnlesse they had a fore winde.

17
Calicut.

Now King Manuel being such an one as wee haue described him, and in his flourishing age, the marriage betwixt him and the Princesse Isabella of Castile; who was

A was a widow was concluded at Valencia of Alcantara, at the same time as Prince Iohn of Castile newly married to Marguerite of Austria fell sicke of the disease whereof hee died at Salamanca: the which caused king Manuel to hasten the effecting of this marriage: because that after Prince Iohn, the succession of the Realmes of Castile and Arragon fell to Donna Isabella as to the eldest. Therefore hee vsed such diligence as the marriage was accomplished before the Prince his death, who deceased to the great griefe of the kings his father and mother, and of all their subiects, hauing not fully attained to the twentieth yeere of his age, and was buried in the Monastery of St. Thomas of the frier preachers in the city of Auila. All the Gentlemen, Knights, Lawiers, and other men of note in all parts of Spaine, did in signe of mourning for his death cloath themselves in blacke frise, or such like course cloath of meane price. The Princesse Marguerite his widow, who was with child, was brought in bed soone after in the towne of Alcala de Henares of a dead daughter. King Fernand being the first that received these lamentable newes, fearing least the Queene his wife would fall into some great perplexity for the losse of an onely sonne, heire to so great a state and of such young yeeres, did determine to send her newes that he himselfe was dead, and then when shee should enter into teares and lamentations, to come into her presence at the same instant to comfort her, and then plainly to tell her the truth of their sonnes death, imagining that a sodaine consolation betwixt two extreame griefes, would greatly moderate both the one and the other: the which tooke good effect, by the good reason and examples which hee alledged vnto her. By Prince Iohns decease, Donna Isabella his sister was Princesse of the Asturias, and eldest heire to the Kingdomes of Castile and Arragon.

This yeere died Don Iohn Arias de Villār, who was Bishop of Ouiedo, the which place was giuen to Don Garcia Ramires de Villa Eclesia, last perpetual prior of Saint Markes of Leon, and euer afterward the Priors of that place were but from yeere to yeere. There died also by a lamentable chance, the Court being at Alcala, Don Lewis Pimentell Marquis of Villa-franca, eldest sonne to Don Rodrigo Alphonso Pimentell Earle of Benauent, who fell downe to the ground out of a gallery. Don Diego of Castile great commander of Calatroua did likewise die, and his commandery was giuen to Don Gutierre de Padilla Treasurer, and his place to Don Alphonso de Silua, brother to the Earle of Cifuentes. Now the new Queene of Portugall, Infanta of Castile and Arragon, hauing right to so great a succession by the death of Prince Iohn her brother: reboued the King her husband and her selfe to passe into Castile, to receiue, in quality of future heires to those Kingdomes, the oth of the States: therefore leauing the widow Queene Leonora Regent in Portugall, they came to the city of Toledo the yeere 1498. where Queene Isabella of Portugall was sworne, and acknowledged Princesse of the Asturias, heire to Castile and Leon: then going into Arragon, the like was done for the succession in those Kingdomes. But this Princesse being with child, shee was brought in bed and died in the city of Saragossa, leauing heire to all her fathers and mothers dominions, the child newly borne if he had liued, who was called D. Michel, who in that infancy was sworne Prince of Gironne and heire to Arragon and Sicile. With this sorrow D. Manuel returned a widdower into Portugall, leauing his onely sonne in Saragossa. The dead Queenes body was brought to Toledo and buried in the Monastery of Saint Antolm, which is a parish Church where were Religious Nuns, which was builded by Don Agnes d Ayala, wife to the Admiral of Castile, grand-mother to King Fernand. And afterward because of this Princesse, which was there buried, it was called the Monastery of Saint Elizabeth, and the parish remoued to Saint Markes which was of the number of the Musarabes.

F About this time Lewis the twelfth of that name, before Duke of Orleans hauing succeeded Charles the eight in the crowne of France, and hauing his thoughts wholly bent to dispossesse Duke Lewis Sforza of the Duchy of Milan, which hee said was the ancient maternall inheritance of the house of Orleans; peace was granted to King Frederike of Naples, and an agreement procured betwixt France and Castile: therefore

Death of Prince Iohn of Castile.

General mourning.

A good means to comfort an extreame sorrow.

An. 1498.

D. Michel that was borne the first borne heire of Arragon.

On to the Infant D. Michel for the future succession of Castile.

D. Mencía de Mendoza wife to Earle Henry of Nassau.

18

The brothers
Columbus
brought back against prisoners into Spain.

Pero Nugno
voyage.

The voyage of Vincent and Arias Pinson.

Portugal.

fore Don Gonzalo Hernandez surnamed the great capitaine, returned out of Italy into Spaine, full of victory and honor. The Court being come to Ocagna, where Queene Isabella found her selfe somewhat well at ease the yeere 1499. the Infant Don Michel was sworne Prince of the Asturias, and heire to Castile. There arose a great quarrel in Ocagna amongst the courtiers, wherein Don Alphonso Pimentel, sonne to Don John Pimentel was slaine.

The Court comming to Madrid, the marriage was celebrated betwixt D. Rodrigo de Mendoza the first Marquis of Zenete, a widower by the death of his wife D. Leonora de la Cerda Marquise of Zenete, onely daughter to the Duke of Medina Celi, and Donna Maria de Fonseca, daughter to D. Alphonso de Fonseca, of which marriage was borne a daughter and heire called Mencia de Mendoza, who was wife to Henry Earle of Nassau.

The affaires of the Indies grew worse and worse, the Spanish arrogancy not being able to endure a bridle to restraints in their disorders, for Rowland Ximenes from a servant being become great Prouost and President of iustice in the Indies, by the fauour of the Admirall Christopher Columbus, did openly mutiny against Bartolmeu Columbus the gouernour, and with threecore and tenne of his confederates, hee sequestred himselfe and went into Xaragua, protesting that hee did not forsake the Kings seruice of Castile, but onely his obedience to the Geneuois, whose pride he could not beare: the Admirall endeavored by all means to appease this tumult, but he could not, wherefore they fell to writing one against an other into Spaine, and to lay great offences to each others charge, so as the Kings sent Francis de Bouadilla, a Knight of the order of Calatrava with foure caruels, with ample power and authority to the Indies to make information of these matters, who being arriued in the Island of Hispanuola, found, after enquiry made in the city of Saint Domingo, that the two brothers Columbs were in the fault, therefore hee apprehended them, and sent each of them in a caruell prisoners in fetters into Spaine.

Being landed at Cales, the Kings hauing notice of their arriual, caused them to be set at liberty and to come to Granado where the Court then lay, where notwithstanding their iustifications, the gouernment of the Indies was taken from them. And so the Admirall remained three yeeres in Spaine, without returning to the countries by him discovered. The Kings the same yeere gaue leaue to Pero Nugno borne at Palos de Moguer to goe to the Indies with a ship and thirty mariners, on condition that he should not land, nor come neere the lands discovered by Christopher Columbus by fifty leagues: who being arriued at Parias, and hauing well noted the coast euen to Curiana, which is nere to Venezuela, he landed in Curiana, where he found the people to be simple, with whom he exchanged his pedlery ware of smal value, for very precious pearles. This Pero Nugno being returned into Galicia was accused by his own fellowes, and had a long suite before Hernando de Vega Lord of Grayales viceroy in that country. Other inhabitants of Palos Moguer, who had bene in the voyages of Christopher Columbus, and had enriched themselves were desirous to saile againe to the Indies, as namely, Vicont James Pinson, and Arias Pinson his nephew, who at their owne charges, hauing victualled and riggd foure caruels, they passed by Saint James his Isle, one of those of Cap-vert, and arriued at the Cap of Saint Augustin, a country very thicke of trees, amongst the which they found one that sixteen men could not fadom, where they wrote their names, and those of their King and Queene in token of possession: then coasting along the shoares (not without danger) where they thought to land, in regard they found there very fierce and barbarous Indians, they came to the mouth of the great riuier Maragnon, in the gulphes of Parias, and to that of the riuier Oreillana, which are the greatest in the world, and doe runne almost euer vnder the Equinoctiall: the which riuier of Oreillana the Pinsons hauing failed, and spent tenne monthes in those nauigations; they returned into Spaine with two caruels onely laden with brail and drogues, but no gold nor pearles.

Don Vasco de Gama arriued likewise this yeere in Portugal from his voyage of Calicut laden with spices, which hee had bought at a cheape rate, from which place he departed

A parted in the month of September of the precedent yeere, capitaine Nicholas Coelho going before from the Cap of good hope to bring the King of Portugall good newes thereof, after whom the said Vasco arriued, who was most graciously welcomed, and largely rewarded for his trauaile which lasted six and twenty monthes, and of all the men which he carried out with him hee brought home fifty onely. The Portugalls from that time, did ordinarily saile to the East Indies.

This yeere the Princeesse Margueret of Austria widdow, parted from Spaine to returne into Flanders, afterward shee was married to Philibert Duke of Sauoy, by whom B hauing had no children, after his death shee remained a widdow, and gouerned the country of Flanders a long time: the Monastery called Bruns neere to Bourg in Bresse, was builded by her. The Court being at Granado, Queene Isabele of Naples, widdow to the late King Fernand the first came thither, shee was sister to King Fernand of Castile. In her company was the Cardinall Lewis of Arragon, sonne to Don Rodrigo of Arragon bastardo to the King her husband: and in Flanders the Infanta Donna Isabele wife to Philip of Austria was brought in bed of a daughter named Leonor, who was Queene of Portugall, married to the King Don Manuel and afterward to the great King Francis of France.

King Fernand and Queene Isabella being come from Granado to Siuill, being moued with zeale to religion, and the better to obtaine the title of Catholike Kings, by the counsell also of the Prelats, and namely of frier Francis Ximenes de Cisneros Archbis-C hop of Toledo, frier Thomas of Torquemada, the chiefe Inquisitor of Spaine being deceased a while before, they vnderooke the voluntary and forced conuersion of the Moores, contrary to the promises and capitulations made vnto those which yielded during the warres, whereof great troubles ensued.

The Archbisshop Ximenes was at Granado to assist frier Hernand of Talauera a little before made Archbisshop of Granado, who laboured to procure that conuersion to bee voluntary, without vsing constraint. But hee of Toledo imagining that the other had proceeded ouer gently, did beginne to presse the Moores that were inhabitants of the Albayzin after his owne humor; giuing hard speeches to such as would D dispute of religion with the Monks and Curats, who thought to conuert them: and then comming to deeds, hee laid hands vpon a chiefe Moore of the familie of Zigri, who was descended from the Kings of Granado, and kept him so long in prison as to recouer his liberty, hee said that hee was contented to beleue in Iesus Christ, and that hee had had a vision which did assure him that it was the right way of saluation. Hee sent after that, one of his household seruants named Sazedo, with a Prouost that was very ill beloued to apprehend a woman dwelling in the same Albayzin, but both of them were there slaine. Diuers Moores being gathered together at the womans cries, who after the deed ranne to the Archbisshop of Toledos lodging to haue done as much to him: but hee and his people did valiantly defend themselves vntill the Earle of Tendilla the Gouernor came and freed him from them: the which Earle with the Arch-E bisshop of Toledo delt in such sort as the mutinous people were appeased, and their Al-guazils were heard, who protested that they did not rise against the King, but onely to binder the breaking of the Articles agreed vpon, which were, not bee enforced to change their religion.

This was the first attempt of the Moores conuersion, with no small danger and tumult, which lasted tenne daies. The King hauing notice of what was done, was highly moued against the Archbisshop of Toledo; but hee contented him with reasons wherewith hee was not vnfurnished, and caused him to allow and approue to haue them conuerted by force: for at the report of what the Moores of Albayzin F had done, those of the mountaines, and of the country called Alpuzarres did fall into a mutiny, to chastise whom they were constrained to proceed by armes the yeere following 1500. In the same yeere Pope Alexander the sixth, celebrated the tenth Iubiley at Rome, whether people of sundry Nations went in great numbers:
and they beganne to conuert the Moores of Granado, this yeere where diuers of them

N n n

did

19 Moores shew declares enforced to change
their religion.

did mutiny : neuerthelesse more then fifty thousand of that sect receiued the water of Baptisme, and their Mosques were blessed and consecrated to ceremonies and rites accustomed amongst the Christians of that age : those amongst them who would not change their religion at the Kings command, were constrained to doe it by force of armes, and because the townes of Huescar, Lanjaron, and Andarrax in the country of Alpuarras did make the greatest resistance, the inhabitants being enforced were made slaues. And the same yeere was borne in the city of Gaunt vnto Philip of Austria and Donna Joane of Castile vpon Saint Mathias day, a sonne named Charles, who was heire to all the Kingdomes of King Fernand, and Queene Isabella his grand-father and grand mother, and Emperour of Almaine, the fifth of that name, a great and an excellent Prince. It is reported that when the newes of his birth was brought to Queene Isabella his grand-mother, she in a prophetical spirit of his future vniuersal succession in the great dominions of Spaine, spake these words, taken out of the Acts of the Apostles, The lot is fallow vpon Mathias, noting thereby, that Don Michel of Portugal then liuing should not inherit, but that it should bee hee who was borne vpon Saint Mathias day : the which in deed fell out to be happy for the Emperour Charles, it is the foure and twentieth day of February.

Birth of Charles of Austria who was King of Spaine and Emperour.

Saint Mathias day lucky to Emperour Charles.

Nauarre, 20 King John of Nauarre his journey into Castile.

King Fernand being returned from the Catholike warre of the country of Alpuarras in the Kingdome of Granado vnto Siuill, hee was visited by John d'Albret King of Nauarre, whom hee welcomed with great honour and curtesie, for the space of seuentene daies that hee remained there. Diuers businesse moued this Prince to come into Castile, but there were two of greatest importance, for hee imagined to get againe the townes of La Garde, Arcos, Saint Vincent, and Bermedo, the castles of Toro and Herera, and other places of La Soterra which the King of Castile possessed of the antient patrimony of Nauarre; hee did moreover, in the right of the late Queene Blanch of Nauarre, first wife to King John of Arragon, and great grand-mother to Queene Catherine then reigning, and by grant made in the contract of her marriage, demaund the Infantaigo of Castile, the Duchy of Pegnafel and Lordship of Lara, with many other lands, and therewith all the somme of 420112. florins, sixe shillings eight pence of the coine of Arragon : for which matters King John d'Albret and Queene Catherine of Nauarre being at Pau, had not long since sent two Franciscan friers in Ambassage to the Kings of Castile, who were men of vnderstanding, namely frier John de Padre Warden of Corella, and frier John de Ro, warden of Tafalla, with ample instructions to obtaine them : but they brought away nothing but pleasing words and dilatory excuses. Besides this businesse, the suspicion which they had of the Earle of Lerin did greatly trouble them, who was newly come into Castile, and was much honoured and aduanced there, and it was reported to them that King Fernand had often times solicited him, to make ouer vnto him all the lands, goods, rights and actions which he had in the Realme of Nauarre, promising him treble recompence for them in Castile; the which the Earle had neuerthelesse refused, either for the naturall loue which he did beare to his country, or else that hee did better esteeme the place which hee held, almost as King of Nauarre, then to bee in Castile, where diuers others tooke place before him as it was fit: These two chiefe occasions caused the King and Queene of Nauarre to depart from Pau, whether they were goone as soone as they had newes of King Charles the eight his death, and to returne into Nauarre, where the Queene remained gouernesse assisted by frier Pedro Eras Abbot of the Monastery of Oliua : King John d'Albret went to Siuill to bee resolued by King Fernand concerning these businesse, to prevent the inconueniences which he feared, and to renew the peace, friendship and alliance betwixt those two Kingdomes : Hee was highly honoured, as hath beene said, by the Kings of Castile, and lodged with them in the fort of that magnificent city : and the more to gratifie and reuerence him the Constable, the Earle of Lerin, was forbidden to come into the castle.

King Fernand desired to get the Kingdome of Nauarre.

It is reported that King Fernand caused the King of Nauarre to bee founded whether he thought well of the exchange which hee desired to make with the Earle of Lerin of the lands which he possessed in his Kingdome, for other recompence in Castile, and that hee would giue King John d'Albret a good summe of money, if hee would consent that those lands should remaine to Castile : who notwithstanding the euill will that he did beare to the Earle of Lerin, uttered his opinion concerning it, which was, that a man should neuer exchange lands and reuenues for money. King John d'Albret got no other matter by this journey but good cheere, and diuers presents of rich plate, hangings, horse, jewels, and other such like things : wherefore hee returned into his Realme of Nauarre, leauing the matters hee went for vn-effected. The Earle of Lerin Constable of Nauarre being at that meeting reconciled to him did follow him and staid in Nauarre, certaine monthes in good quiet. We haue made mention how that Cardinall Cesar Borgia, sonne to Pope Alexander, had the Bishoprike of Pampelona in nature of perpetuall administrator thereof, hee resigned the same to the Cardinall of Saint Praxede : he laide aside likewise his Cardinals hat, and followed the warres where vnto he was more inclined then to Church matters, and was made by his father Duke of the country called in old time Flaminia, and Gonfaloner and captaine Generall of the Church, this was the Duke Valentinois.

A man should neuer exchange lands for money.

Cesar Borgia, made Duke Valentinois.

In these daies beganne the warre which in proceesse of time did subiect the state of Milan vnder the dominion of the Kings of Castile. King Lewis the twelfth, of the house of Orleans, pretending that the right of that Duchy belonged vnto him as the proper inheritance of the Duchesse Valentine his grand-mother, lawfull daughter to Duke John Galeas Viscont, and heire to her two brothers John Maria, and Philip, successefull Dukes on after an other, who died without children, hee gaue ouer all thought of the conquest of Naples, the right of the house of Aniou, and turned his forces against the Duke then reigning, Lewis Sforza vsurper of that state, whereat not onely the Potentates of Italy, hating the French dominion, were discontented, but they drew the Spanish forces to the defense of Prince Sforza, wherein chiefly King Fredरिक of Naples employed himselfe, soliciting King Fernand, and Queene Isabella by continuall messengers and letters to oppose themselves by all means against the greatnesse of the French in Italy, who if they should obtaine the Duchy of Milan, hee did assure them that they would passe on to Naples, and after that into Sicilie which they their antient right : Therefore it was concluded in the counsell of Castile, to send backe Don Goncal Hernandez the great captaine; who tooke shipping at Malaga the eight of Iuly, this yeere 1500. and led into Italy, eight thousand foot, and twelue hundred horse, where being arriued, to auoide idleness, hee went ouer with his army into the Isle of Zante in old time Zacinthium, in the Illiri an sea, to the end to aide the Venetians oppressed by the Turkes army, which had taken from them Modon, Coron, Crisse, and Pila in Morea, and the Island of Cephalonia, in which the Spanish army ioyned to the Venetian, commanded by Benedetto Pezaro, did land, and there behaued themselves so valiantly, as they brought againe that Island vnder the Venetians power, the army of the Turke Bajazet then reigning, being gonne to Constantinople. The Venetians in acknowledgement of that seruice did honour the great captaine with the title and priuiledge, of a Gentleman of their commonwealth, a thing rarely granted by them vnto strangers, who brought backe his army victorious to Messina, wayting for an occasion to employ it to the preiudice of the French.

During these stirres, the Court being at Granado, there died the Prince Don Michel heire to these Kingdomes, to the great grieft of the Kings of Castile his grand-father and grand-mother, and of King Manuell his father, having not exceeded the age of two yeeres, who lies buried in the chappell of the Kings, since then builded in the same City : By his decease the Infanta Donna Joane, wife to the Archduke Philip had right to the succession of these great Estates; and so consequently the lotte fell vpon her sonne Charles borne on Saint Mathias daie, as Queene Isabella had fore-told, the Archduke and Donna Joane his wife being called vpon that occasion, prepared themselves for their journey into Spaine. The same yeere died Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, second Duke of Infantaigo, who was buried in

21 Castile.

War of the French against Lewis Sforza.

22 Portugal.

D. Joane wife to the Archduke Philip, presumptive heire of Castile and Arragon.

Consent of Saint Francis at Guadalajara, King Manuel being a widower and without children, contracted marriage with the other sister of his deceased Queene named Donna Maria, third daughter to the King and Queene of Castile, by whom he had many children, as hath beene heretofore declared. The new Queene of Portugal departed from Granado in the monthes of September this yeere 1500. and was conducted to the King her husband by D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Archbishop of Siuill and Patriarke of Alexandria, who was afterward Cardinall, with diuers other Lords and Knights.

Castile.

23
The Moores persecuted in Spain, so cast them to Christ
their religion.

The conuersion of the Moores of the Kingdome of Granado, begunne by King Fernand and Queene Isabel, was so greatly by them desired as they would not depart out of that country till they had brought it to such passe as they intended: the Moores on the other side not being instructed, and seeing diuers contempts of religion, and infinite euill examples amongst the Prelats and in all the Ecclesiasticall Hierarchy of the Christians; they thought it a strang matter to be enforced to change their religion which they thought to be holy, and that they should so perfidiously breake the agreements and promises, vpon which they had yielded themselves to the Kings of Castile: wherefore they made all the resistance possible: Neuerthelesse the inhabitants of Las Alpuxarras, those of the cities of Almerie, Guadix and Baza, did in some sort fashion themselves to the Kings religion: but those of Benefique, Nixar, and Gujjar, ranne to armes and resolved rather to die then to bee so euill intreated: wherefore they were constrained to send an army thither, by which those townes were taken by force and cruell slaughter made of the inhabitants: namely after the fury of the fight, the Kings caused all the male children, which were of age to beare armes, to be executed by law, and as for the women they were all sold for slaues; and this was done to quench the bloody thirst of the prelats and monkes, counsellors and solicitors of that ill vnderstood conuersion. Yet for all that, after the fury was past, the King caused the children of either sex amongst those miserable people vnder eleuen yeeres of age to bee separated and baptized, giuing them their liberty as innocent of their fathers obstinacy. This rigour was so farre off from fearing or abating the courage of the rest as they thereby became more stubborn: their being no spur in the world more sharpe, then religion, to make men giue ouer and contemne life, and all other things to be beloued in this world, when they are constrained to take armes for that respect: for diuers Moores dwelling vpon the coast of Ronda, La Sierra Vermeille, and Villa longa: being brought to the last hope of being able to liue in the freedome of their consciences, and to keepe their old religion, did arme themselves, to the number of twelue thousand persons, which caused the Kings to thinke that they were entred againe into a very difficult warre, and that the conquest of the kingdome of Granado was not yet ended.

Cruel execution of the Moores at Benifiqua,
Nixar, &c.

Warren
by the perfect and Moores.

And because it behoued them to giue a present remedy to this fire which kindled, they dispatched away Don Alphonso d' Aguilar, and the Earle of Vregna, with as great forces as the present necessity could furnish: but Don Alphonso who was old, and a well experienced captaine, protested that with so small a number he could doe the King no seruice, but should receiue losse and dishonour; for the Moores were foure to one of his people: neuerthelesse being vrged to it, he marched against the enemies, who keeping themselves close together, and in strong places, would not giue the least advantage to the Christians; for whom they laide waite in the valles and streight places of the country, well knowne to themselves, to the end to surprize and defeat them, the which came to passe: for the Christians being lodged one night at the foote of Sierra Vermeille, in such a place as Don Alphonso's troupes were separated from those of the Earle of Vregna by a great botome which was betwixt them, the Moores at the shutting in of day light fell vpon Don Alphonso and his people with such fury, as they cut them all in peeces; Don Alphonso himselfe lay dead vpon the place: his sonne Don Pedro, hauing his teeth beaten out with the blow of a stone, and hurt with an arrow, with great difficulty escaped at the beginning of the fight, the Earle of Vregna beholding the slaughter of his friends, not being able to succour them by reason of the

A the botome that lay betwixt them, or else because hee would not, as diuers did thinke for euer among great Lords, and chiefe commanders vnder one Prince are enuy, lealozie, and emulation found, which cause such effects to the losse of their Prince and commonwealth.

King Fernand did greatly apprehend this losse, as also Don Alphonso's death, the which could not bee imputed to rashnesse: for he had protested that such resolute men as those Moores were, who were in their forts, ought not to haue beene assailed with such weak forces: and that they knew very well, the common prouerbe, which saith, that for to fetch a dead man out of his owne house, there must alway bee foure, how much more then did it behouue them to goe strongly accompanied against those with whom he had to doe, who were liuing men, fouldiers, and well aimed: It is reported that he was assailed, diuers Knights were of opinion to turne their backs and to flee, but he would needs make head, saying, that neuer any of his race did turne their backs to a Moore. Wherefore being kept backe by shame and dishonour hee sustained that conflict, whereas hee might haue made an excusable retreat. Now the King being in a mercurious choller, departed from Granado against these Moores, with an intent to punish them rigorously: but perceiuing that it is euermore harder to execute then to counsell, hee was content to permit them to passe ouer into Atrike, and to leaue the country: by this meanes after sundry defeats and slaughters on either side, he obtained his desire, and returned to Granado, where the marriage of D. Catherine his fourth daughter with Arthur Prince of Wales, heire to the crowne of England, was treated of. This Princesse tooke her iourney towards her husband the yeere 1501. accompanied by Don Alphonso de Fonseca, Archbishop of Saint Iames, Don Antonio de Rojas Bishop of Majorque, who was afterward Archbishop of Granado and President of the royall counsell, and D. Diego Fernandez de Cordoua Earle of Cabra: and at the same time Queene Joane, the widow of Naples, sister to King Fernand, tooke her leaue of him and withdrewd herselfe to Valencia: The Archduke Philip of Austria making preparation for his voyage into Spaine, was father of his third child, Donna Joane his wife being brought in bed of a daughter named Donna Isabella. This Princesse was wife to Christiane King of Denmarke, hee who was deposed by his vnckle Christiane King of Sweithland, taken by him, and kept in perpetuall prison: by which Christiane shee had two daughters, that is to say, Dorothy, future wife to Frederike Earle Palatin, and Elector of the Empire, and Christine, who was married to Francisco Maria Sforza, Duke of Milan the yeere 1534. who died the yeere after, shee was secondly married to Francis Duke of Lorraine, father to Duke Charles who liues in our time. After that King Christiane was deposed from his owne Kingdome, for inuading that of Sweuia: this Princesse D. Isabella, went into England, where her Aunt Donna Catherine was married, and then she died being six and twenty yeeres of age.

Whilest these things passed on in Spaine, the French King Lewis the twelfth, did luckily end his enterprise of Milan, and did shut vp into close and perpetuall prison Duke Lewis Sforza, surnamed the Moore, the Author of all the warres and ruines of Italy in his time: the which King Frederick of Naples considering, hee was moued partly by feare, least he should againe haue to doe with the victorious French armies, partly not to oblige himselfe ouer much to the Kings of Spaine, and not to giue occasion to the Spaniards insolvency to grow ouer saucie in his Kingdome: and namely because King Iohn of Arragon, and Don Fernand his sonne, had at one time called in question the late King Alphonso's his testamentary decree, whereby hee had left that Kingdome to his bastard sonne, incapable thereby (as they said) of so great an inheritance: wherefore hee beganne to haue secret intelligence with the French King, whereof King Fernand was soone aduertized: who thought, that hee was very ingratfully dealt withall and ill requited for all his cost bestowed in the recovery of that kingdome out of the French mens hands: and he imagined that hee should not transgresse either diuine or humane lawes, if he reputed that conquest to belong to him selfe; and if hee should ioyne this action to that which his father and hee pretended in the said Kingdome by reason

Nnnn 3

Particular crimes among captiues
and Iulie sister of a certaine cause the probable cause of the long warre.

Postposabile
ma, unanimity of D. Alphonso de Aguilar.

24 Sforza taken by the French.

The King of France and Spaine, divide
the Realme of Naples, and divide King Frederike.

reason of the illegitimate succession of Don Fernand bastard to Don Alphonso of Aragon: wherefore, he vising the selfe same pollicy, did practise with King Lewis, in such sort, as they parted the Kingdome of Naples betwixt themselves, and disposed King Frederike thereof, whom they condemned for light and inconstant: vnto King Fernand were assigned, Calabria, and Puglia, as countries neere to his Realme of Sicile: to the French King, Abruzzo, and Terra di Lauor, where stands the city of Naples: on condition that King Fernand should intide himselfe, as hee was wont to doe, King of Sicidion: and the French King should adde to his titles, King of Naples and of Ierusalem, cile; and the French King should be King of Naples: That these diuisions should be conquered from King Frederike, at the particular costs, and by the forces of either of these great Kings; with condition that the one should not hinder the others conquest. This agreement and diuision, made and concluded in great secret, was afterward allowed and confirmed at Rome by Pope Alexander the sixth, the two Ambassadors of France and Castile requiring it: and the French King did presently set his hand to the worke, sending a mighty army vnder the conduct of Lewis of Armignac Duke of Ne-mours, who enuaded the portion assigned to the King his Master, and tooke the cities of Naples, Capua, and other strong places, being assisted by Cesar Borgia Lansol Duke of Valentinois, who from a Cardinal was become a souldier, and murderer of his owne brother Don Francisco Borgia Lansol Duke of Gandia. The great captaine on the other side, pressing King Frederike very hardly, who being amazed to see him selfe shut in betwixt two such mighty enemies, being not prepared, nor strong enough to resist, at the last giuing place to necessity, hee resolved to make an agreement with the French King, making ouer to him all his right, and the forts which he held, on condition that he might be Duke of Aniou, and receiue in France where hee would remaine thirty thousand ducats of yeerely rent.

This agreement was concluded to Frederikes great losse; who contemned King Fernand of Castile, or at the least did distrust his friendship, perceiving that contrary to the hope which he had to be aided by him at his need, and wherein hee had entertained Prospero Colonna with great numbers of souldiers, he did shew himselfe to bee his enemy: It may be that the feare which he had of his owne souldiers did hasten him to this conclusion, on hauing no meanes to pay them their entertainment, the fauor of Spaine failing him, and fearing least they would haue plaide him the like trick, as the Switzers, defrauded of their payes, had done to the Duke of Milan, whom they deliuered to the French King their enemy. He went into France with his wife and children, his eldest excepted, and carried with him his moueables and money, receiuing of Duke Valentine a great sum of glod for his Artillery and munition which he sold to him. This King Frederike was the fifth of the house of Arragon, who had successiue held the crowne of Naples, counting from King Alphonso of Arragon, adopted by Queene Isaane, who deceassing at Naples the yeere 1458, left it to his base sonne Fernand, hee to his sonne Alphonso Alphonso, in the yeere 1458, left it to his base sonne Fernand, by whose death the Kingdome fell to Frederike his vnckle, who hauing reigned foure yeeres, made it ouer to King Lewis of France, and died in the city of Tours; leauing his eldest sonne D. Fernand of Arragon, Duke of Calabria, heire to all that he possessed, whom he had left fortified in the inexpugnable city of Tarentum, with D. Iohn de Gueuara Earle of Potentia, and other Knights, who neuertheless being beleaged and assailed by the great captaine, did yeeld, vpon condition to bee set at liberty: the which was not performed; for the great captaine to prevent the inconueniences which might happen, detained and sent them prisoners into Spaine.

About the time of the agreement betwixt these two Kings, not long before. Claude daughter to King Lewis was borne, shee was presumptiue heire to the Duchy of Britan: There was motion made of marrying her, when she should come to age with Charles of Austria, sonne to the Archduke Philip, and to the Infanta D. Isaane his wife, who pursuing there voyage into Spaine, went thorow France, and were by King Lewis his command greatly honored in all places, and namely in the city of Paris.

Among

King Frederike of Naples, gives into France.

The great captaine makes more account of keeping his wife and young wife.

A Among other poynts and articles of this Treatie of marriage, it was concluded (as the Spaniards write) betwixt the Emperour Maximilian, pretending right to the Duchie of Milan, and King Lewis, who then possessed it; that hee, by whose fault this marriage was not accomplished, should forfeit all his right in the sayd Duchie. The Archduke and the Infanta his wife being at Paris, were required by the King to do him homage, as to their Soueraigne, for the Earledome of Flanders, and other lands belonging to the Crowne: whereat the Infanta Donna Isaane was so displeased, as albeit shee were in the Kings dominions, shee did obstinately contradict it, and would neuer consent therunto. These two houses by the iust iudgement of God were appoynted to vex one another by long warre in time to come, for to scourge the world. It is an hard matter to entertaine the friendship of great men, or when it is disioyned, to set it firmly together againe.

The houses of Spayne and France, in former times vnited by holy concord, and most profitable friendship, did first of all disagee about the Earledome of Rossillon, pawned to King Lewis the eleuenth by King Lohn of Arragon for 3. hundred thousand crownes, about the restitution whereof, pernicious warres ensued, the which in some sort being composed, they were afterward renewed concerning the Kingdome of Naples, and either part did not let to search, and take all occasions lawfull, or fained, to hurt one another, and to violate and breake all agreements procured betwixt them: in such sort as there is no Region on the earth, which hath not bene troubled with their quarrels, or felt the miseries and calamities of their warres.

C The agreement made betwixt the two Kings, diuiding another mans Kingdome, did not last long: for before the yeare was ended, there arose a great quarrell betwixt the two Kings: Gouvernours and Lieutenants in the Kingdome of Naples about a bitte of ground lying betwixt Puglia and Abruzzo, called the Capitanato, the which each of them pretended for his owne, and maintained it for his part, because that otherwise they should be deprived of a taxe rayfed vpon cattell in that countrey, the which in lesse then a months space afforded more then fourescore thousand Duckets: and the French men did particularly challenge it, because this Capitanato did abound in corne, wherewith the countrey of Abruzzo and Terra di Lauor was furnished, thinking it to bee a very great losse, if they should leaue it to the Spaniards. Howsoever it was, their claime was ambiguous, each others limits being not plainly specified in the diuision, so as they fell to armes more fiercely then before, wherein for that time the French-men preuayled, and made themselves masters, not onely of the ground that was in strife, but likewise of many places of Calabria and Puglia for which there had bene no contention at all.

In the meane space, the Arch-duke Philip and Donna Isaane his wife arrived at Guipuscoa, where Don Bernard de Rojas and Sandoval, who was afterward Marquis of Denia, with great numbers of Lords and Knights of name, waited for them at Fontarabie, by whome they were conducted, and these Princes passing by Saint Adrians mount, did christen Philip de Lascan, sonne and heire to the house of Lascan. From thence by Alaua, Bureua, Burgos, Vailliodoli, Medina del campo, Segobia, and Madrid, in all which places they had sumptuous and magnificent entertainment, they came at last to the citie of Toledo, where the three Estates of the Realmes of Castile and Leon were assembled.

King Fernand and Queene Isabella departing from Seule, came likewise to Toledo, where after they had bene feasted, and entertayned with disports for the space of fifteen dayes, Philip of Austria and Donna Isaane were sworne and acknowledged Princes of the Asturias, and eldest heires to the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon, in the right of Donna Isaane: This was done in the presence of King Fernand and Queene Isabella, the Primate F. Friar Francis Ximenes, Arch-bishoppe of the same citie, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Arch-bishoppe of Seule, Cardinal of Saint Sabine, and Patriarke of Alexandria, the Bishops of Calaoorra, Palence, Osmia, Cordoua, Salamanca, Iuen, Cité Rodrigo, Malaga, Mondognedo, and other Prelates: of Bernardin de Velasco Constable of Castile, the Dukes of Infantazgo, Alua, Bejar, Albuquerque, and the Marquis of Villena, the

Earles

Homage for Flanders and Artois refused to the French
King.

25 Arriuall of the Archduke & D. Isaane his wife in Castile.

Ceremonies at the swearing
to the Prince
Philip & Isaane

Earles of Oropeſa, Miranda, and Benalcaſar, Crugna, Siruella, Ribadeo, Fuenſalida, Ajamonte, and others, with the Procurators, and Commiſſioners of all the cities and provinces of Spaine, which haue place in ſuch aſſemblies. This oath being made for Caſtile, King Fernand was deſirous to haue the like done for the Kingdome of Arragon and dependancies thereof; ſo he iourneyed towards Sarragoſſa, leauing the Queene with the Princes at Toledo, who went to paſſe away the hotte time of Iuly and Auguſt at Ocaña, recreating themſelues in the pleaſant foreſt of Aranjues neere to the riuer Tayo: and from thence they departed to Sarragoſſa, where by the Eſtates they were like-wiſe declared and ſworne Princes of Girone, heires to Arragon, Valence, Catalognia, Sicill, and other Countries belonging to that Crowne. The Queene in the meane time ſtaying at Toledo, remooued to Madrid, where ſhe beganne to be euill diſpoſed of her perſon, which cauſed king Fernand to haſten his returne to her, the Princes deſiring to follow him, did ſeparat themſelues, becauſe the Princeſſe was with child, wherefore ſhee remayned at Sarragoſſa, and the Prince went to Madrid. Theſe matters fell out, the yere 1502. wherein dyed the Cardinal Diego Hurtado of Mendoza in the ſame citie of Madrid. Don Iohn of Eſtuniga, who had bene Maſter of Alcantara, and afterward was Cardinal ſucceeded him in the Arch-biſhoppricke of Siuill. The Marquis of Denja dyed like-wiſe. The precedent yere, about the time that the Princeſſe Catherine departed into England, Don Iohn d Arias del Villar dyed, who was Preſident of Vailladolid, and Biſhop of Segobia, in whoſe place ſucceeded Doctor Iohn de Medina, Biſhop of Carthageña. There dyed alſo D. Lewis de la Cerda, fiſt Duke of Medina Celi, ſonne to Earle Giſton. The Prince of Wales, huſband to the Infanta Catherine, died likewiſe this yere; and the Citie of Gibraltar was re-uni- to the Crowne, and another perfection was raiſed againſt the Moores.

Before the Kings of Caſtile departed from Siuill to come to Toledo, they had ſent an Ambaſſadour to the Souldan of Egypt, who was as Emperour of Arabia, acknowledged then for Soueraigne ouer all the Kings of Affricke, who had bene informed by the Kings of Tremellen, Fez, Bugie, Tunis and others, of diuers rigors and inhumanities exerciſed vpon the Moores and Iewes dwelling in Spaine, which that Prince did greatly reſent. The Ambaſſadour ſent thither was called Peter Martyr Angleria of Milan, Deane of Granada, a learned and well-experienced perſon, vnto whom were letters of credite and inſtructions giuen, how to appeale the Souldan, and to perſwade him otherwiſe, then he had bene before informed: Wherefore he went by Venice, where the Seigneurie provided him of a ſhippe to carrie him to Alexandria: there he found diuers Chriſtian Merchants, with a Conſul, who was a Cattelan by nation, by whom hee was well enter- rayned. The Warden of the Monafterie of mount Sion beeing aduertized, ſome few dayes before of his coming, ſent him word, that he would meete him at Cairo: therefore Peter Martyr ſent certaine Friars before to Cairo, whom he had brought with him, for to receiue that Friar Warden: and to obtaine a ſafe-conduſt for his owne perſon and trayne from the Souldan, to the end to declare his Ambaſſie vnto him. The father Warden and his Friars beeing arriued at Cayro found a Truch-man or Interpreter there who was a Spaniard borne at Momblanc in the Realme of Valencia, vnto whom hauing giuen notice of the Ambaſſadors arriual at Alexandria, and demanded the ſafe-conduſt, the Souldan granted it, and ſent word to the Gouernor of Alexandria, whom the ſaid Admirall, to cauſe him to be conduſted in ſafetie. But the Monkes hauing vnderſtood by their conferences with the Truchman, how ſiniſterly the Souldan was poſſeſſed againſt the Kings of Caſtil, by the reports of the Moores of Granada, and the Iewes which were expelled out of Spaine, they did aduertize him to be well aduiſed what he did, and to foreſee the danger he had put himſelfe in, by committing to the preſence of that angry Prince, whoſe anſwer, perhaps might be death: but the Ambaſſador was no whit amazed therat: but ſayd, that it would be a great happineſſe for him to die in ſo honourable a cauſe: ſo he rooke his iourney, going againſt the ſtream of the riuer Nilus, accompanied by diuers Mameluke ſouldiers, which were Chriſtians renied, or children of bought Chriſtians, in whoſe hands lay the gouernment of al the affairs of Egypt, and namely, out of their bands was the Souldan choſen.

Being

A Being come to Caire, he was longed in the ſayd Truchmans houſe, and then the day following, he was ledde to the Caſtle to the Souldans pallace, and paſſing thorough diuers galleries full of Mamelukes, he was brought into an hall where the Souldan taried for his coming: Hee found him ſitting vpon a bed of State, like vnto women, made in faſhion of an altar, clothed in a gowne of ſcarlet with large ſleeues ſurred with Marſins, and vpon his head a rich Turbant, with two hornes after a ſtrange faſhion, and a ſword neere vnto him, being compaſſed about with diuers Gouernours of Provinces, which they called Admirals. Before this Emperour, the Ambaſſador preſented himſelfe, appa- relled in a coate of blacke ſattin, and a gowne of purple veluet, kneeling vpon one knee, the Monkes and other Chriſtians which followed him, kneeled on both their knees and hands, as though they would haue kiſſed the earth, then riſing vp, and going on neerer by two and two paces, they made three ſuch reuerences: then ſtanding vpon their ſeete, the Ambaſſadour went a little forwarder neere to the Prince, and hauing made a fourth reuerence, he ſtood vp, and preſented the Kings of Caſtils letters of credit to the Truch- man, the which beeing opened and read with diuers ceremonies, the Souldan told him, that hee was welcome. Then the Ambaſſadour ſaid a great reuerence, told him, the Kings his Lords and Maſters had ſent him thither to ſalute and viſit him in their name, and to offer him whatſoever was in their power, excepting that which belonged to Chriſtian Religion, and that he had commandement and inſtruction to communicate diuers buſineſſes with him, Wherefore he beſought him to be pleaſed to giue him audience in a more priuate manner: the Souldan answered him, that he was contented to do ſo, and told him, that if in the meane time he wanted any thing, he ſhould ſpeake, and that whatſoever he demanded ſhould be giuen: The Ambaſſadour hauing againe thanked him, and ſayd, that he could deſire no more fauour and courteſie then hee had already receiued, then tooke his leaue and returned to his lodging; whether the Souldan ſent him diuers preſents of meates.

Three dayes after, the Ambaſſadour accompanied by the Truch-man, was brought againe to the Pallace early in the morning, before the Ambaſſadors of the Kings of Affricke and the Moores were riſen, and finding the Souldan at leiſure, he gaue him ſecret audience, where he answered vey pertinently to all the Souldans demands, and did highly content him, and this conference betwixt them laſted till two of the clocke in the alter-noone, all the contrarie Ambaſſadours beeing come to Court, in hope to ſee the Spaniſh diſgraced: but they were deceyued, for they beheld him returne to his houſe vey honourably accompanied. Afterward, the Moorish Ambaſſadours in two ſeueral audiences, preſſing and accusing the Kings of Caſtile, Peter Martyr did ſo well diſguiſe and handle the matter, as he perſwaded the Souldan, that whatſoever his aduerſaries had ſaid, was but meere vntruths: Wherefore hee beeing ſent backe againe the ſame time, the Truchman procured a fourth audience, wherein the Ambaſſador of Caſtile being heard almoſt an whole day, did in ſuch manner content and ſatiſfie the Souldan, as hee procured his fauour and friendſhip for his King and Queene. And as hee was going footth of the Souldans preſence, two Admirals clothed him with a gowne of Damask ſurred with very rich Ermines, (it was in the moneth of Februarie) for which hauing giuen thanks, and made his vſual reuerences, hee returned with his trayne. In this manner are the faults of great men excuſed by great men. Before *Peter Martyr*s departure, he feaſted and banqueted the Admirals and chiefeſt Mamelukes, ſo as they were highly contented with him: and departing from Cayro, he went to viſit the notable places of Egypt and Syria: of which voyage and ambaffage hee wrote a diſcourſe at his returne. This is hee which wrote an hſtorie of the Indies by Decades in Latin, which he entitled, The Ocean, vnto the yere 1526. He returned into Spaine with honour, and gaue good account to the Catholicke Kings of his Legation.

The nauigations to the Indies were this yere very common, diuers particular perſons, tickled with a deſire of gaine, vndertaking thoſe dangerous voyages at their owne coſts, by the Kings permiſſion notwithstanding. Rodrigo de Baſſida was one of thoſe aduenturers, who ſet forth two Caruels at his owne coſts, and Iohn de *Leſelma*s and others, carrying with him Iohn de la Coſa, an excellent Mariner borne in Saint Mary port,

Admirals Gouernours of Provinces.

26
The king of Caſtile ſends an Ambaſſador to the Grand Caire.
Peter Martyr
of Angleria, Ambaſſador.

Mamelukes in Egypt.

27 Voyages of di-uers particular perſons to the Indies.

port, who departing from Cales, sayled neere to Cape de Vela, and ranne one hundred A three-score and tenne leagues vpon the coast from that Capeto the Gulph of Vraha, and Darian, in which are found Caribana, Zenu, Carthagen, Zamba, and S. Marth, places inhabited by people called Caribes, who feed on mans flesh, without law or naturall honestie, being armed with darts and poysoned arrowes. Rodrigo de Bastida being afterwards come to the cittie of Domingo, did lose his Caruels there, and was committed to prison by the Commander Francisco de Boudilla, Gouvernor of the Iland of Hispaniola, laying to his charge, that he had trafficked with the Indians for gold, defrauding the king of his right: wherefore he sent him prisoner into Spaine: but the kings let him at libertie, knowing that this voyage was for the publike good, and gave him 200. Duckets of rent. Nicholas d'Onando, Commander of Larez, of the Order of Alcantara, a valiant Knight, did by the kings commandement, set sayle, with thirty shippes, and a great company of souldiers, to succed the Commander Boudilla, taking along Rowland Ximenes in his company, the enemy and accusers of the breethren Columbus, did embarke himselfe in the same vessell, which had brought the new Gouvernour, whereof Antonio de Torres was Captaine, hauing with them more then an hundred thousand Duckets weight of gold, and among others, a graine of pure gold to present vnto the Queene, weighing 3. thousand, three hundred Castillans: but their hap was such, as both they and their wealth perished by sea: the Admirall Columbus, and his brother being by that meanes reuenged of the great rigour that Boudilla had vsed towards them, by sending them from the Indies in yrons into Spayne, and of Rowland Ximenes ingratitude and rebellion, with whom were drowned more then three hundred men, so as of those thirty ships, hardly fixe escaped. Nicholas d'Onando remained in his gouernement of the Iland of Hispaniola, the space of fixe yeares, all matters succeeding well and prosperously with him, by reason of his humanity and gentleness: he conquered the Prouinces of Higney, Zauana, Guaycarima, he pacified that of Xaragua, and vning all his authoritie with such courtisie and modestie, he got honour and wealth for himselfe and the Kings his masters, vnto whom hee sent great treasures, in recompence whereof he was made great Commander of Alcantara. Then was the Admirall Columbus permitted to go to sea, who departed with foure Caruels set forth at the Kings cost, with an hundred, three score and ten saylers: but being come to the mouth of the riuer Ogman in the Iland of Hispaniola, the Gouvernour Nicholas d'Onando would not suffer him to come into the city of S. Domingo: wherefore he sayled to the port Escondido or hidden, and after came to the riuer and cape of Figueres: from whence he ran more then three hundred and seuentie leagues along the Southerne coast, desirous to find a passage beyond the Equinoctiall, he came to a place called Nombre de Dios, and from thence returned to Cuba, and forth-with passed to Iamaica where he lost two Caruels.

In this Iland the Admirall had many crosses, for most of his people fell sicke there to the death, then they mutined, and would haue slaine one another, Francisco de Porras, Treasurer of his naue being author of that sedition: and besides that, the Indians refused to giue him victuals, which did greatly trouble him: for this he found a present remedie, and being a good Astronomer, he knew that the day following, there would be a great Eclipse of the Moone, he told the idolatrous Indians, that if they gaue him not victuals, they should all of them die of the plague, and for a true token thereof, they should the morrow after see the Moone appeare all bloudie, the which by reason of the Eclipse, became duskie and spotted: the Indians were to greatly amazed thereat, as they besought the Admirall to pardon them, and to reconcile them to the Moone, and brought him more victuals: then he had need of. Hauing remained a yeare in Iamaica, the Admirall Columbus returned into Spayne, from whence he neuer afterwards did stirre: this was his fourth and last voyage to the Indies.

The same course held king Manuel in his nauigation to the East Indies, wherein hee spared no cost: for hauing had ample information of the whole voyage of Calicut by D. Vasco de Gama: he had sent thither in the yeare 1500. a Naue of twelue Carauels, vnder the command of Captaine Pero Aluarez Cabralde, a Gentleman of Portugal, followed by other Gentlemen manned with fiftene hundred souldiers, carrying along with him

Nicholas d'Onando Gouvernour of the Iland.

The Gouvernour Boudilla drew neere, with three hundred Spaniards.

Columbus his fourth and last voyage to the Indies.

Columbus foretold an Eclipse of the Moone to the Indians to scare them.

28 Portugal.

A five Friars, and good store of merchandize, to exchange for spices, and other things which the East produceth, all of it according to the order and appointment of Don Vasco de Gama.

These Caruels hauing sayled in view of the Ilands of the Canaries, and arrived at S. James, as they discouered the Isle of Bresill, there appeared to them a Comet with long and fearefull beames towards the East: continuing their voyage, there arose so great and strange a tempest, as by day the water of the sea seemed as blacke as pitch, and in the night like to fire, which swallowed foure of those shippes, the rest of the Navy sayling on in great danger, came in sight of Cape Double, and from thence arrived at Molambique, then sayling towards Melinde, and beyond that to Anjauina, they came at last within a league of Calicut: from whence he beganne to contract with the King of the same countie: but afterwards they fell at odds, which caused losse to either of them. Vpon this occasion, Pero Aluarez Cabralde, went into the land of Malabar, belonging to the King of Cochim, with whom he agreed, and found meanes to lade his ships with spices: and so returning homewards, he touched at the cape of Good hope, and from thence to Lisbon, where he arrived in Iuly, in the yeare 1501. with fixe Carauels of twelue, that hee carried out with him, hauing bene in that voyage neere sixteen moneths.

Before his returne John de la Nueva Gallego, departed from Lisbon with three shippes and a Caruell for the selfe same voyage of Calicut: but King Manuel conceyuing in his mind to find a way to the Isles of Moluccos, and those countie where the spices grow, he sent the same yeare 1501. a skillfull mariner called Americus Vesputius a Florentine, with foure Carauels, who passed not much farther then Saint Augustines Cape, and without taking notice of the great riuer of fluer, or Rio de Plara, he returned home.

The yeare 1502. Don Vasco de Gama, Admirall of Portugall, was againe sent by the King into the East, with thirteenth shippes, and three Caruels, manned with great numbers of Gentlemen and souldiers, with Merchandizes, munitions and victuals, and all other things necessarie for so long and painefull a voyages and within few dayes after, hee sent other five shippes to follow Don Vasco, commanded by Stephano Gama. By these were new lands discouered, to the great profit and commodity of the nations of Europe. D This same yeare King Manuel had by his wife Queene Mary, a sonne called Iohn, who succeeded him in the Kingdome, the day of whose birth was rainy, and such thunder and lightning on the day of his christening, as the Royall pallace was in danger of being burned.

And the yeare following 1503. his daughter the Infanta Isabella was born, who came to be Emperesse of Germany, and was mother to king Philip the second deceased. Don Vasco being returned from his luckie and prosperous voyage, king Manuel gaue no intermission to that most profitable and honorable nauigation: but the Portugals hauing raised warre in the East betwixt the Kings of Calicut and Cochim, tooke the King of Cochins part, being by him receyued and welcommed into his countie and hauens: so as hee of Calicut did in short time know, that he had greatly erred in wronging his guests.

E The yeare 1504. King Manuel hauing notice of this warre, was displeased therewith, and set forth a Navy of twelue great shippes, Don Lopes Suares de Meres being Admirall of the same, who arrived in safetie at Cochim, by means whereof they did greatly encrease the renowne of the Portugals, and established the trafficke, purchasing their King friends, not onely among those Easterne people, but also tributarie Princes for his seruants. These conquests were pursued by Ferdinand of Almeida, and Aphonso of Albuquerque, and other vertuous and valiant Captaines, which haue continued those voyages since, and by means thereof haue carried some knowledge of the name of Iesus Christ to those barbarous and vnbeleueing people.

F The Court of Castile lying at Alcalá de Henares, the yeare 1503. the Princeesse D. Isabe was there brought in bed of a sonne, who was named Don Ferdinand, who was king of Hongarie and Bohemia, and at the last Emperour. In Alcalá dyed Don Gutierre de Cardena, great Commander of Leon, a most faithfull seruant to the Kings, who would haue giuen the great Commanderie to John Lopes of Leárraga their Treasurer, but he refused it, saying, that he had already too much wealth: hee likewise refused the place 1501.

Voyage of John de la Nueva a Portuguese.

An. 1502. Don Vasco de Gama his second voyage.

Birth of prince John of Portugal.

An. 1503. Birth of Infanta Isabella.

An. 1504. Voyage of Lopes Suares de Meres.

29 Castile.

place of generall Superintendent of the Kings revenues, and left behind him the report A of a loyall, faithfull, and iust man in all his affairs: he was borne in the towne of Ognate.

The affaires of Italy not succeeding prosperously for the Kings of Spaine, they began to resolute vpon somewhat that might bee hurtfull to the French: The great Captaine kept himselfe in Barletta, being constrained to retire himselfe thither, and wanting all necessarie things: so as the French foraged the countrey at their owne pleasure: but at the last hauing new supplies, as well from Sicill, (from whence Hugo de Cardona entred into Calabria, with certaine companies of Spaniards, which had serued the Duke Valentinois, when hee warred vpon the Vrsins, with intent to haue made himselfe Lord of Romagnia) as also from Spaine, from whence the King sent Don Manuel de Bonarides B with certaine numbers of horse and foote: with which troupes Antonio de Leus did first

Antonio de Leus
his first posssessione Italy.

passed into Italy, who was a famous Captaine in the warres of Lombardy and Piedmont, betwixt France and Spaine, and likewise after that other Spanish companies arriued vnder the conduct of Don Pedro Puerto Carrero, who dying in Italy, hee left his men vnder the command of Ferdinand of Andrada, who hauing receyued by the gulph of Venice some Germanes, which had bene leauied by him, hee employed these forces in such sort, being sometimes diuided, and sometimes vnited, as hee soone restored all things, and suppressed the enemy by the winning of many victories, Spayne hauing alwaies after that time the advantage. Yet they had treated an accord betwixt the two Kings, Lewis and Ferdinand, and had sent Ambassadors to that end, but without any effect: vntill that C the passage and the returne of the Arch-duke Philip Prince of Spayne, into Flanders,

Prince Philip
in Flanders.

gave some greater hope of an agreement. This Prince passing thorough France in his returne, as he had done going, was honorably receiued in all places, especially at Blois, whereas King Lewis attended him, who, to vse the Arch-duke with greater courtship, and to assure him the more, had sent certaine French Noblemen into Flanders for hostages, vntill he were arriued, the which the Arch-duke caused to returne, being loath to yeld vnto the King, in demonstrations of friendship and ceremonies. Being at Blois, they treated an accord betwixt the French King and him of Spaine, the Arch-duke Philip hauing an ample Commission, with this onely restraint, that hee should communicate all things to the Ambassadors of Castile, which were sent expresse with him, and shold D gouerne himselfe by their counsell.

Matters being debated, in the end they were concluded, by the confirmation of a future marriage betwixt the Ladie Claude of France, the Kings eldest daughter, and Don Charles of Austria, sonne and heire to great Estates which fell to the house of Austria: capitulating, that the Lands which were in question in the Realme of Naples, should be left in deposito, in the Arch-dukes hands, and the future spouses should from that time in-tittle themselves Kings of Naples, and Dukes of Calabria. That the French king should enjoy that portion which did belong vnto him in the sayd Realme, and appoint whome he pleased, to gouerne it in the names of the Princes Charles and Claude, and that the ma-riage being consummated, he should giue it in dowrie with his daughter. E

This peace was solemnely sworn in the Church at Blois, but yet it procured of no effect: for notwithstanding that the Arch-duke gave speedie aduice vnto the Kings Don Fernand and Donna Isabella, yet they did not forbear to make warre in the Realme of Naples, whence they had daily intelligence that their great Captaine prospered: wherefore hee being required by the Duke of Nemours, Lieutenant for the French King, to stay all acts of hostilitie, he answered, that hee had no such commandement from the King Don Fernand his master, but continuing to make warre, as well in Calabria, as in other parts of the Realme, the French had alwaies the worst, hauing had two Armies defeated in lesse then eight dayes, one in Calabria, led by the Lord of Aubigny, who was then taken, with many other Noblemen: the other at Cirignole, whereas Lewis of Ar-maignac Duke of Nemours, their Generall, was slaine with many French. By means of which victories the great Captaine tooke Naples, Capua, Auerlo and Melfi, by composition, and in the end the two castles of Naples by mynes and other practises inuented by Peter of Nauarre: so as the French had nothing but Guyette, and some other small places remayning in the Realme of Naples.

The

Treaty of peace betwixt
France and Spaine.

A The kings of Castille being aduertised of these things, they little regarded the accord made by the Archduke their sonne in law, alledging for excuse, that he had exceeded his charge, and had not gouerned himselfe by the aduice of the ambassadors which went in his company: Yet they sent embassadours into France, to treat a new peace, in a more honest forme than before, propounding that the realme should be restored to king Frederic: But king Lewis holding them but moderies, and that the kings of Spaine had no wills to dispossesse themselves, seeing that all things succeeded wishfully for them, he sent backe their ambassadors without any other answer.

1504 Excesses of the Catholicke kings for not maintaining of the peace.

30 Before that the Court of Castille came from Alcalá, D. John Chacon, gouernor of B the frontire of Murcia, died. From Alcalá the queene came to Madrid, and from thence to Segobia, where she had news of the death of Pope Alexander by poison which had bin prepared for certaine cardinals, by the duke of Valentinois, his sonne, she which he also dranke, through the negligence of the cup-bearer, or butler, who tooke one bottle for another. Cardinall Francisco Theobaldus Piccolomini of Siena, succeeded him, who was called Pius the third; but hauing held the See but six and twelue dayes, there was chosen Pope Julian of Rouere, bishop of Alba, and then of Ostia, cardinall of S. Peter ad uincula, whom they named Iulio the second. In these elections of Popes, which are made through the fauour of the princes and great monarches of Christendome, for the interest of their temporall estates, the citie of Rome was in great feare and ielousie, that the great captaine would approach with his victorious armie on the one side, and on the other the lord of Tremouille being sent into Italie, by the French king, with great forces, and assisted by Florentines, Siennois, the duke of Ferrara, and the marquisse of Mantoua, either of them to fauour the cardinals of their faction, and to make a Pope by force, to the prejudice of the citie, and of the whole territorie. This yeare there were sixteene solits of Moores Routed the coasts of Valencia; who landing, were vnto the riuier Xucar, assailed the towne of Cullera, carried away seuentie prisoners, and committed other spoils. The duke of Valentinois, at his fathers death, was so ill with this drinke which he had taken, as he was constrained to be a neuter; as he had carried himselfe in the warres betwixt France and Spaine, yet adhering more to the great captain, for the designe which they both had D to invade Tuscanie, when as the warres of Naples should be ended. Hauing entertained himselfe in fauour with Pope Iulio, at his aduancement, they fell afterwards to quarrell, for certaine places in Romania, held by the duke of Valentinois, which the Pope would haue, so as the duke was staied at Ostia, meaning to imbarke, & to go to Specie, and from thence by Ferrara to Imola. Afterwards hauing in some sort satisfied the Popes desire, and being set at libertie, he retired to Naples, hauing a passport from the great captain, thinking to beverie safe there: whereas propounding many great enterprises, euen vpon Tuscanie, and beginning to make preparation to put his designe in execution, the great captain staied him prisoner, saying that it was by the commandement of the king D. Ferdinand, to whom he ought more reuerence than to the passport he had giuen him, and so he sent him E into Spaine, where he was lodged in the castle of Medina del Campo, called la Mote. By this means the great captain kept this turbulent man from troubling the affaires of Ita-lie any more. The armie led by the lord of Tremouille, being come into the realme of Naples, did nothing but increase the glorie and reputation of the great captain, who by a memorable victorie gotten at the riuier of Garillan, did there settle the Spaniards command: for soone Gajete, which was the onely hope of the French, yielded, vpon condition, that all prisoners should be deliuered, and that the French might retire safely into France, who being naked, and vnprovided of all things, perished in a manner all by the way of hunger, cold, and other extremities. At the same time king Lewis hauing appointed two armies to invade Spaine, one by Guipuscoa, the other by Catalonia, that which F marcht towards Fontarabie, where of the lord of Albrét had the charge, could neuer come together; the other led by the marshall of Rieux, entred by the countrey of Rossillon, and besieged Sausses, but not being able to take it, he was forced to retire, both for that he fell sicke, as also for that D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alua, Generall of the Spanish armie which was raised at Perpignan, began to march to raise the siege, king Ferdinand being also come in person into Catalonia, to giue order for the affaires of this warre, the

Death of Pope
Alexander the first.

Signall betwixt Pope Julio and the duke of Valentinois.

Duke of Valentinois sent prisoner into Spaine by D.
Gonsalo.

Retreat of the French out of the realme of Naples, with miserable.

Two armies of French in Spain

1504

which afterwards had some intermission, by a truce of five monethes, which was made at the instance of king Frederic, who was not out of hope to returne into his realme: Which conceit was grounded vpon the demonstrations of fauours, were made him both by France and Spaine; which was but a vaine content, and a comfort to him in his miserable estate. This truce was afterwards continued for three yeares, both by sea and land, with free trafficke for all their subjects, except the French in the realme of Naples. For the great seruices which D. Gonzalo Fernandez sumamed the Great Captaine, had done to the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Isabella, in this warre, he obtained the duchie of Terra noua, and of Sicilia, besides the duchie of S. Ange, which king Frederic had giuen him, when as he had captured him, and the Constablership of the realme of Naples: Pedro Nauarro had also for his good seruices, and in recompence of his great industrie during the warre, the countie of Albeto, in the same realme of Naples, neere vnto Aquin. This man from a small condition came to this greatnesse by his vertues: for his beginning being scarce knowne, he first of all went to sea, and was a mariner, after which he was a footman to the cardinall D. John of Arragon, then a souldier, and in the end a famous captaine, and an earle. After the swearing of the said truce, there was a great earthquake throughout all Spaine, so the great terrour and amazement of all men, by the which many houses, churches, forts, and other buildings, were shaken and ruined.

At that time, they say, the testament of the deceased king Henrie the fourth, was found by the diligence of Hernando Gomes of Herrera of Madrid, who having notice from the curat of S. Croix, of the same towne, that this testament was in the towne of Almeyda in Portugal, whither he had transported it with other writings of importance, he aduertised the queene, and by her commission went to Almeyda, with the curat, found these writings, and brought them away: In recompence whereof, the king made the bachelor Hernand, Alcaide, or Prouost of the iustice of his house and court. The queene did not for this testament, as it is probable, for she fell extremely sicke, and after foure monethes languishing died, at Medina del Campo, in the yeare 1504, being 53 yeares old, and seven monethes, and the thirtieth yeare of her raigne. A princeesse adorned with great vertues, which may couer some excesse of ambition, & her other imperfections: she was zealous in religion, chaste, liberall, and courteous: Her bodie was transported to the citie of Granada, and remained long there in the Alhambra, in the habit of a Franciscane Friar, as she had ordained: And after the decease of her husband, which was twelue yeares after, it was layed with his, in the royall chappell of that citie. Thare ye died D. Magdalena, Infanta of Nauarre, in the same towne of Medina del Campo, being daughter to the king D. John of Albret and Katherine, then raigning. D. Henrie Henriques, vncle to king Ferdinand, and his lord steward, and D. Pedro of Eshuniga, cardinall, and Archbishop of Seuille, did also leaue this world: which Archbishopricke was giuen to Diego of Deza, borne at Toro, being then bishop of Palence, a doctor in Diuinitie, and afterwards Inquisitor general, Confessor to the king, and founder of the colledge of S. Thomas of Aquin, at Seuille.

D. Gonzalo Fernandez made duke of Terra noua and Sicilia.
Pedro Nauarro made earle of Albeto: but being young.

Earthquake in Spaine.

Death of the Q. Isabella.

Death of the Q. Isabella in a Friars weed.

THE

THE 25 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents of the 25 Booke.

- 1 Voyage of John Cosa, and of Fernando Cortez, to the Indies.
- 2 Expedition of Affricke by the Castilians, and the taking of the great port of Mexicalibir.
- 3 Peace betwixt Castille and France, and treaties of marriage.
- 4 The Archduke Philip of Austria and D. Ioane his wife, part out of Flanders, to returne into Castille, and are stayed in England.
- 5 Death of Christofer Columbus. His posteritie.
- 6 D. Philip and D. Ioane his wife, kings of Castille. Retreat of king Ferdinand into Arragon.
- 7 Voyage of king Ferdinand into Italie. Enterview of king Lewis and king Ferdinand at Savonne.
- 8 The duke Valentin being a prisoner in Castille, escapes into Nauarre.
- 9 Affaires of Nauarre. Disposition of the king D. John of Albret. Contentions betwixt him and the queene his wife, for the factions of Nauarre.
- 10 Raignesse of the earle of Lerin, Constable of Nauarre. Sentence and condemnation against him, warre betwixt the king and the earle. Death of duke Valentin.
- 11 Exploits of Pedro Nauarro in Affricke, in fauour of the Portugals.
- 12 Raignesse of the marquesse of Priego punished by the king D. Ferdinand, Regent in Castille.
- 13 Sedition at Lisbon for religion. The mutines punished.
- 14 Search of the firme land at the Indies by Alphonso Hojeda, and others.
- 15 League betwixt the Pope, the Emperour Maximilian, king Ferdinand, and Lewis 12, the French king against the Venetians.
- 16 Discourie of the firme land at the Indies. Forts built there.
- 17 Expedition of Cardinall Francis Ximenes into Affricke. The taking of the citie of Oran.
- 18 Warre against the Venetians.
- 19 Praiise of Pope Iulio against the French. Schisme in the Church of Rome. Counsell demanded by the French king.
- 20 Taking of Bugia, and other exploits in Affricke, by Pedro Nauarro. Death of D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo.
- 21 Behaviour of the Spaniards at the West Indies. Seditions among them.
- 22 Progresse of the warre of Italie, made by the French against the Pope. Counsell of Pisa, and a counter Counsell at Rome, at S. Iohn de Latran.
- 23 Warre betwixt France and Spaine. A league betwixt the Pope, king Ferdinand, and the Venetians.
- 24 Continuance of this warre by the Pope against the French. Exploits of Gaston earle of Foix, duke of Nemours.

- 25 Pursuit of the king and queene of Nauarre in Castille, to be restored to much of their patri. G monie in that realme but without effect.
- 26 Measures used by the Pope and king Ferdinand, to dispossesse the king D. Iohn of Albret, and the queene D. Katherine his wife, of the realme of Nauarre.
- 27 Measures used by the Emperor Maximilian, to abandon the French. Battell of Rauenna.
- 28 Confines againe betwixt the French king and his realme. Retreat of king Iohn of Albret into France. Invasion of the realme by the Castilians. Pamplona taken by the dukes of Alva.
- 29 Exploits of Vasco Nugnes of Bilbao, and other Spaniards, at the Indies.

D. Philip I. and D. Ioane, 21 Kings of Castille, and 42. of Leon.

1504

He Castilians and Leonis, for want of their Queene proprietarie, D. Isabella, began to accustomethemselues to theyoke of German princes, hauing presently set vp in Castille the Armes of the Archduke Philip of Austria, and of D. Ioane, heire of these realmes in her mothers right; and D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alba, advanced these banners in their name: yet the king D. Ferdinand continued lawfull gouernour vntill the coming of these princes, who had aduertisement sent them presently into Flaunders of the Queenes death. The Archduke Philip was then six and twentie yeares old, faire of face, well proportioned of his members, of a good grace, mild and courteous in speech, of a great spirit, active, quicke, and learned: by reason whereof being in him more then ordinarie, hee was sumamed the Great. Whilest that he made preparation to come and take possession of this great inheritance, king Ferdinand, after the royall and stately obsequies of the deceased Queene, and the bodie transported to Granado with a great traine, he retired himselfe to the monastirie of Mejorada, and from thence hee past to Toro, being accompanied by D. Francis Ximenes, Archbishop of Toledo, Diego de Deza, Archbishop of Seuille, and others of great qualitie and learning, to conferre about the execution of the deceased Queenes will.

Voyage of Iohn
de Costa.

In the meane time Iohn de Costa, a good sea-man, rigged forth foure Carauels, out of port S. Maria, at his owne charge, and by Iohn de Ledesma of Seuille, and others, desirous to enrich themselues, vnder taking the conquest of that countrey at the Indies, which was held by the Caribes: Whereupon setting sayle he came and toucht at a place called Carthagena, there being joynd vnto him captaine Lewis Guerres who beginning to make warre together, they tooke sixe hundred of these Barbarians in the island of Codigo: then coasting along the shore, desirous to barter wares, and to buy gold, they entred into Vraba, where they found some little gold in the sands and from thence they returned into the island of Hispaniola, and the citie of S. Domingo, laden with men, but scant of victuals, and of all other things, especially of gold, whereof they were exceeding greedie.

Fernando Cortez
first voyage to the Indies.

The same yeare 1504, there went vnto the Indies Fernand Cortez, borne at Medellin in Estremadura, one of the most famous men that hath bene in these conquests vnto our dayes. He arriued at S. Domingo in a ship belonging to Alphonso Quintero of Palos of Moguer, where he was well entertained by the Secretarie Medine, the gouernour being then absent, and afterwards by the gouernor Nicholas d. Ovando himselfe, being returned. This was he which conquered Noua Hispania. Of the manners of the Indians, their idolatries, and damnable superstitions, the curious may be more amply informed by the particular histories of the Indies, written by Peter Martyr of Angleria, Goncal Fernandes of Ouidedo, Francisco Lopes of Gomara, and others.

1505

During king Ferdinands gouernment in Castille, the Estate began to be troubled by some noblemen, who thought that queen Isabel being dead, they might lawfully tyrannise: but the king hauing called the Estates to Toro, in the yeare 1505, he caused a new oath to be taken to the queene D. Ioane his daughter, and to her husband, as kings of Castille, Leon, Granado,

A Granado, &c. and by his wisdome pacified those tumults and disorders which were likely to grow: Which yeare, for many reasons, the Chauncerie which was at Cité Royall, was transported to Granado, where since it hath remained. And by the persuation of D. Francisco Ximenes, Archbishop of Toledo, and Primate of Spaine, there was an expedition attempted against the Moores of Africke, nothing concurring with the ambassage which had bene sent to Caire, whereof mention hath bene made.

1505
Chauncerie
transported to Cité Royall
to Granado.

The Primate had had sundrie discourses with a Venetian, called Ieronimo Vianello, an industrious man, and knowing the countrey of Africke. His designe was vpon the citie of Oran, well peopled, free, hauing priuat lawes, rich, a common haue for all nations trafficking into Barbarie, who entertained an ordinarie garrison for the safetie of their marchandise, and payed some tribute to the king of Tremessen, for protection; and they say, that it contained about 6000 families. This citie is seated vpon the descent of a high hill, enuironed about with wals and towers: the sea is within a stones cast on the one side, and on the other side they haue pleasant gardens, & store of fountains. The countrey men call this citie Madaura, Aera, Auran, Guhara, all names signifying a place hanging, and exposed to the winds: but we call it Oran. The Archbishop Ximenes did easily conceiue by Vianello discourse, that it were labor lost to assaile that citie, if they were not first masters of the coast about it, whereof Vianello made him a model in wax, which represented vnto him the hauens, ports, hills, vallies, rownes, rocks, forts, and other particularities of that

Description of Oran.

country, namely, of the warch called the Lampe, which is set vpon the top of a high mountaine, the which is inaccessible, but by one difficult passage, whereby they must necessarily passe that will goe to Oran. This watch hath on the one side the citie of Oran, and on the other the port called Mercalabir, or Marfael-quibir, great and famous, the which they must first get, to make the expedition of Africke profitable and easie. Hauing acquainted king Ferdinand with these designs, and seeing that there wanted money to effect it, the treasure hauing bene wasted in the warres of Granado and Italie, the Archbishop offered to lend money to pay the armie two monethes; whereupon they began to make readie for the voyage, whereof the young courtiers were verie desirous. The charge of Generall was given to D. Diego Fernandez of Cordoua, who afterwards was marquisse of Comares, who had for assistants D. Raymond of Cordoua, Generall of the gallies, Diego Vera, master of the ordnance, Goncal Ayora, captaine of the gards, Ieronimo Vianello, conductor of the enterprise, Pero Lopes of Orefco, and other old captaines and of great experience: Who parting from the port of Malaga came within few dayes neere vnto Mercalabir, whereas the Moores being aduertised of their coming, had prepared to receiue them. Wherefore as soone as the armie was discovered, they gaue signes in such fort as all Africke had soone notice thereof, and all the countrey was full of soldiers of that nation, which came to succour them. Notwithstanding the Spaniards woon the port, and landing, had meanes to campe, and to fortifie themselves from so great a multitude of enemies which came running from Oran and other neighbour places.

Mercalabir
a great port in Africke.

To gard the port there was a fort built vpon a rocke enuironed by the sea but of one side where it joynd to a mount that did commaund the fort; which the Spaniards seeking to win, and to plant their batterie thereon, they found a sharpe and bloudie resistance made by the Moores: notwithstanding they planted their ordnance there, and began to batter the fort furiously, both from thence, and from the gallies, vntill the captaine, who employed himselfe veriously for the defence thereof, was slaine with a bullet. In the meane time the king of Tremessen had sent an armie, against the which the Christians had many skirmishes, sometimes with gaine, sometimes with losse; yet the siege of Mercalabir continued still, whereat the souldiers being discouraged, by reason of the losse of their commander, and also for that they saw the passages both by sea and land were stoppt by the Spaniards, so as they could neither be releued with men nor victuals, they did capitulate, after some resistance, That if within certaine dayes the king of Tremessen did not come and succour them, they would yeeld the place to the Spaniards; the inhabitants and souldiers departing with their wiues, children, and baggage. No succours appearing, the fort was yeilded the fiftieth day after they parted from Malaga. The Moores went forth, the Christian

Mercalabir
taken by the Christians

Oooo iij

armie

armie being in battell, and proclamation being made, that no man should goe out of his rank, to offer them any violence vpon paine of death: the which a Spanish souldier tried, who for that he had offered to spoile or rauish a Moorish woman, was by the commaundement of D. Diego Fernandes laine with darts. This conquest being made to the great contentment of all men, the king D. Ferdinand, and the Archbishop Ximenes were instantly aduertised, where attending the kings pleasure, the fort was rampared and furnished. They say, that most of the men of quality and wealth, which dwelt at Oran, being amazed at the taking of Mersalcahir, retired to Tremessen, thinking that the Christians would not stay long to come and besiege that citie, as it fell out: But four yeares being past, and nothing attempted, they all returned to their losse, except one Moore, who was verie rich, who was still constant to remaine at Tremessen, and foretold the ruine of the rest. D. Diego Fernandes having well manned his conquest with good souldiers, he sent back the rest of his armie into Spaine, which was full of joy for so important a victorie, whereby not onely the coasts of Spaine were assured from the spoiles of pyrats, Moores, but also there was a faire way made for the Spaniards to inuade Africke. D. Diego Fernandes stayed still in Mersalcahir, vntill he had a new commaundement from the king. In the meane time Diego de Vera, Gonzal Agora, and Pero Lopes Orozco, fumamed by the Arabians Alcagul, past into Spaine; and there was presented vnto the Primate Ximenes, by Pero Lopez, a statue of Ebene, which the Cadis or high Priests of the Arabians were accustomed to carrie, the which he carried many dayes for his sake, and then he sent it to his Academie at Alcalá de Henares, for a monument of this Africane victorie. The king sent D. Rodrigo Diaz of Roia, a man of great worth and valour, for the gard of the fort and port of Mersalcahir, with one hundred light horse, and foure hundred foot, and called home D. Diego Fernandes, whom he honoured with the gouernment of his conquest, & other fauours, D. Rodrigo Diaz being his lieutenant, who ouerran the countrey, & kept the Moores still in alarme during his aboad there. There is one of the strangest blowes reported of him, that euer was giuen of any; who with an Azagay, or lauelin, pierced a man thorow the pommel of the saddle and the horse necke. The fort of Mersalcahir hath beene much fortified by the kings of Spaine, especially by D. Philip the second, who made it impregnable.

The same day that Mersalcahir, or Mafalquiuir, was won, which was the 13 of September, Queene Jane was brought in bed in Flaunders, of a daughter called Marie, who was Queene of Hungarie and Bohemia, married to king Lewis, sonne to Ladislaw, after whose decease, remaining a widow, she gouerned the Netherlands, and then came and died in Spaine, in the towne of Cigales, neere to Vaileadolid, in the yeare 1558, and lyes in the monastier of S. Benedict of Vaileadolid.

3 Whilest that the Queen D. Isabella liued, they did still practise some meanes of peace betwixt France and Spaine, and to this end the kings of Castille and Arragon had their embassadors in the French kings Court, making shew that they would restore king Frederic to his realme of Naples, or giue it to D. Ferdinand duke of Calabria, his eldest sonne, who was resident in Spaine: but it was not credible, for that is not the custome in our age, to giue away kingdomes which they doe quietly enjoy, especially hauing gotten it with so great charge, neither did he any thing: But the yeare of her decease there was a peace concluded betwixt the Emperor Maximilian and his sonne Philip, and king Lewis, by the which it was the third time agreed, That prince Charles of Austria should marie Claude of France, with the consent of the princes and noblemen of France, by the kings commaundement, and namely of Francis duke of Angoulesme, who was next in degree to the Crowne. It was also concluded, That the Emperor Maximilian should grant the inuestiture of the duchie of Milan to king Lewis, for him and his heires and successors males, and for want of males to his daughter, and to her future spouse prince Charles, who dying before the consummation of the mariage, she should be giuen in mariage to the Infant D. Ferdinand his brother, and they & their descendants should enjoy the said duchie of Milan. For the expedition of which priuiledge and donation, king Lewis should pay vnto the Emperor 70000. ducats vpon the deliuerie of the letters, and the like summe six moneths after, and euery yere vpon new-yeres day a paire of gilt spurs, in signe of honor.

Be.

A Betwixt the Pope, the Emperour, king Philip his Sonne, and the French king, there was a league made against the Venetians, to recover the townes, and Lands which either of these Princes pretended to belong vnto him, and had bene viurped by this Common-weale, into which league Ferdinand king of Arragon might enter if he pleased, and there was no mention made of the realme of Naples; in expectation whereof king Frederic ended his daies that yeare 1505. at Tours. That yeare the truce betwixt D. Ferdinand king of Arragon and the French king, was conuerted to a peace, vpon condition that king Ferdinand should marry Germaine the kings neece, daughter to his sister and to Iohn of Foix and of Nauarre, Vicount of Narbone, which Lady was allyed to King Ferdinand in the third degree, the Vicount of Narbone being bottie of queene Leonora of Nauarre his Sister: by reason of which consanguinity they had a dispensation from the Pope, and in consideration of this marriage it was agreed, that the part which the French king might pretend in the realme of Naples, should stand in stead of a dowrie for his Neece, the future queene of Arragon; vpon condition that the king D. Ferdinand should pay vnto the French king seven hundred thousand ducats for the charges hee had bene at in the warre of Naples, and moreover should indowe his spouse with three hundred thousand ducats: and in regard thereof a peace being concluded, the Noblemen and Barons of the Realme that were prisoners in the Spaniards hands, should be deliuered, and the banished men restored to their estates, all confiscations being void.

C That queene Germaine dying without children before the king D. Ferdinand, her dowrie should remaine to him, but if she furnished and had no children, it should returne to the crown of France: That king Ferdinand should be bound to assist Gaston of Foix, brother to his future spouse, to conquer the realme of Nauarre which he pretended to belong vnto him, and not to queene Katherine his cousin: That the French King should giue leave to queene Elizabeth widowe to King Frederic, to retire into Spaine with two children which shee had in France, to whom the king D. Ferdinand should giue honest meanes to liue: and if she should refuse to goe, that the French king should not giue any entertainment to her nor her children. That for a stronger bond of peace and assurance of the two realmes, the king of Spaine should be bound to aide him of France with two thousand light Horse, three hundred men at armes, and six thousand foot, the French king him of Spaine with a thousand Lances, and six thousand foot in their warres.

The king of England was caution for both of them for this peace, whereunto and to the marriage king Ferdinand did easily incline to quiet his minde in regard of the realme of Naples, being also aduertised that his sonne in law king Philip contentining the will and testament of queene Isabell his mother in Lawe, did not meane that hee should gouerne the realme of Castille. The widow queene of Naples, being chased out of France according to the accord, she desired rather to retire to Petara vnder the protection of Duke Alfonso of Este: then to go into Spaine, fearing, it may be, that king Ferdinand would put her children to death, that there might not be any to pretend to the realme of Naples. King Ferdinand hauing remained most part of the yeare at Segobia, and hunting at Cerezuela, hee came to Salamanca there to spend the remainder, in which yeare there dyed many great men of Spaine: D. Alfonso of Fonseca Bishop of Oms, to whom these succeeded an ignorant and vicious Prelate, base Sonne to the Admirall D. Frederic Henriques, called D. Alfonso Henriques, borne of a slave, of which promotion the king did often repent him, and was much blamed for it by other Prelates, namely of Antonie de la Perna, who preached before him: There dyed also D. Pero Aluarez Osorio, Marquess of Altorre, who left for successor his Sonne D. Aluar Peres Osorio, Di. Simon Suarez of Figueroa, Earle of Peña, to whom succeeded Don Lawrence Suarez of Figueroa his Sonne, who hauing married D. Katherine of Cordoua, eldest Daughter to D. Pedro of Cordoua, and neere to the great Capitaine, came by her right, to be Marquess of Priego, D. Alfonso of Fonseca, Lord of Coca and Alaxos, and D. Francisco of Velasco, Earle of Simela, D. Hurtado of Mendoza gouernour of Caforla, brother to the deceased Cardinall D. Pero Gohfalez of Mendoza, did also end their daies this yeare. The plague did also carry away infinite numbers of people in the citie of Burgos, so as it was in a manner left desolate.

Birth of the Infanta Marie, who was queen of Hungarie.

League made against the Venetians.

Peace betwixt France and Spaine.

Treatie of marriage betwixt Ferdinand and the Lady Germaine of Foix.

Isabell widowe to Frederic of Naples chased out of France.

Death of many Gentlemen in Spaine.

1506

Difference between D. Ferdinand king of Aragon and D. Philip king of Castille for the government.

D. Philip & D. Joane driven into England by a storme.

King of England forceth king Philip to deliver him the duke of Suffolke.

Marriage of the king of Arragon with Germaine of France.

Death of Christopher Columbus.

4 In the year 1506, vpon the controuersie growen betwixt the two kings father in lawe and sonne, touching the gouernement of Castille, Leon, Granado, and other the hereditarie lands of the deceased queene D. Isabella, and for the which king Philip had sent embassadors into Spaine, it was concluded that the kings, D. Ferdinand, D. Philip, and D. Joane should be all three gouernours, and that all letters should be dispatched in their name, whereupon their armes and Ensignes were againe set vp, according to the ancient custome; and this accord was proclaimed in the Citie of Salamanca, on Twelſe day: and soone after the kings, D. Philip and D. Joane parted from Flanders with many Ships, who were suddenly dispersed by a violent storme, and many of them driven into diuers parts of England. That wherein the kings were and two other ships came to Hampton, where they caused some alteration in the towne, the inhabitants fearing they had bene enemies, but being knowne they did them honour, as was fit for so great Princes. Many knights and men of experience of their traine, perswaded them not to land, foreseeing that which did happen; but king Philip hauing bene extremely sicke, and seeing the queene and noblemen which did accompany him in the same estate, would not beleue them, but was the first who leaping into a boate caused himselfe to be carried to land. It being bruted abroad that a storme had driven the kings of Castille vpon that coast, a knight, whose name was Thomas Trenchard, hauing his house there nere adioyning, came to doe him reuerence, offering him his lodging, with other commodities, and entertained him vntill that king Henry the seventh then reigning, was aduertised by messengers, sent in post: then many men drew thither in armes, with a captain called John Carew, who in the company of Thomas Trenchard besought king Philip not to depart out of England, vntill that hee had seene their king, who was his friend. Then did king Philip find that hee had erred, in not beleueing the counsell of his followers, and the queene more, who notwithstanding carryed this crosse courageously: wherefore seeing that this intreatie was a commendement, and that hee must obey it, hee flaid, alleging in vaine that his voyage was verie hastie, with much other excuses. Soone after there arrived many English noblemen, who conducted them with great honour to the castle of Windſor, whereas king Henry attended them. There king Philip was required by the king of England, to deliuer vnto him Edmond de la Poole duke of Suffolke his Competitor, who was then a prisoner in the castle of Namur: and so great was his desire to haue this duke, as forgetting the lawes of hospitality and the friendship which princes allies should beare one vnto another, hee forced the king of Castille, notwithstanding all excuses, to giue him the duke, vpon a promise that hee should not put him to death: whereupon men were sent into Flanders to fetch this poore duke. In the meane time king Henry led his guests to London, where hee entertained them with great and stately feasts, and royall sports; and the prisoner being arrived, they had libertie to depart at their pleasures. So as these kings hauing renewed the league with the king of England, they imbarked and continued their voyage towards Spaine.

In the meane time Germaine the new queene of Arragon came to Duegnas, whereas king Ferdinand came and married her. There passed many noblemen of therealm of Naples of the Angeuin faction, with her out of France into Spaine, who soone after did accompany the king D. Ferdinand to Naples. After the consummation of the marriage, the king led the queene his wife to Vailladolid, and there leauing her with D. Joane his sister, the old queene of Naples, and one of her daughters, hee went to Burgos, to receiue the kings, D. Philip and D. Joane, thinking that they had landed at Laredo, or some other place of Biscaie, but it fell out otherwise: for they tooke port at Corunna, or the Groine in Galicia, whereof king Ferdinand being aduertised, hee tooke the way to Leon, and then to Torquemada, to goe and meete his sonne in law and his daughter.

5 At that time there dyed in Vailladolid the admirall Christopher Columbus the discoverer of the Indies, whose body was carryed to Seuille, and was buried in the monasterie of las Cueuas of the Carthusiens. To him his sonne Diego Columbus succeeded

H

I

K

L

M

in 1506

Library gathered together by Diego Columbus

Order seueing the government of Castille.

King Ferdinand returns into Arragon.

1506

Death of Philip King of Castille.

Voyage of king Ferdinand into Italy.

A faithful servant.

A in the Admiraltie of the Indies, who married D. Maria of Toledo, daughter to D. Ferdinand of Toledo great Commander of Leon: hee left another Sonne called D. Ferdinand Columbus who was neuer married. Among many deeds worthe of commendation, of this Admirall D. Diego Columbus, hee gathered together in the citie of Seuille, one of the greatest and goodlyest Libraries in Christendome, seeking out with great care and charge, all goodly books, in what language soeuer: so as there were about twelke thousand volumes: for the keeping, maintenance and increase of which library, he left and assigned sufficient monies.

6 At the arrival of the new kings of Castille, the king D. Ferdinand found by experience that princes seruantes doe most commonly follow them for profit; and not for love and affection: for many of those that were with him in this voyage, left him without leave, and went before to offer their seruice, and so accompany their new maister, the which discontented him very much. These princes met betwixt the Poble of Sababria and Asturie, where hauing conferred together touching the manner of gouernment, they did not agree: whereupon the king D. Ferdinand came to Tordesillas, much distast of the king his sonne in law, who with Queene D. Joane past to Benacut: The diligence and care of the Archbishopp of Toledo, to redouble king Ferdinand and his children, was such, as they concluded that the king of Arragon should inioy the three masterships of Castille, Saint Iaques, Calatrava, and Alcortina, with the reuenues of the Indies, and eight millions of Mazauidis, off yearly rent during his life, which queene D. Isabella had left him; in regard whereof hee should be contented to remaine in his countrie of Arragon: to confirme which accord, the two kings had an enterview within a league of Vailladolid, in the vestrie of Renedo, whereas the archbishopp himselfe kept the doore: There they say king Ferdinand gave much counsell to his sonne in law, by whome hee was intreaced, notwithstanding their accord, to remaine in Castille, and to helpe him to gouerne, but he refused him, and went away this year 1506, in Iuly, leading his wife Queene Germaine with him into Arragon. The kings D. Philip and D. Joane entred into Vailladolid, wher they had called the estates of the realm, and there took a new oath, causing their eldest sonne D. Charles to be sworn heire to the crown of Castille, Leon, & Granado. In these princes were inuited vnto the realms of Castille and Leon, and there dependances, the great estates of the low countries and Burgundy, and afterwards Arragon, Sicile, Sardynia and Naples: At Vailladolid there were many noblemen honored with the order of the golden fleece. The gard of the castle of Segobia was taken from the marquesse of Moya, & giuen to D. John Manuel, who was much fauored by the kings, who being at Tudela of Duero, the appeared a strange comet in the firmaments, foreshewing (as they said afterwards) the approaching death of king Philip, which happened soon after in the citie of Burgos, to the generall griefe of all his subjects, the comet still reigning, whereunto hee did attribute his death, saying often in his paines and agonies, Ha cometa, ha cometa: He died in the floure of this age, in the comfortable house, this year 1506, hauing reigned 7 yere and ten monethes: his body was laied many yeres after by the commendement of the Emperour Charles his sonne, in the royal chappel of Granado, hauing remained in diuers places. This summer which was very drie, there died in Castille D. Gutierre of Toledo bishop of Plaisance, to whom succeeded D. Gomez of Toledo, sonne to D. Gutierre de Solis earle of Coria.

7 At the time of the death of the king D. Philip king Ferdinand was at sea going towards Italie for after the enterview of these two princes, & the order taken for the gouernment of Castille, he went to Cattelonia, where hauing caused a goodly fleet to be made readie at Barcelona, he imbarked to go and visit the realms of Naples, & of Sicilie, hauing conceived a ieaalousie that the great captain did fauor the designs of the king of Castille his son in law: for hauing sent often for him to come into Spaine, hee had full delayed it with excuses, as he thought. At his departure out of Castille, he was abandoned by all the great men, except the duke of Alua, who did accompany him to the frontiers of Arragon. He who shewed himselfe most faithfull of all the noblemen, was D. Bernar d'of Rojas and Sandoual marquesse of Denia, who neuer abandoned him, neither alive nor dead: for hee retired many of his officers and household seruantes, which had no maintenance. It was concluded Princes servants follow for profit and not for affection.

C

D

E

F

Smotherie of the great Captaine

cluded by the last accord made betwixt him and king Philip, that the realme of Naples, although it had been conquered by the means and forces of Castille, more then by those of Arragon, should remain to the crown of Arragon. Being therefore ready to set sail towards his realme of Naples, he received letters from the great captaine, by the which hee did assure him of his sincerity and service, and did advertise him of the estate of the country, wherewith he was so well satisfied, as he did confirme all his former gifts vnto him, & added new, yea he was much more pleased with him, for that contrary to the opinion of many he came and met him at the port of Genoua: for both the Pope and all the Potentates of Italy, thought that he was gone from Naples, with an intent to restore himselfe into Castille, and not to see king Ferdinand, as if he feared to looke on him. The king being staied here some daies by reason of contrary winds, he had news of his son in laws death, for the which he seemed verie sorrowful: & notwithstanding that he was presby the widow queen D. Joane his daughter to returne into Spaine, yet he went on his voyage to Naples, where he entered in great pompe, vnder a canopie of cloth of gold, the city wal being beaten down for the more state, hauing all the honors and ceremonies accustomed at the receptions of new kings: he staied 7. months there to the great content of the whole realm, and of all the Potentates of Itake, who posselt with an opinion of his iustitie and equity, sent vnto him by ambassadors, and made him arbitrator of many contoueries, that were amongst them. The Neapolitanes offered him great summes of money and other commodities, but he would not accept any but 30000 ducats, for the charges of his voyage. He would not at that time breake with the Venetians for the Popes pleasure or of any others, and yet they detained certain places from him, referring that quarel to a more convenient time. He pacified and ended many quarrels, and pretensions of Barons, yea, of the Angevin party, who were yet disposselt of their goods, which had been confiscated, & past into priuatemens hands, so whome they had been given in recompence of their feruice; and that which he could not end, he left in charge to the Viceroy D. John of Arragon earle of Ribagorça, whom he left in the place of Gonçalo Fernandez of Cordoua, the great Captaine, whome he caused to imbarke with him at his returne, and carried him into Spaine, being iealous of the honor which he had gotten in the conquest of the realme. In regard of the realm of Sicilie, he made many good lawes, but he could not goe thither in person, being presby the queen D. Joane his daughter, the counsell, cities, and communalities of Castille to returne into Spaine: for this poore princeesse, besides her affliction for the death of her husband, had other infirmities, which she did inherit from her grandmother by the mothers side D. Isabella of Portugall, wherefore finding her selfe vnable to gouern so great a state, she put all ouer into the hands of D. Francisco Ximenes Archbishop of Toledo & primate of Spaine, & of doctor D. Alfonso Suarez de la Fuente del Sauc bishop of Iaca president of the kings counsell, Garcia of Muxica licentiate in the laws, born in the prouince of Guisquicoa, doctor Pedro of Orepesa, a most religious Baron, the licentiate Fernando Telles, doctor Lawrence Galindez of Camail, & the licentiate Lewis of Polanco, with others of the counsell, who took charge of the affairs in the absence of the king D. Ferdinand her father, the Prince D. Charles, who was then bred vp in Flanders, being yet a child of 7. yeres old. Pope Julius staied many daies in the castle of Ostia, thinking that K. Ferdinand would land there to see him, but he excused himselfe by reason of the final intelligence that was betwixt them: for the king hauing demanded of him the confirmation & ineffectuall of the realme of Naples; he would not graunt it, but with heavier conditions then other kings of Arragon his predecessors had held it. Queen Germaine did accompany the king her husband in this voyage, who sailing towards Spaine, they toucht at Sauone, which place was assigned for an interuiew, betwixt them and Lewis 12. the French king, who was already arrived with a goodly train of his nobilitie. At the coming of the Spanish army king Lewis shewed so great a confidence in the vertue and generosity of king Ferdinand, as he made no difficulty to enter into his galley, without any gards, by a bridge of wood made to that end, and there hauing conference awhile together, they entred all into the city; queene Germaine going betwixt the two kings, the king her husband being on the right hand, and the French king on the left, who were immediately followed by the Cardinall of Rouan, and the great captaine, and then by many noblemen, ladies and gentlewomen, richly attyred

D. Joane queene of Castille tousht in her feruice.

Counsell of Ca-stille.

Interuiew betwixt the french king and him of Arragon.

1507

A red: king Ferdinand made shew of as great confidence to the French king, entering into Sauone, a towne held by him, where hee was lodged in the Castle, and king Lewis in the bishops Palace. For three daies space that these great Princes were together, they treated of many matters of importance, in the which the Cardinall of Praxed, the Popes Legate, was a great dealer: king Lewis spake much concerning the renewing and strengthening of their leagues, and the friendship which he desired to entertaine with the emperor Maximilian, who was greatly discontented with him, for many reasons, but especially for that the Ladie Claude the eldest daughter of France, so often promised to prince Charles, had bene lately made siute to Francis duke of Angouleme: the which king Lewis excused, saying, that he had done it at the instant request of the estates of his realme: They did also treat of many things concerning Italy, and yet neuer entred into any speech of the realme of Naples: but the French king shewed great hatred to the Venetians, and little loue to the Pope, against whome hee presumed to haue a generall Council called, being animated thereto by the Cardinall of Rouan, desirous to finde a meanes to attaine vnto the dignitie of Soueraigne bishop, wherof he had some hope, when the sea was voyde, by the death of Alexander the first, wherein there were resolutions then taken, to the contentment of both kings: becaus for a Council, king Ferdinand excused himselfe, saying that it was a dangerous thing for the common weale of Christendome. The French king, hauing often desired to see and know Gonçalo Fernandez, called the great captaine, he intreated him with much honour, and could not be satisfied in looking on him, as admiring those great matters which hee had heard of him, getting leave of king Ferdinand that hee might eate at their table, whereas Queene Germaine sayed (it may bee indiscreetly) that he which had vanquished kings, should eat with kings: Some say, that at that time onely hee purchased the surname of Great, for that king Lewis did so call him, saying freely vnto king Ferdinand, that hee did enuie him for so worthy a man, whome hee honoured with praises and great titles in all his discourses, and taking a chaine of gold of great price from off his owne neck, he put it about his: The fourth day of this interuiew, the kings parted one towards Proutice, and the other continuing his course towards Spaine, where the fleets arrived in mid August 1507, at the port of Valencia: from whence, without stay, the king and queene went to Almasan, a towne of Castille, nor without discontentment of the Arragonois, who found his short abode amongst them verie strange, to buse himselfe with the affaires of a realme where hee had found so much ingratitude. The great Captaine was receiued in Spaine with great fauour of all men, being held the honour and ornament of Castille, but hee neuer saw Naples more: where he was exceedingly beloued, and desired. They say that at his departure from Naples, hee gaue a great part of his meates to such as had bene faithfull companions vnto him in the warre, to performe the which hee sold some of his lands.

E 8 Whilst that the king D. Ferdinand was in Italic, the duke of Valentinois, who was prisoner in the Castle of Medina del Campo, being ill garded slippe downe by a rope, and escaped going towards Guisquicoa in a disguised habit, whereas he found in the towne of Mondragon, one Lewis Lauregui, who had serued him in Italic, and was then one of the chiefe of the place, who gaue him meanes to passe into Nauarre, towards king John of Albret, whose sister hee had married. D. Joane queene of Castille being with child at her Husbands death, had bene deliuered of a Daughter in Torquemada, who was named D. Catharina, future wife to John the third of that name, king of Portugall. This yere one thousand five hundred and seuen, there was a change of Bishops in Spaine from lesse to greater, after the accustomed manner: for by the death of D. John of Medina Bishop of Segobia, D. Frederic of Portugall was advanced to that Bishopricke, and that of Calaoña, which hee held, was giuen to D. John of Velasco, who before was bishop of Carthagina, the which was bestowed vpon doctor Martin of Angulo, Archdeacon of Talauera in the church of Toledo: The archbishopricke of Granado in like manner being void, by the death of Hernando of Talauera, there was preferred to that dignity D. Anthony of Rojas, Bishop

Councils are dangerous for the church of Rome.

Counsell Fernando
des honoured by
Lewis the 12.

Honour of the great Captaine

Duke of Valentinois escapes
out of prison.

Change of bishops in Castille

1507

Archbishop of Toledo made a Cardinal.9
Nauarre.Genealogie of Nauarre.Disposition of king John of
Nauarre.

shop of Maiorca, and his Bishopricke was giuen vnto D. Diego of Rivera. By the decease also of D. Garcia Ramirez of Villa excusa Bishop of Ouiedo, who was the last Prior of S. Marc of Licon, D. Valerio Alfonso of Villaquiran, was made Bishop in his place; and the bishopricke of Villaquiran & cite Roderigo, which he held, was giuen to D. Francisco of Bouadilla, son to the Marquesse of Moya. The same yere D. Francis Ximenes of Cineros Archbishop of Toledo, obtained a Cardinals hat, with the title of Santa Balbina: and for that he was primate of Spain, he was called Cardinal of Spaine: And D. Alfonso Fajeca, was allowed to resigne the Archbishopricke of Saint Iaques to his sonne, carrying the same name, for the which Cardinal Ximenes did greatly reproach king Ferdinand, who had countenanced it, saying, that he made Archbishopricks hereditarie, and that he should see if women were excluded. King Ferdinand was then come to Santa Maria del Campo, with the queene his daughter, where they made the anniuersarie for the deceased king Philip: from thence they went to Arcos, where the Queene staying, the king came to Burgos, where during his long abode, wee wilketime to the faikes of Nauarre. The king D. John of Albret, who is numbred for the fise and thirtieth king of Nauarre, and the third of that name, had by his wife Katherine of Fois, a great issue, John and Andrew Phelus, who dyed both yong, Henrie who succeeded them in the estates of Fois & Beam, and in the title of Nauarre, and was born three daies after the death of Andrew Phelus his brother, in the town of Sanguessa, in the yere one thousand fise hundred and three, in the month of Aprill: the godfathers at the Christening were two Germaine Pilgrimes, which pass by chance at the time of his birth, to goe to Saint Iaques, whereof the one was called Henrie, and the other Adam: the which the king his father did by deuotion: but the Spaniards say that it was an aduertisement and preface of his future condition, that he should liue a stranger and Pilgrim out of his realme: Besides these, hee had Charles, named by some Francis, who dyed in the Lord of Lautrees voyage to Naples; Katherine, Anne, Quiterie, Magdeline, Isabell, and fise other children, whose names are not specified, for they dyed young. Of the daughters, Anne was betrothed, but not married the earle of Candale, for shee dyed at the assurance making: into which house the Queene of Nauarre aunt, called Katherine also, had been married; shee was mother to Queene Anne of Hungarie, wife to king Ladislavus: Isabell married with the earle of Rohan in Brittaine. This king D. John of Albret was full of pompe and state in his court, and house, the which was frequented by the nobility both of Spaine, France, and other nations, as much as any of the greatest monarchs. His studie and delights were diuers, for he loued learning and books, whereof hee made a goodly Librarie; hee was curious in the search of Genealogies of noble families, and would vnderstand their armes, and blasons; yet sometimes he made some noble, that were of small merit: hee tooke great delight to discourse priuately and familiarly with his vassals and others, as if hee had been no king, but a priuate gentleman: hee daunced willingly, and did so little mainteine his royall grauitie, as hee made no difficultie to come into publike assemblies, and to dance in the streets with wiuers and virgins after the countrie maner: he went familiarly to dine and sup, and to make good cheare in his subiects houses, inuiting himselfe, the which did winne him the loue of some, and made him to bee scorned of others, as not knowing how to hold his ranke: the which hee held of the French humor, whereas the princes doe sometimes make themselves too familiar with petty companions. Hee was so giuen to his pleasures, as many times hee referred matters of greatest importance to others, the which did purchase him contempt and hatred with many: for by this meanes against his oath and promise made at his coronation, many strangers were admitted to estates, offices, and benefices within the realme of Nauarre, whereof there were sundrie admonitions and protestations made vnto him in the assemble of the estates by the noblemen of the realm, but he did not regard it: for hee thought to find a great support in the king of Castilles friendship: yet notwithstanding king Ferdinand did not forbear to capitular with Lewis 12 the French king who should help to disposseesse him of the realm of Nauar, to inest Gaston of Fois duke of Nemours son to John vicom of Narbonne, & brother to queene Germaine, which D. Ferdinand did afterwards seale on vpon

1597

Son of Albret
king of Nauarre
& the Queene
his wife fall into factions.10
Raiselle of the Earle of Lerin, which caused his ruine.Service against the Earle of Lerin.Castle of Viana besieged by the Duke of Valentinois.Viana viualled by the Earle of Lerin.

A vpon another occasion, as we will shew. About the end of the yere one thousand fise hundred and fixe, the Duke of Valentinois hauing escaped from Medina del Campo, and being come, as we haue said, into Nauarre, he found that the King D. John of Albret, and the Queene his wife were growne into factions one against another; the King fauouring them of Beamont, and the Queene the others of Gramont: wherefore the Duke shewing therein both iudgement and affection, hee dealt so as hee reconciled them, making the King his brother in law to fauor the faction of Gramont, wherewith the contrary partie was much troubled: yet Lewis of Beamont the Constable, a man of a great courage, maintained himselfe still proudly in his ranke, so as on a time a certaine Officer coming to giue him notice of some commaundement from the King, hee caused him to be beaten with cudgells, and to be cast into prison in the castle of Larraga, making shew that he did not much respect the King, nor his Aduersaries of Gramont which were fauored by him, which was the cause of his ruine: for the King being iustly incensed at this audacious fact, hauing by many messages sent for him to Court, and hee not obeying, hee resolved to ruine him quite. He had to friend, although hee were of the contrary faction, D. Alfonso Carrillo of Peralta Erle of Saint Stephen, sonne to Troilo Carrillo, and grandchild to D. Alfonso Carrillo of Acugna Archbishop of Toledo, who did aduertise him of all that was practised against him, aduising him by no meanes to come to the Court, vnlesse hee would fall into their ambushes. By reason of this contumacie, the King hauing caused his proccesse to be made, hee was condemned to loose both life and goods, as guiltie of high treason: and hauing sent forth troupes for the execution of this Sentence, hee gaue the charge to the Duke of Valentinois his brother in law, to pursue him with all extremite of warre, the which the Duke beganne by the siege of the castle of Larraga the eleuenth of February 1597. But a Gentleman called Oger of Berastegui who commanded there, defended it brauely, so as both the King, who was there in person, and the Duke, left it, and went to Viana, whereas the towne made not any resistance, but the castle held good, although they were scant for victuals: whereof the Earle of Lerin the Constable being aduertised, hee resolved to relieue it; for the effecting whereof hauing gathered together about two hundred horse and some foot, hee came to Mandauia to watch some opportunitie to execute his designe, the which succeeded happily, for the same night there did rise a horrible tempest, which made the Duke thinke that the enemy would not goe to field, and that they would not aduenture to succoure the besieged; wherefore he retired his gardes and sentinells which hee did vsually set vpon all the approaches to the castle, wherein hee was deceiued although hee were held for a wise and discreet Communder: for through fauour of the noyfe of the winde, and the great raine, three score horses parted from Mandauia, euery one carrying a sacke of meale, and some baked bread, which prouision they put into the castle by a posteme, and were not discouered: Morning being come, in their retreat they discouered certain horsemen vpon the way of Logroño, which made them thinke that it was a supply of 300. Castilian horse which the Duke of Negara had promised to send vnto the Constable, wherefore they beganne to crie, Beaumont, Beaumont, which gaue an alarme vnto the Towne. The Duke of Valentinois hauing caused himselfe to be richly armed by a groom of his called Iancos, who had sometimes serued the Constable; he went forth brauely mounted, and followed by a thousand horse, and a great troupe of foot, and so hee went towards Mandauia, saying, Where is this pettie Count? I vow to God I will this day kill him, or take him prisoner, I will not leaue him vntill he be quite ruined, and will not pardon any one of his, all shalbe put to the sword, euen the dogges and catteres. Being thrust on with this violent passion, hee aduanced his troupe, following 60. horse which retired before him. The Constable had sent forth some, adwell to receiue those (if need were) which were gone to viual the castle of Viana, as hee did discover what the enemy did, who seeing the Duke whom they knew not come thus alone, and with a great assurance, doubting that he was followed by some great troupes, they retired to the place where the Constable remayned, who wondering what this Knight should be; and at his hardinesse, What? (saies hee) is there no man here that dares affront this gallant, which comes so neere vs? Then there disbanded three gentlemen of his troupe, who went to encounter him in a hollow way like vnto a ditch, whereas

Pppp the

1507

Death of the duke of Valentinois.

the duke could not well vie his force and dexteritie, nor mannage his horse, who having charged their Lances against him, one of them tooke him vnder the right arme pit, where hee was vnarmed, as hee did lift vp his arme to charge his lance, and so ranne him through, hee falling downe dead to the ground. They saie that hee that gaue the blow was one of the Garceles of Agreda: The bodie was presently stript by these three companions, and left naked in the way, hauing couered his priue parts with a stone:
they carried these rich spoiles vnto the Constable who beganne to retire, not knowing any thing of him that was laine, but that hee should be some great capitaine, vntill that the same morning Sanicos the groomer of his chamber, who had followed his master, and mist his way, was taken by some and led to the Constable, by whom it was knowne after that he had seene his armes and habiliments, that it was Cesar Borgia duke of Valentinois which had benee slaine, whose bodie was found by the army which followed after. King Iohn himselfe being in person in the reward, who lamented much for the death of his brother in lawe, and couering him with a cloake of scarlet he caused him to be carried to Viana, and to be buried in the great chappell of the parish church of Saint Mary, where this epitaph is to be read.

*A qui iace en poca tierra
El que toda le temia,
El que lapas, y la guerra Por todo el mundo hazia.*

*O tu que vas a buscar, Dignas cosas de loar,
Se tu loas lo mas digno,
A qui pare tu camino
No crees de mas andar.*

It is obserued in Spaine for a memorable thing, that the death of the duke of Valentinois happened in Nauarre the like day that hee had in the same Realme taken possession of the perpetual administration of the church of Pampelone, the chiefe of that realme, which was the eleuenth day of March, on the which God would shew some testimonie of his wrath against him, who in contempt of all religion had quit his Ecclesiasticall estate, and the Ministerie, to follow the practise of armes: The Constable would haue benee more ioyfull if hee had benee taken aliue, to haue presented him to king Ferdinand. The king of Nauarre by reason of this death fell into such a rage against the Constable, and all his house, as euen some of his kinsmen which followed the Kings armie were forced to retire, not daring to present themselves before him: against whom the castle of Viana did still make resistance, notwithstanding that his armie was much increased by certaine troups which had benee sent him out of Castille from D.
Bernardin of Velasco Constable and Duke of Frias, and the Earle of Nieua, with whom and with the Earle of Aguilar, the king had alwayes entertained a strict friendship: but hee past into the Constables lands where hee committed all the spoiles that an incensed enemy could deuise: hee tooke the towne of Lerin, where hee ouerthrow and ruined the sepulchre or monument of the house of Lerin, and the Constables pro-genitours, which was a sumptuous and stately building; hee rased his houses, cut vp his vines and trees, then taking the rest of his places and castles, some by a voluntarie yeelding, and some by force, where hee caused the captaynes which made resistance to be hanged, hee reduced him to that extremitie, as hee was forced to retire himselfe into Castille to D. Ferdinand king of Arragon his brother in lawe, being followed by many other knights of the faction of Beaumont which was then vnderfoote, and that of Gramont aduanced, amongst whom was the Marshall place; and moreover by the Constables retreat they obtained that Office for D. Alphonso Carrillo of Peralta Earle of Saint Stephen: Then the castles of Viana and Larraga yeelded. And in this exile the Constable being old and dispossest, died some moneths after in Arragon, in the towne of Aranda: His wife D. Lewis of Arragon dyed likewise at the same time in the citie of Tortosa in Cartelonia. The Constables bodie hauing benee left for a time in the monasterie of Veruela, was afterwards transported to Lerin, where he lies:
his sonne D. Lewis of Beaumont succeeded him after the conquest of Nauarre, made by D. Fer-

Warre against the Constable
of Lerin.Death of D. Lewis of Beaumont
the Constable.

1508

A D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, in the office of Constable, and of high Chancellour of the realme, and in all his other estate and lands being by his mothers side, nephew to the king D. Ferdinand, and graundchilde to D. Iohn king of Arragon the second of that name. There was a bruit, that the Constable and his sonne had treated with Lewis the twelfth to dispossesse king Iohn of Albret of the realme of Nauarre, and to inuett Gaston of Foix duke of Nemours his nephew, and that Lewis of Beaumont, the sonne of D. Fran- cis of Beaumont, and D. Pedro Menas of Beaumont went into France to sollicite the king in this businesse, assuring him that all things should be easie for him, and fauourable, but that the king being then busied in other affaires, especially to reduce the ci-tie of Genoua which was then rebelled, to his obedience, would not hearken to it:
wherefore D. Lewis of Beaumont, and D. Pedro Menas returned into Arragon, leauing D. Francois in the French kings seruice, where hee continued vntill that hee was called home by his father D. Iohn of Beaumont, who had a certaine quarrell with Amador of Lescan, whose challenge hee could not answer by reason of his age, so as hee came and presented himselfe to the combat against Amador, during the raigne of the kings; but there growing a certayne question being ready to fight, vpon the qualitie of the armes, they spent the whole day in disputes, and nothing was done. The cardinal D. Anthony bishop of Pampelone being dead about the end of this yeare one thousand five hundred & fuen, there was preferred in his place by pope Iulio the second, the cardinal of Sancta Sabina, called Facio; but the chapter of the church of Pampelone, hauing already chosen cardinal Amador of Albret of the tide of Saint Nicholas in carcere Tulliano, the kings brother, for their bishop, the cardinal of Sancta Sabina was reiected and kept from the possession of that bishopricke: whereupon Pope Iulio did censure the whole realme of Nauarre in the beginning of the yere one thousand five hundred and eight, and did continue a whole yere, to free them from the which they were forced to accept of the cardinal preferred by him for their bishop of Pampelone, whereof hee tooke possession by his deputy, and the election made by the chapter was declared voyd. This cardinal Facio liued not long after, wherefore cardinal Amador of Albret the kings brother reco-uered his right, and was received in the place of the deceased. The archdeaconship of D. the table of that church, a chiefe dignitie, and of great reuenues, was giuen vnto D. Iohn of Beaumont, for his sonne called also D. Iohn brother to D. Francois of Beaumont aboue mentioned, who being returned out of France into Nauarre, was, notwithstanding the hatred and factions of Beaumont and Gramont, much fauoured by the Marshall D. Pedro, who was then in greatest esteeme and authoritie with the Kings D. Iohn and D. Catherina.

11 This yeare one thousand five hundred and eight Muley Mahomet king of Fez, of the family of the Mexins, besieged the citie of Arzilla, in the which the earle of Redondo a Portugall was gouernour, and hauing taken the towne with his great power, being about a hundred thousand fighting men, hee also tooke part of the castle, and forced the Earle to retire into a tower with some souldiers: whereof king Ferdinand being aduertised, hee sent to the Earle Pedro Navarro an excellent capitaine of his time, being at Malaga, to goe and succour the Portugalls at Arzilla, appoynting him certaine old souldiers which were come from Naples, who were then lodged in the Axarchia of Malaga. The earle hauing receiued this charge, imbarqued with great speed in a shippe of his owne, which was called Maricette, with other shippes which hee found readie, and soure gallies, about two thousand and five hundred of these souldiers, and so sayled towards Arzilla, where vpon his first approach hee so terrified the Moores, which besieged the Tower where the Earle of Redondo was, with his great ordonance from the shippes, as they suffered him to land his men, with the which hee entred the citie, and fought so valiantly, as hee chased away the Moores, whom hee found lodged, and fortified there, striking such a terrour into the king of Fez his armie, as the same night it retired about two leagues from the towne. D. Pedro Navarro encouraged with this good successe, going forth with certaine field peeces, and setting a countenance on it, hee held the enemies in such doubt, as they retired to Fez, and Arzilla was freed, whereas within few dayes after the armie of Portugall arrived, being sent to succour it by the king

Pppp ij

D. Ma-

Castile.
Arzilla besieged by the Moores, and the towne taken.Exploit of Pedro Navarro at Arzilla in favour of the Portugalls.

1508

D. Manuel, the which had come too late without the diligence and good office of King Ferdinand, and the Eade D. Pedro Navarro, who having sent backe part of his souldiers in the Mariette, hee ranne along the coast of Barbarie with his foure gallies, vnto Belin or Velez of Gomera, who discouering a rocke in the sea fit to build a fort on, for the defence and safetie of the coast of Spaine, especially for the streit, and the rest of Andalusia hee put thirtie souldiers in garrison there, in despite of the Moores: And being returned to Malaga, hee aduertised the King of the commoditie of this feat, yielding him many reasons to induce him to build a fort there: whereupon the King sent a gouernour thither, whose name was John of Villalobos, capitaine of Trebeja, and rector of Malaga, who entring into this place called Pegnon de Velez, with three score and tenne souldiers, he spent his life there in garrison, and after him his sonne, who put in his place an vnckle of his called Francis of Villalobos, in whose time this fort was taken by the Moores, eight yeres after it had bene first fortified by the earle D. Pedro Nuñar.

Pegnon de Velez fortified.

Trouth of the court troubled in his charge, and the punishment the king inflicted.

12 The king D. Fernando having this yere sent one of the Prouosts of his Court called the Bachelier Hernando Gomes of Hertzera to Cordoua, for certaine executions of Iustice, hee had such a quarrell with D. Pero Fernandes of Cordoua, nephew to the great captayne, as the marquisse caused him to be taken prisoner, and to be carried to Montillo, wherewith the king found himselfe much wronged, and loath to employ anie other, hee went himselfe to punish this disobedience and contempt. Wherefore coming to Toledo, and from thence by Cite royall, Syerra Morena, Pedroche, and Adamuz hee entred into Cordoua, where hee beganne to haue informations made against the marquisse, for whom the great captaine and other noblemen were suiters, intreating him to remember how D. Alphonso d' Aguilar the marquisse's father died, and how his vnckle the great captaine had liued: yet the marquisse was condemned in a great fine, his house of Aguilar rased, and himselfe banished for a certaine time.

Portugall.

Sedition at Lisbon for religion.

13 In Portugall the king D. Manuel attending the gouernement of his realmes, and the navigations to the East Indies, made his greatest residence in the citie of Ebor, whilst that Lisbon was afflicted with cruell seditions, by reason of religion; an ordinarie thing in this later age, whenas most Christians ialous of their owne glorie, worship their opinions, and maintaine their ceremonies by tumults and effusion of blood. It did seeme vnto some women of the ancient families of Christians in that citie, that some of the new conuerts or of their descendants, being in the Conuent of the friers of Saint Dominike had mockt at the hoste, which they are accustomed to keep in their churches: wherewith being moued with a womanish choler, they beganne to cast their pattens at them, saying, Goe you wicked dogges, God forbid that the plague and other miseries should fall vpon vs for you. At this noyse there came two friers running, who moued with a monkish zeale, tooke vp a Crosse, and running vp and downe the streetes, cried, Kill, kill these wicked hereticall dogges, for both plague and famine will fall vpon this countrey for their impieties: with which cries they stirred vp the people, so as falling vpon these new Christians (as they call them) they slue about 4000, regarding the innocent no more then the offender: and that which was the chiefe motive, they spoiled their goods, sackt their houses, and burnt many in the streetes, and publike places of the citie: the which the officers of Iustice could not help. In the end, being tired rather then glured with killing and spoyling, the tumult ceased. King Manuel being aduertised of this excesse, caused the two friers which were the authors to be apprehended, and to be publicly burnt at Ebor, and informations being made against the mutines and spoilers, about 70 of them were most iustly hanged, wherein it is strange how often they were then abused, who leauing Mahumets or the Iewish impietie, came into the bolome of the Romish church, thinking to find a safe refuge, or some mildnes and humanitie there, whereas they did often make triall of the smothered hatred, and crueltie, of these proud and rauishing olde Christians, as they call them in Spaine; men truly vnfit to draw infidels to the healthfull Doctrin of IESVS CHRIST: for this detestable example could no wayes edifie the sonne of the King of Manicongo, who was sent a while after into Portugall, to bee there instructed in the Romish Religion. This King ruling vpon the westerne shore of Africke beyond the Equinoctiall, was vassall and

Lib. 25.

A and alied to the king D. Manuel, the infant his sonne was named Henry, and was bred vp and instructed in the Latine tongue and the sciences for the space of xviij yeres, at Saint Eloy in Lisbon; after the which hee returned into his countrey, being accompanied by many of the monkes of S. Eloy, carrying with him many ornaments serving for the ceremonies of the Romish religion, and many gifts from the King D. Manuel.

1508
Henry Infant of Manicongo baptized.

14 D. Ferdinand King of Arragon for his part, seeking the propagation of religion, following the aduice of his counsell and of the diuines of Spaine, gaue leaue this yere one thousand five hundred and eight, to some Spaniards dwelling at the Indies to search into the maine land there, to conquer prouinces and people, and to conuert those infidels to the Christian religion, by armes, if they did not willingly submit themselves; sending ample instructions vnto them. The first that undertooke that enterprife was Alphonso of Hojeda or Fojeda, borne at Cuena, having dwelt long at the Indies, who passing from the port of Beate of Saint Dominike with foure shippes and three hundred men, came vnto Carthagea, being followed by an other shippe, in the which there should be certaine mares, swine, and other cattell to breed, being conducted by the bachelier Martin Fernandes of Enfiso with an hundred and fiftie Spaniards. Having landed, Alphonso of Hojeda caused the Caribes a cruell and barbarous nation, which inhabit that countrey, to be summoned, to yeeld obedience to the King D. Ferdinand, and D. Loane of Castille, and to receiue the preaching of the gospel, offering them peace with great priuiledges and exemptions: but they making no regard of all these things, Hojeda made cruell wars against them, killing or making slaues all he could get, according to the instruction of the diuines of Spaine. He marcht about five leagues into the land, and besieged a little borough of some one hundred houses, where there might dwell some three hundred persons of these Caribes, who defended themselves in such fort with poisoned arrowes, and their other armes, as they slew three score and tenne Spaniards, and among them Alphonso de la Cosa of Palos of Moguer in Adalusia, a man expert in navigation, and lieutenant at that time to Hojeda, which was a great losse; and had not Diego of Nicuesa of Baes arrived, they were in daunger to haue receiued a greater losse and affront. Xpiscus parting from the same port of Beate of S. Domingo, had brought foure score Spaniards in seuen shippes and two brigantines. Hojeda hauing ioyned with 780. did easily force the borough, and burnt it with all the Indians, who had no lesoure nor meanes to flic, of the which they retayned seuen prisoners: and hauing gathered vp some little gold in the ashes of this fire, these captaines diuided themselves, Hojeda bending towards Vrabia, and Nicuesa to Beragua.

castile.

Alphonso of Hojeda first discoverer of the firme land at the Indies.

Caribes defend themselves courageously.

15 This was done at such time as the Christian princes made a league at Cambria against the Venetians, into the which D. Ferdinand King of Arragon and Gouernour of Castille entred. The Venetians who alwayes knew how to make their profite by other mens quarrells, held Padena, Vincence, Verona, Friuli and Treuise which the emperor pretended. The French king as duke of Millane demanded of them Cremona, Ghiarada, Brest, Bergamo and Crema, for the pope there was exacted the towne of Fanus, Rimini, Rauenna and Cernaia, and King Ferdinand desired to retire the places and ports of the realme of Naples; which had bene engaged vnto them by the old King D. Ferdinand of Naples: for these considerations all their embassadors met there together, to conclude a warre against the Venetians; but king Ferdinand had no great will to take armes against that common weale, proicting other meanes to recouer his right, but to please the Emperour hee ioyned in this warre, and for that there was some discontentment betwixt the king D. Ferdinand, the emperour and prince Charles, by reason of the gouernement of Castille, it was said, that there should be no speech of it, vntill the end of that war. There were many other particularities treated of and concluded there, every one of these princes seeking more his owne priuate interest then the good of the league in generall. King Ferdinand was then at Tordeussas, whither hee had accompanied his daughter the Queene. D. Ioane, who liued there, and hauing bene a widow eight and forty yeres, ended her dayes there. In May, in the yere one thousand five hundred and nine, queene Germanie wife to king Ferdinand was deliuered pretensions of christian princes against the Venetians.

1509

Genealogie of Aragon.

of a son at Vailledolit, who was named John, but he liued not long, after which this prince had not any more children : but the king her husband before he married her had D. Alphonso of Arragon by the vicountesse of Ebolihe was archbishop of Saragossa, a prince of singular vertue : he had also D. Ioune of Arragon who was wife to the Countesse D. Bernardin of Velasco : and moreover by a gentlewoman of Bilbao called D. Totá, he had D. Maria of Arragon, who was a nunne at Madrigal : and of a lady of Portugall of the family of the Perreiras, an other daughter named also D. Maria of Arragon, who was in like manner a nunne in Madrigal with her sister ; this was the posteritie of king Ferdinand.

Fort built by the Spaniards
in the firme land of the Indies.Policie of the Indians.

16 That yeare Alphonso of Hojeda or Fogeda, running ouer the countrie of Vraba, tooke in the strong lland two men and seuen women, and got about two hundred ounces of gold : and hauing landed in Caribana, hee beganne a fort and towne, which was the first the Spaniards made in the firme land of the Indies. The Spaniards being entred foure leagues into the countrie, they assailed a little towne called Taripi, whereas the Indians made great resistance, and they had this policie, to draw their enemies on with gold, whereof they knew them to be very couetous, casting it in certaine places, that comming to gather it vp, they might pierce them more easily with their poysoned arrowes, whereof they died like mad men. Hoieda prest with these difficulties, and with hunger, raised his siege, and went to another Borough, where he found some small store of victualls, and tooke some prisoners, and among others, a woman, whose husband came before Hoieda, and promised by a certaine day to bring her ransom, at which prefixed time hee came, being accompanied with eight archers, who began to shoot many poysoned arrowes among the Spaniards, wherewith Hoieda himselfe was hurt, and others died, wherefore the Spaniards slue them all nine. Hereupon Bernardin of Taluera armed with a ship laden with victualls and three score and tenne Spaniards to succour Hoieda, but this did not much comfort the Spaniards : wherefore Hoieda fearing that they would mutine, hee resolved to returne himselfe to Saint Domingo, to make sufficient prouision of victualls and other things necessarie, leauing for lieutenant in his place Francis Picarro, who was afterwards marquisse of Atabillos, with an expresse charge, that if within fiftie dayes they had no newes of him, they should make the best shift they could. So Hoieda parting from Caribana, hee arriued in the lland of Hispaniola a citie of Saint Domingo, where being tired with the toyle hee had endured, and with the bad successe of his voyage, desperate, wounded, and sicke of his person, he became a Franciscan Frier the remaynder of his life. Diego of Nicuesa who had taken the rout of Beragua, aduanced with a carauell and two brigantines, and past the land without discouerie : but one of his brigantines commaunded by Lope of Olano, turned backe to consider of that coast, then returning to the other brigantine they went together, to enter in at the mouth of the riuer of Chagre, which they called Lagartos, where they found the rest of the army, except Nicuesa, who was strayed with his carauell. Being come to the riuer of Beragua, thinking to finde their captayne Nicuesa there, but hearing not any newes of him, they were out of hope euer to returne vnto their houles, breaking their vessells in peeces which were halfe rotten, they chose Lope of Olano for their captayne, who beganne to make a fort there, and to till the ground, meaning to make his abode there. In the meane time Nicuesa who had lost his carauell, was come to Sorobaro in great want of victualls, so as hee and his companie liued some daies with wild fruits, the which was reported to Lope of Olano, by those men who had stolne away his carauells cocke-boat : wherefore hee presently sent a brigantine vnto him laden with victualls, in the which he came to Beragua : but there enuying the good successe of Olano, he began to charge him that he had incroched vpon his authoritie, intreating him ingratefully, whereat the whole company was much discontented : after which he caused them to dislodge, and to leaue that countrie, where they had soudenly Mays, leading them to Porto Bello, where hee left halfe his men, and led the rest to a place called Mammollor Marble, where hee began a fort, which since hath bene verifamous, which he called Nombre de Dios; there Nicuesa and his people were in such extreame necessitie, as they were forced to eatte their dogges, whereof some were sold for

Nombre de Dios

A for fise and twenty ducats of Castile, yea they did eate the flesh of an Indian, whom they found dead and halfe rotten. They which Hoieda had left in Caribana, seeing that their captaine returned not at the fiftie day assigned, being opprest with hunger, they imbarqued by the aduice of Francis Picarro, and hauing lost one brigantine, they sayled towards Cochibocoa, neere to the which they met with the bachelier Martin Fernandes of Enciso, hauing a shipp laden with victualls and men, and a brigantine, who commaunded them to returne backe with him : and hauing landed and watered at Camari, they came to Vraba, in which gulfes they built a Towne, the which they called Guarda. The King or Cachique of that countrie called Cemaco, being incensed that without his leaue they built vpon his land, hauing hidden all the wealth of his towne among the reedes, hee drew together fise hundred Indians, and beganne to threaten the Spaniards : then was the Bachelier in great distresse, and beganne to make vowes and promises, That if he got the victorie of those men, hee would build a Temple of the Cachiques towne, the which he would haue called, Our Lady of the Ancient of Darien, and that he would send a certayne quantity of gold and silver to the church of our Lady the Ancient of Seuille : whereupon a hundred Spaniards did charge these Indians, and defeated them, and their towne was taken and spoyled, and their hidden treasure found, which was not small, & then they began to build the towne and colonie of the Antique of Darien.

Extremities of the Spaniards
at the Indies

C 17 Whilest that these men guided by auarice, & by the practise of cruelty, thought to amplify the religion of our Lord Iesus Christ at the west Indies, the cardinal D. Francis Ximenez of Cisneros archbishop of Toledo, vnder the same pretext, but it may be thrust on by some other affection, made offer to go in person into Affrike, and there to make warre against the Moores, animated thereunto (besides his owne desire to make that enterprise) by the spoyles which some pyrates Moores had lately made vpon the coast of Spaine, from whence they had carried away many poore slauess of all ages, men and women : and that which did more prick him forward, was, that D. Diego Fernandes Gouverneur of Merscalabler had bene lately defeated by the Moores of Oran, importunately prouoked by him; which disgrace hee desired to reuenge vpon that citie. These things happened during the kings absence, whenas he was at Naples, from whence being returned, hee was presently sollicitied by the Cardinal to vndertake this enterprise of Oran, whither hee offered to goe himselfe : wherein hee had many oppositions and crosses, not so much by the king, as by the noblemen of the court, who scorned him, holding him for a man drunke with ambition, and ignorant how to maintaine himselfe in his ranke and profession, saying, That it was a pleasant change to see the great captaine Gonsal Fernandes famous for so many victories which hee had obtained, now reling of his beads at Vailledolit, and the archbishop of Toledo to leaue his miter and crosse and to put on armes, hauing no thoughts but of killing and shedding of bloud : but those courtiers which found this so strange, had not perused the Annales of Spaine, where they might haue read warrelke exploits of many other Bishops, equalling the greatest captaines of their time. Notwithstanding all the oppositions of these disdaimefull spirites, yet the cardinal obtained what hee pretended : for the king knew his qualities and vertues better then any other, and could so extoll him to his Councell, and other noble men in Court, as in the end they did allow of the Cardinals proposition, they commended it, and perswaded the youth to follow him into Affrike. This warre being commenced, there was present order giuen, that all the gallies and other vessells of warre, and ships to carrie victualls and baggage which were made ready in diuers ports, should come to Malaga or Carthagen : there was prouision made in diuers places of come and all kindes of victuall, great store of caske to water in the enemies countrie, and of powder in euery part of Spaine : and there was commaundement giuen to all vassalls holding fees, commauderies, and militarie benefices, to be there in person, and no man to be exempted but for a very lawful cause, and for the necessary defence of the Christian commonweale : the souldiers which were in the kings pay, and remaining in ordinarie garrisons were also sent, and new leuiues made. There were also two Alcades or Prouosts of Iustice of the court appoynted to assist the cardinal, which were Callego and Aguirro, who

Enterprise of Oran by Ximenez.

Confidence of Ximenes.

Pedro Nanarro
chiefe condutor of the Africane warre.

Colonels at the warre of Oran.

Perseverance of the Cardinal.

Magnanimity
of the Cardinal
Ximenes.

Sedition in the Cardinals camp caused by a refusal.

in the Kings name, and by his authoritie, should containe euerie man in his durtie. <sup>G</sup> Herewithall there were given vnto the Cardinall many blankes signed and sealed by the King; to vse them when neede should require, namely, to institute and appoynt Iudges to punish offenders: wherewith the cardinall would not meddle, for that hee was a Franciscan Friar, and a man of the church. These things provided, the great captaine Gonsalo Fernandez did aduise, that the managing of the warre should bee giuen vnto Pedro Nanarro Earle of Albeto, who some few moneths before had built the fort of Pegnon de Veles against the Moores, and was a captain of iudgement and great experience. The cardinall conferred with him of all matters, and did write to Vargas of the Kings counsell, and to Villalobos commissarie of the victualles, that they should deliuer the victuals and munition ordaind for this warre, as Pedro Nanarro should appoint, and to the colonels to cause their men to march towards Malaga: the chiefe of which were D. Roderigo Moscoso Earle of Altamira, D. John Spinosa, Alphonso Vaneza, Gonsalo Ayora, Pedro de Arias, and John Villalua, having many good and valiant captains vnder them. To Garcia Villarroello was giuen the command of the horse: Ierome Vianello was made marshall of the campe, by reason of the experience and knowledge hee had of the countrie of Africke, and therefore held fittest to choose the situation of the camp, and the places where they should assaile the Moores. Thus the cardinall drew together about foure thousand horse and tenne thousand foot. To this warre, besides the money which the king did furnish out of his treasure, and that which the cardinall drew out of his coffers, the chanoons of Toledo did also contribute: for the cardinall knowing that money is that which maintaines and giues perfection vnto warre, hee would not make any iust proportion of the charge of this worke, or what it might amount vnto, but fought to gather so much together, as hee might haue an ouerplus. The execution of all these prouisions was much delayed, and the voyage almost broken, for many did still detract the Cardinall and his enterprize to the king, teaming it foolish and vnfit for a man of his coate, so as the king being almost altered, was in a manner resolu'd to referre it to another season: the which the commissaries, collectors, captains of galleies, gouernors of townes, and others hauing publique charges, perceiuing, there was not anie one that cared to doe his durtie, nor to obey Pedro Nanarroes commandement; there came not a shippe to Malaga, the victuals and munition which was not neere, were made deere for the cardinales men, who had not his money yet readie: the which D. Pedro seeing, he fought himselfe to diuert this expedition by another enterprize which he propounded vpon some other parts in Africke; wherewith the cardinall was much perplexed, but hee must shew his magnanimity and perseverance: for then hee resolu'd to employ all his meanes, and friends, rather then to faile in that which hee had vnder-taken, which was published to all the world, and had bene a great dishonour to the king, to him, and to all Christendome, if after so great a shew of armes, they should retire without cause: the which hauing made knowne vnto the king with pertinent reasons, and vehement persuations, hee had answer from the king according to his desire, that although hee were dissuaded, yet hee would haue the armie passe into Africke at the first opportunitie, yet notwithstanding there grew new difficulties, the souldiers being hardly stayd, and the victuals and other prouisions, through the couetousnesse and malice of the commissaries, delaied, and in a manner denied, and many of the men armes gone backe: yet hee surmounted all these difficulties, making the rendes-vous for his armie at Carthage: he himselfe parting from Alcala, being accompanied with a great number of his friends and seruants in armes, where there were many Friars of his household, which girded themselues with swords vnder the habite of Saint Francis, hee came to Toledo, where hee made knowne vnto the Chapter the cause of his voyage, and hauing recommended the charge of the archbishopricke in his absence to D. John de Velasco bishop of Calaozza, he came to Carthage. Many of his chanoons desirous to see the world, would haue followed him, but he stayd two onely, and sent backe the rest: those two were Francis Almaraz learned in the lawes, and Charles of Mendoza Abbot of Saint Leocadie. Being readie to imbarque, the souldiers began to call for money, else they would not goe: the author of this sedition was a rascall of Alcala of Henares, called

<sup>A</sup> called Arnold, who had bene a broker in his youth: the which did somewhat trouble the cardinall, not knowing whether it had a further reach, being resolu'd not to giue the souldiers any money vntill they were past into Africke. Vianello master of the campe, caused as many of the seditious as hee could lay hand on to bee hanged, or to passe the pikes; wherewith too great severity, the Cardinall sent Garcia Villarroello yeto him, to admonish him to proceed more mildly for the loue and respect of his person, and the religious habite which hee bare, whom so great rigour did not befit, and the rather for that manie of these souldiers were raised in his Archbishopricke, and were come to the warres for the loue of him, abandoning both wife and children. It is not well knowne in what maner Garcia deliuered his message to Vianello, but he made him a proud answer, to the disgrace of Garcia, and of the Cardinall himselfe; with which affront D.
Garcia being incensed, he could not containe himselfe, but drew his sword and hurt Vianello very fore, and then he fled into a castle, whereas a kinsman of his was captayne, fearing the Cardinales indignation, who was much offended with these actions. Vianello himselfe hurt did somewhat stay the departure of the armie; in the meane time they got the mutined souldiers to imbarke, with promise that they should haue money as soone as they were on shippe boord, the which was performed. Being then imbarked, especially by the care and policie of Salazar colonell of them of Toledo, they sawe in the Generales galley manie sakes full of crownes, deckt with bowes, and many barks about it, drest in like maner, with a great noyse of trumpets and drummes, which made them forget all discontent, receiuing their pay with great ioy. The Cardinall did also imbarke, but hee was forced to stay some dayes for a winde, the which turning faire, they past happily into Africke, being foure score shippes of burthen, thirteene galleies, and many other smaller vessells, carrying tenne thousand foot, and foure thousand horse, with many marchants, victuallers, groomes, pioners and other people necessarie in a campe. The Spaniards which write of this action, say that the Cardinall at his departure from Carthage, had conceiued such a hope of victorie, as hee did sollicite the king by his letters to provide for the gard of Oran which he had already conquered, assuring him that he might shortly make vse of the armie which he led, for his affaires of It-alie, whither hee himselfe would goe if need required, and that it should please him to command him. Hee was not deceiued in his conceit: but comming to the coast of Africke on Ascension day, the whole countrey was presently aduertised by the watches and fiers which were made by the Moores, and all the Christians shippes came safely that night into the port of Mersalcabir, although it were verie darke. Hauing called a Coun-cell, it was resolu'd to seaze presently vpon the streit passage which is betwixt Mersalcabir and Oran, whereas the beacon is set, and to bring the shippes of burthen in view of Oran, and to plant their batterie speedily, before that the Alarabes being aduertised from all parts, should gather together to make head, and hinder their descent.
Vpon this resolution Pedro Nanarro caused all the vessells as soone as the souldiers were landed, to passe towards Oran, and presently to towle all the barks which should carry the horse, holding them vnnessefarie in a Countrey which was rough and vneuen: the which the Cardinall not vnderstanding so well as the other, hee held it for a disgrace which Nanarro meant to doe him, commanding the horse that they should follow by land as well as they could, disposing gardes in conuenient places, for feare of the Moores surprises, the which did serue to some purpose. The passage was attempted and woon, not without great difficultie, being defended by the Moores, and Alarabes, which came out of Oran: the which was in the meane time battered from the Christians shippes and galleies. It happened that many souldiers landing out of the galleies, they hindered the Moores and the Alarabes from flying into the towne, hauing bene chaged from the passage of the mountayne, and were pursued by Pedro Nanarroes troupes, so as the Citie wanting men to defend it, it was taken none knowes how:
the souldiers climbing myraculously ouer the walles and rampiers, with the helpe of their pikes: the which being tryed by manie after the taking of it, they could not get

Vianello
master of the campe
hurt by Garcia Villarroello.

Army parts from Carthage generally.

Oran taken miraculously.

1509 get vp by reason of the height of the walles, and the weaknesse of theyr pikes, G so as this prise was held miraculous; Safa who carried the Cardinales comest was the first that mounted, crying Saint Iago, Ximenes; and victorie. The Moores saying both in defence and courage, that themselves into their Mesquites, or into their strongest houses; some held the market places, being resolved to die fighting. But the citie gates being broke open, and all the armie brought in, all this wretched multitude ranne towards the port which is towards Tremessen, to see if they might escape. But Garcia Villarroello was set there in gard with some horse, to put all them to the sword that should seeke to flee away. It happened that neere vnto that port there lay hidden in the gardens and other places couered with trees a hundred and fiftie horse Alarabes, of those which had beene chased from the passage of the mountaine, with no other intent but to spoil the people that should flee out of the citie (such trecherous and couetous they pray, they bee) when as they saw these Christian horsemen, who watch also for their pray, they charged them sodainely and with such fury, as before they had viewed them, they slew tenne, and put the rest to flight, whereas Garcias horse was slaine. This accident gaue many poore Moores meanes to escape. Within the citie the victorious army putt all to the sword that they found in the streetes or houses, in hatred of their religion, not sparing neyther age nor sex, neyther did the care of the commanders and captaines preuaile any thing, who causing a retreat to be founded, called euery one backe into his quarter, the night approaching: for most of the souldiers being disperfed in the Moores houses and streetes, hauing fed well, fell so soundly asleepe among the dead bodies, as I

H
many of them could not bee awaked the next day at noone: wherefore it was needefull that the Earle Pedro Namarro and the captaines with troups chosen out of their best men to watch that night. Pedro Namarro being sufficiently aduertised of the Moores subtil-ties, did neuer dilame, neyther did he sleepe, vntill hee saw all things assured, performing therein the dutie of a well aduised captaine. The Moores which had fortified themselves in their Mesquites and other places, being summoned to yeeld, and refusing, defelling the conquerors crueltie, were forced. In this slaughter there was a miserable spectacle of a little infant which stroue to take the mothers duggie being slaine. There were slaine as some write, about foure thousand, and about fife thousand prisoners, or only thirtie. The spoile of that citie was esteemed to be worth about 500000 crownes, the which is credible, for they hold that there were fiftene hundred store-houses, or marchants shoppes. To conclude, all men made themselves rich there, yea the verie horse boyes. The cardinall being in the fort of Mersalcabir having had intelligence of the winning of the citie of Oran, caused himselfe to be conducted thither in the gallies, where hee entred with great acclamations, causing a crosse to be carried before him:
K
thence hee receiued the keyes of the Alcazaa, that is to say, of the chiefe fort, from whence there were drawne about 300 poore Christian prisoners and set at libertie.
The spoyle being all gathered together, and kept to be presented vnto him, that he might dispose thereof as generall of the army, hee retained nothing for himselfe, but onely caused certain things to be layd a part for the king: he did separte also a part for the commoditie and vse of the army in generall, leaving the rest to the captaines and souldiers:
L
many of the which who had shewed themselves most valiant he honoured with presents.
It was no small difficultie to cleanse the towne of dead bodies, which did already stinke, and were likely to corrupt the ayre, for the number being great, after that they had buried many in great and deepe pittes, and burnt many, yet did they many dayes after finde some in the streetes and houses; besides, there were few men that would busie themselves to bury the dead, for there was not so great gaine, as in killing them that were liuing. They found about three score peeces of ordonance, and an infinite number of other engins for defence, so as it is admirable, that a towne so well peopled and so well fortified made no defence, being assured of succours from the Alarabes, vagabonds and mercenaries of Africke, whereof they had meane to entertaine good numbers. True it is that some say this city was taken by practise and treason plotted by the Cardinall,
and Treacheries of the mercenarie

Moors.'Duties of a well advised captaine,Number of them that were slaine at Oran.Distribution of the spoyle at Oran.

1509

Oran taken by practise as some hold.

A and by the ministerie of Martin Argoto of Cordoua, and Alonso of Martos prisoners in Oran, since the defeat of D. Diego Fernandes gouernor of Mersalcabir, and that these two did corrupt Hamet Acenax, or Aben Canex, and Isaël Otaybi receivers of the reuenue which the king of Tremessen had there, and a Iew dwelling at Oran, called Cetora, who were the cause that the ports were shut against the Alarabes which were repulsed, from the passage of the mountaine, of the watch, and gaue entrie to the Spaniards:
the cardinall hauing had aduice by these traitors, that he must assaile the towne the day after his arrival, for if he delayed it, he should be deceived of his expectation, for that the king of Tremessen had a mighty army which marcht to succour the city. And they say, that he that was captaine of the Alcazaa or fort of Oran, called Cedrin, was kinsman to Acenax, B and a partisan of his treason, the which is probable: for in truth the Spaniards did first enter into Oran by the fort. The cardinall hauing cleansed the Mesquites, the chiefe of them was dedicated to the Annunciation, and another to Saint Iaques: hee made an hospital called Saint Bernard, and two Couents, one of Franciscan Friars, and the other of Iacobins, and hauing ordered all things concerning religion the best he could, he left the care of state and warre to Pedro Namarro, and so returned into Spaine, for there was no good agreement among them. The cardinall spent a whole yeere in these matters, for he arrived in Spaine the same day that he parted: He did erect a dignitie with the title of an Abbot in regard of this victorie, to the which hee assigned a seate in his church of Toledo.

C 18 This yeere, one thousand fife hundred and nine, D. Catherine Infanta of Castille, widow to Arthur prince of Wales, was married to Henrie king of England, the eight of that name, brother to her deceased husband, who was that yeere come to the crowne, by the decease of their father Henrie the seventh, and was crowned on Saint Iohn Baptists day, which by reason thereof was solemnized with extraordinary pompe in Castille by king Ferdinand: who to perform the articles of the league made at Cambray, sent at the same time a sea-army to the realme of Naples: wherefore the Viceroy of Naples beganne to shew himselfe vpon the coast of Apulia in shew of an enemy, to force the Venetians to yeeld vnto the king his master, the townes of Manfredonia, Trani, Monopoli, Beindez and Otranto, which had beene engaged vnto them, during the precedent D warres with France. The Pope, the Emperour, and the French King did likewise invade them, the euent whereof I will forbear to relate, it belonging not to this Historie of Spaine.

During the warre against the Venetians, there was a controuersie reconciled betwixt the emperor Maximilian, and king Ferdinand, touching the gouernement of Castille, after the death of king Philip. The emperor thought, that being grandfather by the fathers side vnto prince Charles the heire of that realme, and of his brother and sisters, D.
Ferdinand, D. Leonora, D. Maria, D. Isabella and D. Caterina, issued of his sonne and D.
Isane, and therefore pretending right in Castille, it was more fit that hee should haue the gouernement, than the king D. Ferdinand, their grandfather by the mothers side; E but king Ferdinand's title seemed to be the better, for that D. Isane his daughter, the proprietary Queene of Castille was yet liuing, and that it was an vnwoorthy thing that the gouernement of a realme, which had beene honored and enlarged by him with such great conquests, should be taken from him, to give it vnto strangers. This controuersie was ended by the mediation of the French king, vpon these conditions, That the king D.
Ferdinand should gouerne the realme of Castille, Leon &c. in case hee had no sonne by queene Germaine, vntill that prince Charles should come to the age of fife and twentie yeeres, at which time hee should resign the gouernement vnto the prince, with this charge, that during the life of queene Isane his mother hee should not intitle himselfe F king of Castille: That during this time king Ferdinand should pay vnto the emperor fifty thousand ducats yearly, and to prince Charles other great summes of money; and that persisting in the accords of the league made at Cambray, hee should contribute to the warre of Lombardie against the Venetians. After this accord the Emperour and the French King vnderstood, to their great grieue, what the Pope and King Ferdinand had done with the Venetians.

Army of Spaine sent to annoy
the Venetians.Controuersie betwixt the emper-our Maximilian & king Ferdinand reconciled.

*Practises of pope Iulio the 2.
against the French.*

19 The pope doubting that the French king who was mighty in Italie, would seeke some reuenge against him, he began to study by what means he might diuert him from Italy, and if occasion were offered to expell him quite: wherefore he drew the Suiſſes vnto him, hee did sollicite the king of England to make war against the French, and did what hee could to cause D. Ferdinand to declare himselfe their enemy; but the Popes practises were then of small effect, for England stirred not, & king Ferdinand seeing that the French king made no shew that hee meant to annoy the pope, hee persisted in some fort in the league of Cambray, saying that hee would according to the treatie made with the emperor, assist him in the warre of Lombardie whither he sent foure hundred horse, and two thousand Spaniſh foote, vnder the command of the duke of Termini. The pope fearing that the Venetians ruine would also cause that of the state of Rome, and of the other potentates of Italy, he fought to haue some pretext to quarrell with the French king, hoping that if hee declared himselfe his enemy, with any colour he should sway the league of Cambray much; wherefore he tooke an occasion for that king Lewis fauored Alphonſo of Este duke of Ferrara, against whom hee had a quarrell, punishing him with his spirituall and temporall armes: and to gratifie king Ferdinand and to draw him to his deuotion, hee confirmed vnto him the possession of the realme of Naples, with the said conditions that the king of Arragon his predecessors had formerly held it: the which hee had before refused, and moreover hee drew a promise from the king, to aide him with three hundred men at armes, if need were, for the defence of the territories of the church. King Ferdinand foreseeing and fearing the miseries that might ensue, if the French king and the pope should grow to an open quarrell, hee did all good offices to reconcile them, but hee could not: for the pope was obstinately bent to oppress the duke of Ferrara, and the king held it dishonourable for him to abandon his allies: whereupon king Lewis moued with a iust indignation, began to treat a new league against pope Iulio, with the emperor and other princes and potentates of Christendome, persuading Maximilian as emperor, to pursue the vniuing of the lands held in Italie by the popes belonging rightly vnto the empire, and that the Germans and French ioyntly should demaund a generall Councell, for the reformation of the pope and clergie: and to giue some forme thereunto for his part, hee called an assembly of the prelates of France, in manner of a Nationall Councell, in the citie of Orleans, to the end they should withdraw themselves from the popes obedience by a decree. The prelates hauing transferred the assembly from Orleans to Towers, they drew some articles to be presented vnto the pope in the name of the French church, and in case hee did refuse them, then to protest that they did not acknowledge him for their superiour, appointing in that respect another assembly within fixe months after, of the clergie of France. To this enterprise the king had drawne some cardinals, namely D. Bernardin of Caruajal bishop of Siguenſa cardinal of Saint Croix a Spaniard, who had bene apostolike legat in the emperours court, hoping to make king Ferdinand to yeeld vnto it, for the respect hee bare vnto the emperor. The pope besides the interest of the Venetians and of all Italy which did moue him, being in heart an irreconcilable enemy to the French, and to all them beyond the mountaines, he desired nothing but troubles, as appeared by his courses. In the mean time king Ferdinand, by reason of an army of Turkes which had bene discovered neere vnto Orranto, was forced to call home his souldiers which he had sent into Lombardie, in fauour of the league of Cambray: which made the emperor and French king suspect that hee would ioyne with the pope; whereupon they sent vnto him to know his intent: whereunto king Ferdinand made a plaine answer, without any ambiguitie, that although by reason of the fee of Naples, hee had furnished the pope with some horsemen, yet hee meant not for all that to leaue the league of Cambray, but would entertaine it more then before: and therefore hee promised to send his souldiers backe into Lombardie: but as for the other league which they treated of, hee could not yeeld vnto it, and much lesse that which concerned a generall councell, for that, sayd this catholike king, it were a scandalous thing, and would trouble all Christendome; being most apparent, that this councell was not propounded but to offend the pope, whom both he and all Christian Princes did acknowledge to be Christs vicar in the church of God: and that peace and vnion should be pounded to reforme the pope.*

*Councell pro-

*Cardinal of S.
Croix a Spaniard against the pope.*

*Excuses made by king Ferdinand for not yeelding to a
councell.*

A bee the end of all holy councells, wherefore hee excused himselfe from entering into any other league, then that of Cambray, exhorting them for the tranquillitie of the state of Christendome (tome and dismembred with warre) to hearken to some good agreement with the Pope, notwithstanding which answer the French king and the Emperour made a new League, for the executing of the league of Cambray against the Venetians, leauing libertie for the Pope to enter within fixe monethes, and for the kings of Spaine and Hungarie within foure: and if the Pope should refuse to enter into their league, then they would call a generall Councell: for the effecting whereof, the Emperour should assemble the Prelates in Germany, as the French king had done them in France. Thus, great miseries did threaten Italie, through the obstinacy of Pope Iulio.

20 Whilst that the Christian Princes of Europe treated of these things in the yearre one thousand five hundred and tenne, the coast of Africke was much annoyed by the army of Spaine, of the which the earle Pedro Nauarro was generall, who tooke the citie of Bugia, which had bene a great Vniuersity for the Moores; the which strooke so great a terrour throughout all Africke, as the towne of Algier and many places vpon that coast became tributaries to the crowne of Castille, agreeing with Pedro Nauarro what annual rent they should paie, and sending embassadors into Spain, who brought with them 50 Christian slaves, and they landed at Valencia, at such time as king Ferdinand hauing left the Infant D. Ferdinand his grand-child with Cardinal Ximenes, whom they called the Cardinal of Spain, and the councell at Valladolid, he came into Arragon, and called the estates of the realmes to Monſon. The earle Pedro Nauarro continuing his conquests, hee woone Tripoli in Barbarie: and soone after, about the middle of August, D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo arrived at Gelbes with some ships and Spaniſh souldiers, the which hee ioyned to the army of D. Pedro Nauarro. D. Garcia was eldest sonne to D. Frederic of Toledo duke of Alua, a gallant knight, but vnforgunate in this expedition, for hauing landed in that countie with his troopes, hee was fought with all, vanquished and slaine vpon the place by the Arabians, and could not be relieved by the earles army, which was at sea, his men before they came to fight with the enemy, being almost dead with thirst which they had endured in that drie and barren countie. Some did taxe the earle D. Pedro Nauarro for this rout of D. Garcia, saying, that hee would not succour him as he might, being discontented and ialous of his comming in qualitie of generall of that lamentable enterprise.

21 At the west Indies Diego of Nicuesa had not much better successe in his Colonie of Nombre de Dios, which was built vpon the firme land. Those also that were in the Colonie of the Antique of Darien were also in mutinies & seditions among themselves, raised by a great souldier, but verie mutinous, called Vasco Nugnes, of Balboa, borne at Badajoz, who had incensed some of the people, against the bachelor Martin Hernandez, of Enciso, who was appointed gouernour in that place by the king: but the Bachelers Letters were vnforgunately lost, whenas hauing caused Francisco Picaro, and the companions of Hoieda to returne with him, the ship wherein hee was, was cast away at his comming to Vraba: wherefore Vasco Nugnes hauing quarreled with him, saying, that such charges did not belong to Bachelers, and hee opposing to the contrary that he had receiued it from the king, he could not shew it: so as there was great & long contention betwixt them, vntill the comming of Rodrigo Henriques of Colmenares, with two carauels laden with victuals and prouisions, and 70 men, who went from the port of Beata of S. Domingo, to seeke out Hoiedas companions. He being come to a place called Garia, had landed with fifty Spaniards, to fetch water, but they were instantly charged by a great number of Indian archers, who slue 47 and tooke the rest aliue, and then they ate them all: whereupon Rodrigo dislodging, he entered into the gulph of Vraba, where he found some steps and marks of the Spaniards landing: wherefore he shot off certain peeces of ordnance, and made a great smoake, to giue aduertisement that he was on shoare, to end that if there were any Spaniards they should answer him. Those of the Antique of Darien perceiving the smoake, and hearing the shot, made answer in like maner: wherefore

*Excuses made
by king Ferdinand for not yeelding to a
councell.*

*Bugia taken by Pedro Nauarro.
Algier tributary to Castille.*

Tripoli in Babarie taken.

D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo slaine by the A-rabians.

*Behaviour of the Spaniards
at the west Indies. Seditions among them.*

1510

force Colmenares directed his course that way, where he was receiued with great ioy. The Spaniards were relieued by him of their miseries & pouertie: for had he not arrived, they had been cut in peeces, or perished for hunger. Roderigo Henriquez of Colmenares labored in such sort as he did pacifie these mutines of the Antique of Darien, making them all consent, except Vasco Nugnes of Balboa, and the Bachelor Martin Hernandez of Enciso, who were the heads of the factions, that the superintendency & authority should bee giuen to Diego Xuñesca, as to him who had order from the king to command. And then Colmenares set saile towards the fort of Nombre de Dios, with one ship & a brigatin, & hauing found Diego Xuñesca there poor, he did comfort him with good news of his election, so as after much discourse of his misfortunes, he embarked him 60 with his companions, to carry him to the Antique of Darien: but Niñesca being an indiscreet man, & full of arrogancy, he began in his voyage to braue & threaten them which had not yet received him for their magistrat, saying, he would reach Balboa and Enciso, the authors of these factions, to hazard the affairs of the king their master by their diuisions, & that he would punish them severely, and put others in their places, that he would take away their gold, & doe many other wonders: which words proceeding as from a mad man, displeased Roderigo Henriquez of Colmenares, and others of his company, who failed not to make report thereof to them of the Antique, yea to the 2 heads of the factions, who receiued Niñesca with 1000 scoffes & injuries, making him to take another course with his 60 companions. This wretched directing his voyage to the Iland of Hispaniola, with an intent to accuse the bachelor Enciso, & Vasco Nugnes of Balboa, before the admiral D. Diego Columbus, eldest sonne to Christopher Columbus, then lieutenant general or viceroy in those countries, in the place of the commander Nicholas of Ouato, he perished at sea, with all his company. The distention betwixt Enciso & Balboa continuing, Roderigo Henriquez of Colmenares did adhere to Vasco Nugnes, of Balboa, who shewed himself so proud & rash as he not only attempted to put the bachelor Martin into prison, & to confiscate his goods, but, if some had not staied him, he was resolved to do him a publike shame, which he himselfe did better deserue.

1511

The yere 1511 being come, in the which king Ferdinand after the assembly of Moson, being returned to Madrid, & grieving for the death of D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, and of his men at Gelbes, he caused a great fleet to be made ready in the ports of Malaga, Gibaltar & Calis, being resolved to go in person into Africke, & to make war against the Infidels: from the which he was diuerted, by the intreaties of the estates of his realms, shewing him the inconueniences which were to be feared, if his person should miscarie, beseeching him to giue the charge of that war to his captains. The hatred betwixt the Pope and French king, was very great: the Pope did besiege Miradola, with such vehemency, being himselfe at the siege in person (against the aduice of the colledge, & the dignity of his papal estate) that he took it, and hauing put 500 Spaniards, & 300 Italiās there in garrison, he took the way to Bolenia, the princes seeking to quench this fire by all good means, yea the king D. Ferdinand by his embassadors, D. Ierome Vich of Valécia in the court of Rome, & D. Pedro of Vtrea, in that of the emperor, whom he desired to reconcile with the Venetians, hoping that the French king would afterwards yeeld vnto it: intreating them all to giue him this contentment, to see Christendom at peace, that he might with more liberty attend the war of Africke; an enterprize which by reason should please, and be fauoured by all Christian Princes: but he labored particularly to diuert the emperor from proceeding to an assembly or conuocation of the Prelates of Germany, concerning a Councell, the which hee did vterly disallow: propounding instead thereof an assembly of embassadors in the city of Mantoua, to consult of a pacification. By his care and diligence this assembly was made, and there met at Mantoua, for him the abouenamed embassadors: for the emperor sent the bishop of Gurgensis, and for the French king, the bishop of Paris, whose labour proved fruitlesse. The time was come in regard of the league of Cambray to retyre king Ferdinand three hundred men at armes, which had serued the Pope, wherefore these horsemen being retained longer then was agreed, they returned to Naples. The Pope being obstinate and furious, not caring for the Emperour, and much lesse for the French king, was forced to dislodge from Bolenia, for feare of the French army, which did approach, which city, either for that it was abandoned by them he left there,

King Ferdinand
opposeth against the calling of a Councell.

or

A or by intelligence with the Bentiuoli, came into the power of king Lewis, without any difficulty: and soone after there were bills set vp in the publike places at Mantoua, and at Bolenia, declaring that a generall councell was assigned in September that yere 1511, to the which (the Pope and his adherents being accused of many crimes) were cited: for the which the Pope (being a cholericke and furious man) thought to run mad, calling those Cardinals which were opposite vnto him, wicked Sectaries, vsurpers of the Soueraigne bishops authority, to whom only (said he) it did belong to call a councell, inciting the Vniuersities, and faculties of diuinitie, who declared this act to be hereticall. The Emperour had made offer as a fir place, and fatall to disordred Popes, of the cite of Constance, Turin had also bene propounded, but Pisa was held most conuenient. The fury of this war was so great in Italie, as king Ferdinand (being zealous of his realm of Naples) sent three thousand Spaniards to his viceroy D. Raymond of Cardonea, vnder the command of Pedro Nauarero, earle of Albeto, still doubting that king Lewis did gape after it, notwithstanding the accords made in regard of the marriage of Queene Germaine, and hee deferred his voyage of Africke, attending the issue of these troubles, and of the councell of Pisa, the chief fauourers whereof, were the Cardinals of S. Croix a Spaniard, Bayeux, Saint Malo, Albret, brother to John of Albret king of Nauarre, Frenchmen; they of Cosenia, & Saint Seuerin, Italians: but Pope Julius, for that he would not seeme to faile in his pastoral office, pretending that the calling of a councell did belong to him, and to disperse that of Pisa, hee did publish another at Saint Iohn de Latran in Rome: the which wrought great effects in the hearts of princes, and of religious people which did abhor schismes. So as notwithstanding that the French king had sent 24 bishops to Pisa, in the behalfe of the Clergie of France, expecting that the emperor according to their accord should do the like for the Clergie of Germany, yet whether retained by conscience or otherwise, he neither sent bishops nor embassadors, finding sometimes one euasion sometimes another.

23 King Ferdinand being also solicited by the Pope, and (as it is credible) hauing good intelligence with him, he made a publike declaration, that seeing neither by intreaties, nor persuasions, he could not diuert the French king from his resolution to disquiet the Apostolike see, hee tooke it into his protection: and it is likely that the emperor Maximilian had beene also wonne by these two. This declaration was made at Seuille; whether soone after came letters from the councell of Pisa, summoning king Ferdinand to send his Prelates, and embassadors thither, whereof hee made no accompt: whereupon he passed from Seuille and came to Burgos, from whence as the Spaniards say, he sent to John of Albret king of Nauarre, to intreat him not to beleue the councell of the Cardinal his brother, nor to adhere in any sort to that false Councell of Pisa. Yet the king of Nauarre ioined with the French king, & was declared a schismaticke; which made king Ferdinand to invade his realm, as we wil shew. And being now come to open war king Ferdinand sent the whole army which he had prepared for Africk to Naples, whereof he made D. Alfonso of Caruajal, son to D. Diego of Caruajal, Lord of Xodar, general, and one called Camudio, Colonnell of the foot. In this army were 3000 foot, and some 1100 horse, whereof 600 were light horse. During his abode at Burgos, he had news that Pope Julius was fallen dangerously sicke, so as there was neither hope of life nor recovery, the which held many potentates in suspence, fearing some great alteration, but he recovered. From Burgos he sent embassadors to Henry king of Englad his son in law, to moue him to make war against the French king vpon his old pretenensions; against whom & his Councell of Pisa, there was a league made, which had bin breeding betwixt the king D. Ferdinand, the Pope, & the Venetians, since the beginning of these quarrels, vnder colour to defend the rights of the Apostolike see, to disperse the schismaticall & hereticall councell of Pisa, for the recoveries of the cities of Bolenia & Ferrara, & the restoring of them to the church. King Ferdinand did offer for this war 12 hundred men at armes, one thousand light horse, & 10000 Spanissh foot, the Signiory of Venice eight hundred men at armes, one thousand horse, and 8000 foot, & the Pope 400 men at armes, five hundred light horse, & 6000 foot: Moreover 12 galleys for the king D. Ferdinand, & 14 for the Venetians: making D. Raymond of Cardone viceroy of Naples, generall of this warre: for the entertainment of which army the Pope should furnish tweury thousand ducats a month, and the Venetians as much, and forty thousand

Cardinals
favouring
the council of Pisa

Warre betwixt
France and Spaine.

League betwixt
king Ferdinand
the Pope and the Venetians.

1511

thousand presently: and this league was published at Rome, in the church of Santa Maria del populo, in Octob. this year one thousand five hundred and 11, into the which the king of England should be admitted, if he would. After which they did admonish & proceeded against the Cardinals which disobeyed the Pope with the accustomed ceremonies, solemnities, and delays, to bring the into the bosom of the holy mother church, that is to say, to the Councell assigned by the Pope at Saint John de Latran: which if they disobeyed, they should be deprived of their dignities and livings, and punished as schismatics and hereticks; which act was celebrated by the Pope, in his pontificall habit, and in a consistorie of seven partiall Cardinals. Those of the contrarie faction, notwithstanding all this, began to hold the councell of Pisa, whereas the Florentines would not suffer 3 hundred Frenchmen at armes to enter, which the Fathers and Prelates demanded for their gard, being led by Gaston of Foix, the kings nephew, and duke of Nemours, fearing least they should seafe vpon that city for the French king. The fathers comming to the first session, they were so mockt by the people, & receiued so many indignities, as they were forced to transerre the councell of Pisa to Milan, where they had neither more honor, nor better vsage, notwithstanding that they were in the French kings dominion, where they held their second session, the Cardinall of Saint Croix a Spaniard being president; where they attended the prelates of Germany, and the Emperors ambassadors in vaine, but they wanted no excuses.

Order of the conception of Nunnes.

These seeds of warre being cast among christians, Pope Julio doing his duty in matters, of religion, he confirmed the new order of the conception of Nunnes, instituted in the citie of Toledo some yeares before, by one of the ladies of Queene Isabell, who was second wife to king John the 2, her name was D. Beatrice de Silva, of Portugal, who being suspected by her mistresse, for that by reason of her great beauty, many courted her, and there grew daileie quarrels among the courtiers, she was put in prison, where being kept three daies in teares and heauines, without bread or drinke, shee was moued to make a vow of chastity, and for this cause, they say, the virgin Mary appeared vnto her in the habit which the Nunnes doe now weare, that is, a blew cloake, and a white hood, and did comfort her. Being out of prison, and going to Toledo, with an intent to be a religious woman, there appeared two Franciscane friers vnto her, which sight made her think that they were sent to coöfesse her, & then she should be put to death: but these fathers told her that she should be the mother of many daughters, declaring vnto her the spiritual vnderstanding of it, that it should be of many religious women, & then they vanished: wherefore she going on her way, being come to Toledo, she put herselfe into the monasterie of religious women, of S. Dominike the royal, where she remained 30 yeeres in a secular habit, liuing holily; afterwards she remoued with 12 nuns to a place where now S. Foy is, which in former times was called the palace of galiena, being desirous to institute an order in honor of the virgin Mary, and there she remained with her company, by the permission of the queen D. Isabel, wife to the king D. Ferdinand now reigning, vntill that the habit was confirmed vnto them by Pope Innocent the eight, & the office of the conception, vnder the rule of Cristeaux, without any other new order: in the which hauing continued some time, they ioyned with the Nunnes of Saint Peter de las Dueñas, of the order of Saint Benet, making a medley of the rules of the Benedictins & Bernardines, vntill that Cardinall Francis Ximenes, then prouinciall of the Franciscans, and generall reformer in Spaine, made them to leaue the rules of Saint Bernes and Saint Bernard, and to take the habit and the Office of the conception, vnder the rule of Saint Clare, putting them into the monasterie which at this day is called of the Conception, which was wont to bee the conuent of Franciscane Friers, transported by reason of them to S. Iohn des Rois. There this yere 1511 Pope Julio confirmed them in their owne rule and order of the conception, leauing that of S. Clare. This yere all the coast of Affrike was terrified vpon the brute of the great preparation which had been made in Spaine, to invade them: The king of Tremessen sent his ambassadors to king Ferdinand, to offer him vassalage, and a tribute of 13000 double ducats of gold payable in the citie of Oran. In Spaine there died D. Beatrice of Bouadilla, Marquesse of Moya, and soone after her husband D. Andrew de Cabrera.

The yere one thousand five hundred and twelue following, king Ferdinand having vnderaken the Popes defence, hee committted D. Raymond of Cardona viceroy of Naples, appointed generall of the holy league, to ioine his forces with the Popes and Venetians; the which was done at Imola, where they made the body of the army, in the which was Legate for the Pope Cardinall John of Medicis, of the tide of Santa Maria in Dominica. These forces: sitting into Lombardie, in a manner all that the duke of Ferrara held of this side Po, yielded vnto the league, without any force, but La Bastie, which the earle Pedro Nauarro tooke: and then they camped before Bolonia: but Gaston of Foix duke of Nemours, a gallant young nobleman comming to releuee it, the army of the league was forced to retire to Imola. On the other side the Venetians tooke Bresse, but not the Castle, and Bergamo, with other places were yielded vnto them: but the duke of Nemours comming to succour the castle of Bresse, hee encountered John Paul Baillois vpon the way, with part of the Venetian army; and put them to rout, and then hee entred the towne and put eight thousand Venetians and inhabitants to the sword, hee tooke Andrew Griiti their commander prisoner, with Anthonye Iustinien, and other men of great quality: and soone after recouered Bergamo, and all the places which the Venetians had taken. In the meane time king Ferdinand prepared a fleet in the ports of Biscaye and Guipulcoa, to assaile France vpon the coast of Guienne, hauing induced the king of England to reuieue the old quarrell; who at the perswasion of the Popes embassador, had made an assemblie of the Prelates of his realme, and promised to send to the Councell of Latran: and for a greater demonstration of his hatred, hee caused the French ambassadors which did reside in his court to dislodge.

uing

1511

Exploit of Gaston of Foix.

25 During these troubles, the king D. John, and the Queene D. Catherine of Nauarre, his wife, did enioy their realme in peace, since the expulsion of the earle of Lerin the Constable, and of Lewis of Beaumont his sonne, with others of that faction: then all their care was to restore it to the ancient estate, and the places reunited which were distracted and held by the king of Castille: for the which, and to demand other rights which they pretended; they had sent many ambassadors to king Ferdinand, who had returned with good hope to obtaine what they desired; of the greater part: wherefore they sent againe doctor John of Alasu Seignior of Pamierie, Ladron of Monleon, and the Protonotarie Martin of laureguislar, who were of the councell, with ample instructions to capitulate, compound, and end all their pretentions, in this form: That they should intreat the king of Aragon, Regent of Castille, that if he made any accord with the French king, the kings of Nauarre might be comprehended. That the ambassadors should make great instance to king Ferdinand that the townes of Saint Vincent, Sos, Arcois, Garde and Bernedo, and moreover the places of Sofietra, held by him, and the crowne of Castille, might bee restored vnto them according vnto the will of the deceased Queene D. Isabella at her death, as places belonging to the Crowne of Nauarre: That in like manner they should demand as hereditarie things, the Duchies of Gandie, & of Mombanc, the earldome of Ribagorfa and the citie of Salaguer in Aragon; the duchie of Pegnafel, and the Infantazgo of Castille, the townes of Cuellar, Castro Xeris, Haro, Villalon, and other lands; and moreover the summe of foure hundred and twenty thousand a hundred and twelue florins of gold, fixe soulz and eight deniers of Aragon, giuen in dowrie by king Charles the third of Nauarre, to his sonne in law, D. Iohn king of Aragon: These were the pretentions of the kings of Nauarre against Castille; for the which they had beene fed with many vaine hopes, that reason should be done therein: but in effect king Ferdinand shewed by his delays that he had no such meaning, & that he expected some other occasion to acquit himselfe, and yet not to leaue any thing that he held: wherein the best euasion hee had was the restitution of them of Beaumont, which he knew to be most odious to the kings of Nauarre. The ambassadors hauing done their duties, and lost many iourneys in following the court of Castille, they returned without any effect, discharging themselves vnto their kings D. Iohn and D. Catherine, who were in France: whereupon they returned into Nauarre, whereas being, when as the above-mentioned warres were hottest in Italie, king Ferdinand who had a designe to leade an Armye into Gascogne, in fauour of the English, sent a

Embassage of Nauarre to king Ferdinand

Q999 ij

demand

demaund a passage of them for his souldiers victuals, and munition, and for his assurance, they should giue him in hostage, the castles of Estelle and Maye in Nauarre, and that of Saint John de pied de Port, vpon the frontiers, of Fraunce: promising them, as hee had done at other times, in requittall of this pleasure, to restore vnto them the townes of Saint Vincent, Arcos, Garde, and others, of the principallitie of Viana. The king D. John, and D. Katherine were much troubled at this demaund, for they sawe themselves much ingaged to either of these two realmes of France and Castille, so as in the quarrels of these great Monarchs, taking the party of the one, they declared themselves enemies to the other, and being neters, they were a pray to both. Being thus in suspence, their owne vncle Amad of Albrer, Lord of Obal, being then in their court ambassador for France, made them to adhere taking Lewis his master, promising them infinite fauours, and aduancements, from which Mondogredo ambassador for the king of Castille sought in vaine to diuert them, shewing them the miseries that would ensue. King Ferdinand being presently aduertised hereof, hee thought it a fit occasion to further his designs, and to write the crowne of Nauarre to that of Castille: wherefore hee made great complaints of this resolution and adherence of the kings of Nauarre to the French king, whom hee called schismaticall, and an enemy to the church of Rome, and to Pope Iulio; who hauing vsed the ordinarie meanes, by admonitions and fatherly persuasions to these princes, according to the forme and stile of Rome, to quit the allyance of the perpetuall, and to ioyne with him and his adherents, seeing that they did persist to hold the party of France, hee proceeded against them by the last remedie, declaring them by the aduice of the consistorie of Cardinalls; schismatickes and heretikes, depriving them and their posteritie, of all right to the realme of Nauarre, and of all their goods, giuing and transferring them to king Ferdinand regent of Castille, whose forces being prepared to passe into Guienne, did send him sily to conquer Nauarre. King John of Albrer vnderstanding of all these proceedings, hee sent D. Alfonso Carrillo, his constable, and D. Pedro of Nauarre marshall of the realme, ambassadors, to present, if it were possible, these apparent dangers, who hauing found Lewis of Beaumont, and other banished men in the court of Castille, much fauoured, soliciting D. Ferdinand to vnderstande the enterprise of Nauarre, holding it to bee the onely meanes for them to bee restored, they were so ill entertained, as they made all the hast they could to returne, to make report vnto the king and to the estates assembled at Tudele, that all things tended to warre. King Ferdinand hauing the Popes sentence for a pretext to assaile this countrey, and for meanes the intelligences of many fauorers, of the faction of Beaumont, hee held it an easie matter to conquer it: wherefore hee deferred the warre of Guienne: yet for his greater iustification hauing gathered his armie together about the citie Victoria, whereof Frederic of Toledo duke of Alua was the generall, hee sent againe to summon the kings of Nauarre to deliuer into his hands the aboue named places and castles, aduertising them that vpon refusal thereof, hee would put the Popes sentence in execution, and spoile them not onely of Nauarre, but of all that they held in France. Notwithstanding all these protestations, king John refused him the passage, and the delimerie of the castles, obiecting the league and allyance which hee had with the French king, neither could hee persuade himselfe that king Ferdinand, whom hee had neuer offended, should pursue him with such rigour as hee said, but hee found himselfe deceived, for the duke of Alua had commandement presently, that leauing the way of Guipuscoa, he should enter into Nauarre, to conquer it. At that time by the death of D. Bernardin of Velasco, first duke of Frias, & 3 earle of Haro, his brother and heire, D. Inigo of Velasco was made constable of Castille. There dyed also that yere D. John de Sylua, earle of Cisuentes, president of the council, and Ferdinand infant of Granado, sonne to king Maiey Alboacen. In Germany the emperor who fought but an occasion to breake with the French king, had called an assembly of the Prelates at Ausbourg, who declared the counsell of Pisa to bee odious, and worthy to bee reiected: The emperor had in like sort refused the marriage which had bin offered by king Lewis of his second daughter Renee with prince Charles

King of Nauarre adheres to the French king.

Sentence giuen by the Pope against John Albrer king of Nauarre.

Demands vncle will made by king Ferdinand to him of Nauarre.

Castille.

- A of Austria, and the restitution of that which he held in Bourgondie: Yet the warre continued still in Italie, and successfull for the French, who hauing taken many places in Romania, and deliuered them to the cardinall of S. Seuerin, who was created Apostolike Legat for the Councell at Pisa, they besieged Rauenna, which the armie of the league comming to succour, the French defeated them in battell, but with the losse of their Generall Gaston of Foix, duke of Nemours, who pressing the enemy that fled, was slaine. The losse of this battell much troubled the Pope and all the cardinals at Rome, and their only care was how to auoyd the furie of the French, whom they thought to beat their backs: And had not king Ferdinand's embassadour vsed great diligence, Pope Iulio had cast himselfe into the Florentines armes, who were friends and allies to the French king, to obtaine some good conditions of peace by their meanes: but being better informed of the whole successe by Iulio de Medicis, who was afterwards cardinall, and then Pope Clement the seventh, he changed his resolution, and continued the warre, being encouraged by the descent of the Swisses into Italie, to defend the Church of Rome. At that time began the first fission of the Councell of Latran, that of Milan being so ridiculous, as the cardinall John de Medicis, a prisoner, hauing ample authoritie from the Pope, gaue dispensations, absolved from censures, and did all acts of an Apostolike Legat, with a great concourse of people, before the cardinals and prelates of the opposite Councell, the which the gouernours of Milan for the French king did not contradict.
- C King Lewis fearing to be assailed in Fraunce by the forces of Spaine and England, and the Swisses being incensed against him, hauing passed the Alpes with the cardinall of Sion, the Popes Legat, the Emperour Maximilian hauing also called home all the Germans that serued the French, prest with many difficulties, he was forced to yeeld the field to the enemy, and (after that he had sought an accord in vaine) to abandon the estate of Milan, and to retire his forces into France, and to defend his owne. The cardinals of the Councell of Pisa retired: Bologna, and in a manner all other places were recovered, Genoa obtained her libertie, and John Fregoso was chosen duke; so as the French king had nothing remaining in Lombardie, but the castle of Milan, that of Cremona, Bresse, Cremona, Lignago, the Lanterne of Genoa, and Castellet.
- D 28 Thus Pope Iulio seeing his affaires so successfull, began to thunder out his spirituall censures and fulminations, against K. Lewis, causing him to be declared, by a decree of the Councell of Latran, an heretike and schismaticke, depriving him for that cause of all honour and royall dignitie, yea of the name of Most Christian, which had bene so long affected to the kings of Fraunce; which title he would transference to the kings of England: And on the other side he did honour the king D. Ferdinand with the title of Catholike, the which the kings of Spaine carrie at this day, vnder colour of the happie warres which he had made and ended, against the Moores which had vsurped the provinces in Spaine, and other Infidels; but being chiefly moued by the good offices which he had done for him and the See of Rome, opposing himselfe at that time against the French and the Councell of Pisa, and fauouring the designs of Pope Iulio, which were to prejudice the Crowne of France: whereof letters and Apostolike briefes were presented vnto king Ferdinand, being in the citie of Burgos, in the yeare 1512.
- The realme of France was not so easie to be swallowed vp as that of Nauarre: which was invaded by the duke of Alua, king John and queene Katherine being at Pampelone, and the Castilian armie within eight leagues of them; they were so vnprovided of all meanes to make resistance, as king John could take no better resolution, then to abandon the realme, and retire himselfe into Fraunce. The inhabitants of Pampelone seeing themselves forsaken, demaunded of him, That seeing he left them, what his pleasure was they should doe; Defend your selues (said he) as well as you can, and if you cannot make it good, yeeld vnto king Ferdinand vpon some good conditions, for I will take good order that he shall not long enjoy Nauarre. Queene Katherine found it strange, that the king her husband should so soone abandon his realme, before that the armie of Castille had done any notable exploit: but whether it were feare, or distrust that he had of them of Pampelone, who he knew were affected to the earle of Lerin, and to the faction of Beaumont, he left it, notwithstanding all her reasons and persuasions, on the two and twentieth Battell of Rauenna.

Despaire of the Pope.

Victorie of Rauenna vnprofitable for the French.

Popes fulminations against K. Lewis the 28.

Nauarre.

King John of Albrer forced to retire into France.

Speech of Q.
Katherine to the king her husband

Faction of Beaumont in the Court of Navarre.

Articles upon the yielding of Pampelone to the duke of
Alua.

of Iulie, this yeare 1512; saying, That he had rather lue in woods and mountaines, than to be a prisoner in his owne country. His retreat was by the vallis of Baztan, and the castle of Moya, and so went to the Court of France, leaving the queene his wife at Pampelone, who hauing stayed there but two dayes after him, followed him, with prince Henrique her sonne, and three daughters; and hauing ouertaken him, among other speeches full of bitterness, she said vnto him: O King, you shall remaine Iohn of Albret, and neuer thinke more of the realme of Nauarre, for that hauing bene superfluously good, you haue bene the lesse esteemed of your subjects, and thus undone your selfe and your realme. D. Pedro the marshall of the realme, parted with these princes, and many other knights of the faction of Grammont. D. Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lerin, had such intelligences in the Court, and throughout the realme of Nauarre, as hee had particular aduise of all that was done, whereof he aduertised the duke of Alua, who marching before, came and camped within two leagues of Pampelone, hauing in his armie six thousand foot, a thousand men at armes, and fifteene hundred light horse, Castilians, besides the supplies of Beaumont, their friends, kinsfolkes, and partisans. Then the inhabitants of Pampelone sent forth vnto the duke, requiring that they might be receiued vpon certaine lawes and conditions (for they had no power to defend themselves, nor it may be, will:) To whom answer was made by the duke, That it was for the vanquisher to prescribe lawes vnto the vanquished; wherefore they should resolue to yeeld themselves freely into his hands, or to attend all the miseries and calamities which are usually felt in the expugnation of townes: by reason whereof he restrained their demands to the obseruation of their ancient priuiledges and liberties; which was granted them, and moreover some prouisions for the present estate. Among these articles that were agreed vpon, the chiefe of them were these.

- 1 That the duke of Alua should from thenceforth be patron and mediator for the inhabitants of Pampelone, in the demands and requests which they should make vnto the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Iouane, for all matters either honourable or profitable.
- 2 That such as should remaine vassals or seruants to the kings of Castille, should be maintained in their goods and estates, fees, rents, and pensions whatsoever, which they had bene accustomed to receiue from precedent kings. And to such as meant to retire themselves, such things should not be payed, but to the day of the yeelding vp of the citie.
- 3 That the kings receiutors should gather vp the rents, reuenues, imposts, and other profits of the Crowne, as they had bene accustomed, so as they did remaine in the citie of Pampelone.
- 4 That the wages of Counsellors and Presidents of iustice, Auditors of the royall accounts, and other officers and magistrats of the kings D. Iohn and D. Katherine, should be paid them, with condition that they should remaine in Pampelone.
- 5 That the inhabitants of Pampelone should remaine faithfull seruants to the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Iouane, and in regard thereof they should enjoy their goods mouable and immouable, rights, and ancient priuiledges: And in like manner those which had followed the kings D. Iohn and D. Katherine, if within thirtie dayes they did retorne into the country.
- 6 That the inhabitants of Pampelone should not be bound to lodge any one without paying for it, no more than they of Saragoffe, Valencia, and Barcellona.
- 7 That all knights and gentlemen which within thirtie dayes should submit themselves to the seruice of the kings D. Ferdinand and queene Iouane, should be well and honourably intreated in their persons and goods, and nor called in question for any crime formerly committed in the time of the diffentions and factions of Beaumont and Grammont.
- 8 That when they should goe vnto the warre, their priuiledges and rankes, touching their persons and qualities, should be maintained, as in the time of precedent kings.
- 9 That the rights of prouisions of victuals, silkes, money, and other things due by the kings D. Iohn and D. Katherine, to their officers, citizens of Pampelone, which came to serue the kings of Castille, should be paid them, so as it were duly verified.
- 10 That if any of these articles were prejudiciall to any one, the iudgement thereof should

A should be referred to the kings of Castille, D. Ferdinand, and D. Iouane his daughter.

Many other heads were propounded, whereof some were granted, and others sent backe vnto the king and his counsell; but these were the most remarkable, the which were promised and sworne by the duke of Alua, in the name, and with the consent of the kings of Castille, the foure and twentieth of Iulie, in the presence of D. Lewis of Beaumont the constable, D. Antonio of Acugna, bishop of Cuenca, Pedro Lopes of Padilla, Ferdinand Suarez of Toledo, and other knights. And notwithstanding that the duke had promised not to enter into the citie vntill the next day, least it should be reproached vnto them, That they had yeelded before they had seene the enemy, yet the earle of Lerin, who was constable of Nauarre, entered the same day, being the foure and twentieth, and the five and twentieth the duke with the rest of the armie. Thus the kings D. Iohn and Katherine, were spoyled of their realme of Nauarre, which they had held together eighteene yeares and a halfe, and the queene almost ten yeares alone, after the death of her brother Francis Phelipe. From the 25 of Iulie 1512, being S. James day, Nauarre was vniuered to the Crowne of Castille, 468 yeares after that it had bene diuided from it, in the time, and by the death of the king D. Sancho the great. After the yeelding of the chiefe citie, the duke of Alua caused the other places of strength within the realme to be summoned to yeeld, promising that in so doing they should be intreated with the like clemency to Pampelone; if not, he would pursue them with fire and sword, as sectaries to princes, who were declared schismatikes and heretikes. In the beginning some townes seemed difficult, but hauing better considered of their affairs, the townes of Lumbier, Sanguessa, Montreal, Olite and Tafalla, with the citie of Tudele, yeelded, yet the castle thereof held good for the kings that were expelled, Denis of Desla, a gallant knight, and a good seruant to his masters, commanding therein. They of the vallis of Roncal, and of the vallis of Amecoa, trusting in the naturall force of their mountainous country, made no account to yeeld. King Ferdinand being at Burgos, hearing the successe of this conquest, sent supplies of men to the duke of Alua: And the better to iustifie his actions, he sent D. Antonio of Acugna, bishop of Zamora, embassador into France, to king Iohn, offering him, That if he would quit the friendship and alliance of king Lewis, he would restore his realme to him againe. The bishop came not to king Iohn; for notwithstanding the prerogative of embassadors, he was staid prisoner in Beam, from whence he parted not, but for a great ranfome. Vpon this excesse the duke of Alua was readie to passe into Beam, to be reuenged of the wrong done vnto the king his master, and to his embassador: but seeing the townes of Tudele, Olite, Tafalla, and Estella, begin to be somewhat moued at the brute of king Iohns comming with a French armie, he remained in Nauarre; where hauing ordered matters in such sort as they seemed secure, he assembled the chiefe men of Pampelone, in the monasterie of S. Francis; where hauing made a long discourse vnto them, to iustifie the conquest which his master had made of that realme, he required them to take an oath to king Ferdinand, and they demanded three dayes respite to consider thereon; which being expired, they said, That they were content to take an oath as subjects, but not as vassals. And what difference, demanded the duke, make you betwixt vassals and subjects? He (said they) is to be vnderstood a vassall, whom the lord may intreat well or ill, at his pleasure; but the subject ought to be well intreated by him. Then the duke hauing shewed them that they should not doubt, but the king would intreat them well and fauourably in all things, he alledged many reasons which induced them to take this oath, acknowledging king Ferdinand for their king, who parting from Burgos, came vnto Logroño, neere to Nauarre, where he staid the remainder of that yeare, to provide for the defence of this new conquest.

This yeare died D. Pascall, of the Order of the preaching friers, bishop of Burgos, at castilla. Rome D. Iohn of Fonseca, bishop of Palence, and superintendent of the affaires of the Indies, was preferred in his place; D. Iohn of Velasco, bishop of Calaoorra, he was brother to the colonell Valalua: D. Valerio Alphonso Ordognes of Villaliquan, bishop of Ouedo, died also, and his bishopricke was giuen to D. Diego of Muros, who was bishop of Mondoguedo, he who did found the colledge of S. Sautier in the Vniuersitie of Salamanca, which hath the name of

Duke of Alua enters into Pampelone.

Union of Castille and Navarre by conquest.

Denis of Desla faithfull to king
Iohn of Albret.

King Ferdinand's embassador arrested in Beam.

Difference between vassall and a subject.

of Ouiedo : the bishopricke of Mondogedo was giuen to D. Diego of Villamuriel, Prefident of the Chauncerie of Granado.

Exploits of Vasco Nunges
of Balboa.

29 King Ferdinand's affaires standing in these termes in Europe, the Spaniards remaying at the Indies at the place called the Antique of Darien, being commaunded by Vasco Nunges of Balboa, they obtained of him the deliuerie of the bacheler Martin Hernandez of Enciso, who could not be staied by any intreaties in that countrey, to be chiefe Iustice ouer all, but went presently to S. Domingo, and from thence into Spaine, where he made his complaint vnto the king, accusing Vasco Nunges of much wickednesse and excessse: whereupon there was a grieuous sentence pronounced against him, the punishment whereof he auoyded by his great future seruices. The first voyage which Vasco Nunges made against the Indians, was against a Cachique, or king of that countrey, called Carata, lord of Coyba, who hauing refused him victuals and gold, was by him & his troups, which were 130 Spaniards, assailed, taken, and his burrough sacked, where they found three Spaniards, who, for villanies committed, had fled from their captaine Ximenes, and had bene receiued and wel intreated by this Cachique, at whose intreatie he was deliuered, and held for a friend, and Vasco Nunges promised to aid him against another Cachique, his enemy, who was called Ponsa. Being prest with hunger, and want of all necessaries, these Spaniards of Antique sent Samudio and Valdivia, two of their men, into the island of Hispaniola, to fetch them victuals; and another into Spaine, called Zamudio, who carried the processe of the bacheler Martin Hernandez of Enciso. Vasco Nunges in the meane time went in person against the Cachique Ponsa, who fled away with his people, carrying all their wealth with them: whereupon he went against another Cachique, called Comagra, whose land was not farre from the South sea: for the region of Darien is but an isthmus, or a strait necke of land. Vasco Nunges contracted friendship and alliance with this Cachique, for he found him mild and tractable. He lodged him in a hall which was 150 paces long, and 80 broad, whereas he and all his Spaniards made good cheere with their victuals, wine of dates, and other fruits after their maner: and the Cachiques eldest sonne brought the weight of 4000 dragmes in gold wrought, and seuentie slaues, which

Darien an isthmus or necke of land.

Couetousnesse of the Spaniards
somewhat checked by an Indian.

he gaue vnto the Spaniards; who seeing them through greedinesse to contend and quarrell about the diuision of these things, he wondered much, and said vnto them, That seeing they had so great a desire of gold, which was but earth, as for it they did thrust themselves into so great dangers, and did trouble so many peaceable nations, he would shew them a region not farre off, and neere vnto the other sea, where they should glut their couetousnesse; but they must not goe with so small a troupe; being necessarie to lead a thousand Spaniards thither. Vasco Nunges and Roderigo of Colmenares being verie joyfull of this aduertisement, and more for that they heard him speake of another neere sea, embraced this lord, who was called Panguiao, which made them madde that were wounded therewith: and therefore Vasco Nunges returned to Antique, to provide all things necessarie for this voyage and conquest. Hauing found Valdivia returned from S. Domingo with some victuals, he sent him into Spaine, and with him 15000 dragmes of gold, for the kings fift part of diuers booties which they had taken; giuing him charge to beseech the king to send a thousand Spaniards for the conquest of the South sea. But Valdivia miscarried by the way, he and all his treasure being drowned. In the meane time Vasco Nunges with a brigantine and many barks began to saile into the gulph of Vraba, to seeke for victuals, and finding a great riuer which he called S. Iohn, he went ten leagues vp against the streame, but he found not any man, for all were fled vp into the countrey, hauing bin terrified with the crueltie and insatiable couetousnesse of the bearded Spaniards (as they called them) by Cemaco the Cachique, who had bene vanquished by Martin Hernandez Enciso: yet the Spaniards foraged the countrey neere vnto the riuers sides, and made great bundels of arrowes and other armes, nets, couerings, and other Indian implements, the

A the which afterwards they cast into the sea, for that in their returne they were taken with a storme, carrying away the value of seuen thousand Castilians in gold, but nothing that could satysfie hunger: for these people in truth were poore, and liued only of fishing, exchanging their fish with their neighbours for Mays. Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares running vp along the riuers side with seuentie companions, returned without bread, or any other victuals; but he brought much Cassé-fistula, which he found growing in those regions in great abundance. Hauing joynd againe with Balboa, they entred into the mouth of a foud, which they called the blacke riuer, where they were to encounter a Cachico, called Auenamaguer, whom they defeated and tooke prisoner, whose ayme a villainous Spaniard cut off, in cold blood, for that he had bene wounded during the skirmish. B Colmenares remaining there with this Cachico, and the moitie of the Spanish troups, Balboa with the rest past on, & came vnto a place where as he found a building made vpon great old trees, much like vnto a cage to keepe birds in: there a Cachico kept, who thinking himselfe to be in a safe place, & inexpugnable, they mockt at the Spaniards who were on the ground, & did summon the to yeeld: but when as they saw them begin to ouerthrow the foundation of his palace with axes, he came downe with two of his sonnes, and presented himselfe humbly to Balboa, excusing himselfe that hee had not any gold, whereof he had no need, but promised that he would goe and seeke some, if he would suffer him at libertie. Balboa trusting him, let him goe free, but he was deceived: For this C Cachico falsifying his faith, comforted with other Cachicoes and their people, in great numbers, who fell vpon the Spaniards, but to their owne losse, for they were repulst with the losse of many Indians. Not content with this insolencie, the Cachicoes about the blacke riuer and that gulph, conspired to assaile the Antique of Darien suddenly with all their power, and to kill the Spaniards and eat them: The which was discovered to Vasco Nunges by a faire Indian woman whom he entertained as his friend, who had bene aduertised to free her selfe of this danger, by a brother of hers, who was of the conspiracie, and for her sake did frequent familiarly among the Spaniards. Vasco Nunges of Balboa caused this Indian to be taken, & hauing vnderstood the truth from him, and what course the Indians meant to take to execute their enterprise, he wrought in such sort on the one side, and Colmenares on the other, as they dispersed their forces, put a confusion in their counsels, and did in a maner subiect all the countrey of Vraba. Being returned to the Antique of Darien, they sent Iohn of Quinedo, and Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares, into Spaine, to make relation vnto king Ferdinand of that which they had done, and of the conquest of the South sea, which they intended, and to beseech him to send them 1000 Spaniards to that end. That yeare there went out of Spaine, with the kings leave, and at his owne charge, Iohn Dias de Solis, pilot major to the king, who taking the course of Pinsons, past beyond S. Augustines cape fortie degrees vnder the Equinoctiall, vnto the great riuer of Parauaguasu, which signifies in the Indian tongue, great water, the which was by Iohn Dias called the riuer of Plata, that is to say, of siluer, for that they found there some grains of other metall: and hauing planted many crosses there in signe of possession, he returned into Spaine, laden with Brasils, where he gaue an account vnto the king of his navigation.

Riuer of Plata found by Iohn Dias de Solis.

THE 26 BOOKE OF THE Historie of Spaine.

The Contents of the 26 Booke.

- 1 Warre continued by the duke of Aluain Nauarre, and the frontiers of France. An armie of French in Nauarre and their poore exploits.
- 2 Proceeding of Pope Iulio against the Countess of Pifa, and the fauourers thereof.
- 3 Practises of the duke of Ferrara against king Ferdinand. Death of Pope Iulio the second, and election of Leon.
- 4 Queene Germaine gives a drinke to king Ferdinand her husband, to haue children by him, which causeth his death.
- 5 Warre of Milan, and dissolution of the Councell of Pifa.
- 6 Discoverie of the South sea at the Indies, by Valco Nughes of Balboa.
- 7 Warre continued in Italie by the Emperor and Spaniards against the Venetians.
- 8 Behaviour of Valco Nughes of Balboa at the Indies.
- 9 Designes of Pope Leo, an enemy both to Spanish and French.
- 10 Seditions at the Indies. The miserable end of Valco Nughes of Balboa.
- 11 Comming of king Francis to the Crowne, and treaties betwixt him, the Emperor Maximilian, and king Ferdinand.
- 12 Enterprises of king Ferdinand against France. Vnion of Nauarre and Castille.
- 13 Exploits of king Francis in Italie. Abolition of the Pragmaticke sanction.
- 14 Comming of doctor Adrian Florantin to Spaine. Testaments of king Ferdinand, and his death.
- 15 Exploits of the king D. Manuel in Affricke. Exaltions vpon the Clergie of Portugall. His third marriage.
- 16 D. Charles of Austria, first of that name, 22 king in Castille, 43 in Leon, and 20 in Arragon, and in Nauarre the fourth of that name, and 36 king. Government of cardinall Ximenes and doctor Adrian, in the kings absence.
- 17 Estate of king Charles his house.
- 18 Troubles in Spaine by D. Pedro Giron and others, pacified by the wisdom of cardinall Ximenes.
- 19 Ordinances for the ordinarie legions in Spaine, and other orders made by cardinall Ximenes.
- 20 Gouvernement of Nauarre. Councell to rurne the townes, and to make the country of Nauarre desolate. Death of king Iohn of Albret and queene Katherine. Order of the iustice of M. Nauarre.
- 21 Troubles at Malaga by reason of the priuiledges and iurisdiction of the Admiraltie. Punishment of the inhabitants.
- 22 Contentions for the towne of Arenala, and reprehension of Velasques of Cuellar.
- 23 Pittifull estate of queene Ioane, mother to Charles of Austria, troubled in her senses.

24. Arce.

- A 24. Arsenals and storahouses for munition appointed in Spaine.
25. Search of ancient writings and instructions for the publike good, appointed by cardinall Ximenes in Spaine, by the which many frauds were discovered, &c.
26. Allegie taken by Horulco Barberousse, and the vaine attempts of the Spaniards.
27. Rigorous Edict in Spaine against the Genouois. The cause thereof, and the execution.
28. Vniust proceedings against the accused by the Inquisitors. Contenton for the bishopricke of Siguenza.

In this six and twentieth Booke are vnited the Realmes of Castille, Arragon, and Nauarre, in

D. Charles of Austria

22 in Castille 1.
43 in Leon 1.
20 in Arragon 1.
36 in Nauarre 4.

He realme of Nauarre being conquered with so great happineffe and ease, was afterwards defended and kept with more difficultie. 1512

About the moneth of May the English armie landed in Guipuscoa, being eight thousand foot, most archers, and some other men of warre, whereof the lord marquisse Dorset was General, who stayed some dayes vpon those marches, attending the duke of Alua, who was busie in subduing the vallies of Amefco, Salazar, and Ronceal, with the helpe and diligence of colonell Vilalua: whose armie being fortified with new troups sent from king Ferdinand, who was offended at the detention of his embassadour, the bishop of Zamora, in Bearn, it was led to Saint Iohn du pied de Port, which place yeelded vnto him: From whence he sent word vnto the marquisse, what he should doe to come and besiege Bayone. But the English generally thinking that the duke of Alua had caused him to stay there for the conquest of Nauarre, which concerned his master, after that he had burnt Saint Iohn de Lus, and done some other spoyle vpon the sea coast, he imbarct his men, and went home; saying, That he would returne another time: besides, there was a brute of a great French armie which marcht through Guienne, to make head against these Spanish and English forces; by reason whereof the duke of Alua having fortified the castle of Pied de Port, and tased that of Montgelo, he returned into high Nauarre. The French armie whereof the brute was, was led by Francis of Valois, duke Angouleme, who was afterwards French king, in the which there was king Iohn of Albret, Charles of Montpensier, duke of Bourbon, Odet of Foix, vicont of Lautrec, the earles of Palisse and Longueuille, and others, making about fortie thousand foot and foure thousand horse. About the end of the yeare 1512, the king of Nauarre aduanced with six thousand foot, and a thousand horse, accompanied with the lords of Palisse and Longueuille, he entered into his countrey by the vallie of Ronceal, where hee tooke Burgui, hauing cut the Spaniards in peeces which were in garrison, with their commander Valdes, capitaine of king Ferdinand's gard. On the other side the duke of Angouleme caused the duke of Bourbon and the lord of Lautrec, to enter by Guipuscoa, with ten thousand foot, and foure hundred horse, who ruined Yrum, Vranfu, Ojarcum, and the townes of Harnam and Renterie, and besieged S. Sebastien, but they left it soone, the vicont of Lautrec going to ioyne with king Iohn's forces, who marcht towards Pampehone. At that time Diego Lopes of Ayala, lord of Cuole, was gouernour of Fontarrabie, who caused the platforme called Diego Lopes to be built towards France. The marshall

Rrrr

D. Pedro

Places returne to the obedience of king Iohn.

Vittorie of 90
men ouer 600 Arragonians.

Iohn Ramirez
of Baquedan faithfull in his prince.

Pampelone besieged by king
Iohn.

Assault maintained by the garrison of Pa-pelone against the French.

Siege of Pampelone raised.

Armes of the province of Guipuscoa.

D. Pedro was in king Iohns armie, with many of the faction of Gramont, whose partisans G being dispersed throughout the realme, caused many places to reuolt to the king, as John Ramirez of Baquedan, lord of Saint Martin, the towne of Estella, Ladron of Mauleon, that of Mirande, Martin of Gomil Tafalla, Pedro de Rada, that of Murillo, Jaime Velez de Medran, S. Care, with others by other men. The king thought that the citie of Pampelone should haue done as much, but he was deceived. Hereupon D. Alphonsus of Arragon, base sonne to king Ferdinand, and Archbishop of Saragossa, sent six hundred men from Teruel, Daroca, and Albarrazin, to enter into Pampelone; who passing within in halfe a league of Saint Martin, they were charged by fourecore and ten footmen of the vallie of Roncal, and fure horsemen, who defeated them, stript them into their shirts, H and sent them home: their colonell came to Olite to demaund aid, but he was in danger to be hanged by the Archbishop. Antonie of Fonseca recovered some of these reuolted places, and brought the hostages to Pampelone, into the which he put himselfe. D. Francisco of Beaumont, the constables cousin, set vpon Estella, and tooke the towne, but not the castle, and recovered that of Bernette: and D. Pedro of Beaumont, the constables brother, the castle of Montjardin. The duke of Alua being in the meane time in a manner inclosed in betwixt the armies of the duke of Angouleme, and the king of Nauarre: he deceived them, escaping by vnknowne wayes, and came with his armie to Pampelone. And to the end the siege of Estella should not stay and disturbe the forces of the king of Castille, Diego Hernandez of Cordoua, was sent with a supplie to them that besieged it: Wherefore Iohn Ramirez of Baquedan being extreamely prest, was forced to yeeld it, vpon condition, That they should depart with their armes, baggage, and ensignes displayed, refusing the great offers which king Ferdinand had made him, if he would come to his seruice: So this good knight came to the king of Nauarres campe. The towne of Larraga defended by a French captainne, was also yeelded by composition. The king of Nauarre tooke the castle of Tiebas by force, where was the ladie of Gurendayn, of the house of Artieda, whom he suffered to goe away freely: and hauing received a new supplie of two thousand Germans, he besieged Pampelone towards Saint Nicholas port, where there were many fallies and skirmishes made, whereby the king of Nauarre vnderstood, that the force of the besieged was great. The duke of Alua put some of the faction of Gramont, whom he suspected out of the towne, and hauing visited thole parts of the towne which might be dangerous, ordering all things, and ramparing vp the breaches which the enemies made with their furious batterie, he prepared himselfe to maintaine the Assault which was giuen on Saturday, the seuen and twentieth of September, from the which the assailants were repulsed with great losse. King Ferdinand being in the meane time at Logrogne, and aduertised of the estate of his affaires, hee had drawne together the forces of Alua, Biscaye, Rioja, and part of Guipuscoa, notwithstanding that a good part of the French armie was yet in thole limits, being in all fiftene thousand fighting men, assigning their rendez-vous at Pont de Roynne, whither he sent D. Pedro Manriques, duke of Nagera, furnished the Strong, to be generall of this armie. L At the brute whereof the king of Nauarre, being out of hope to take Pampelone, and in great necessitie of victuals, Winter also tyring his armie, he raised his siege the last day of Nouember, by the counsell and persuation of the lord of Palisic, and other captaines of experience: And the next day the duke of Nagera arrived with his armie, whereof there was not any need, seeing that the siege was raised, who for that reason refused the battell which the French sent to present vnto him, by a king at Arnes. So king Iohn of Albret complaining his ill fortune, returned on this side the Pyrennes, in the straits of which mountaines the reereward of the French armie was much troubled by the Guipuscoans, and other mountainers, being forced to leaue in the mountaines of Velate, and Leyfondo, part of their artillerie, the which was drawne to Pampelone with great pompe, in the castle of which citie there are many peeces to be scene at this day: By reason of which prowesse and good seruice, the king, besides many exemptions and priuiledges, added to the Armes of the province of Guipuscoa, the twelue peeces of ordnance or in a field of azure, the which it carries at this day.

The

A The duke of Nagera having brought his armie backe to Logrogne, the duke of Alua remained Viceroy of Nauarre, which realme he brought all vnder the obedience of king Ferdinand, except the castle of Moyra, which he held long for the kings of Nauarre, who were expelled vnder a pretext of seisme, as we haue said.

Vpon the same occasion D. Bernardin of Garçajal, cardmall of Saint Croix, and bishop of Sigüenza, was depozed by the Councell of Larran, from all Ecclesiasticall dignitie; and to his bishopricke D. Frederic of Portugal, bishop of Segobia, was preferred; to Segobia D. Diego of Ribera, bishop of Majorca; and to that doctor Roderigo of Mercado, Abbot of Saint Martha, borne at Ognate, who was afterwards bishop of Aulila, and B President of the Chauncerie of Granada.

2 During the warre of Nauarre king Ferdinand sent a new supplie of men into Italie, with the commander Solis, and was in a manner resolved to send the great captaine thither, had not the counsell of some enuious disserred him. The French affaires declining there, the duke of Ferrara, who in all their actions had assisted them, found himselfe in great danger to be deprived of his estate, and expelled by the Pope, his deadly enemy: to preuent the which, and to purchase vnto himselfe friends and fauour, he set Fabrizio Colonne, his prisoner, at libertie, without ransom, by whose meanes, with the embassador of Spaine and others, he obtained a safe conduct, with the which he went to Rome, to treat of his affaires: but he could not make his peace with the Pope, being obstinately bent C to dispossesse him of Ferrara, and to vntie the cineruo the estate of the Church, offering him in recompence the countie of Asti, which he held not, but maintained that it was of the patrimonie of the Church: so as Fabrizio Colonne and the rest, who had assured his coming to Rome, were forced to put themselves in armes, to warrant him, and to conduct him to a place of safetie; whereof there followed great hatred betwixt the Pope and the Colonnais. And king Ferdinand was no lesse displeased at these violent proceedings of the Pope; for he had a particular affection vnto duke Alphonsus, his kinsman, borne of a daughter to king Ferdinand the first, of Naples. But to make an end of that which had bene concluded by the league: that is, to expulse the French out of Italie, and out of the world, if they could, D. Raymond of Garçajal, Viceroy of Naples, who since D the battell of Rauenna had bene in his gouernement, returned this year with his armie about Bologna, to continue the warre: But the Pope and the Venetians finding themselves seised of a good part of that which they pretended, refused to furnish money for the entertainment of his armie, as had bene agreed by the treatie of the league: so as there grew a great mutinie in the campe among the souldiers, for want of pay, and the Viceroy was forced to retire, with great danger of his person, to Modena, where he found meanes to recouer some money, with the which he returned, and kept his souldiers together, who began to disband.

At that time there being a day appoynted at Mantoua, to consult of the affaires of the warre, the Viceroy of Naples came thither, with deputies from the Pope, Emperor, Venetians, and Swisses. There it was concluded, That they should put Maximilian Sforce, sonne to Lewis Sforce, in possession of the duchie of Milan: And moreover it was propounded to assaile the Florentines, who were friends and allied to the Crowne of France, as wel for this cause, as to restore the familie of Medici, expelled out of that commonweale, to their goods and honours: the which the Pope did presse much, in fauour of cardinall Iohn of Medici, his legate, and others of that familie. This was the Viceroyes first taske, after his returne to the armie, to lead it into the estate of Florence, from whom he tooke the town of Prato, where there were slain about two thousand men of the Florentines part, and many taken: Whereat the citie of Florence being amazed, and their Councell vnprovid of forces and meanes to resist, they yeilded to the restitution of the Medici; and to whatsoever the Viceroy would impose vpon them. For besides the summes of money which they payed for the entertainment of the Spanish armie, and another summe vnto the Emperor, they made a league with king Ferdinand, promising to entertaine two hundred men at armes in the armie of the league, and yet the people were deprived of a good part of their libertie, by the cardinall of Medici, who created magistrats and officers at his pleasure.

Rrrr ij

These

Pope Iulius had bred in the duke of Ferrara.

Estate of Florence, vexed by the Viceroy of Naples.

These exploits being done in the Florentines countrey, the Viceroy led his armie to G Bresse, which the Venetians did besiege, so as the lord of Aubigny was out of hope to be able to keepe it, this Spanish armie hauing got great a fame, for that it had humbled to powerfull a commonweale as that of Florence: and therefore he did capitulate with the Viceroy of Naples, although the Venetians had layed the siege, and yielded it vpon conditions to depart himselfe and his men free, with their armes and baggage, their colours flying, and without artillerie. After the taking of Bresse, the bishop of Gurcenis, embassadour for the Emperour, came to Rome, whereas he of Spaine laboured much to reconcile the Emperour and the Venetians, there remaining no difference but onely for the citie of Vincence. This embassadour did also seeke to reconcile the Pope with the Colonnais, with whom he was much displeased, for the duke of Ferraras cause. Yet there was a new league made betwixt the Pope and the Emperour, against the Venetians, approued by the Councell of Latran, leaving a place for king Ferdinand to enter. The reason of this league was, for that the Venetians would not yeeld to certaine conditions which the Pope propounded vnto them. King Ferdinand doubt herein was, that the Venetians would joyne with the French king, if they were too much pressed: wherefore his embassadour fauoured them what he could. The coming of Maximilian Sforce to Verona, caused the bishop of Gurcenis to part from Rome, to establish him in the Emperours name in the duchie of Milan, whither he conducted him, hauing found him at Cremona, with the Viceroy D. Raymond of Cardona. The duke much desired by the Milanais, was received there with great joy. The cardinal of Sion presented him the keys in the Swisses name, who would haue the honour of his restoring.

League made against the Venetians.

3 Fragratitude of
the duke of Ferrara presented by the Spaniards.

Conspiracie against king Ferdinand.

Peace betwixt
France and
Spaine.

Notwithstanding the league newly made against the Venetians, the Pope had a great desire to ruine the duke of Ferrara: to prevent the which the embassadour of Spaine, by commandement from his king, did all good offices, and vsed all the meanes he could: And this was one of the chief causes why king Ferdinand would not please the Pope, and enter into the league. Notwithstanding the duke shewing himselfe vngrateful (no man knowes vpon what reason) procured a scandalous and horrible attempt against him, as the Spaniards write, persuading D. Ferdinand of Arragon, duke of Calabria, sonne to king Frederic, and conspiring with him, to deprive him of his life. There was a certaine monk who was messenger from the duke of Ferrara to him of Calabria, who had also for negotiator on his part, Philip Copula, sonne to the earle of Samo, whose head king Ferdinand of Naples had caused to be stricken off. This Copula had made some voyages into France, and treated with king Lewis, to giue a retreat and meanes in his realme to the duke of Calabria, being then in the Catholike kings Court at Logrogne, and should haue caused himselfe in the French armie, which was about Pampelone, hauing resolved first to set fire on certaine powder that was hidden in the kings lodging: But God would not suffer so wicked a practise to take effect. The matter being discovered, Copula was quartered, and D. Ferdinand duke of Calabria was sent prisoner to the castle of Xatua, neere vnto Valencia, where hee remained about ten yeares, vntill that the Emperour Charles pardoned him, and set him at libertie. Hereupon king Ferdinand conceived so great a hatred against the duke of Ferrara, as hee commanded the Viceroy of Naples to ayd the Pope with his armie, or any other thing hee had, without any respect to the pretended pay. The Venetians seeing the Pope and Emperour leagued together to annoy them, and that the Emperour would not giue eare to the Catholike kings embassadour, who did still perswade him to make a peace with their commonwealth, and to take a summe of money in the place of Vincence, they joyned with the French king (who had not wholly forgotten the affaires of Italie, and did still hold the castles of Milan and Cremona) at the same time when as a truce was accorded betwixt king Lewis and king Ferdinand, for a yeere, to the great discontent of the king of England, M who was readie to enter into France, and attended to be assisted by the Spanish armie: by reason whereof the French king did deferre the recouerie of the realme of Navarre for a time, to the which he was greatly solicited by the dispossessed kings, John and Katherine. Which truce the French king had much desired, to assure his realme on that side, being aduertised that the king of England made great preparation to assaile him, be-

A being still prest thereunto by Pope Iulio, who conceiuing great and pernicious enterprises in his mind, died at Rome in Februarie, in the yeare 1513. By his death the duke of Ferrara was freed from great care and feare; who embracing the occasion, recouered some places in Romania, and had taken more if the Viceroyes armie had not stopt him, being lodged betwixt Regio and Plaifance, through the fauour whereof Parma and Plaifance came into the hands of Maximilian Sforce, the new duke of Milan. The cardinals being assembled, they did chuse John de Medicis, cardinall of Santa Maria in Dominica, for Pope, and called him Leo the tenth.

1513
Death of Pope
Iulio.

Pope Leo chosen

The Viceroy being aduertised of the truce betwixt Fraunce and Spaine, he began to B resolute vpon his retreat to Naples, sending for the garrisons which were in Tortona and Alexandria; and causing the armie to march towards the riuer of Trebia, hauing with him twelve hundred men at armes, and eight thousand foot, all choyce souldiers: the which did much terrifie the Milanais and their duke, knowing that the French king made great leuies of men to recouer that estate; and fearing that the Swisses, who were all their hope, would not be able to defend them, if the French armie did presse them on the one side, and the Venetians on the other: wherefore at their intreatie, and the Popes intercession, the Viceroy and the Spanish armie stayed, and held the warre in suspense.

The truce which the two great kings had made, assured king Ferdinands conquest of C Navarre, the noblemen and Estates of which realme, after the retreat of the French from before Pampelone, depured the constable D. Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lein, to take the oath of fealtie and homage, as to their king. And the duke of Alua being returned into Castille, there remained Viceroy of Navarre in his place D. Diego Fernandes de Cordoua, marquisse of Comares.

Navarre.

Diego Fernandes
des Cordoua, Viceroy of Na-
uarre.
Castille.

4 The great prosperities of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, Regent of Castille, were accompanied with some griefe, for that he had no lawfull issue male: but queene Germain his second wife, by whom he had no children, was more perplexed, for her owne interest, who by a womanish affection sought curiously for all deuices to conceiue, thinking by art and humane helps to obtaine that which comes from the meere D bountie and blessing of God: Wherefore it happened this yeare (it is not knowne by whose aduice) that, with the kings consent, the queene her selfe, D. Maria of Velasco, wifeto D. John of Velasco, superintendent of the treasure, and D. Isabella Faure, made a drinke, or broth, for the king, to giue him force and vigour: But he had no sooner taken it, but he found nature toucht with an incurable infirmite, wherof he languished continually, and in the end dyed. This was done at Carroncillo, whither the king was come to depost himselfe with the ladies: And it is not credible that they did present him this potion to any other end, but to quicken him in his sports; for all the queenes happinesse and greatnesse depended vpon the kings life. Hee was like to haue dyed of this drinke in the monastirie of Meiorado; but being somewhat recouered by physike, hee came to Villedolit, to a assemblie of the Estates, where hee dispatched many affaires.

Drinke giuen to king Ferdinand by the queene and his wife.

5 The French king in the meane time had in a manner dispossessed Maximilian Sforce of all his duchie of Milan, he had onely remaining Como and Nauara: Into the last he had put himselfe with many ensignes of Swisses, and was besieged by the French: where followed that memorable fallie of colonell Amboise and his Swisses, and the defeat of the French, with great slaughter, and the losse of their artillerie, as you may read at large in that historie: whereupon the French repast the Alpes. And on the other side D. Raymond of Cardona, Viceroy of Naples, being with his armie vpon the passage of the riuer of Pau, opposite to the Venetian armie, led by Bartholomew of Adriaui, who hauing newes of this rout of the French, retired for feare to Ponte Vico, and from thence to Tombara, neere to the riuer of Thefin. The Viceroy suffering them to passe, busied himselfe about the reduction of Genoua, which the French had deliuered into the hands of Adornes and their factions: sending, at the instance of John and Octauia Frego, three thousand Spaniards thither, led by the marquisse of Pescara; himselfe following with the rest of the armie. Wherewith the French and the Milanais their partisans, being amazed, they left

Defeat of the French at Na-uara by the Swisses.

1513

left the citie, and Osluina Fregese was made duke. In the meane time Aluano tooke G Lignago, by the means of Iohn Paul Bailion, who slue most of the Spaniards and Germans that were there in garrison. He also attempted Verona in vaine. All which did much incense the Viceroy of Naples, who passing the Pau with his armie, did soone take Bergamo, Pelcare, and Bresse, Aluano flying before him, who hauing diuided his armie into garrisons, put himselfe into Padoua.

Cardinals reuered into grace.

Pope Leo at his first aduancement trying by the best meanes he could to dissolue the Councell of Pisa, he then receiued into grace D. Bernardin of Carajal, cardinall of Saint Croix, and Frederic of Saint Seuerin, deposed from their dignities of cardinals, and depriued of their reuenues and benefices by Pope Iulio and the Councell of Latan. These two hauing stayed a while at Florence, by the Popes commaundment, like priuat men, they came by his permission to Rome, where they entred by night, and the next day they presented themselves vnto the Conistorie, in all humilitie, where, vpon their knees, they acknowledged their faults, and demanded pardon, the which they obtained, approving the decrees of the Councell of Latan, and the election of the present Pope, and confessing their deposition to haue bene just, and that the Councell of Pisa was false and abhominable: whereupon they were absolved, and went and embraced all the cardinals in their ranks, who moued not from their places; after which they put on their cardinals weeds, and sat in their vsuall places: and although they did not recover their benefices and reuenues, yet afterwards they had other things in recompence.

Indies.

